

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1925

LIBRARY
OF THE
SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SAN ANSELMO
CALIFORNIA

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2025

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL CUMULATION

REVIEWS OF 1925 BOOKS

EDITED BY
MARION A. KNIGHT
AND MERTICE M. JAMES

Property of Graduate Theological Union
Return to San Francisco Theological Seminary

NEW YORK
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
1926

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

FOUNDED BY JAMES M. COOPER

REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS

PRINTED IN U. S. A

PROPERTY OF
Theological Seminary
Andover, Mass.
Theological Seminary
Andover, Mass.

PREFACE

The twenty-first annual volume of the Book Review Digest contains about twenty-five hundred titles, with descriptive notes and excerpts from reviews. There is a larger representation of books in the field of science and technology than in former volumes because of the addition during the past year of ten scientific and technical periodicals to the list of publications from which reviews are quoted. Several other technical and business periodicals not included in the list of publications regularly indexed have been drawn upon frequently for reviews. One of these, the Harvard Business Review, will be added to the regular list, beginning with our March issue.

Users of the Digest are reminded that books entered for the first time in the annual volume necessarily appear with an incomplete list of quotations from reviews. If important reviews for these books appear later they will be re-entered in the August cumulation.

Once more grateful acknowledgment is made to Mr. Ellwood H. McClelland, Technology Librarian of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, for checking technical books to be included; to Miss Mary E. Furbeck, editor of Public Affairs Information Service, for her monthly list of public documents for small libraries; and to Miss Wilma Adams, Miss Lillian Bender, and Miss Jean Sacchitiello of the Digest staff, for the faithfulness and interest of their continued service. Miss Matilda Berg, who joined the staff during the past year, has written many of the descriptive notes, especially those for fiction.

M. A. K.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Am Anthropol—American Anthropologist. $4. George Banta Publishing Company, 450-454 Anhaup St., Menasha, Wis.
- Am Chem Soc J—Journal of the American Chemical Society. $7.50. Charles L. Parsons, Sec., Mills Building, 17th St and Pennsylvania Av., Washington, D.C.
- Am Econ R—American Economic Review. $5. American Econ. Assoc., Evanston, Ill.
- Am Hist R—American Historical Review. $5. Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Av., New York.
- Am J Psychol—American Journal of Psychology. $6.50. Morrill Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.
- Am J Pub Health—American Journal of Public Health. $5. American Public Health Association, 372 Broadway, Albany, N.Y.
- Am J Soc—American Journal of Sociology. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Am Pol Sci R—American Political Science Review. Dues $4. American Political Science Association, Mt. Royal and Guilford Aves., Baltimore, Md.
- Ann Am Acad—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $5. 39th St. and Woodland Av., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Atlantic's Bookshelf—Pamphlet issued by Atlantic Monthly Co., 8 Arlington St., Boston.
- Booklist—Booklist. $2. American Library Association, 86 East Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.
- Bookm—Bookman. $4. G. H. Doran Co., 244 Madison Av., New York.
- Boston Transcript—Boston Evening Transcript. $5.50 (Wednesday and Saturday). Boston Transcript Co., 324 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
- Canadian Hist R—Canadian Historical Review. $2. University of Toronto Lib., Toronto, Ont.
- Cath World—Catholic World. $4. 120 West 60th St., New York.
- Chem & Met Eng—Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering. $3. McGraw-Hill Co., Inc., 10th Av., at 36th St., New York.
- Class Philol—Classical Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Dial—Dial. $5. Dial Pub. Co., 152 West 13th St., New York.
- Econ J—Economic Journal. 1 Guinea. Royal Economic Society, 9, Adelphi Terrace, London, W. C. 2. (Macmillan & Co., 60 Fifth Ave., New York).
- Educ R—Educational Review. $3. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N.Y.
- El School J—Elementary School Journal. $2.50. University of Chicago press, Chicago, Ill.
- Eng Hist R—English Historical Review. 32s. Longmans, Green & Co., (39 Paternoster Row, London), 55 Fifth Av., New York.
- Eng N—Engineering News-Record. $5. McGraw-Hill Co., Inc., 10th Av. at 36th St., New York.
- Geog R—Geographical Review. $5. American Geog. Soc., Broadway and 156th St., New York.
- Hist Outlook. Historical Outlook. $2. McKinley Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Ind—Independent. $5. Independent Publications, Inc., 10 Arlington St., Boston.
- Ind & Eng Chem—Industrial and Engineering Chemistry. $7.50. American Chemical Society, Charles L. Parsons, Sec., Mills Building, 1709 G St., N.W., Washington, D.C.
- Int Bk R—Literary Digest International Book Review. $2.50. Funk & Wagnalls Co., 354-360 Fourth Av., New York.
- Int J Ethics—International Journal of Ethics. $3. University of Chicago press, Chicago, Ill.
- J Home Econ—Journal of Home Economics. $2.50. American Home Economics Assn., 1211 Cathedral St., Baltimore, Md.
- J Philos—Journal of Philosophy. $4. 515 W. 116th St., New York.
- J Phys Chem—The Journal of Physical Chemistry. $10. Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.
- J Pol Econ—Journal of Political Economy. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- J Religion—Journal of Religion. $3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Lit R—Literary Review of the New York Evening Post. $1. N.Y. Evening Post, Inc., 20 Vesey St., New York.
- Management and Adm—Management and Administration. $5. Management Pub. Corp., 15 E. 26th St., New York.
- Mod Philol—Modern Philology. $4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Nation—Nation. $5. Nation Press, 20 Vesey St., New York.
- Nation and Ath—Nation and Athenaeum. £1 10s. Nation Limited, 5 John St., Adelphia, London, W. C. 2.
- Nature—Nature. £2 17s. $14. Macmillan Company, 60 Fifth Av., New York.
- New Repub—New Republic. $5. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 West 21st St., New York.
- New Statesman—New Statesman. 30s. Statesman Pub. Co., 10 Great Queen St., Kingsway, London, W. C. 2.
- N Y Times—New York Times Book Review. $1. N.Y. Times Co., Times Square, New York.
- N Y Tribune—New York Herald and Tribune Books. $2. 225 W. 40th St., New York.
- N Y World—The World. $4. Pulitzer Building, Park Row, New York.
- No Am—North American Review. $4. North American Rev. Corp., 9 East 37th St., New York.
- Outlook—Outlook. $5. Outlook Company, 120 E. 16th St., New York.
- Pol Sci Q—Political Science Quarterly. $5. (including Supplement). Academy of Political Science, Kent Hall, Columbia University, New York.
- R of Rs—American Review of Reviews. $4. Review of Reviews Co., 55 Fifth Av., New York.
- Sat R—Saturday Review. 30s. 9 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2.
- Sat R of Lit—Saturday Review of Literature. $3.50. Time, Inc., 45 W. 45th St., New York.
- School Arts M—School Arts Magazine. $3. Davis Press, Inc., 44 Portland St., Worcester, Mass.
- School R—School Review. $2.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
- Science. Science. $6. Science Press, Garrison, N.Y.
- Spec—Spectator. £1 10s. 13 York St., Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2.
- Springf'd Republican—Springfield Republican. $10. The Republican Pub. Co., Springfield, Mass.
- Survey—Survey. $5. Survey Associates, Inc., 112 East 19th St., New York.
- The Times [London] Lit Sup—The Times Literary Supplement. 17s 4d. $3.80. The Times, North American Office, 247 Park av., New York.
- Theatre Arts Mo—Theatre Arts Monthly. $4. Theatre Arts, Inc., 7 East 42d St., New York.
- World Tomorrow—World Tomorrow. $1. Fellowship Press, Inc., 104 East 9th Street, New York.
- Yale R n s—Yale Review (new series). $4. Yale Publishing Assn., Inc., 120 High St., New Haven, Conn.

In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest sometimes quotes from the Cleveland Open Shelf; Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Booklist; Pratt Institute Quarterly List of New Technical and Industry Books; St Louis Library Bulletin; Wisconsin Library Bulletin; and other bulletins.

EXPLANATIONS

² This book is mentioned for the first time in this issue.

Publisher's directory will be found at the end of this number.

The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.

The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazine indicate the degree of favor or disfavor of the entire review.

In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review,

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

Reviews of 1925 Books

A. E., pseud. See Russell, G: W:

ABBOTT, CHARLES D. Howard Pyle; a chronicle; with an introd. by N. C. Wyeth. 249p il $5 Harper

B or 92 Pyle, Howard 25-25284

In these pages the artist who so set forward the art of illustration, the writer of story after story for children, the inspiring teacher, is made to live. A liberal use is made of his letters, some of the most interesting of which tell of his early career in New York and the illustrations he made for Harper's magazine. The important phases of his varied work, covering so many fields, are treated in separate chapters rather than in a chronological record—his children's books, his illustrations of colonial history and of the days of chivalry, the stories and pictures of buccaneers, his thoughts on philosophy and mysticism, his classes in illustration. The book is illustrated with pen drawings and in color.

"A sympathetic biography. The author has done well to quote voluminously from Mr. Pyle's letters and to reproduce many of his paintings and drawings. By so doing he has conveyed the peculiar atmosphere and quality of Howard Pyle's personality."

+ Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 100w

Reviewed by W. H. Low

N Y Tribune p3 Ja 3 '26 1100w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 70w

ABBOTT, EDITH, comp. Immigration. (Social service ser.) 809p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press 325.7 Immigration 24-8659

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Miss Abbott has rendered a distinct service to the students of immigration. Many of the documents selected, and particularly the case records, lend a reality and vitality to the phenomena of immigration which it is hard to get from the summary and analytical treatment furnished by most of the general books on the subject." H: P. Fairchild

+ Am Econ R 15:361 Je '25 500w

"The importance of this book may be considered from two points of view. Primarily it may be regarded as a contribution to the literature on immigration. Secondly it may be estimated in accordance with the prefatory note, as the first of a number of source-books which the Graduate School of Social Service Administration of the University of Chicago proposes to issue. The source-book of this type is invaluable as a compendium of illustration and concrete detail, but it is not a means of first-hand investigation of a subject." H: P. Fairchild

+ — Am Hist R 30:372 Ja '25 520w

"To the reviewer it seems that no more striking illustration of the function of sympathetic rational first-hand knowledge and insight in the scientific treatment of a social problem could be found." A. B. Wolfe

+ J Pol Econ 33:115 F '25 850w

"Aside from the deep interest these human documents hold, they cannot fail to arouse serious questionings concerning the administrative features of the immigration law. By this initial study, Miss Abbott has made a contribution of permanent value." C. Razovsky

+ Survey 54:454 Jl 15 '25 750w

ABBOTT, WILBUR CORTEZ. Conflicts with oblivion. 404p il $4 Yale univ. press [18s Milford]

920 Great Britain—Biography 24-23619

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The style is rich, fluent and readable."

+ Booklist 21:194 F '25

"Professor Abbott writes with distinction and charm—moreover, he has a genuine gift for turning historical research into interesting stories and clearly defined personalities."

+ Ind 114:535 My 9 '25 160w

"While the several papers give evidence of careful research they carry their historical details with the easy grace of romance; they possess the solidity of fact and the buoyancy of fiction; they are the product of a scholar who is also an artist." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p6 My 23 '25 700w

"In the essays which one feels that the author himself wrote with the greatest relish, the style is racy and, although there is occasional straining after the witty phrase, the reader's entertainment is unquestionable. One is amused, beguiled, and set to deep musing." J. T. Adams

+ New Repub 42:137 Mr 25 '25 800w

"Brilliant studies of eccentric souls. All the figures studied are set solidly and substantially in their background. Professor Abbott's erudition is not only extensive and thorough, it is manageable, malleable, comes at call, without intruding itself unseasonably." Gamaliel Bradford

+ Sat R of Lit 1:447 Ja 10 '25 650w

"The essays are delightfully written, with humor and urbanity and aptness of phrase, but also with the sure touch of the historian who knows the background. One omission we note: there are no women in the galaxy." C. H. Haskins

+ Yale R n s 15:197 O '25 500w

ABBOTT, WILBUR CORTEZ. New barbarians. 251p $2.50 Little

320 United States—Politics and government. Democracy 25-5655

The author, who is professor of history in Harvard university, discusses the movements and programs of the present day which look to a change in the organization of government and society by whatever means, especially the revolutionary movements. He reckons among the enemies of democracy the socialists, the communist-internationals, the advocates of government ownership, the progressives and even the humanitarians. He is concerned about the spread of proletarianism in any form, and he reminds the "new barbarians," those newcomers to America who bring with them alien faiths and a purpose to change the government to accord with their own desires, that they are "inheritors, not founders."

ABBOTT, WILBUR C.—Continued

"This volume is clearly not a thorough and scientific analysis of the problem. Many of its premises are hypothetical." M. L. Hansen
 — Am Pol Sci R 19:636 Ag '25 500w

"His indictment of the present situation is on the whole fairly well done, although the data are not so logically constructed as one would wish." C. R. Woodruff
 — Ann Am Acad 121:195 S '25 320w

Booklist 21:289 My '25

"Every subject is presented with analytic insight and perfect courage. Here is a book written for a high patriotic purpose, with candid honesty and admirable style—straight-forward, clear, with no verbal vaporings or verbal pose. It will deeply move men and women who want to face facts. Its success will in a large degree depend on whether this class is large or small." S. L. Cook
 — Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '25 1900w

"The New Barbarians' will appeal chiefly to those who like tracts. It is distinctly a tract in behalf of the middle class."

— Ind 114:331 Mr 21 '25 180w

Reviewed by H. L. Pangborn
 Lit R p6 Mr 14 '25 800w

"Professor Abbott has devoted himself to supporting the highly dubious thesis of the lower ideals and inferior institutions of the immigrant groups; and many readers will now throw aside his book with the conviction that it is chiefly the product of arrogance and mild hysteria. Further, his arguments against revolution and egalitarianism are most convincing. But his sagacity here is to a large degree offset by the pathetic inadequacy and weaknesses of his own panaceas. . . . Where we find ourselves least capable of excusing him is in his failure to make good use of his undoubted historical knowledge and acumen." H. E. Barnes
 — Nation 120:668 Je 10 '25 800w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 42:46 Mr 4 '25 1300w

"Our new barbarians do need civilizing, perhaps. Certainly they need severe and disciplined criticism. But civilization cannot be foisted upon them from the museums and the mausoleums. Nor can criticism be effective unless it be at least dispassionate, at least intelligent. It must above all possess the three graces of imagination, of humor and of vision. These three have not attended upon the making of Prof. Abbott's book. They can never come to those who insist upon sacrificing upon the altar of prejudice." Edwin Seaver
 — N Y World p7m Mr 1 '25 900w

"In its comprehensiveness and wide grasp of the situation, in its energetic frankness, and its essential justice and tolerance, Professor Abbott's book is remarkable." C. H. Gaines
 — No Am 221:761 Je '25 860w

"Professor Abbott has philosophy; he has humor and a mordant wit; he has candor, the open mind—all the necessary qualities. But he allows himself to become excited. Now he 'strikes alarm,' and anon he assures us there is no danger. Worse yet, he becomes angry; and, upon anger supervening, humor, candor, and common sense take flight like ghosts at the third cock-crow. He lays about him; and, anger being blind, he thwacks the wrong parties." H. W. Bunn
 — Outlook 139:421 Mr 18 '25 1000w

R of Rs 72:110 Jl '25 180w

"Professor Abbott has crowded into 247 pages a most readable and comprehensive account of the aims, purposes, and aspirations of the American people in establishing a new and different kind of government, and no less comprehensive in his account of what is now going on to discredit what has been done to effect subversive changes. . . . The book takes up the challenge to our principles and practices and upholds with calm reason and clear logic the faith that is still held by the vast majority of our people." Maurice Sherman

 — Sat R of Lit 1:821 Je 13 '25 1500w

"He says much that is true and salutary, and is at times freshly suggestive and discerning; but the book is to a large extent a collection of discursive personal impressions rather than a penetrating and organic analysis of modern social developments. Moreover he tends to group together all objects of his dislike as if they proceeded from a common cause."

— Spring'd Republican p10 F 20 '25 600w

"Its merits are that it deals with real issues and that it does not lose itself in invective; its main defect is that it sees recent events from a background of experience which seems to date back to the early nineties. The book has other faults. It swallows propaganda bait, hook and sinker and reiterates the most preposterous falsehoods." B. L.

— Survey 55:263 N 15 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 Jl '25

"The Professor's strictly economic arguments are full of odd combinations: so utterly impossible that they simply cannot be argued with at all. Despite a painful effort at fairness and despite frequent truth-telling, the Professor leaves the impression that he has neither first-hand knowledge, nor a clean cut analysis of his problem, nor a quick intuitional understanding of the people he is talking about." Douglas Haskell

— World Tomorrow 8:219 Jl '25 400w

"The substance of the book is good. Professor Abbott has covered a wide field in both history and economics, saying much that is worth listening to, and avoiding, to a remarkable degree, mistakes of either theory or fact."

A. T. Hadley

— Yale R n s 14:787 Jl '25 550w

ABDULLAH, ACHMED. Swinging caravan. 311p
 $2 Brentano's

25-19426

A collection of stories concerned with the Orient. Contents: A gesture of no importance; The great wife; Slit-eye; The gates of Tamerlane; Decadence; Bred in the clay; Most just among Moslems; The rest is silence; Victory; Romance; Dutiful grief.

"It is vivid, vitally picturesque, alive with the age-long life of the old, old east, yet it mingles the sort of frankness of speech we find in the Restoration drama—decidedly no book to put into the hands of the young."

I. W. L.

— Boston Transcript p6 N 18 '25 550w

Ind 115:619 N 28 '25 100w

"Mr. Abdullah knows his Samarkand and Bokhara, cites the very names of which breathe romance; he knows his Mohammedan mind, and he knows Occidentals. His stories have warmth, color, vigor, and movement as swift as the dagger-flash that brings one of them to a memorable ending." Herschel Brickell
 — Lit R p3 O 17 '25 280w

"Most of the stories are brilliantly plausible; all are spectacular; but to this reader only one—The Great Wife—went below the surface glitter to emotional verities." D. E. W.

— New Repub 45:171 D 30 '25 120w

"Most of the tales are aglow with the fire and magnificence of the Eastern Sun, as well as with the merciless glare of the desert and the flickering and sometimes baleful light of cities; there are glorious patches, and hectic patches, and patches of cold cynicism and disillusionment, while always the forms of rich men and of poor, of dervishes and veiled women and turbaned grandees, troop like an incessant swinging caravan before the reader's eyes. Perhaps the most striking fact about the book is its variety and range."

+ N Y Times p9 O 25 '25 480w

ABRAHAM, GEORGE DIXON. First steps to climbing. 126p il $1.50 McBride

796 Mountaineering [25-9836]

A very practical guide to the difficult sport of rock-climbing which gives advice about how to start climbing, the necessary equipment, etc. Information is also given about snow and icecraft and the most famous climbing centers and how to reach them.

Booklist 22:17 O '25

Reviewed by T. R. Coward
Bookm 61:706 Ag '25 100w

"His book will doubtless be as useful to those who wish to become expert mountaineers on this as on the other side of the Atlantic. The advice it gives is the outcome of many years of experience and both text and illustrations are noteworthy for their very practical character."

+ N Y Times p18 My 17 '25 350w

ADACHI KINOSUKE. Manchuria, a survey. 401p il $5 McBride

915.18 Manchuria 25-6316

"Describes the mineral and agricultural wealth of Manchuria and their significance, especially to Japan. The facts presented by Mr. Kinosuke have a vital bearing on Japanese relations and the political situation of China."—R of Rs

Boston Transcript p7 My 9 '25 650w

"In view of the stake that American investors have in Manchuria, the book is of genuine importance. The author never grows dull or tedious." J: McLaughlin

+ Lit R p8 Je 6 '25 650w

"Kinosuke's pages are colored with jingo ink, but they are filled with facts and statistics, with outlines of Manchurian history and present conditions, and with glowing accounts of Japanese achievements which he hopes may 'stop America to see Manchuria as she is.'" F: O'Brien

+ N Y Tribune p4 Jl 12 '25 2100w

"The information about Manchurian trade and industry contained in this book is almost encyclopædic in range. The author has been familiar with the subject for many years, and has made every effort to bring his knowledge up to date. The book is fully illustrated."

+ R of Rs 71:560 My '25 100w

ADAMS, ARTHUR BARTS. Economics of business cycles. 268p $2.50 McGraw

338 Business cycles. Panics. Economic conditions 25-4194

"The discussion divides itself into three main portions: (1) the business system and its normal functioning; (2) the nature and characteristics of business cycles; and (3) control of cycles. By far the largest part of the book deals with the nature, causes, and various aspects of business cycles. The author also examines critically a number of the important theories of cycles."—Am Management R

"Despite the fact that a considerable volume of literature dealing with business cycles has existed, there has been but little in a form which might be used for the teaching of undergraduate classes. The book under review fills the gap very satisfactorily. In appearance, arrangement and in nature of material it is admirably adapted to textbook needs." N. R. Whitney

+ Am Management R 14:205 Je '25 950w

Booklist 22:8 O '25

"Economics of Business Cycles was written 'to supply the need for a textbook for college courses in Business Cycles' but the author hopes it will also 'be of interest, and value to business men, bankers and public officials.' In plan and execution the book promises to serve both purposes."

+ Eng N 94:698 Ap 23 '25 420w

Harvard Business R 4:124 O '25 150w

ADAMS, EPHRAIM DOUGLASS. Great Britain and the American Civil war. 2v 307;340p $10 Longmans

973.72 United States—History—Civil war—Foreign public opinion. Great Britain—Foreign relations—United States 25-11786

The professor of history in Stanford university makes a thorough study of British policy and opinion during the Civil war based upon researches in diplomatic correspondence and the public press of the period, from which he freely quotes. From an examination of this evidence he shows that the British government maintained a "generally correct neutrality" while the radical element and leaders like Cobden and Bright gave their whole-hearted support to the cause of the North.

"His knowledge of British politics and politicians in the middle Victorian era is very remarkable, and his judgment of them, to my thinking, penetrating as well as impartial. Englishmen can go to this book as the authority on the subject without any fear of being misled. . . The two volumes have the great merit of being thoroughly readable all through." G. M. Trevelyan

+ Am Hist R 31:154 O '25 1200w

"The author has made very thorough research into the documents in British archives. He has been permitted to quote from papers hitherto unavailable for publication. He has presented his manuscript to the British foreign office and no single citation has been censored. . . Here is a contribution to the history of England and America of fine quality and very great importance. It adds much to the understanding of the relations between the countries at a critical time." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '25 1800w

"The subject is of extreme importance and has been treated in a decidedly interesting and scholarly manner. All who desire to distinguish between popular delusions and scientific history should become acquainted with this notable contribution to our political annals." C. H. McC.

+ Cath World 121:847 S '25 1150w

"Dr. Adams has performed a real service in clearing a field which has been too greatly obscured by prejudice." Stewart Beach

+ Ind 115:23 Jl 4 '25 850w

"This is a work certain to take high rank. The subject is an important one. The treatment is thorough." W. J. Ghent

+ Lit R p4 N 28 '25 650w

"The history of English opinion on the American war is still to be written; Professor Adams has made a contribution by serving up records which hitherto were unattainable." W. C. Ford

Nation 121:737 D 23 '25 700w

"Those who are interested in the history of English opinion in the nineteenth century will find Professor Adams's book of great value. It might perhaps have been even more valuable if he had explained more carefully what he means by public opinion. He might have given us a bolder summary of his conclusions. No one could doubt his scholarly impartiality, but it seems that in his desire to retain it he has often refrained from letting us know what he judges to be the significance of the story he has told us."

+ Nation and Ath 37:547 Ag 1 '25 1050w

Reviewed by C. A. Beard

New Repub 44:sup5 S 30 '25 1650w

"Professor Adams has done a very much needed piece of work, and with the dispassionate zeal of the exhaustive investigator has said the last word that ever need be said on the subject."

ADAMS, EPHRAIM D.—Continued

+ New Statesman 25:456 Ag 1 '25 520w

N Y Times p3 Ag 2 '25 2450w

"He is to be commended for his industry and his skilful presentation of his material, but most of all for his careful weighing of evidence and his maintenance of judicial calm. He has a great story to tell and he has told it well."
W: McDonald

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ag 23 '25 1650w

"Marks an epoch in the world's understanding of the history of those five crucial years. That is because for the first time an American scholar, possessed not only of indefatigable industry and patience in research but also of a discriminating, judicious and impartial mind, has studied the subject from the British point of view as well as the American, and has had access to a wealth of original sources never before available. The result is to correct some errors, to confirm into confident beliefs some mere suppositions, and to illumine much that has hitherto been dark." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:182 S '25 520w

Pratt p34 autumn '25

"Valuable and attractively written book."

+ Spec 135:660 O 17 '25 800w

"All who value a good understanding between this country and the United States will be grateful to the author for the skill and impartiality with which he analyses the evidence and sets in their right place and proportion activities and expressions of opinion which, if taken alone, might easily be used to fan the embers of American resentment."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p487 J1 23 '25 1750w

ADAMS, FRANKLIN PIERCE; TAYLOR, DEEMS; and BECHDOLT, JOHN ERNEST, comps. Book of diversion. 288p $2.50 Greenberg

808.8 Literature—Collections. Amusements 25-9376

"Verse, songs, epigrams, plays, games, suggestions for campers, hikers, picnickers, luncheon and dinner menus and recipes and a splendid exposition of camp-fire cooking, all in one handy volume. The Verses collected by Franklin P. Adams range from the Song of Songs to 'The Famous Ballad of the Jubilee Cup,' by Arthur T. Quiller-Couch; from the light verse of the Elizabethans and the Jacobians to the charming nonsense ballads of Flaccus and Baron Ireland. Deems Taylor has arranged a selection of folk songs from the wide world, cowboy ballads, Negro spirituals, rounds, and at least one drinking song. Snappy little plays, with short casts and brief demands in scene and costuming, have been provided by Jack Bechdolt, while Miss Rowland's epigrams and Miss Claire's recipes must be savored to be enjoyed."—N Y World

"An excellent job of its kind. Not a dry book of rules for entertainment, this, but a most inspiring and useful little volume."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 200w

"Altogether it is a delightful book, with our most enthusiastic vote for the song department." W. Y.

+ Lit R p11 My 9 '25 200w

"On laying it aside one wonders what will be the fate of such a compilation. People who have sense enough to supply their own amusements will not avail themselves of its suggestions; people without that intelligence will lack the spirit to seize on the possibilities here laid before them. What puzzles one most is whence, in default of the scholarly criteria and esthetic taste evinced by Taylor alone, the editors derive their authority to tell the public how to divert itself." J: Carter

+ N Y Times p2 S 6 '25 1250w

"By no means the least charm of this little volume is that it 'slips into the coat pocket.'"

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 130w

"It is recommended as a book of reference for entertainments of all descriptions, as a volume to leave around loose in guest rooms in the country, and as a first-hand and extremely practical little source-book, to be held in the left hand, while the right diligently stirs."

+ N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 180w

St Louis p350 S '25

Spring'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 180w

ADAMS, HENRY FOSTER. Ways of the mind; the study and use of psychology. 336p $1.80 (8s 6d) Scribner

150 Psychology 25-2158

A simple text giving the fundamentals about which psychologists are in agreement and using many illustrations. A list of problems is appended to each chapter.

Booklist 21:356 J1 '25

"This little volume was evidently prepared with the educator and his class in view, yet it is well adapted for general reading in an age which especially needs precise and accurate information on the subject of psychology."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 7 '25 500w

Cleveland p90 S '25

"I am convinced from a thorough and delightful reading of your Ways of the Mind, Henry Foster Adams, a practical work which I should call essential for mind-users, and suitable for systematic study early in the high-school course, that fate points her finger at you as elected to produce 'A Psychology for School Superintendents.' It would be a manual which would do for a peculiar occupation what you tell us psychology is doing for modern business."

+ Educ R 69:217 Ap '25 1400w

St Louis p332 S '25

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

ADAMS, HERBERT. Secret of Bogey House. 252p $2 Lippincott

25-24275

The Bogey House has a lively reputation but so far as Bridgman can discover there is nothing about it more sinister than that its sporting guests drink or gamble, play tennis or swim, as they feel inclined. Yet it was from Bogey House that David Gregson disappeared in disquieting fashion, and Bridgman, impelled by a pair of laughing eyes to his rôle of amateur detective is there to find out where and why he went. Gregson suddenly returns. His dead body is found next day. The owner of the laughing eyes—co-ward of the dead man—joins Bridgman. Together they discover the secret of Bogey House and with it the murderer, his motive and the curious ramifications of the crime.

"It is a good story agreeably told, entertaining and convincing."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 200w

"On the whole an exciting and swift-moving story." H. H. Wallerstein

+ Lit R p4 Ag 22 '25 150w

"The secret is well kept until the end, and if the machinery of the story is somewhat creaky with age and over use, it is used adroitly enough to satisfy the average lover of detective fiction. There is a love interest which justifies its intrusion, and Mr. Adams' people are not mere puppets."

+ New Statesman 23:580 Ag 23 '24 200w

"The story is a little out of the general run of detective tales, even if it does have a mysterious murder and a stupid local detective in it, and it has some factors of fresh imagination and unhackneyed invention."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 16 '25 400w

N Y Tribune p11 S 20 '25 100w

Reviewed by J. S. Griffith

N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 180w

"Although Mr. Adams's mystery novel seems to us a minor member of the populous tribe, he has known how to keep the action humming, the interest high, and the flimsy secret impenetrable to the end."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:141 S 19 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 J1
17 '24 200w

ADAMS, JOHN, and JEFFERSON, THOMAS. Correspondence, 1812-1826; selected with comment by Paul Wiltach. 197p il $2.75 Bobbs

B or 92 Jefferson, Thomas 25-20253

These two great Americans, friends in their earlier youth, were for many years estranged and did not come together again till toward the end of their long lives. The letters here collected belong to the period of their reconciliation and range over history and politics, the men they knew, the books they read and speculations about life. They are the letters of mellow age, "too full of the nakedness of two wise old souls," to have been published in the life-time of the writers.

Cleveland p113 D '25

"The letters in this book are well chosen and highly interesting."

+ — Ind 115:364 S 26 '25 200w

"Mr. Wiltach has rendered a real service in collecting these letters into one volume with interesting connecting comments and explanations. They should have a place in the library of every American." C. G. Bowers

+ Int Bk R p794 N '25 1550w

Reviewed by Howard Devree

N Y Times p15 D 20 '25 1050w

"May be said to realize the ideal of entertainment coupled with mild instruction. While little light is thrown on the supposedly strained personal relations up to then existing between the two (though Adams denies this), the letters reflect the alacrity, vivacity and virility of intellect possessed by these fathers of the republic, and show with what insight and philosophical moderation they discoursed alike on themes on which they differed and on themes on which they agreed."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 D 23 '25 550w

ADAMS, LEONIE. Those not elect. 50p $1.50

McBride

811

25-18500

"Miss Adams knows her metaphysical poets; it is evident that she has much in common with Herbert, Crashaw and the earlier Skelton. But the expression of her spirit, sometimes sparse, more often allusive, is fastidiously her own. There is a richness of emotion in the poet's very withdrawal from reality. This warmth so sensuous and yet so spiritual, is manifest on all these fifty pages."—New Repub

"Leonie Adams' advent will be, unless all signs are worthless, one of the events of the year; it will need neither drums nor proclamations to awaken the most torpid reader to the hushed and almost silent ecstasy of 'Those Not Elect.'" L: Untermeyer

+ Bookm 62:497 D '25 200w

Cleveland p121 D '25

"Hers is a voice that makes one pause at the first sound of its low tones even though the range is limited and the words she sings are sometimes difficult to catch. Here is an accent which is as sensitive as it is strange, a register that seems to tremble with certain Elizabethan echoes but which vibrates with a lyric passion that proceeds from no other century but our own. Miss Adams is, as even the simplest of her poems reveals, a metaphysical poet; her most candidly declared descriptions blossom suddenly in an unearthly and intensified air. One waits, with something greater than curiosity, for the successor to Those Not Elect." L: Untermeyer

+ New Repub 45:23 N 25 '25 420w

ADAMS, RANDOLPH GREENFIELD. History of the foreign policy of the United States. 490p il $3.50 (18s) Macmillan

327.73 United States—Foreign relations

24-29764

"The book surveys in eighteen short chapters the more important events in our foreign relations, beginning with the papal bull of Alexander VI and ending with a quotation from the winner of the Bok peace prize."—Am Pol Sci R

"A cursory reading of the narrative leaves a general impression that the author has failed to make either an adequate or a clear distinction between foreign affairs and foreign policy. Had Dr. Adams made this distinction clear before embarking upon his theme, he could probably have reduced the length of his text, or at any rate have dwelt upon several topics which now find no place in the book." H: B. Learned

— Am Hist R 30:835 J1 '25 1350w

"The style is that of vigorous conversation, which will add interest for many readers. The outline maps increase the value of the book." C: E. Hill

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:190 F '25 680w

"An unusually readable and suggestive survey."

+ Booklist 21:217 Mr '25

Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '24 1050w

"Sound in research, progressive in tone, and interesting in style."

+ Educ R 69:219 Ap '25 900w

"A most interesting and useful book." R. S. Morris

+ Lit R p4 Mr 14 '25 1550w

"Before reading it I had heard numbers of academic colleagues criticize its style as flip-pant. My own reading failed to find any evidence of such a manner, save occasionally in the use of words. The important thing is that it is a book of ideas clearly and pleasantly expressed, which will easily hold all those who find the ideas interesting and novel—which should include most American readers." C. R. Fisk

+ N Y Tribune p14 N 15 '25 1650w

"The title of Dr. Adams's work does not exactly fit its contents. It is really a brief account, for the most part chronological, of the foreign relations of the United States. Strictly speaking, it can hardly be called a history of our foreign policy. Most of the blemishes may easily be remedied in a second edition. Until they are, this otherwise excellent book must be used with caution." J. F. Rippey

+ — Pol Sci Q 40:291 Je '25 950w

"I hope no one will think me a cynic when I say that this volume should be of particular value to college and high school students and to women's clubs. Its value to more advanced students may be questioned, yet it is a book which will well serve to inform and attract the general reader in a field where there is crying need of such contributions. It is not a fundamental book, but a useful one." A. L. P. Dennis

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:598 Mr 14 '25 450w

Reviewed by H. C. Hill

School R 33:629 O '25 350w

"Mr. Adams's book has many merits: it is well arranged, well documented, and, above all, written in a clear and readable style. Purists will note an occasional lapse into American slang; but this should make it more popular with the public for whom it is primarily intended."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p211 Mr 26 '25 1350w

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. Bring! bring! and other stories. 240p $2.50 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Secker]

25-9296

Thirteen short stories which either emphasize a mood or portray a subtle trait of character. "Bring! Bring!" the first, which gives the book its title, concerns an abnormal household consisting of a semi-invalid wife, her husband, a nurse, and the wife's sister. The husband is a philanderer who having tired of an affair with his sister-in-law, turns his attentions to the nurse, and the jealousy between the two women is shown from the nurse's point of view. The other stories are: Strange moonlight; The disciple; By my troth, Nerissa; Smith and Jones; The escape from fatuity; Hey, taxi! The dark city; The orange moth; The last visit; The letter; The anniversary; Soliloquy on a park bench.

AIKEN, CONRAD P.—Continued

"His style is graceful; he instinctively strikes the right note on every occasion, he never fails to select precisely the right word when an inferior choice might mar the effect of a situation. In short, Mr. Aiken knows his business thoroughly. As a collection of short stories, 'Bring! Bring!' is extremely difficult to surpass." B. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 820w
Cleveland p84 J1 '25

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley
Dial 79:507 D '25 1050w

"Mr. Aiken is a writer of many gifts. He has intelligence in a high, in a delightful, degree; he has psychological insight and, what goes very seldom with it, a cultivated sense of proportion; he has style; and he has the capacity for exercising all his gifts consciously and yet without affectation, eliciting from them no more and no less than they are capable of giving. Of these qualities the most impressive is intelligence. The fact that Mr. Aiken has been influenced by Freud is, of course, in a certain sense irrelevant, though interesting. It is in psychological and imaginative power, in firmness of style and treatment, that these stories are remarkable." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 37:240 My 23 '25 450w

"Mr. Aiken's touch is harsh, robust, emphatic, masculine." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 43:242 J1 22 '25 500w

"Mr. Aiken's book, though interesting, is a disappointment; for Mr. Aiken has, especially in America, a considerable reputation as a poet; and one expects exceptional prose from a poet. Many of his short stories here collected have, however, little to recommend them beyond dexterity." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:341 J1 4 '25 120w

"Mr. Aiken's endowment is so exceptional and his accomplishment so fine, that one feels a more than ordinary sense of disappointment in his unfulfilled promises. In almost every story in the present collection that promise is very high. His insight into character, his feeling for the truly dramatic and intensely poetic, are so sure, that, liking these stories as one assuredly must, they nevertheless leave behind them an irritation almost inevitable and a well warranted regret."

+ N Y Times p8 My 10 '25 460w

"To those interested ones who were so delighted with that latest group of poems will come no little disappointment over the appearance of this collection of thirteen stories and sketches, only four of which even suggest an approach to Mr. Aiken's best poetic development. 'Strange Moonlight' and 'The Disciple' will give to any musical and mystic mind a strange sense of satisfaction. Most of the other stories evidence a reversion." Russell Wright

+ N Y Tribune p11 My 31 '25 700w

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

N Y World p4m My 17 '25 520w

Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 150w

"Mr. Conrad Aiken presents us with a packet of intellectual fireworks, every one of which is guaranteed to go off in a brilliant cascade of sound and color. In plain English, he has written an excellent first volume of tales." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:529 My 16 '25 150w

"His style has the charm of never being obtrusive; his technique is always a means to expressing emotion, never an end in itself.

As for the book itself, it might be called a record of emotion. He writes in prose; but in this volume, as in his half-dozen books of verse, he remains essentially a poet." Malcolm Cowley

+ Sat R of Lit 1:851 Je 27 '25 900w

"All [the stories] are strong in depiction of sense-impressions, in vividness of setting, and in vitality and richness of style. They seem to be different from the 'typical' short story if there is such a thing, in that they often read like a piece taken out of a longer whole. It is as if the author's keen devouring interest had leaped upon certain scenes and incidents in the lives of his characters, shown them to us vigorously, almost passionately, and then drawn the curtain leaving us with the feeling that the story goes right on beyond our vision. Yet, in themselves, the stories are complete."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 350w

"What he excels in is the exploration of the inner consciousness at a moment when it is in revolt against life or when it is vibrating in passionate unison with the senses. By choosing these moments Mr. Aiken is able to avoid the merely confused and abstract. With a strong visual faculty and sense of colour, he paints life boldly in order to contrast it with the emotions and reactions of a consciousness."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p282 Ap 23 '25 520w

AIKEN, CONRAD POTTER. Priapus and the pool, and other poems. 151p $2 Boni & Liveright

811

25-21048

Priapus and the pool has already appeared in a limited edition. It is here included with other later poems.

"The large sweep of Mr. Aiken's emotions, like the brush-strokes of modern impressionistic painters whom he recalls, is gained at the cost of well-wrought details. Rimes are frequently careless, exact schemes are occasionally begun and left unfinished, adjectives grow at times like jungle weeds. . . These mar but little the full joy of surging emotion, but they lessen the later delight of rereading and lingering along the way." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p2 D 12 '25 480w

"Mr. Aiken has done his task well. The several other poems of the volume are at—or at worst, near—the high level of the titlepiece. He has, however, the disturbing tendency now and again to become interested in extravagance for its own sake; and when he does this his poetry suffers. Despite the jacket-laudation, the present reviewer finds in the poem 'King Borigm!' too much of the poet's sheer desire to caper." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p8 N 29 '25 350w

"The limitation we feel is a weariness and tepidity of line. Most of Mr. Aiken's poetry ebbs away like a sound of violins from the shore, heard on a receding boat. His lines evanesce, and his thought languishes in the fragrance of words and phrases as world weariness rustles through them. Unfortunately, it only rustles. Nevertheless, the Masefieldian swing and sound of his earliest work, 'Earth Triumphant' and 'Forslin,' revealed a strength whose fusion with the cynical analytical lyricist was greatly to be desired." J. W. Gassner

+ N Y Tribune p13 N 8 '25 650w

AIKMAN, DUNCAN, ed. Taming of the frontier; by ten authors. 319p il $3 Minton, Balch & co.

978 Cities and towns—West. Frontier and pioneer life. West—History 25-19752

These are vigorous sketches of ten frontier cities whose sturdy individualism long withstood the onrush of standardization. The ten authors who herein salute a passing spirit of vigor and dash are writers not merely in the West but of it. Contents: Introduction; El Paso, by O. P. White; Ogden, by Bernard De Voto; Denver, by G. Loomis; San Francisco, by Idwal Jones; St Paul, by Grace Flan-drau; Portland, by Dean Collins; Kansas City, by H. J. Haskell; San Antonio, by D. N. Raymond; Los Angeles, by Paul Jordan-Smith; Cheyenne, by Cary Abbott.

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
Bookm 62:612 Ja '26 100w

Boston Transcript p7 N 23 '25 250w

"An entertaining and instructive work. It is also rather sad." D. R.

+ Ind 115:588 N 21 '25 100w

"In these sketches writers who know their subject have set down the sort of history that means something, and yet the sort of history that never finds its way into the textbooks." Carey Jeffreys

+ Lit R p2 S 26 '25 350w

"You will get something worth the reading out of every town in the book. A lovely book, a book that every father should give his son to offset the unsalted tripe in the history books at school."

+ N Y World p5m O 4 '25 350w

"The ten portrait painters use the bright and sometimes crude pigments that are nowadays in vogue. They have done their work not unskillfully. They follow Oliver Cromwell's advice and paint the warts; but they do it with an eye to the pictorial effect."

Outlook 141:360 N 4 '25 160w

"A fairly entertaining volume of light stuff without anything of the artistic touch to make the past live again."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:349 N 28 '25 130w

ALDEN, RAYMOND MACDONALD, ed.
Shakespeare handbook. 240p $1.35 F. S. Crofts & co., 201 W. 13th st., N.Y.

822.33 Shakespeare, William 25-10509

"Aims to give students 'of collegiate grade' and other 'mature, but not learned' readers, the materials needed for the study of Shakespeare's principal works. Contains the known facts of his life, chronology of plays, source material (occupying the greater portion of the book), notes on grammar and versification, bibliography and glossary."—Wis Lib Bul

"Shakespeare lovers and a large number of intelligent readers who wish to join the ranks will find this little volume greatly to their taste." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:168 O '25 380w

"His new book most decidedly justifies itself, for it contains an extensive treatment of Shakespeare's source material. The great usefulness of this to the Shakespeare amateur will be apparent, for he is saved the labor of gathering together the volumes of Holinshed, Plutarch, Belleforest, Fiorentino, Bandello, and the rest. Here they all are." A. R. Elsasser

+ Lit R p4 N 21 '25 250w

"The book makes available for the student material which will aid him alike in analyzing the structures of the plays and in appreciating the genius with which the dramatist transformed his borrowed plots and characters."

+ Springfd Republican p10 N 25 '25 280w

"Useful little book, helpful to teachers and for self education."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

ALDINGTON, HILDA (DOOLITTLE) (MRS RICHARD ALDINGTON) (H. D., pseud.).
Collected poems. 306p $2.50 Boni & Liveright
811 25-9543

This volume brings together all of H. D.'s verse. Contents: Sea garden; The god; Choruses; Hymen; Heliodora.

Reviewed by Robert Hillyer

Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '25 400w

Booklist 22:63 N '25

"Like a stream moving towards the sea, the poetic depth of her work increases as we go further into the collection. By various and beautiful cadence schemes she preserves the sound pictures of Greek poetry." Hildegard Tillmore

+ Bookm 62:80 S '25 280w

"Her work is original, absolutely original. She has marked a new epoch with her verses, written a new guide post for youth. And because she has demonstrated the freedom that lies in store for one conscious of the past who will cast off the shackles of trite convention and step into a fuller light, she is to be looked upon as one whose work is of a truth successful." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 1050w

"In the making of classic personages or situations, symbols of present ones; in the concept of colour and form, as in the rhetoric, we find, intensive, unmixed, and unimpeded, the white fire of the poet—of one who, repudiating miscellany, is immemorably garlanded, not with orange flowers nor cyclamen, but as H. D. has said of Sappho, with 'the frail silver leaf of the bright scentless and immortal olive.'" Marianne Moore

+ Dial 79:170 Ag '25 600w

"Not before the whole had been printed in a single volume was it possible for us to grasp the full significance of this work in the world of modern poetry. But the book has brought the whole together as a clear story. There is an extraordinary vista of a strong rise, beginning with youth and extending over a long period of a woman's growth and blossoming and further rise from that flower into a world beyond it, that should be to every American a strengthening pride." W: C. Williams

+ Lit R p4 My 23 '25 720w

"Seldom does a volume of collected poems present so even, so unchanging a texture as this. The consistency of form is remarkable, and it is a form which is neither more nor less convincing in the latest pieces than it was in 'Sea Garden,' which manifested a swift and perfect control of free verse such as perhaps no other American poet—or English poet, for that matter—has attained." E: Sapir

+ Nation 121:211 Ag 19 '25 700w

"After the first astonishment of observing how much more poetry she has written than was to be inferred from her previous publications, a second and thankful astonishment will take its place, the astonishment of being able to read more than 300 pages of unrhymed verse concerned mainly with Greek themes and finding a constant pleasure in the privilege. The art of H. D. is crystalline. Better than any living poet she has captured a Sapphic purity of tone, and the delicate and precise images of her work are heightened by a clear lyric note." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p7 My 10 '25 480w

"There are eighty-nine poems in all—an immense output for ten years when one considers that none of them is negligible and that a few will last, probably as long as any verse of our generation." Malcolm Cowley

+ N Y Tribune p5 O 11 '25 800w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 320w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. Exile, and other poems. 64p $2 Four seas [7s 6d Allen & U.]
821 [25-14505]

"[Poems by the imagist poet] who of late years has been busy as an editor and translator, and who incidentally has become not quite so completely an imagist poet. Several songs here in the seventeenth-century manner are as exquisite as they are bold, and the longer pieces, evidently evoked by profound personal experience, say more than most imagist poets have ever had to say."—Nation

"There is a jaded quality about the Aldington verses, especially those under the caption 'Exile.' It is prose, rendered with dignity, possessing a slightly Shakespearean flavor. The verses which are collected under 'Words For Music' belong to a different category. Mr. Aldington has firm command of metrical form, when he chooses to exercise it."

ALDINGTON, RICHARD—Continued

— + Boston Transcript p3 Ja 31 '25 150w

"Decidedly the most impressive volume thus far by this imagist poet."

+ Nation 120:192 F 18 '25 70w

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

Nation and Ath 34:548 Ja 12 '24 80w

"To read Mr. Aldington's latest collection of poems is to pass through a very intense experience. It is in a way to pass through fire—the white fire of irony, which cleanses even as it sears. The master imagist has reached a vital point in his development—a point at which his technique is swift and certain, his hold on life hesitant and precarious." Glenn Hughes

New Repub 42:24 F 25 '25 800w

"Those of us who have followed the work of Richard Aldington from his first arousing 'Images, Old and New' through the mordantly brilliant 'Images of War' and the starved tenacities of 'War and Love' will find in his latest volume an increasing compression and a deeper range. Reading 'Exile' for what it is in itself, as poetry, we are more and more amazed at the subtle acidity of the needle and the latitude of the arc it describes." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p7m Ap 26 '25 150w

"Mr. Richard Aldington is certainly not entitled to inform us in free verse that he finds the provinces dull, or that his 'very mind seems gangrened.' He can turn out a very neat copy of Restoration verse, though here, too, he is much impressed by his immorality. He can write very creditable Metrical Exercises on country pleasures, though he cannot avoid telling us that he lives 'remote and proud.'" Alan Porter

— + Spec 132:461 Mr 22 '24 500w

ALDINGTON, RICHARD. Fool I' the forest; a phantasmagoria. ltd ed 62p $1.50 Dial press [5s Allen & U.]

821

[25-14506]

"A phantasmagoria, a long poem in sections which is formulated as a symbolical narrative. With varied rhythms and a constancy of prosy free verse he tells the story of the wanderings of I, Messetin and The Conjuror. There is no doubt as to just what these figures are meant to convey, for the poet explains them in an introductory note. I is the man of our time who by temperament is more fitted for the artistic life than a scientific civilization. The phantasmagoria is 'the mirror of his mind's turmoil as he struggles to attain a harmony between himself and the exterior world.' Messetin symbolizes the imaginative faculties. The Conjuror represents the intellectual faculties—age, science, cant, solemnity and what not."—N Y Times

"The poet, wielding a trenchant and often bitter pen evolves a commentary on present day society that seems as good a bit of satiric writing as has appeared in many a day." F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 13 '26 320w

It is a kind of cross section of the most 'modern' minds, of a brilliant, inquisitive culture gone somewhat sour and querulous, but lit by bitter humor and unafraid of burlesque."

+ Ind 115:136 Ag 1 '25 100w

"All his poems please by a gemlike cutting. His workmanship is clean and scrupulous, his materials clear and cool." Paul Rosenfeld

+ Lit R p5 D 26 '25 1750w

Nation 121:77 J1 8 '25 30w

"Mr. Aldington's verse is always clear and crisp, but as a metrical he is uninteresting. His satire, directed indiscriminately at institutions, his neighbors, and himself is sometimes penetrating and amusing, sometimes irrelevant and silly. His serious passages suffer most from the looseness of style and structure. He is best at the end, when the hero lies awake and looks back on his youth."

+ Nation and Ath 37:720 F 21 '25 430w

"The hard intellectual irony which characterized Richard Aldington's Exile and Other Poems appears again in his latest poetic work, A Fool I' the Forest, though here it is softened by frequent humor. For this reason the newer book, if not stronger, is more entertaining and more palatable, and comes nearer to the Meredithian ideal of comedy." Glenn Hughes

+ New Repub 43:160 J1 1 '25 1050w

"The poem, inconsequential and changing, is informed by idea and mood, and the three mental aspects are cleverly reflected or kept in contesting movement."

+ New Statesman 24:780 Ap 11 '25 520w

"Aldington does not possess the concentrated poetic force or the beautifully condensed ironic power of Eliot, but he is an able secondary figure, and while his phantasmagoria unmistakably suffers when placed in comparison with 'The Waste Land,' there is yet enough bite and ability in it to make it well worth reading." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times, p7 My 10 '25 750w

"The poem is reminiscent of 'The Waste Land'—let the reader praise or blame—and its general effect is that of fireflies in a fog. We are not tempted to follow the gleam but to appreciate the glints." G. F. Whicher

N Y Tribune p3 J1 12 '25 500w

Reviewed by G. H. Conkling

No Am 222:160 S '25 280w

"Mr. Aldington's phantasmagoria is a medley of poetry and the vaudevillean backchat of the intelligentsia. There is more wit than poetry, save in 'Telemachus' and the passage numbered XXIV, but on the last page, after all the clatter and anguish, comes a tragic beautiful poem which makes the book memorable."

+ Sat R 139:83 Ja 24 '25 320w

"The reader's interest is gripped from the beginning to the end of this long poem." R. Church

+ Sat R of Lit 2:464 Ja 2 '26 650w

Reviewed by R. Church

Spec 134:509 Mr 28 '25 600w

ALDRICH, LILIAN (WOODMAN) (MRS THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH). Choice receipts. 219p $2.50 Houghton

641 Cookery

* 25-22035

People who have had the privilege of being entertained in the Aldrich home have brought away vivid memories of the perfection of its table and have frequently begged for copies of this or that receipt. Mrs. Aldrich has here made a selection of her choicest receipts—dishes which have stood the test of repeated trials by several hands. A collection of household hints, entitled Woman's wit, is added.

"In her preface she says that she has accepted nothing from tradition, but has gone to the kitchen and herself tried out the data for every recipe. And, in addition, she has had each one tested by several hands and has included nothing that has not emerged triumphant from these varied trials."

+ N Y Times p23 Ja 10 '25 250w

ALEXANDER, HARTLEY BURR. Manito masks. 209p il $3.50 Dutton

792 Masks (plays). Indians of North America—Legends 25-18406

Dramatizations, with music, of American Indian spirit legends. The materials are freely handled but the author is careful to keep the native spirit and symbolism. The plays call for little in the way of properties and most of them can be produced by three or four performers.

"It is quite the best which has appeared in book form. Mr. Alexander in an admirable preface, shows himself thoroughly familiar with the meaning and movement of Amerindian art. He makes the unnecessary but perhaps excusable mistake of mixing the costumes, modes and musical themes of various tribes in an endeavor to get something generically 'Indian.' This is about as effective as undertaking to get a generically 'European' piece of work, patched together out of Scandinavian, French, Italian and Greek miscellanies. Fortunately this patch work effect is mostly contained in the stage directions and does not effect the quality of the Masks themselves." Mary Austin

+ — N Y Tribune p1 O 18 '25 820w
 "A volume of importance. Rarely has an enterprise of this kind been so successful."
 + Theatre Arts Mo 9:844 D '25 400w

ALLEN, CARLETON KEMP. Judgment of Paris. 310p $2 Dodd

25-6516

A humorous tale about the tribulations of a bachelor who by virtue of a large fortune to which he is an unwilling heir, makes the acquaintance of an admiring group of people. These new friends spare no pains in making life exceedingly attractive for Dudley, so attractive indeed that one morning he wakes up to find himself engaged to two women at the same time! Then the wrangle starts and Dudley endeavors gently to extricate himself from this mess. Believing his money to be a hindrance to his love affairs he disposes of it, and makes a surprising discovery. The story closes with Dudley's chances for happiness looking fairly bright. His prospective wife is good-looking, has a sense of humor and knows how to take care of a husband who was firmly grounded in the ways of a bachelor.

Booklist 21:382 J1 '25

"An occasional dash of humor and a variety of unusual incidents made 'The Judgment of Paris' readable, if nothing more."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 20 '25 300w
 Reviewed by T: L. Masson
 Int Bk R p510 J1 '25 50w

"Handling is everything with a theme of this sort, and Mr. Allen manages the affair very well indeed. He sparkles a bit now and then in the most approved Georgian manner, dashing off an epigram with the apparent ease of an Arlen or a Meynell, and mostly he is genuinely amusing. He writes with an abundance of good spirits and a zest that make his book appealing." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 F 28 '25 250w

"It made one reader, and a hardened one, chuckle almost from beginning to end. The fact is the characters are all skillfully distinguished and sympathetically drawn on straightforward, if conventional, lines. It is surprising what a swing, given a modicum of well-managed incident, this will impart to even such an artificial affair." J. F.

+ New Statesman 24:supviii D 6 '24 350w

"The Judgment of Paris,' with its genial humor and persuasive drollery is delightfully amusing."

+ N Y Times p17 Mr 15 '25 550w

"Extremely well told, with real sparkle in the style: and under an off-hand assumption of facetiousness, it has considerable literary merit. Nothing is more painful than the facetious when it does not come off: when it does, it is an art in itself." Gerald Gould
 + Sat R 138:551 N 29 '24 100w

"The present comedy, without descending to the realm of obvious burlesque, contains humor so richly and easily appealing that one finds difficulty in conceiving of a reader on whom its effect would be wasted."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:603 Mr 14 '25 300w

ALLEN, CARLETON KEMP. Oh, Mr Leacock! 83p $1 Dodd

827

25-10511

A burlesque on Stephen Leacock which is at the same time a criticism and an appreciation.

Mr Allen quotes from Leacock's books commenting with mock seriousness on his views.

Boston Transcript p8 J1 25 '25 250w
 Cleveland p122 D '25

"It is never dull and at times it is just as funny as Mr. Leacock himself."
 + Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 30w

Reviewed by T: L. Masson
 Int Bk R p510 J1 '25 60w
 Lit R p3 Ag 8 '25 160w

"There is loud laughter in every page of the book; and if Mr. Allen were quite an unknown author Mr. Leacock would certainly be suspected of having written it himself!"

+ Living Age 253:695 Je 27 '25 180w (Reprinted from Westminster Gazette)

"Nothing seems more delightful than that Mr. Leacock should be so merrily reviewed in his own manner. The wit and play of it is broad, but irresistible. Like the old adage, there is much in its shrewdness, of truth spoken in jest. At times Mr. Allen out-Leacocks Leacock, in the comic spectacle of two playboys outdoing each other. A capital burlesque." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p5 Ag 16 '25 1100w

"The idea of burlesquing a burlesquer is appealingly audacious, but Mr. Allen has not been able to pile Pelion on Ossa quite divertingly enough." Lawton Mackall

— N Y Tribune p15 Ja 3 '26 450w

Sat R of Lit 2:299 N 14 '25 300w

"It is all good fun."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p386 Je 4 '25 160w

ALLEN, EDGAR FLETCHER. Who's who in the Bible. 191p $2 Putnam

220.3 Bible. Whole—Biography. Bible. Whole —Dictionaries 25-10407

A biographical dictionary of the chief characters of the Bible, giving brief sketches of their careers and references to the sources quoted.

"A useful and handy reference book for the small library."

+ Booklist 22:5 O '25

"A unique but exceedingly welcome book." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:xxix J1 '25 30w

"The practical value of this book is undeniable. No one would question the value of the more usual Who's Who. This book has been designed for even more specific aid. There is an unquestionable fascination about the book and the reader cannot fail to know more of the Bible after even a casual perusal of it."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 15 '25 220w

"With good judgment the author avoids all critical and historical discussions, which would only confuse the ordinary reader. But he gives enough information to identify the different characters and to make them live." A. Z.

+ Cath World 121:851 S '25 250w

Cleveland p92 S '25

"Mr. Allen has a marked faculty for this kind of work, being able to imbue each character with graphic reality without sacrificing simplicity and accurate, authoritative quality."

+ N Y Times p4 My 24 '25 250w

"The general reader will not find it amiss as a quick means of verifying the identity of Biblical names which he comes across in his literary excursions. The book is convenient without being bulky."

+ N Y Tribune p16 S 27 '25 150w

Outlook 140:305 Je 24 '25 10w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 J1 '25

ALLEN, HERVEY. Earth moods, and other poems. 126p $2 Harper

811

25-9911

The first group of poems has evolution for its theme and Children of earth is a narrative poem about the effects of environment. The last third of the book is given to some shorter poems—lyrical, mystical, narrative, and grotesque.

ALLEN, HERVEY—Continued

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"His phrases leap one after another in his effort to give an impression of the swift flow of life through the ages, with whirling heavenly bodies and frozen worlds. He is successful, too, and if the reader can meet him with imagination, there is a terrifying beauty and clarity about some of these first poems. He reminds me now of Marlowe, now of Shelley; but not in a sense of imitation; for Hervey Allen has always seemed to me at his best the most strongly original of our younger poets." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:695 Ag '25 350w

"Here is a man who, if not yet a matured poet, certainly has the makings of one; whose forte is the small, colorful picture, but who prefers to exhaust himself in a vain effort to get the whole universe on his canvas. Fortunately Mr. Allen's verse is much better than his introduction would lead any one to suppose. It has, in fact, not infrequently a depth and power which command admiration and respect." B. E. Stevenson

+ Int Bk R p658 S '25 800w

"There is refreshingly little love-poetry. He paints on big canvases, and has little use for the amiable lyric note—or even the fevered one. The opening poem, 'Saga of the North,' is unashamedly thirty pages long; and it has a large, strongly continuous sweep, like a splendidly colored mural painting. He does not ignore the necessity for a long cultural background; his poetry stands solidly on a basis of old knowledge; yet it is unquestionably original." Margaret Widdemer

+ Lit R p3 Ag 15 '25 360w

Reviewed by R. L. Burgess

Nation 121:145 Jl 29 '25 450w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p11 My 31 '25 1050w

"Like Amy Lowell before him, he catches dynasties in a phrase, covers epochs in less than a stanza. But his terseness defeats itself, and the grandeur of his theme is blurred by a factual style, blunted by prose cadences. Possibly because of the struggle between Mr. Allen's forward-straining intellect and backward-straining heart, his work does not wholly capture the imagination. But what a magnificently Icarian flight!" Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Tribune p3 Je 21 '25 650w

"Hervey Allen has a genius for telescoping time and tumultuous marches over long waters into robust and rapid rhythms, beating with a Saxon vigor, hirsute and insistent, like the rowing of the long boats or the biting of battle axes on casques of steel. He has also the quality of pathos. But somehow we cannot help feeling that if the poet had allowed his 'Moods' to run rather than leash them to an attitude, the result would have been a clearer, more piercing idiom, a statement more emphatic, a music more cherishable." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 380w

"There is fine continuity of thought, fine seriousness in the book, and a rare force of imagination." G. H. Conkling

+ No Am 222:158 S '25 250w

"Hervey Allen is a newer and younger American who appears to me to have a poetic future before him. I find his chief fault at present a didacticism of mood, a predetermination of theme, a recurrence of prosaic heaviness of treatment that clogs his verse. But in passages he displays a gorgeous wildness of imagination duplicated in few of the younger poets of the day; and the range of his vision is precocious." W. R. Benet

+ Outlook 140:403 Jl 15 '25 300w

"The book is modern, vigorous, fearless. It is also artistic. His major subject is a vast one, and he has not only handled it with certainty and skill, but with a sharp sense for the definite and fitting word." L. W. Reese

+ Sat R of Lit 2:444 D 26 '25 720w

ALLEN, JAMES LANE. The landmark. 200p
$2.50 Macmillan

25-24587

The title-story was the last one written by James Lane Allen. It is here published for the first time. The other stories have appeared in magazines but not before in book form. Contents: The landmark; The ash-can; The violet; Miss Locke; La tendresse.

"Mr. Allen's flair for psycho-analysis, and his delicately vivid romances of description were never more manifest than in this Ave Atque Vale of his literary life-work." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 23 '25 480w

"One cannot read these fragments without wishing that Mr. Allen had lived to finish them. They promised some sound and suggestive thinking, especially the 'Introduction,' with its challenge to the 'corner-pushers,' 'The Landmark' does not measure up to the rest of the stories, perhaps because of its more or less unfinished state." Carey Jeffreys

+ Lit R p3 D 12 '25 300w

"Mr. Allen had an immense deal to say, and his hunt, one rather feels, was for pretext that would help him to deliver himself of it. The result is a blurred and somehow inexact superposition of psychology on action."

+ N Y Times p8 D 13 '25 1400w

"In the present collection the reader will find in special aspect the expression of some of the author's views of life and its meanings—as it were, an ingathering of last words, significant of the man quite as much as of his thought. The little idyl 'La Tendresse' is fine enough in itself to give true value to the collection."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 230w

ALLEN, THOMAS WILLIAM. Homer: the origins and the transmission; with an appendix of corrections and additions to the Homeric catalogue, 1921. 368p $6 Oxford [18s Milford]

883.1 Homer

[25-7777]

"The book is an admirable compendium of the evidence on questions familiar in Homeric controversy, such as the Homericæ, the Epic Cycle and Hymns, Hesiod, Pisistratus (whose influence on the poems is denied altogether), language, early quotations and editions and additions, and the origin of the Vulgate text."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 17 '25 520w

"Mr. Allen, who is a fellow of Queen's College, has done much in aid of the restoration of common sense as a method of approach to the study of Homer." H. L. P.

+ Lit R p9 D 20 '24 300w

Nation and Ath 36:498 Ja 3 '25 880w

"The exposition is supported by an incondite mass of evidence, both learned and pertinent, but hard reading even for the professional, from the inclusion in the text of subordinate matters belonging in footnotes and from an awkward and not infrequently obscure style. In fact, the book cannot be said to march, but rather to burrow, toward its conclusions. With a more lucid arrangement of facts and a more felicitous use of the pen Mr. Allen might almost make traditionalists of us all." A. S. Pease

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ja 25 '25 360w

"He gives a fuller, fairer, and more convenient compilation of the available evidence than can elsewhere be found in English. Mr. Allen's book is indispensable to scholars and libraries. He does not write for the general public." Paul Shorey

+ Sat R of Lit 1:480 Ja 24 '25 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p188 Mr 19 '25 480w

ALMACK, JOHN CONRAD, and LANG, ALBERT RAY. Problems of the teaching profession. (Riverside textbooks in education) 340p $1.90 Houghton

371.1 Teachers

25-2901

The problems of the teacher are considered from her own point of view, and from that of the school and community which she serves. The educational needs of America today, the teacher's training, salary, tenure of office and organization are among the questions discussed.

Reviewed by W. McAndrew
Educ R 70:147 O '25 600w

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott
School Life 10:140 Mr '25 100w

"The authors make free use of the scientific research which is available in this field. A well-chosen bibliography at the end of each chapter is an additional contribution. Clear organization of material is evident in the abundance of tables, specific lists of illustrative matter, and logical sequence of discussion. Since the text is designed primarily for beginning students, there is a minimum of technical treatment which might seem involved or confusing to that group. Controversial matters are faced frankly and treated impartially in the light of the best educational science available. The book accomplishes well what it purports to do." P. L. Palmer

+ School R 33:632 O '25 500w

ALVAREZ, ALEJANDRO. Monroe doctrine; its importance in the international life of the states of the New world. (Carnegie endowment for international peace. Division of international law. Publications) 573p $3 Oxford [18s Milford]

327.73 Monroe doctrine 24-21291

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The list of cases in which the United States has disregarded the doctrine is not complete, and no mention is made of participation by the United States in European affairs or of arbitration of American disputes by Europeans. But these shortcomings, if such they are, are mere incidents in a book which will be of great service to students of the Monroe Doctrine and of Pan-Americanism." D. Y. Thomas

+ — Am Pol Sci R 19:191 F '25 550w

"The extracts, drawn from a great variety of sources are especially valuable, and M. Alvarez has compiled a handy vade mecum to all aspects of the Monroe doctrine." Harold Temperley

+ Eng Hist R 40:294 Ap '25 400w

"Señor Alvarez has done yeoman service in providing what should become a standard reference work on the subject. Personally I shall be able, now I have it on my shelves, to drop into the scrap basket a host of extract notes, pamphlet printings, and newspaper clippings which formerly made up most of my file of materials on the subject. I now have the vast majority of them between the covers of a substantial and well arranged book." Elbridge Colby

+ Lit R p6 Ja 31 '25 400w

"The scholarly compilation edited by the eminent Chilean publicist and international lawyer, D. Alejandro Alvarez, is distinctive, because set forth in a language not his own, evincing wide knowledge and marked profundity of thought, and presenting the subject from a threefold standpoint, American, Latin-American and inter-American." W. R. Shepherd

+ Pol Sci Q 40:451 S '25 1300w

"The book, considering the vast mass of materials from which Señor Alvarez has had to select, is wonderfully complete, and the Carnegie Endowment is to be congratulated on having secured so fair-minded and distinguished an editor for a book which should do much to educate opinion both in Latin America and in the United States, and to remove the causes of friction between them."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p31 Ja 15 '25 1650w

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF ARTS AND LETTERS. Academy papers; addresses on language problems by members; [by] Paul Elmer More, and others. 282p $3 Scribner

420.4 English language

26-324

Papers read before the American academy of arts and letters on the Evangeline Wilbour Blashfield foundation, which has for its purpose the "preservation of the English language in its beauty and integrity, and its cautious enrichment by such terms as grow out of modern conditions." The papers included are by Paul Elmer More, William Milligan Sloane, William Crary Brownell, Brander Matthews, Bliss Perry, Paul Shorey, Henry Van Dyke, and Robert Underwood Johnson.

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 115:647 D 5 '25 1100w

"For any one interested in the use and the abuse of the English language, its development in our own time, the relations between the English of England and the English of other parts of the English-speaking world, and in its future, the book offers a rich mine of expert information, discussion, experience, wisdom."

+ N Y Times p2 Ja 3 '26 500w

"It does not appear that the authors of this volume in their laudable desire to do something for the English language have blazed new trails. Perhaps it was no part of their intention to blaze new trails. Their hope apparently is that they may succeed in turning back the course of travel upon some of the old and well-tried roads. It is a pious endeavor, and one that perhaps receives in our day less than its proper share of support." G. P. Krapp

N Y Tribune p9 N 29 '25 650w

"As a whole, the group is conservative without being in the least narrow or pedantic."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:413 D 12 '25 320w

AMERICAN ENGINEERING COUNCIL. Industrial coal; purchase, delivery and storage; a report. 419p il $5 Ronald

662.6 Coal. Coal trade

24-29765

"Report of a thorough investigation of the problems underlying stabilization of the coal supply for industrial use. Discusses production, distribution, transportation, deterioration and spontaneous combustion in storage, and gives chief attention to the problems of storage, with recommendations for increasing the storage facilities of the consumer."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:426 J1 '25

AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE. American petroleum supply and demand. 269p $3 (15s) The institute, 250 Park av., N.Y.; McGraw

665.5 Petroleum. Petroleum industry and trade 25-15377

A report to the board of directors of the American petroleum institute by a committee of eleven members of the board. The committee was appointed to make a study of the nation's future supply of petroleum. Complete data on which conclusions were based are included.

Booklist 22:56 N '25

"This book is the first authoritative statement from the industry itself designed to lay low the sensational and often-repeated charge that the country is facing a petroleum famine brought on largely by a frenzy of wasteful exploitation. It is propaganda, to be sure, but the convincing sort that sets forth impartial facts and figures as the basis for straight thinking on economic questions. It is an effective answer to the demand heard from some quarters for government regulation or even ownership of our old resources. In its stead the industry asks only for security in the ownership of its property and the privilege of developing it under conditions permitting the exercise of initiative, liberty of action, the play of competition and the free working of the law of supply and demand. . . The book presents

AMERICAN PETROLEUM INST.—Continued
a wealth of information which students of practical economics in all industries will welcome."
S. D. Kirkpatrick

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:814 O '25 450w

AMERICAN poetry, 1925; a miscellany. 248p $2
Harcourt

811.08 American poetry—Collections
(20-16870)

"In this volume, the third of a biennial series, are contained seventy-two poems, only a few of which have appeared in magazines or elsewhere, by seventeen American poets. They represent the latest work of the representative group which is generally regarded as containing the most significant writers of verse in this country. The book is not an anthology in which the taste of the editor determines what poems shall be chosen for preservation. Rather, it contains the choice by each poet of his own work. By this plan we get the poet both as creator and self-critic."—Ind

Booklist 22:109 D '25

"Altogether, a volume full of serious thought and equally serious affectation; a volume of achievement rather than of promise. There is little to indicate that these poets will progress to definitely higher levels in their art. One feels they have, to all intents and purposes, arrived at their various goals. Certain of these goals are clearly worth while; none is unworthy or quite insignificant." C. S.

+ — Ind 115:331 S 19 '25 1000w

"Although some excellent work mingles with a good deal that is dull, the value of the whole is not quite clear."

+ — Nation 121:549 N 11 '25 40w

AMES, JOSEPH BUSHNELL. Loudon from Laramie. 374p $2 Century
25-2465

A combination of western adventure and detective story. Loudon, the cowboy detective, goes thru a series of wild adventures in which kidnapping, highway robbery, murder and government gold all figure. He succeeds in rounding up the Hashknife outfit, whose members were responsible for most of his adventures, makes the country more safe for the small rancher, and thereby wins the heroine.

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 21 '25 400w

"'Loudon From Laramie' moves at break-neck speed through hair-raising adventures which would make the most bored devotee sit up and take notice. And yet the illusion of reality is such that the people seem to be perfectly reasonable human beings and to be doing things which are perfectly in reason." J. M. Clarke

+ Lit R p12 Mr 14 '25 530w

N Y Times p19 My 24 '25 320w

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 8 '25 240w

N Y World p4m F 1 '25 170w

"It is all very well done, logically worked out through a complex plot and moving to a finish that would screen nobly. It provides a soundly guaranteed money's worth of thrills."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:513 F 7 '25 320w

AMINOFF, CONSTANCE LEONIE CAROLINE (BROGSTRÖM) friherrinna. Victory. 309p $2 Dutton
25-11396

This is the fifth volume in the Torchlight series of Napoleonic romances, and continues the dramatic life and career of Napoleon. "Victory" is based on Napoleon's unsuccessful Egyptian expedition, his secret return to France, and his appointment as First consul. Into the military and political events are woven pictures of gay social life, the infidelities of Josephine, and Napoleon's affair with Madame Toures. The book ends with the downfall of the aristocrats and the rise of the bourgeoisie.

"Many of the defects in Leonie Aminoff's novel are aggravated by her infidelities of style. She indulges two mannerisms constantly: unnecessary use of parenthesis, and unwarranted insertion of her own comments upon the progress of the story. These tricks slow up the narrative. Moreover, her style is far from notable for clarity or ease whenever she succeeds in forgetting those two mannerisms." R. B. M.

— Boston Transcript p1 J1 11 '25 300w

"The style is intimate and casual, almost too casual to be always coherent. The atmosphere is undeniably good; the details, possibly correct; the result—history made easy."

+ — Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 80w

"Baroness Aminoff betrays scarcely a trace of inaccuracy in her use of standard memoirs, biographies and kindred authoritative sources from which she has derived her materials. She exercises a humanizing and commendable restraint in her avoidance of the pitfalls which usually beset fictional assailants of the omnipotent Bonaparte. Her work gains in value and credibility by its reduction to a rare casual mention of the proverbial ear-tweaking, eagle glance and dumfounding genius of her towering subject." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 J1 11 '25 450w

"The book is very long and very jerkily written. It has, of course, interesting moments, when the sheer dramatic quality of the facts forcibly overrides the general tediousness of the author's style and method."

+ — N Y Times p6 Je 14 '25 380w

"One would not have supposed that so little effect could be obtained from so much material." Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p8 J1 5 '25 520w

Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 10w

"Meets the demands of the saccharine shop-girl thriller on its own bathetic ground."

— Sat R of Lit 1:883 J1 4 '25 320w

"Instead of the clear-cut cameo style which many writers of historical novels have been blessed with, Leonie Aminoff writes sketchily, with only the barest reference to some events of great importance. The tale on the whole is entertaining as biographical narrative though by no means subtle or convincing."

+ — Springfield Republican p7a S 20 '25 420w

AMUNDSEN, ROALD ENGELBREGT GRAV-NING, and ELLSWORTH, LINCOLN. Our polar flight; the Amundsen-Ellsworth polar flight. 373p il $5 Dodd [21s Hutchinson]

919.8 Arctic regions. Aviation 25-25739

The tale of the adventures of the Amundsen-Ellsworth polar flight which so recently held the world in suspense, is told by the several members of the expedition. For a month the explorer and his companions were lost in the ice fields about 200 miles from the Pole. The triumph of faith and ingenuity by which the N-25 was saved from complete wreck and the safe return of the party to Spitzbergen after great peril and hardships are described by the leaders of the expedition. The two navigators, Riser-Larsen and Dietrichson add their accounts to those of Amundsen and Ellsworth. Illustrated from photographs taken on the expedition.

"A thrilling account of an enterprise which, though modified from its original rather grandiose form, still remains on record as an attempt to achieve the apparently impossible, the successful outcome of which was more lucky than likely."

+ Nation and Ath 38:472 D 26 '25 360w

"The narrative of the often baffled preparations to start the plane for the return flight, while rations ran low and hope seemed to be fading, is one of the strongest pieces of writing Amundsen has ever done." H: E. Armstrong

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 10 '26 2100w

N Y World p7m D 13 '25 30w

"The elements of boyish enthusiasm, gentle wit and mature judgment in whatever story Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole, has to tell make his description of the flight over the unknown stretch between Spitzbergen and the North Pole in order to find out what was there absorbing reading. . . All the narrations together make up a splendidly readable book." J. O. Swift

N Y World p7m Ja 10 '26 620w

R of Rs 73:111 Ja '26 130w

ANDERSEN, WILLIAM NICLAUS. Manual for school officers (Century education ser.) 383p $2 Century

371 School management and organization 25-6934

A practical handbook for superintendents, principals and board members and one especially for the young superintendent and principal in the smaller school systems. It treats the specific problems and situations which the superintendent has to meet—his relations with his board, selecting and employing teachers, organization and administration, making out the program of studies, books and supplies, supervision, discipline, measurements and tests, graduation exercises, teachers' meetings, parent-teacher associations. One chapter gives in detail an account of six days' duties and demands in a superintendent's year.

Boston Transcript p4 J1 3 '25 250w

"The author says he is particularly concerned to help the superintendent of the rural or small community, but the treatment of the problems common to us all is so human and sane that I would not hesitate to commend it to even the head schoolman of New York City, or of Philadelphia." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:148 O '25 1250w

Reviewed by J: D. Wolcott

School Life 10:160 Ap '25 50w

"The language is simple. The arrangement both as to chapters and as to material within a chapter is well planned. For the inexperienced school man, interested in preparing to administer a small school, the book has a real mission. The more experienced administrator and the college educator will find the book a pleasant review with occasional high points of thought-provoking ideas. Certain parts are worthy of consideration by classroom teachers. All in all, it would be a good addition to any educator's library." G. W. Willett

+ School R 33:547 S '25 450w

"This book offers in a clear and concise manner practical suggestions, concrete illustrations and helpful information that will be an aid in the solution of the problems that continually are faced in school systems. The book is sound in theory and conservative in the measures that are recommended."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 J1 24 '25 180w

ANDERSON, JOHN EINAR; MILLS, ARTHUR C. C.; and LEWIS, ELMER HUGH. Henley's 222 radio circuit designs. 271p il $1 Henley

654.1 Radio telephone 24-1269

"A comprehensive and up-to-date collection of modern receiving and transmitting circuits, with complete design data showing the electrical values of inductances, capacities and resistances."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:556 N '25

ANDERSON, MAXWELL. You who have dreams. 71p $2 Simon & Schuster

811 25-18853

"Mr. Anderson appears, judging only from this small, first volume of verse, to have almost as persistent an obsession as to the sea as had Swinburne; and next to the sea, the rain. A sequence of five sonnets bears the unifying title, 'Rain Fugue.' And they form a quintet of wistful beauty with the ever-recurrent monotone of the rain."—N Y Times

Reviewed by Allen Tate

Nation 121:680 D 9 '25 180w

"Maxwell Anderson's rare sense of beauty is in evidence in every poem, and in almost every line of every poem." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 S 20 '25 950w

"What may come with surprise to those who know only the realism of Mr. Anderson's dramatic writing is the element of phantasy, of eerie imagination, in such poems as 'Judith of Minnewaukan' and 'Storm Flower.' They are full of an atmosphere of unreality." Garreta Busey

N Y Tribune p13 N 15 '25 320w

"Maxwell Anderson, despite his predilection for the orthodox forms, despite an occasional suspicion of dexterity, possesses a haunting melodic power, a subtle secret of melancholy repetition, a skill in implicit drama, a terse, intense, packed lyrical vigor. Discounting the epigrammatic section which closes the volume, there is hardly a poem in the book which does not in some measure fulfil itself." Joseph Auslander

+ N Y World p4m S 27 '25 560w

ANDERSON, ROBERT JOHN. Metallurgy of aluminium and aluminium alloys. 913p il $10 Baird

669.7 Aluminium. Aluminium alloys 25-8274

"Covers in detail the mining of bauxite, and various processes of production, properties of aluminium and its alloys, corrosion; preparation, descriptions, and uses of alloys; melting furnaces, foundry practice, die castings, rolling and other mechanical treatment, diagrams of thermal equilibrium, micrography and macrography, heat treatment, soldering and welding, fabricating operation. Amply illustrated. Bibliographies at chapter endings."—N Y New Tech Bks

"An excellent scheme of bibliographical material supplements the broad theoretical and descriptive discussions, and this feature alone makes it worthwhile as a source of reference for the busy engineer."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:813 O '25 60w

"The book contains a considerable amount of statistical information, most of which is only approximately accurate, but in several instances the figures are known to be of a wrong order of magnitude. A number of excellent micrographs are included but a great many poor micrographs are included which would better have been left out." Zay Jeffries

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:766 J1 '25 450w

"Outstanding work since the revision of Richards' treatise in 1896. Steers a course between the academic and the more practical viewpoints."

N Y New Tech Bks 10:19 Ap '25

Pratt Technical Books p20 '24

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. Dark laughter. 319p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

25-20829

Sherwood Anderson's latest story is told by the method of indirect narration, by transcribing thoughts and emotions as they flit thru the minds of its characters. The chief figure is Bruce Dudley, a man of poetic temperament who has left his wife in Chicago and, under an assumed name, is masquerading as a factory hand in the Indiana town where he had lived as a child. One day Aline Grey, the wife of his employer, becomes suddenly conscious of Bruce and of a strange attraction in him. She finds a way of bringing him into her life and experimenting with love. It is as easy for Bruce to go away with her as it was for him to leave his wife and he goes as the father of her child. "Dark laughter" is the chorus that sounds thru the book—the laughter of negroes and their songs.

"It is a tribute to Mr. Anderson's skill as a composer of incident, and an evidence of the power of feeling back of his work, that he has been able to drag his story head and shoulders up through the inadequacy of his method and the feebleness of his style." Archibald MacLeish

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD—Continued
+ — Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 600w

Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"Sherwood Anderson proves in 'Dark Laughter' that he has sufficient technical resources to encompass the writing of a well integrated, skilfully done novel which for all its resemblance to a symphonic composition is held tightly together by a definite clearly revealed theme. There can no longer be any doubt of his ability to make sustained flights; for several years few have denied him a high place among living short story writers." Herschel Brickell
+ Bookm 62:338 N '25 350w

"In his latest book, marked here and there with flashes of fire and padded with bits of exceptionally good writing, Mr. Anderson is so infused with the spirit of pessimism, of anger at necessary convention, of dissatisfaction with normal life, that he is unable to give any contribution to modern literature that is worth while. But there will be those who may enjoy this sour appraisal of curious mentalities and not a few to praise it." K. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '25 800w

"The stuff of this novel is not more than that of many of his ten-page stories. To have given it so wide an adumbration shows that even if Mr. Anderson cannot compose a novel, he can sing one. This is an achievement. And it adds to the entire sense of definitiveness urged by the book. Whatever stuff he has for us, Mr. Anderson as artist is immature no longer. Whatever the stuffs of his soul, that configuration of them known as Sherwood Anderson is formed." Waldo Frank

+ Dial 79:510 D '25 2200w

"When I laid down the book and asked myself what all the striving had meant, I could find nothing except the invariable and eternal triangle. If the affair has any significance, that significance escapes me." Ernest Boyd

— Ind 115:302 S 12 '25 1050w

"Anderson's prose has a certain rhythm and fluency. His imagery has a natural grandeur, his phraseology is ardent and exuberant, his descriptions have a sincerely poetic note. Typical of these are his impressions of Negro boathands on the Mississippi. He has a feeling for the fulness and color of words that goes beyond mere technical art or accuracy. He combines a rich simplicity with a fervent honesty to create a fineness and nobility of utterance. The structure of 'Dark Laughter' is perhaps more closely knit, more compact than his earlier work, and evinces an increasing mastery of his art." W: R. Langfeld

+ Int Bk R p805 N '25 1100w

Reviewed by Walter Yust
Lit R p2 S 26 '25 650w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Nation 121:626 D 2 '25 1000w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 44:233 O 21 '25 1750w

"A strange, stark novel, this latest of Mr. Anderson's. It would be unjust to suggest that it even approaches the pornography with which writers less sincere are familiarizing us. Its crude theme is shot through with astonishing flashes of insight. But it is more than marred—it is poisoned from end to end by that strange undervaluation of the human will which has descended like a blight upon the modern school in fiction."

— + N Y Times p9 S 20 '25 1200w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris
N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 150w

"The first chapter of this book, which is just four pages long, seems to me as consummate a piece of art as the first chapter of 'Pride and Prejudice,' which also occupies four pages; and the rest of the book is keyed up to that pitch." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 O 4 '25 3950w

"Mr. Anderson's new story gains a firm hold on one's imagination despite the fact that readers may close the book without a definite idea of its essential meaning. That it is more powerful than its predecessor, 'Many Marriages,' is generally conceded."

Outlook 141:288 O 21 '25 300w

"His imagination is engaged by the instinctive emotions, and in this concentration he is more penetrating, and more profound than any contemporary writer in this country, or in England for that matter, with the possible exception of D. H. Lawrence. It is the world of dark laughter only, but he carries us so far into its dangerous marches that he will have to be reckoned with as one of the pioneers of the imagination." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 2:191 O 10 '25 1100w

"'Dark Laughter' is one long cry for more spontaneous, joyful living, more direct, straightforward action, than we permit ourselves in our present conventionalized society. It is a plea for not only less artificiality and less standardization, but for a primitive simplicity in our approach to life." R. H. Emerson

Springf'd Republican p5a O 11 '25 1550w

ANDERSON, WILLIAM. American city government. (Am. political science ser.) 675p $5 Holt
352 Municipal government 25-19842

A comprehensive college textbook which lays its emphasis on principles and working processes rather than details of fact. The various steps in the processes of government are followed, beginning with the formation of public opinion and proceeding thru nominations, elections, legislation and administration, with a closing chapter on the American municipal reform movement. References are given at the end of each chapter and there is a full index.

"The selection of material, and the manner of presentation are both admirable." W. B. Graves

+ Ann Am Acad 123:226 Ja '26 350w

"Professor Anderson neglects city planning almost entirely and gives scattering attention to the police problem. The lack of a complete consideration of these problems detracts from a work which is otherwise very comprehensive. Those subjects of which it treats, it treats, for the most part, thoroughly. The diagrams, charts, and tables incorporated in the text should be valuable to both teacher and student. Certain chapters are worthy of especial commendation: the chapters on the people in our cities, on the electorate, on public opinion, on administration and the civil service, and on finance." J. G. Kerwin

+ — New Repub 45:222 Ja 13 '26 620w

"This book of Professor Anderson's is commendable and accurate. It will at once become a standard treatment of the subject. It has all the virtues, the completeness, the citations, and the guides to sources that belong to a well prepared text, plus a readableness not frequently achieved in works brought out for this clientele. The chief defect of the work is its length."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:348 N 28 '25 170w

ANDRIEIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH.
Sashka Jigouloff; tr. from the Russian by Luba Hicks; ed. with an introd. by Maxim Gorky. (Russian masterpieces) 294p $2.50 McBride

25-21769

This is the story of a sensitive Russian school boy who, inspired by the ideas of an older man, a revolutionary, gives up his university career, renounces his love, and leaves his mother, for whom he has more than an ordinary affection, to take up a life of outlawry and crime ending in an early violent death. In his preface, Maxim Gorki writes of the novel: "The bases of it are the real adventures of a semi-bandit, semi-revolutionary."

brought into life by the storm of the years 1905-1907."

"The story carries a heavy burden of psychology which is the 'indubitable result of Andreyev's readings in Schopenhauer and Hartmann. But from a standpoint of truthfulness and artistry of character portrayal, and of descriptive passages which are executed with an almost poetic beauty the book will command admiration."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ja 2 '26 310w

"It will add nothing to the reputation of the author of 'The Red Laugh,' 'The Seven Who Were Hanged' and 'He Who Gets Slapped.' It is depressing and futile and the only reason for reading it is to perceive how much better are 'The Red Laugh' and 'The Seven Who Were Hanged' and to realize that all that is Russian is not great." Harry Salpeter

— N Y World p6m D 6 '25 420w

Sat R of Lit 2:452 D 26 '25 340w

ANDREWS, CHARLES MCLEAN. Colonial background of the American revolution. 218p $2.50 Yale univ. press [11s 6d Milford]

973.2 United States—History—Colonial period. United States—History—Revolution—Causes. Great Britain—Colonies 24-25115

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Professor Andrews's conclusions are of necessity not very novel, but they have the force of solid scholarship behind them."—Dexter Perkins

+ — Am Pol Sci R 19:409 My '25 400w

Booklist 21:227 Mr '25

"Professor Andrews's book has two beauties; it is beautiful in form—in paper, type, and binding one of the fine products of the Yale University Press; and it is beautiful in spirit. In that, while frank and vigorous, it yet reveals a sympathetic understanding of the outlook of both sides in the unhappy struggle of the American Revolution." G. M. Wrong

+ Canadian Hist R 6:71 Mr '25 1300w

Eng Hist R 40:309 Ap '25 200w

"Most stimulating and thought-provoking."

H. J. Carman

+ Hist Outlook 16:236 My '25 350w

"A ripe scholar presents the wisdom derived from long and careful research in a readable form within moderate compass and at a reasonable price. Here is the essence of his findings, expressed in excellent English, with the best of temper. No such balanced and masterly review of Colonial conditions and British colonial policy has ever been given to the public." S. E. Morison

+ N Y Tribune p4 F 15 '25 520w

Reviewed by C. F. Mullette

Pol Sci Q 40:647 D '25 850w

"The present volume, containing four unusually interesting essays, summing up considered conclusions arrived at in the course of a long period of research into subjects of which he has an unrivalled knowledge, deserves more than ordinary attention. To a certain extent the title Dr. Andrews has chosen for his book is somewhat mis-descriptive; for the ground covered is far wider than it indicates. Upon all these questions the writer's survey is so broadly comprehensive and so devoid of what may be termed provincialism that the essays deal more with the English background than they do with the American, and many of his criticisms, mutatis mutandis, might be applied to a good many English writers. So that the title errs rather on the side of modesty."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p879 D 25 '24 1750w

"Professor Andrews's book is the product of the most profound historical research, shows the greatest gift of interpretation, and power of generalization." C. H. Van Tyne

+ Yale R n s 15:182 O '25 550w

ANDREWS, HARRY LEE, and WEIRICK, BRUCE. Acting and play production; a manual for classes, dramatic clubs, and little theatres. 292p il $2.25 Longmans

793 Amateur theatricals. Acting 25-4061

"A work in which Mr. Andrews, Dramatic Director in the Hyde Park High School and Dr. Weirick, Assistant Professor of English in the University of Illinois have given definite directions for stage work. 'The Body,' 'The Voice,' 'Characterization,' are titles of chapters covering practice in observation of character, in carriage and posture, in pronunciation and in 'getting across.' We are told how to choose the play; we are given fine lists of dramas well worth while. . . Coaching the play, class study, try-outs, castings, rehearsals, stage technic, stage fright, scenery, lights, costume, settings are among the many details considered."—Educ R

Booklist 21:294 My '25

"If any one is under the impression that Ph. D.'s talk stilted language let him read this book. Of course one does not go here to find good diction, or even moderately good diction, but we wonder why it is that we must always make this exception for works that aim to be technical. But diction aside, the manual is excellent. We are taught the A B C's of the drama in one syllable Americanisms, to be sure, but we are well instructed."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ag 15 '25 320w

"This is no mechanical treatise. It departs entirely from the Old Oliver-Optic-magazine recitations which were accompanied by pictures of the proper gesture to use at designated places. Intelligent and human book." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 69:271 My '25 1150w

"Practical, helpful, stimulating." Frederica Magnus

+ Lit R p11 D 5 '25 150w

Outlook 140:527 Ag 12 '25 360w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Ag 13 '25 60w

"Due to the excellent exercises following readable and confidence-inspiring chapters on The Body, The Voice and Characterization, this book should prove to be a practical aid to the amateur actor. The chapters on Make-up and Where to Find Plays should be a long-felt boon to both coach and actor. A book worth pushing, as it includes many interesting lists, such as Great actors and their careers; The world's great plays, etc."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:109 Ap '25

ANDREWS, MARY RAYMOND (SHIPMAN) (MRS WILLIAM SHANKLAND ANDREWS). Pontifex Maximus. 76p 75c Scribner

25-7087

Giovanni Colonna, who as a boy had spent his summers fishing and sailing on the Bay of Naples, was now Pontifex Maximus—the prisoner of the Vatican. Often he longed for the freedom of his boyhood and the sunlight on the bay. When the longing proved too strong for endurance his twin brother took his place for a few days and the Holy Father became Nino, the fisherman. But even in the garb of a humble fisherman his personality made itself felt, and thru hearing a confession he was able to save Italy from impending danger.

Booklist 21:382 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p5 J1 3 '25 280w

"Compactly imagined and well rounded out, colorful and eloquent in its descriptions and sufficiently convincing even in the matter of the Pope's little vacation as a sailor."

+ N Y Times p19 My 10 '25 720w

N Y Tribune p10 My 10 '25 180w

Outlook 140:304 Je 24 '25 20w

ANDREWS, MARY R.—Continued

"While the tale is highly improbable, Mrs Andrews tells the story with characteristic sentiment and grace."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 200w
Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

ANNETT, EDWARD ALDRIDGE. Psychology for Bible teachers. (Life and religion ser.) 241p $1.50 Scribner

150 Psychology. Religious education
25-7589

A simple presentation of the laws which govern the working of the mind, having special reference to problems connected with religious education.

"It is not a technical treatment; it covers the ground admirably for the many who are not trained psychologists and who have real need to be sure that the teaching methods they are using are sound and likely to be efficient." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv My '25 150w

"This book is not merely for Sunday-school teachers, but for all teachers and all parents. In fact, every father and mother of high school education ought to be required to take such a course as a partial preparation for the biggest responsibility of life." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 9 '25 200w

"A very successful and clearly written little volume."

+ J Religion 5:446 J1 '25 100w

Springf'd Republican p10 S 1 '25 200w

"A simple handy book, yet full of carefully gathered knowledge, useful to teachers and especially to those who are engaged in religious education."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p451 J1 2 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 J1 '25

ANNETT, FRED ANZLEY, and ROE, A. C. 2 Connecting and testing direct-current machines. 237p il $2.50 McGraw
621.313 Electric machinery 25-6403

"Practical book for the repairman. Gives detailed instructions for remedying troubles, for rewinding machines, and for reconNECTIONS for changes of speed or voltage."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:555 N '25

ANSTRUTHER, EILEEN H. A. (WILKINSON) (MRS JOHN COLLINGS SQUIRE). Five in family. 308p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane] 25-17685

When Frank Harding brought his family from New Zealand to his small native village in England to live, his problem was to shield them from an old scandal which had been revived upon his return. Meanwhile the children, Tom, Milly, and Nancy, whose ages run from sixteen to nineteen are each busy with their personal affairs. Tom, in love with a girl ten years his senior, is unhappy because the family does not approve of her. Milly and Nancy are both harassed by environment and Nancy endeavors to break away from the home influence. But Frank and Anna Harding with tact and patience guide their children thru these stormy years until they are safely launched on careers of their own.

Booklist 21:274 Ap '25

"'Five in Family' is not a novel upon which one lavishes superlatives, but it is readable, and it has something to contribute as criticism of life. The workmanship is sound." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 J1 18 '25 260w

"There is a homeliness about the book that is nowadays distinctly uncommon. It is pleasant just because it is so natural and unaffected. Mrs. Squire's picture of a quiet middle-class family, certainly a little above the average in intelligence, but in all other respects quite normal, is faithful and sympathetic. She tells us the little things they say and do, and we are interested in these things, not because they are surprising or dramatic, but because we like the people, know them intimately, and are, in a sense, ourselves absorbed into the family atmosphere." Forrest Reid

+ Nation and Ath 35:624 Ag 16 '24 300w

Reviewed by Ralph Wright

New Statesman 23:441 J1 19 '24 130w

"The reviewer is tempted to call Miss Anstruther the modern Jane Austen—and this despite the fact that she has neither the talents nor the power of Jane Austen. The unfortunate part is that Miss Anstruther's result cannot for a moment be placed beside that of Miss Austen; we only wish that it could. Miss Austen drew with a sharp pencil. Miss Anstruther draws with a soft and smudging pencil, blurring the picture. Nevertheless, her novel bears every mark of fidelity to the society she portrays, and in its very quiet way pleases."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 3 '24 650w

"This might have been a story of humanity on a visit to heaven, so tranquil is the pace and atmosphere. And because there is no genuine emotional turmoil, because the book is so downright natural, there is, oddly enough, no fire, no magnetism in it. Which only serves to prove that naturalism or realism, drawn to a fine hair, is often not half so engrossing as works fed with colorful imagination and tumultuous passions."

N Y Times p16 F 15 '25 500w

N Y Tribune p7 Ag 16 '25 350w

"Contrives to be almost unbelievably irritating. If the novel were simply bad, this would not be true, since bad novels may be tossed away at once. But 'Five in Family' makes a promise which is not kept.

— N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 80w

"It certainly is not passionate or exciting, but it does leave us with the feeling that we are among pleasant people leading pleasant lives."

Outlook 139:347 Mr 4 '25 40w

"An extraordinarily true, delicate, wise and moving tale." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 138:147 Ag 9 '24 680w

"As in all narratives which contain a very large number of characters it is a little difficult to follow the different threads; but the attractions of the story make the effort well worth while."

+ Spec 133:298 Ag 30 '24 70w

"Mrs. Squire's touch in description is as good as before; she manages her incident well, and she does not forget that special and very important difficulty, the queer social position of this particular family. Our only puzzle is that a writer who is so good as she at the larger tasks of the novelist should permit herself so many lapses in the smaller. There is a good deal of slack English in the book, and the misprints are exasperating."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p448 J1 17 '24 600w

ANSTRUTHER-THOMSON, CLEMENTINA.

Art & man; essays and fragments; with an introd. by Vernon Lee. 371p il $4 Dutton
704 Art

Lectures, essays and notes on art by a gifted amateur whose passion was Greek art. Vernon Lee, her devoted friend and fellow-worker, provides the 100-page introduction. Her essays in aesthetics are sensitive interpretations of beauty, explaining and analyzing the pleasure to be had in beautiful shapes and aspects. The papers are grouped under such topics as man and art, Greek vases, Gothic architecture, antique sculpture, imagination and emotion in art, and imaginative criticism.

Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 300w

"The book, as a whole, is well worth reading, even if it provokes its fair share of marginal dissent; much better worth reading than some others whose writers, if they know more, have felt less."

+ — Sat R 137:211 Mr 1 '24 700w

"A book as intensely alive as it is necessarily casual." F. J. Mather, jr.

+ Sat R of Lit 1:753 My 16 '25 2550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p80 F
7 '24 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p207 Ap
3 '24 1450w

ANTHONY, KATHARINE SUSAN. Catherine the Great. 331p il $4 Knopf

B or 92 Catherine II, czarina of Russia
25-22880

"In 'Margaret Fuller: A Psychological Biography' Miss Anthony proved herself a subtle explorer of souls by the psycho-analytic method. With modifications Miss Anthony has applied to the life story of Catherine the Great this same method of analysis. Out of a monstrous legend she has brought her subject alive, has cleared away the debris from her name and has given to the work of clarifying the motives of Catherine the same considering scientific mind, the same ardor of truth that she devoted to Margaret Fuller. In her search she took nothing for granted, and she removed all labels from the woman before she began the work of reconstruction."—N Y Tribune

Dial 80:71 Ja '26 110w

"A biography—and a superb one." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 116:49 Ja 9 '26 750w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Int Bk R p20 D '25 450w

"One expects a new biography of a famous historical figure either to present fresh material, the result of research, or to revise conventional interpretations of character in the light of the more modern psychology. Miss Anthony's study amply justifies itself on both counts. Furthermore, Miss Anthony portrays the empress with a keen eye for dramatic moments, with a convincing effect of continuity, and with a respect refreshingly tempered by humorous perception. The humor is casual and dry and effortless." Dorothy Brewster

+ Nation 122:36 Ja 13 '26 850w

"Miss Anthony has fulfilled the fundamental obligation of the biographer: she has presented a plausible psychological hypothesis as to the motivation of her heroine's conduct. . . . The writing is generally spirited, often amusing and seldom dull. One deplores an occasional slip in the translation of some Russian word or in a statement of fact." Babette Deutsch

+ — New Repub 45:63 D 2 '25 1050w

"Miss Anthony's biography derives much of its value from the fact that she secured access to Catherine's own voluminous diaries and letters. This material is here for the first time, so far as the reviewer knows, made available in English. It has particular interest, naturally, in its bearing on Catherine's celebrated love life. . . . There is no more fascinating story in history, and Miss Anthony has squeezed from it every drop of its dramatic and human quality."

+ N Y Times p8 D 20 '25 1250w

"We have a book that marches full of glow and the substance of reality." K. A. Porter

+ N Y Tribune p3 N 29 '25 2000w

"Here are color, light, motion. Here is a living person. Every page bears witness to the sincere striving of the author to pierce the thick alluvium of dull facts washed down by the stream of events. Her book reveals the old school historian's respect for evidence and the new school historian's skill in keeping evidence as such below stairs—well out of sight, but busy." W. B. Pitkin

+ N Y World p6m D 27 '25 600w

"It is a lively piece of narrative. The rise of the petty German princess to the throne of Russia has few parallels in literature since Cinderella, and the author makes the most of it. Indeed the early part of the volume seems in many ways the best; and, like many good stories, it becomes of less interest in its later pages." W. C. Abbott

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:365 D 5 '25 420w

Spring'd Republican p12 D 9 '25 190w

APP, FRANK. Farm economics; management and distribution. (Lippincott's farm manuals) 700p il $3 (12s 6d) Lippincott

630 Agriculture—Economic aspects 24-28009

"Attempts to present the principles of production and distribution, making considerable use of statistical material."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:421 J1 '25

ARLEN, MICHAEL, pseud. (DIKRAN KUYUMJIAN). May Fair. 369p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Collins]

25-10419

Another book of the follies and adventures of "these charming people" in London's May Fair. Contents: Prologue; A romance in old brandy; The ace of cads; Where the pigeons go to die; The battle of Berkeley square; The Prince of the Jews; The three-cornered moon; The revolting doom of a gentleman who would not dance with his wife; The gentleman from America; To Lamoir; The ghoul of Golders Green; Farewell, these charming people.

Booklist 22:115 D '25

"On the surface these tales of Mr. Arlen's are highly amusing, audacious and witty, even epigrammatic at times. Underneath they are not so amusing because he suggests so clearly that the beautiful polished exterior of 'these charming people' covers only the frailties of a decaying order. And the English people, thus stripped to the gaze of the world, smile upon this foreigner who has come among and so hated and despised them!" D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 1150w

"Whether or not one approves of Mr. Arlen's sophisticated, mannered stories, one cannot deny that they are readable, which is an excellent thing in stories. They seem destined for a brief, delightful life."

+ Ind 114:675 Je 13 '25 60w

"No one is more sufficiently aware, I incline to think, than Michael Arlen of the distinct advance which this book marks. His technique has improved, and his observations become more universal." Bruce Gould

+ Int Bk R p399 My '25 900w

"The average of the stories in 'May Fair' is far below those included in 'These Charming People.' A few are excellent, a few more middling, and some others pretty thin stuff. Too often one feels that the embroidery is everything and the material nothing, which is all wrong. 'The Gentleman From America,' for example, is so bad it is rather surprising Mr. Arlen allowed it to be included." Herschel Brickell

+ — Lit R p3 Je 13 '25 520w

"In 'Mayfair' Mr. Michael Arlen has managed somehow to display at full length all his vices as a writer and to conceal completely the virtues which in some of his books, particularly 'The Green Hat,' deserved the acclaim which they received." J. W. Krutch

— Nation 121:44 J1 1 '25 180w

"This volume of short stories does not entirely succeed in being the popular entertainment it sets out to be." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 37:372 Je 20 '25 250w

"For the most part he is original in theme and tone; he is often funny; he is occasionally profound; he is almost always entertaining." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:340 J1 4 '25 550w

ARLEN, MICHAEL, pseud.—Continued

"In his new book Mr. Arlen writes further tales of his charming people, such people as never were on land or sea or in Mayfair. They are fantastic creations in whose veins flows not blood but an elaborate code and who lead not so much lives as abstractions." H. J. Man-kiewicz

N Y Times p5 My 31 '25 1400w

N Y Tribune p5 Ag 2 '25 320w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

N Y World p4m My 24 '25 700w

"The story is a cream puff, and as such it is perfect. If you wish corn beef and cabbage, you have no business to be reading Michael Arlen." E. L. Pearson

+ Outlook 140:221 Je 10 '25 800w

"The book is very pert, very affected, very dull." Gerald Bullett

— Sat R 139:646 Je 13 '25 50w

Reviewed by W. R. Benét

Sat R of Lit 1:803 Je 6 '25 650w

"If he could only refrain from a superabundance of epigrams his studies would be much easier reading. As it is, there is a sameness of manner in them which, in spite of the divergence of their themes, wearies the reader, and the best way to attack the book is not to read more than one paper in any period of twenty-four hours."

Spec 135:168 Jl 25 '25 220w

"Mayfair" is not merely unreal. Much romance is that. It is far worse—it is extremely labored, dull and inept. While there is some effort to capture the zest of adventure, the artifice is apparent. There is little sparkle, even in the easily manufactured, cynical dialog—of which, in fact, there is surprisingly little."

— Springf'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 280w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p433 Je 25 '25 180w

ARMFIELD, CONSTANCE (SMEDLEY) (MRS MAXWELL ARMFIELD). Unholy experiment. 319p $2 Dial press

[24-20617]

Lucia Craven, a distinguished English novelist, comes to America to escape the publicity of divorce proceedings and to satisfy her curiosity about the country which had stolen her husband from her. On the trip across the country she meets a cultivated American of strong personality and the two enter into an intrigue which, however, hardly oversteps the barriers of respectability. Her "unholy experiment" brings her, in the Grand Canyon, to the point of becoming engaged to Whitman Udell and reaches its climax in San Francisco where her husband turns up in a state of surfeit from his own experiment, and re-claims her as his wife. In his presence her outraged feelings gradually recover, and the return journey across America is almost a second honeymoon. Beyond the story interest of the novel is the picture of the American scene and the impression it makes on an English traveler with a will to understand and appreciate, tho not without that "certain condescension in foreigners."

+ Cleveland p37 Ap '25

Dial 79:260 S '25 80w

"It is disappointing, since the characters promise more, to find them of very limited intelligence. They are courageous enough to transgress certain laws, but not courageous enough to examine and, perhaps, transcend them. Their pretense to superiority quickly tires the reader. Their talk of ideals and concepts—especially national American ones—is shallow and stilted as a standard Sunday-school lecture and has no closer connection with the real life of the book." Eva Goldbeck

— Lit R p4 Ag 15 '25 320w

"Lucia and Ronnie are too incorrigibly respectable to be anything but figures of fun in an amorous intrigue, and we can only regret the lost opportunity, especially as Miss Smedley has a real sense of humour. Fortunately, the novel has a strong interest outside its story, for the scene is laid in the States, and of modern America Miss Smedley has given us a really brilliant and vital impression."

+ — Nation and Ath 35:546 Jl 26 '24 200w

"From the standpoint of convention this is distinctly not a 'success' story. Constance Smedley disguises realism under acrobatic romance, and, with almost bewildering agility, tells us only that being good has nothing whatever to do with being happy, but seems desirable on the whole." D. E. W.

New Repub 43:328 Ag 12 '25 180w

"Some of the writing is observant and humorous." Ralph Wright

+ — New Statesman 23:441 Jl 19 '24 280w

"The novel is a fascinating and on the whole successful adventure in shifting points of view." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 5 '25 900w

"This book is, in itself, of no special importance. It is not, properly speaking, a novel, nor a travelogue, nor yet a study of the United States, but something of all three, held together by a tale which was worth treating conscientiously and purely on its own merits. It is in the impulse behind the book that the importance may be found." L. Bromfield

+ — N Y Tribune p10 Ap 5 '25 720w

"Miss Smedley has a charming ironic style, but, if she is satirizing her characters, she should make her satire more effective by making her characters more probable and more capable of exciting sympathy. I get all the time the impression that here is some moral implied, some reading of life suggested, which I am too obtuse to discern; and that distracts me from the enjoyment of an extremely original and well-written book." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 138:73 Jl 19 '24 460w

"The psychology, though not very subtle, is interesting, and the whole book is above the average of current fiction."

+ Spec 133:66 Jl 12 '24 90w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 520w

"A novel in some ways out of the ordinary. It is a travel-record of humour and sagacity; and we meet as we go westward a number of amusing people who take themselves less seriously than the heroine. The personal history matters less than the writer's realization of the pull of the two countries, and of the actual physical and moral influence of America's vastness upon the Englishwoman with her narrow and specialized outlook. The book is a more successful effort to convey a real feeling of the country behind the people than most travellers' tales, and makes one long to go to Arizona."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p402 Je 26 '24 380w

ARMSBY, HENRY PRENTISS, and MOULTON, CHARLES ROBERT. Animal as a converter of matter and energy; a study of the role of live stock in food production. (Am. Chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 236p il $3 Chemical catalog co.

612.39 Animal food. Nutrition. Metabolism 25-12371

"Discusses in detail and with many tables and footnote references the processes by which the raw materials contained in stock feeds are converted into animal substances. Treats the subject both qualitatively and quantitatively and outlines experimental methods."—N Y New Tech Bks

"This assembly of the results of animal nutrition experiments contains an immense amount of data not heretofore brought together and points out where confirmatory data are needed. It should prove of real value to the investigators in this field." P. F. Trowbridge

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:986 S '25 650w

"The text is largely supplemented by tables, and the work, therefore, constitutes a highly useful contribution to a most important phase of the relation of land to the support of the human being." H: Leffmann

+ J Franklin Inst 200:410 S '25 600w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 J1 '25

ARMSTRONG, DONALD BUDD. Community health; how to obtain and preserve it. (National health council. National health ser.) 65p 30c Funk

614 Public health

24-4596

"In the brief space of 65 small pages, the executive officer of the National health council outlines community health organization, discusses prevention of infectious and non-infectious disease, and gives general suggestions for preservation and improvement of health."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Of special interest is the brief chapter setting forth the salient points which should guide public authorities in regard to legislation, administration, and educational work in the field of public health."

+ Am Pol Sci R 18:654 Ag '24 60w

Cath World 119:427 Je '24 50w

"This gives a remarkable bird's-eye view of the community health problem." J. A. Tobey

+ Int Bk R p191 F '24 '25 300w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:412 J1 '25

ARMSTRONG, MARTIN DONISTHORPE. At the sign of the Goat and Compasses (Eng title The Goat and Compasses). 316p $2 Harper [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-15763

This is the story of the English coast village of Crome and its inhabitants. It follows the emotional experiences of Philip, awkward, unhappy son of the vicar, of George and of Rose who justified her name, of Bella and the artist and their brief romance, and of poor Miss Furlly with her tragic dream.

"It is told with considerable sympathy, and comparatively little mawkishness, in a style which is adequate if not distinguished. The weakness of the book would seem to lie in the manner in which the author has put together the various elements, resulting in a synthesis not quite convincing. He has made a pleasing story out of materials that might have made a great one."

— + Boston Transcript p2 S 19 '25 300w.

Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 360w

"The originality of the book is largely in the excellence of its artistic method. There is comparatively little penetration in its manner of seeing life, tho the several slight tales are soundly conceived and unexceptionable so far as they go." C: Trueblood

+ — Int Bk R p822 N '25 380w

"Though at first glance the idea seems excellent, one soon discovers as one reads that its literary effect is disappointing. The story might have been effective within its limits, had it been either more compressed or more detailed. The characters are recognizable types, but they are not content to be that; Mr. Armstrong is always trying to individualize them, and he never quite succeeds. The result is that they are inexact." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 37:179 My 9 '25 360w

"With its ironical symmetry of human patterns against the background of destroying nature, Mr. Armstrong's novel has something of Hardy without the philosophic implication or emphasis. It is Our Village or Cranford put into simple, unpretending fiction."

New Repub 44:78 S 9 '25 280w

"Mr. Armstrong is another writer of real distinction, and he has the specific gift of the novelist: he creates effortlessly; his people make themselves as they go along; they live, one thinks, in reading, of themselves and not of him." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:606 S 12 '25 180w

"It is a good life that is lived in Crome, a strong, sweet-smelling, earthy, responsible life. Martin Armstrong has wrought an intense and organic design out of his pastoral simplicities."

N Y Times p7 Ag 23 '25 750w.

"Mr. Armstrong's new book appears to have been written from great vats of inexperience. One does not quarrel with his subject matter, but with his unimaginative and unrealistic interpretation. Occasionally he touches the surface of life, but the contact is slight and without passion." Margery Latimer

— + N Y Tribune p8 N 29 '25 600w

"At the Sign of the Goat and Compasses" is one of the most beautiful novels we have read this year." H. S.

+ N Y World p3m Ag 23 '25 280w

"There is humour and good humour in the book; and when more serious emotions are to be roused Mr. Armstrong has sufficient mastery of style to carry us with him. For all its variety The Goat and Compasses reads 'all of a piece'; perhaps it may be best described as 'sound.'"

+ Spec 134:819 My 16 '25 300w

"There is distinction in everything that Mr. Martin Armstrong writes, and in his first novel he has chosen a theme admirably suited to his unobtrusive talent. The smooth rhythm and the clarity of his prose yield a continual pleasure, even when the substance of his communication proves a little thin and unsatisfying."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p282 Ap 23 '25 450w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

ARNIM, MARY ANNETTE (BEAUCHAMP) grafyn von (COUNTESS RUSSELL) (ELIZABETH, pseud.). Love. 396p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Macmillan]

25-8738

The story is a variation on the theme of the woman who marries a man young enough to be her son. Catherine Cumfrit, an appealing little widow who carries her forty-seven years lightly, captivates Christopher Monckton. She does not conceal her age nor the fact that she has a married daughter, and she does make one honest attempt to escape her ardent lover, but he finally breaks down her defences and she recklessly consents to marry him. Christopher seems altogether oblivious of the disparity in their ages and under the sun of his love Catherine flowers into a new beauty. But not for long. In her terror of losing Christopher she resorts to a beauty doctor and then to a rejuvenator who between them so wreck her soft beauty that she begins to look more than her age and even Christopher sees that she is old. Catherine offers to divorce him but he tenderly protests that he is going to take care of her. It is now plain to see that they are both afraid of the future. On that note of fear the story ends.

Booklist 21:341 Je '25

"A dainty tale of charming impracticabilities." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 25 '25 820w

Cleveland p87 S '25

"Throughout most of this book there is an atmosphere of spurious gavety. It is false because it emanates from the author, not from the characters. Had their rippling nonchalance and merriment and courage been surrounded by deepening shadows of impending disaster, the reader would not have felt as though he were asked to join in a game of pretense. He sees as clearly as the author that a thunderstorm is approaching and he cannot, politely try as he will, cover up his weather eye and simulate doubt of its arrival. It does, of course, arrive—too late. The last fifty pages are tragedy honestly and finely presented, but belonging to a book that the author has evaded writing." Eva Goldbeck

ARNIM, MARY ANNETTE—Continued

— + Lit R p3 Ap 25 '25 800w

"The author of 'The Enchanted April' appears to have forsaken that light vein for something a little closer to the accepted formula for successful fiction—something which breaks up conveniently into instalments, and may be read in that manner without great loss."
— Nation 121:174 Ag 5 '25 70w

"The book is admirably written, amusing, and sensible. But it is not real. It may almost be enjoyed, but not quite." Edwin Muir
— + Nation and Ath 37:51 Ap 11 '25 80w

"In the German Garden and in the Pastor's Wife was a quality that compelled respect; but in Love one is confronted by an inferior novelist, not indeed entirely bereft of her sense of the rich grotesques of character, but hampered by the self-imposed obstacles in her plot, and dealing sentimentally with the relation of a young man who courts and marries a much older woman. All the possibilities of the story are prettified and vulgarized." L. Mumford
— New Repub 43:133 Je 24 '25 150w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:106 My 9 '25 450w

"A little overlong, overelaborated, overburdened with details and repetitions, the story is nevertheless interesting. It is well written, it has a good deal of charm, and there are several really delightful pen-pictures of the English country in the springtime."
— + N Y Times p9 Ap 5 '25 1050w

"It is a cruelly truthful piece of work, the more so because the author is so gentle in her method. These are all nice people; they aren't mean, or vicious, or illbred, or bad-tempered; and they suffer because it can't be helped. It is so. The sole exception one can note is that 'Elizabeth' is the only author writing in English who could face the fact with such absolute, Olympian detachment." Isabel Paterson
+ N Y Tribune p8 Ap 5 '25 900w

N Y World p7m Ap 19 '25 150w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p4m My 10 '25 100w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 140:68 My 13 '25 180w

"It is obvious that such complications would lend themselves very easily to vulgarity of treatment: cheap humour and cheap pathos are alike available; but the author is above cheapness. Her people are real, her sympathy with them is unawkwardly alert, and her humour is frequent and delightful. This book is perhaps not quite her best but it is very nearly her best; and that is saying a great deal." Gerald Gould
+ Sat R 139:363 Ap 4 '25 480w

"The book wavers a bit between a note of gaiety and one of bitterness, so that the reader is never quite certain how to take it; but always it moves along smoothly from the pen of one who knows how to write. For the benefit of those who 'do not read novels,' and those who look upon 'light' novels with distrust the reviewer wishes boldly to state the belief that some day 'Elizabeth' will occupy a niche a little smaller perhaps but similar in design to that of Jane Austen." L. Bromfield
+ Sat R of Lit 1:661 Ap 11 '25 820w

"She is inclined to indulge her partialities a little too obviously; but after the insipid opening chapters one is able to accept her world of bright light and strong shadow and to enjoy the vigour of her drawing. Her subject is so painful that one shudders to think what a less sophisticated artist would have made of it."
— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p220 Mr 26 '25 580w

Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

ARRHENIUS, SVANTE AUGUST. Chemistry in modern life; tr. from the Swedish and rev. by Clifford Shattuck Leonard. (Library of modern sciences) 286p il $3 Van Nostrand

540 Chemistry

25-11866

"Svante Arrhenius points out that chemistry and its gifts to society are only part of the great moving panorama of life and that at present our contribution to modern civilization is dependent largely on highly concentrated crude products which, as we utilize them, revert to so dissipated a form that they become useless for a further cycle—that is to say that inevitably we are using up and destroying forever the materials out of which we make so many valuable products. Not only that, but we are using very rapidly those products which enable us to harness energy by chemical change—coal and oil. In his book Professor Arrhenius reviews the outlook, not alone as it is now, but as it may be in a very few years as contrasted with the whole span of human existence; and he concludes that we must practice rigid economy until such time as our research shall have placed us in a position of independence regarding the crude materials of those numerous industries which we call chemical."—Ind & Eng Chem

Booklist 22:145 Ja '26

"The most popular appeal he has yet made will be found in the present volume, for it is devoted to setting forth, in fairly simple language, not only the role which chemistry plays in the daily life of man, but also the problems which that science will have to meet in the not distant future." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 14 '25 800w

"The reviewer doubts that the average layman will be able to read the book, except the first chapters and the last. Moreover, it is a question whether it is really an advantage to give such minute detail in a treatment of this kind. The author has an enormous range of facts at his disposal because of his very profound knowledge, and occasionally he crowds too many of these facts into a few sentences. They hammer on the reader's attention and produce a stupefying effect; moreover, they tend to slow down the story. However, for the teacher who wants to find facts the book should prove extremely useful." R. E. Rose
— + Ind & Eng Chem 17:1097 O '25 700w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 Jl '25

"Contains much that is of value to the general reader." B. Harrow

+ N Y Times p13 Ja 3 '26 1250w

"The layman who has been thrilled by Slosson's 'Creative Chemistry' and wants to know more will find this a better sequel than any yet written." G. L. Wendt

+ N Y Tribune p11 D 20 '25 600w

"He tells what chemistry is so that a reasonably intelligent person unschooled in formal science can understand it and he enlivens his discourse in bringing in fascinating historical details." Frank Thone and James Stokley
+ Sat R of Lit 2:372 D 5 '25 350w

"A well-known Swedish scientist's thoughtful and suggestive survey of the part that chemistry plays in our civilization."
+ Spring'd Republican p12 O 29 '25 950w

ASCH, NATHAN. The office. 265p $2 Harcourt

25-19171

"A Wall Street office of 'bucketshop' brokers is evoked by Nathan Asch in sharp, staccato phrases, almost in isolated words. His portrait is completed in less than twenty pages, yet the atmosphere, the nervous tension, the incessant telephoning, the relentless outpouring of ticker-tape, aimless, meaningless interjections of conversation, and a vague, submerged suggestion of human presences are fully indicated. 'And then one day the office failed.' Thereupon Mr. Asch pursues twenty of the office help, from porter to President, as they wander home or resort to pallid, unimaginative, disheartened efforts at amusement."—N Y Times

"A striking idea, written by a man who has force of presentation and, occasionally, distinction of style." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:501 D '25 160w

"It is powerfully written. It is swift, relentless. It is New York as people generally conceive New York. It is human nature under the grinding wheels of economic disaster."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 14 '25 220w

"The action of the characters is not interlocked, and the effect upon the reader is like the experience of the art-viewer who observes a gallery of pictures which have nothing to relate them but the room in which they are hung." Gerald Goode

— Int Bk R p134 Ja '26 450w

"His book is a book that may be startling for its plan; but is too ostentatiously restrained when it is restrained and too callowly violent when it's violent." Walter Yust

— Lit R p4 D 19 '25 380w

"The opening chapter is a sensational accumulation of words. The second chapter carries the method into conversation, and is sensationally effective. After this Mr. Asch lapses into a soberer narrative, bald and hard, acidly economical, at times hot, but never warm-hearted."

New Repub 45:119 D 16 '25 250w

"His selections are amazingly apposite. He varies his pace and adjusts it unerringly and precisely to the mood he wants to convey. It might be called expressionism in fiction, yet it is not a blind and rigid application of a technical principle. It is fluid and plastic and enormously fresh and stimulating. The effect amply justifies the form."

N Y Times p8 O 11 '25 800w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 120w

"The plan is novel and the undertaking large, but it cannot be said that the execution is more than a respectable working out of the obvious opportunities. The style is marked by the familiar staccato of much contemporary fiction, is not distinguished, and the various incidents, when considered apart from the framework which incloses them, have all a familiar air. Mr. Asch's error is the familiar error of the facilely ambitious young novelist and of the scenario writer, the error of mistaking surface novelty for profundity and imagining that an ingenious scheme is sufficient to make a great work." J. W. Krutch

— N Y Tribune p5 O 18 '25 420w

N Y World p7m N 13 '25 220w

"The book is written loosely and hastily. Nevertheless, its structure interests, and its insight into human nature lifts it above the ruck. A little flashy, a little thin,—but an interesting beginning."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:225 O 17 '25 280w

ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD. Advertising year book for 1924; ed. by John Clyde Oswald. 489p il $2 Double-day

659 Advertising

Here are presented digests of more than two hundred of the addresses made at the great international advertising convention in London, July, 1924. Aside from the fact that nineteen nations were represented in its sessions the convention had an international aspect because of the emphasis given in its discussions to the promotion of international good-will and to advertising as a factor in the stabilization of international trade. The papers are grouped to cover many specific advertising and sales problems.

Booklist 21:363 J1 '25

"It is a thought-provoking report. John Clyde Oswald is to be congratulated on his skillful performance of a most difficult editorial task." E. R. C.

+ Lit R p9 Ap 25 '25 300w

"It fulfills a useful purpose, not only as a record of a notable event in advertising history, but in conveying the latest thought on what has become an almost necessary adjunct of all business enterprise."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 26 '25 170w

ATHEARN, WALTER SCOTT. Character building in a democracy. (Washington Gladden lectures for the year 1924) 163p $1.75 Macmillan

268 Sunday schools. Religious education 24-28233

Dean Athearn in this little book discusses the "appalling spiritual illiteracy" among the youth of America and calls on the church to combat it with a nation-wide system of religious education. He reviews briefly the growth of the Sunday school movement, describes the present organization and supervision of church schools and shows the need of a new system and program.

Boston Transcript p2 D 20 '24 250w

J Religion 5:108 Ja '25 50w

Reviewed by Clifford Manshardt

J Religion 5:213 Mr '25 450w

N Y Tribune p8 Ag 30 '25 130w

School Life 10:100 Ja '25 180w

Spring'd Republican p6 Je 29 '25 260w

ATHERTON, MRS GERTRUDE FRANKLIN (HORN). Crystal cup. 315p $2 Boni & Live-right

25-17067

Gita Carteret, the heroine of this Freudian novel, believes herself to be asexual. Love is a nightmare to her, the very thought of it to be shunned. Reluctant pride of family and love for the old colonial mansion near Atlantic City are her chief enthusiasms. Gita marries a brilliant author who promises her friendship only, and since she does not love her husband, when he does fall in love with her and in spite of his contract tries to woo her, the marriage is a failure. Meanwhile Dr Pelham is steadily usurping her interest. With his aid the task of overcoming her repressions and inhibitions goes painfully forward until Gita admits her love and becomes a practically normal woman.

"A very brisk plot, enlivened with a touch of melodrama and one scene (at least) of fine tense drama. It is safe to say 'The Crystal Cup' will be among the best sellers. It marches." Isabel Paterson

+ Bookm 62:82 S '25 400w

Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 800w

"Many people find Mrs. Atherton's excursions into the Freudian complexes of her heroines fascinating. For myself I am so bored by the stale, modern clichés concerning sex repression, inhibitions, neuroses, and libidines, that Mrs. Atherton's heroines' perplexities leave me colder than anything I know except polar explorations."

— Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 100w

"Possibly Mrs. Atherton has been too careful of her data, too meticulous in her presentation of the psychic problem; at any rate, the book arouses admiration, but never stirs, leaving us at the end neither glad nor sorry. In so far as the province of a novel is to pose a problem and answer it, to amuse, to delight with flashes of wit and clever comment, Mrs. Atherton has given ample measure. Beyond that she has not gone." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — Int Bk R p730 O '25 950w

"With the memory of her earlier books still strong, this present novel comes as a surprise. To me it lacks the depth and breadth of the others. It has all the technical ability, the polish, the swift characterization, the acid dialogue and, more important than all, that story-telling faculty which carries one irresistibly from chapter to chapter. Nothing that Mrs. Atherton writes could fail to have those qualities. But, to me at least, the theme is not big enough for the author. It is as though Kreisler were to tuck his fiddle under his chin and play

ATHERTON, GERTRUDE F.—Continued
 'Yes, We Have No Bananas!' " A. H. Gibbs
 — + Lit R p2 Ag 29 '25 400w

"The Crystal Cup is brimming with an old-fashioned cocktail compounded of well known ingredients—for whisky, the ancestral pride of the Carterets, and for vermouth, sex according to the latest decalogue of science. One wonders how Mrs. Atherton can play with strong waters and produce such incredibly juvenile concoction. She is the Mother Goose of American fiction." R. M. L.

— New Repub 44:212 O 14 '25 100w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:606 S 12 '25 70w

"Miss Atherton has not succeeded in creating a single character making any degree of human appeal; and however greatly the critic may admire the sharp, sure lines in an artist's work, the vast reading public demands, and probably rightly, more of warmth than will be found in 'The Crystal Cup.'"

— + N Y Times p14 Ag 30 '25 1900w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p9 N 1 '25 700w

"'The Crystal Cup' is amusing despite periodical lapses into melodrama. And Gita Carteret, the heroine, is vividly fascinating." N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 700w

"'The Crystal Cup' is a well-told story of the awakening to love of a seemingly sexless heroine. The characters are cleverly drawn, but somehow cold. The only really sympathetic person in the book is the tyrannical but lovable old grandmother Carteret. She is dying when the story opens, and does die before many chapters pass, but her spell lingers."

— Outlook 141:164 S 30 '25 360w

"Again Mrs. Atherton has made an elaborate gesture and produced a stuffed rabbit out of the hat. The hat is real, but only the performer's compelling eye and experienced gesture put the wriggle in the rabbit." H. W. Boynton

— + Sat R of Lit 2:119 S 12 '25 220w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p582 S 10 '25 350w

ATKEY, BERTRAM. Pyramid of lead. 300p $2
 Appleton

25-14716

In a sunken garden on the abandoned estate of Lord Kern there stands—where it is obviously out of place—a squat ugly pyramid of lead bearing a cryptic inscription on each of its smooth dull sides. It is certain that the pyramid guards some sinister secret. Two persons, a man and a woman, have been found dead at its base. Mr Prosper Fair, or more rightly the Duke of Devises, enters the excited village at the time of the second tragedy. Being of an inquiring nature he is moved to an investigation of the crime. That is the first reason. The second is Marjorie May. For her sake it is necessary to unravel the tangled affairs of the missing Lord Kern and to discover the amazing secret of the pyramid. That, Mr Prosper Fair is able to do, and Marjorie May is not ungrateful.

"Mr. Atkey plays with his light English atmosphere in a sufficiently graceful manner. Less daring than his front cover he nevertheless erects a narrative that is a thriller and something more. He has borrowed—and wisely—from that stage convenience the single, well-dressed, amusingly cut stencil that pleases because one cannot quite attach it to any of the stencil."

— + Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 250w

Lit R p12 O 31 '25 150w

"Mr. Atkey has told his story well. His style is easy and flowing."

— + N Y Times p7 Ag 23 '25 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 1
 '25 80w

ATKINS, WILLARD EARL, and LASSWELL, HAROLD D. Labor attitudes and problems. 520p il $5 Prentice-Hall [16s Pitman]
 331.8 Labor and laboring classes—United States 24-17823

"A volume which may be regarded as an expression of ideas and methods which have been current for several years in the Social Science Departments and the School of Commerce and Administration at the University of Chicago, where Professor Atkins was formerly a member of the Faculty, and Mr. Lasswell is now an instructor in Political Science." (Am J Soc) "In the early chapters of the book coal miners, steel workers, farmers, casual laborers, women operatives, and clothing workers are described in relation to their work and their employers. The closing chapters give full recognition to the interests of the public in the controversy between capital and labor and the part that the community as a whole should play in bringing about a better adjustment." (School R)

"There is much good material in the book and it may well prove quite useful as a mind-opener. Several of the footnote references do not check up properly with the volumes found in a standard college library. The bibliographies given at the ends of the chapters often impress one as being fired at random." W. B. Catlin

— + Am Econ R 15:124 Mr '25 950w

"Although designed primarily as a textbook for students looking forward to business careers, the reviewer believes that this book will be found very stimulating by those interested in sociological research in the field." F. N. House

— + Am J Soc 30:607 Mr '25 200w

"The volume is a comprehensive and impartial discussion of a highly controversial problem. It bears the marks of sound scholarship and at the same time is set forth in terms which the ordinary student can understand." H. C. Hill

— + School R 33:147 F '25 620w

"Their volume is both vivid and illuminating. They have been at pains to make the reader realize that the attitudes and activities of labor are normal expressions of normal human beings under particular circumstances. This determination to make the reader see the workers as simply human, rather than as either heroes or devils, has led them to stretch their definition of a worker to a point where it is in danger of losing its value as a definition." R. W. B.

— + Survey 53:608 F 15 '25 600w

"In this most commendable work of approximately 500 pages the authors have in simple, readable, easily understood and well chosen language gone to the soil beneath the roots of the plant to get at the problems of the plant growth and development. For the student the book is the best of its kind I have seen, and is also of great value to those actively engaged in industrial relations work, for although it may not contain so much that is new to the experienced it is so arranged as to be interesting as well as valuable for reference and study." E. D. Sebring

— + Taylor Soc Bul 9:286 D '24 600w

ATKINSON, JUSTIN BROOKS. Skyline promenades; a potpourri. 255p $2.50 Knopf
 917.42 White mountains 25-8863

The main thread of this story, by the editor of the New York Times Book Review, is an account of a two weeks' camping and tramping trip thru the White mountains, but this is interspersed with camp-fire talk about many things—literature, the life of the cities and living in general.

Booklist 21:375 J1 '25

"Seldom has a book of essays seemed to me to have so much real charm and quality as these accounts of mental and physical wanderings among the mountains. . . . You will find much about literature as well as about nature in this book, and much about life, too. Mr. Atkinson is contemplative and kindly. He can be sharp, too." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:586 J1 '25 400w

"While this volume is, avowedly, a potpourri, it is not such a disconnected jumble as its title might imply. Mr. Atkinson has handled his subject well. He does not greatly enlarge upon the descriptive literature of the White Mountains, of which there has been an abundance ever since the days of Starr King; nor does he tire one with mundane details of woods travel or lay down rules for camping out, these also being hackneyed subjects, but he has portrayed those subtle, intangible things which constitute the real appeal of mountain life." W. D. White

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 2 '25 1500w

"Mr. Atkinson's manner is suave and careful, and his bits of passing description are pleasantly fresh." H. L. Pangborn

Int Bk R p687 S '25 350w

"The style is simplicity itself. But if such simplicity is a studied effect then the author is all the greater artist to be able to clothe his thought with such spontaneous naturalness, as if he were face to face, talking to you." Anzia Yezierska

+ Lit R p4 J1 25 '25 680w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 100w

"Lovers of the mountains, and especially lovers of the trail, will find in Mr. Atkinson's generous enjoyment of the delights of White Mountain climbing an enthusiasm to match their own united with a pleasant facility of description and a gently philosophizing mood."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:716 Ap 25 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

ATWATER, RICHARD. Rickety rimes of Riq. 123p $2 Ballou, R.O.

811

These zigzag verses are reprinted from various newspaper columns. They are bits of gay nonsense in an original arrangement of line and space.

"A few toward the end are of decidedly inferior quality, but most of them support the impression that the author, if less acute than Lear or Lewis Carroll, is at least a faithful disciple of the masters." E. B. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 25 '25 350w

N Y Tribune p11 S 27 '25 100w

AUBERT, LOUIS. Reconstruction of Europe; its economic and political conditions, their relative importance. (Inst. of politics publications. Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 180p $2 Yale univ. press

940.5 Reconstruction (European war). Europe—Economic conditions. Europe—Politics. League of nations 25-7376

"Mr. Aubert in his first three lectures compares the relative importance of the political and financial factors in Europe's present attempts at reconstruction and then devotes his last three chapters to the Dawes plan, the Limitation of Armaments, and the League."—Sat R of Lit

"The criticism of the more material economic views is focused upon Mr. Keynes. While it is excellent to ensure that the political factor is not neglected, yet M. Aubert himself tends to overemphasize it and there is no real comparison with the merits of other views."

Am Pol Sci R 19:656 Ag '25 120w

Booklist 22:25 O '25

Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 1000w

"Decidedly tame reading in cold type. Uninspired in thought and casual in subject matter. Frankly speaking, it has little contemporary and no permanent value." Hamilton Holt

— Sat R of Lit 2:68 Ag 22 '25 100w

AULT, NORMAN, comp. and ed. Elizabethan lyrics; from the original texts. 536p $3.50 (10s 6d) Longmans

821.08 English poetry—Collections 25-23511

"This Anthology is compiled on a new plan. Its purpose is to present the lyric poetry of the Elizabethan Age as a living literary movement, the evolution of which can best be seen, not in the piecemeal study of individual writers, but only when their collective work is viewed chronologically and as an organic whole. Consequently the poems are arranged, neither in the order of the birthdays of the authors, nor according to subject matter; but year by year, according to the dates at which each poem first became known to the public for whom the author wrote. This plan renders it possible to follow step by step the development of the lyric, and its many fashions and phases, throughout the entire Elizabethan period."—Intro.

Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 720w

"The result is admirable. One gets the impression of the river of Elizabethan inspiration flowing on steadily with constant additions from new springs and sources tempering its quality. The indexes make it possible to locate any particular poem easily, and the chronological order gives the whole book a value which does not exist in other anthologies containing similar selections."

+ Ind 116:50 Ja 9 '26 160w

"An unusually pleasing compilation."

+ Lit R p13 D 12 '25 110w

"This is an excellent anthology. The work, which must have entailed considerable research allows one to see, in the best possible way, the development of the Elizabethan lyric."

+ Nation and Ath 38:504 Ja 2 '26 100w

"Elizabethan Lyrics is a very good compilation, and one which will long keep its place. It is useful to those who study literature as well as delightful to those who read unsystematically."

+ New Statesman 26:80 O 31 '25 900w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p6m D 20 '25 120w

"Mr Ault's anthology is not only constructed on a sound objective principle, but is easily the largest and most representative collection of Elizabethan poetry yet published." G. F. W.

+ Springfield Republican p6 D 28 '25 650w

"Mr. Ault's anthology of Elizabethan lyrics is less selective than all-inclusive. Unlike Mr. Welby, he has been sufficiently influenced by historical considerations to include, for example, poems which, apart from intrinsic merit, were so popular in their own day as to provide the dramatists of the period with topical quotations. Since his search has been extremely thorough he is justified in claiming that his selection is more representative than any anthology hitherto published, and is also a bibliography of the best lyric poetry of the period. Yet the qualities which make his book valuable to the student will commend it less to the general reader."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p796 N 26 '25 380w

AUMONIER, STACY. Overheard; fifteen tales. 296p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann] 25-4778

Of these fifteen tales, only one, The friends, has appeared in volume form before. Being one of Mr Aumonier's earlier stories, this was not widely read and so is reprinted. Contents: Overheard; The fall; One Sunday morning; The dark corridor; The kidnapped "general"; The friends; The persistent mother; When the earth stopped; William's narrow squeak; What was she to think? One thing leads to another; The mother of Carmen Colignon; Dark red roses; The little window of the night; Freddie finds himself.

AUMONIER, STACY—Continued

"Such stories run the danger of dullness. What saves them is an intense understanding that amounts to sympathy. But an injection of pathos with its accompaniment of superior pity, or of derision with its accompaniment of superior laughter, muddles and does not save them." Stella Heilbrunn

— + Int Bk R p426 My '25 320w

Reviewed by E. J. O'Brien

Lit R p6 Mr 21 '25 250w

"Taken one at a time, they are not so bad; taken together, they assume the proportions of a pica-yune vice, and show quite clearly that a short story at its best is not worth much more than the time you spend on it, and that a book of short stories, not unified by any one central idea, is of all publications the silliest and most annoying."

— + N Y Times p8 F 15 '25 600w

"'Overheard' actually achieves a style so competent that it is imperceptible, characters so much alive that they account for themselves, a milieu real enough to forego catalogue and situations vital enough to break through the habit of still life."

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 8 '25 300w

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 170w

"Mr. Aumonier is occasionally profound, but does not seek and ensue quietness. In some parts of 'Overheard,' technique asserts itself almost with a swagger, shaking its shoulders and tossing its head. Still, it would be both ungracious and unfair to suggest that all, or many, of Mr. Aumonier's new stories amount to nothing better than sleight-of-hand. He has far too quick and sympathetic a mind ever to become a mere showman or conjuror: his characters appeal to him, and consequently appeal to his readers." Gerald Gould

— + Sat R 138:578 D 6 '24 360w

"Varied and attractive short stories, written with a great feeling for the right word and the unexpected ending."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p828 D 4 '24 150w

AUREVILLEY, J. A. B. See Barbey d'Aureville, J. A.

AUSTEN, JANE. "Sanditon": fragment of a novel. 218p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Milford]

[25-11471]

"This fragment of twelve chapters, which can be read in full now for the first time, is the one that has long intrigued us in quotations at the end of the 'Memoir of Jane Austen.' It has the peculiar interest of being the last work she attempted, for it was written at Chawton in the beginning of 1817, before that journey to Winchester from which she never returned."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Had this first volume been completed, and the two others which would have accompanied it, it is evident that literature would have been enriched by another Jane Austen novel equal to its predecessors. It is clearly no last work, done when powers were waning, but rather a work begun at full maturity. Its tardy publication will detract in no way from Jane Austen's reputation, but will stimulate further reading of her books." Margaret Williamson

+ Lit R p5 My 23 '25 850w

Living Age 325:171 Ap 18 '25 520w

"What changes she would have made it is impossible to say; what lessening of spirit her illness caused is equally problematical. The fact remains that this beginning is less sound, less sure, less pointed than an equivalent amount of any of the finished novels. It will never win anyone to Jane Austen; but anyone who has already been won will be in no way shaken by it." Dorothy Graffe

Nation 120:472 Ap 22 '25 650w

"The fragment known to Miss Austen's family as 'Sanditon' is of small literary merit, but no one is to blame for this: neither the authoress, who left it a fragment, nor the owner of the MS., who has rightly decided on publication, nor the editor of the text, who has done his work with care and skill. Though of small merit, it is of great interest, for it was written after 'Persuasion,' and consequently may throw light on the last phase of the great novelist." E. M. Forster

Nation and Ath 36:860 Mr 21 '25 1300w

"Sanditon, though in no sense juvenile, is not in the least joyful; and though highly provocative of laughter, the merriment is not the laughter of either Pickwick or Gargantua. To the lovers of Jane Austen, now to be found scattered all over the English-reading world, the laughter this Fragment must provoke, and the admiration it cannot fail to excite by the pungency of a familiar wit, and the inimitable happiness of its phraseology, will be found to lie too near to the fountain of tears to make the reading of it a cheerful pastime. Melancholy must of necessity brood over its handful of pages. Yet we are glad it has been printed as it has been." Augustine Birrell

New Statesman 24:630 Mr 7 '25 400w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

N Y Times p13 Ap 5 '25 2200w

"The Oxford University Press has reproduced with what seems a rather pedantic faithfulness the inaccuracies and idiosyncrasies of the original manuscript. But it has published a volume which all lovers of Jane Austen will wish to own." Amy Loveman

Sat R of Lit 1:703 Ap 25 '25 600w

"Nobody need refrain from reading for fear of being pained with a sense of the author's declining powers. Neither in the writing nor in the method or style is there the slightest sign of relaxation of interest in the scheme of human affairs. The great and brilliant mind is working at a full and even pressure, and there is no trace of rattling, or rapping, or clinking. Till the last words on the last page we obtain that smooth and delightful and yet 'spritely running' to which Jane Austen accustomed her readers from the appearance of her first novel." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 134:502 Mr 28 '25 1900w

"It would be absurd to judge what we have as we should judge a whole novel. But we may rejoice that it was written and has been released to delight us. Perhaps nothing in Jane Austen's fiction brings us nearer to the gaiety that sparkled in her life and is vivid still in her letters."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p167 F 19 '25 1000w

AUSTIN, FREDERICK BRITTEN. Thirteen; with an introd. by Coulson Kernahan. 340p $2 Doubleday

25-20023

Thirteen short stories. Contents: Introduction; Under the lens; A mother sits by the fire; The infernal machine; The drum; Panzerkraftwagen! The one beloved; An affair of honour; Through the gate of horn; "S O S"; Nach Verdun! The red shawl; A problem in reprisals; She who came back.

"The stories are refreshingly artless. The author has plenty of which to write and he gets it to his readers in the most expeditious manner possible. He plunges in without preliminaries and tells his story straight to the end."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 21 '25 320w

"While some of the tales in '13' are average short stories, I do not think that there is a single world-beater in the lot. Of the four which Mr. Kernahan recommends so highly—'She Who Came Back,' 'The One Beloved,'

'Nach Verdun' and 'Panzerkraftwagen'—there is little evidence of inspiration." Herschel Brickell

— Lit R p5 N 21 '25 200w

"The stories are competently and graphically written, but with the exception of four exceedingly sentimental tales—'A Mother Sits by the Fire,' 'The One Beloved,' 'Through the Gate of Horn' and 'She Who Came Back'—betray a somewhat inhuman viewpoint which will cost them the sympathy of the general public, even if their technical elaboration commends them to the critic."

— + N Y Times p11 S 27 '25 650w

AUSTIN, MARY (HUNTER) (MRS STAFFORD W. AUSTIN). Everyman's genius. 365p $2.50 Bobbs

151.1 Genius 25-9589

Mrs Austin describes her book as a "personal research into the nature and processes of genius." She maintains that genius is a normal human possession, that its absence is due to unfortunate birth or education and that it can be acquired. The genius process, which she believes differs but slightly in all types of creative endeavor, is studied in its operation rather than in its results. Devices are described which the author has discovered for managing her own mind and some notes are added on personal methods collected from other creative workers.

Booklist 22:52 N '25

"For the craftsman of any sort who wishes to understand the workings of the subconscious mind and the ways to which it may be put to serve the conscious here is a book as necessary as an arithmetic." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:471 Je '25 320w

"The volume is probably the outcome of much careful thought and conscientious development, is as exhaustive as any work of this nature can well be and may be justly accorded high rank among recent psychological studies and perhaps the highest rank among those which have confined themselves to one particular branch of inquiry." F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '25 400w

"Mrs. Austin's work may be of great inspiration to certain seekers, but it is safe to conclude that the magic fountain is of spiritual origin and is not attained by formulæ." Mary Huntington

Lit R D 26 '25 360w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayers

New Repub 43:53 Je 3 '25 700w

Reviewed by S. A. Coblenz

N Y Times p14 My 3 '25 800w

"The unpleasant terminology and the very bad structure of the sentences and the bad habit of using one noun to modify another noun leave the book's actual writing very little distinction. And only its obvious sobriety and earnestness lift it above the level of those little books which are curiously called inspirational literature. Whether or not Mrs. Austin has proved her own theory, she has certainly proved Benedetto Croce's theory that an idea which is badly expressed is not clearly conceived." Frances Newman

— + N Y Tribune p4 My 24 '25 600w

"An interesting psychological study of the creative processes of genius by a woman eminently fitted by scholarship and experience to make it."

+ Outlook 140:434 Jl 22 '25 120w

"I do not see how this book could help anyone, and I can see how its very speculative thesis that genius is rampant could hurt many soft-minded yearners. It is not science, this volume, if science is clear thinking from carefully ascertained facts. It is certainly not art. For Mrs. Austin, who has written elsewhere with fire and precision, writes here a jargon that has neither intelligibility nor music, and has penned a volume with no consistent form." Irwin Edman

— + Sat R of Lit 2:494 Ja 16 '26 900w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 Jl '25

AUSTIN, MARY (HUNTER) (MRS STAFFORD W. AUSTIN). A small town man. 230p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

232 Jesus Christ 25-7211

The first edition of this book was published in 1915 under the title "The Man Jesus," with the omission of its final and most vital chapter. The author agreed with the publishers that the point of her conclusions might be missed because the very terms of mysticism and genius were at that time so little understood by American readers. The book is now issued in revised and complete form. Mrs Austin conceives of Jesus as before all else a great mystical genius and of his temptation in the wilderness as his most significant experience, out of which he came a prophet and a teacher. He saw God as no one had seen him before and it was the mystical life that he taught his disciples to lead.

Booklist 21:391 Jl '25

"The eternal value of Jesus is that he belongs to all time and all places. Attempts to localize him, as in Mary Austin's 'A Small Town Man,' or to modernize him, as in Bruce Barton's 'The Man Nobody Knows,' are foredoomed to failure, for his acknowledged universal appeal is not limited geographically or chronologically. The phrase, 'a small town man,' has a distinct connotation of inferiority. It implies an individual of provincial ideas and limited horizons." C. F. Potter

— Bookm 61:590 Jl '25 160w

"The character analysis of Jesus is very forcibly drawn. Disregarding certain historical errors, especially concerning the beliefs of the ancient Jews, 'A Small Town Man' is very inspiring."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Ag 5 '25 350w

"Many readers will no doubt be extremely pained by the perversity of Mrs. Austin's scientific errors. But that will simply be their loss." C. E. Ayres

+ — New Repub 43:54 Je 3 '25 480w

"Her writing here is clear and free from the pseudo-scientific jargon into which she sometimes lapses. Her insight appears to me remarkable, and her treatment of the problem far more illuminating, consistent and persuasive than that of Signor Papini. Her book deserves wide reading." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p2 Ap 12 '25 1000w

"It is the acute revelation of what Jesus was saying to us that distinguishes Mary Austin's book. Through her we are able to see him as a figure so vital that even now, after twenty centuries, his life lies still ahead of us."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 5 '25 370w

"It is not the fruit of scholarship; it is a literary study. The writer has done a large amount of research but she does not possess the background and technical training of a Biblical scholar. She has, however, other qualifications which fit her for what she has undertaken to do. She has produced a unique account of the Great Galilean. It is vivid, graphic, daring, often brilliant." R. M. Jones

+ Sat R of Lit 2:41 Ag 15 '25 520w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 15 '25 50w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 16 '25 1700w

"Miss Austin unhappily has been enamored of a theory of her own, and into this Procrustean bed the facts of the Gospels must be so chopped and trimmed that what is left of them at least will seem to fit. This is not to say that the book has no value. On the contrary it has much value. It is starred by many passages of beautiful descriptive writing, and frequently the author's thought flashes with brilliant intuition upon some particular phase of the life and thought of Jesus." W. R. Bowie

AUSTIN, MARY—Continued

— + Survey 55:376 D 15 '25 650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 My 14 '25 30w

"It must be confessed that Mary Austin's book is disappointing. The preface, with its suggestion of clues gained from folk-lore study, promises more than the book performs."

— World Tomorrow 8:381 D '25 200w

AUSTIN, WALTER. William Austin, the creator of Peter Rugg; being a biographical sketch of William Austin, together with the best of his short stories, collected and edited by his grandson. 338p il $5 Marshall Jones

B or 92 Austin, William 25-8822

"William Austin was born in Lunenburg, Mass., in 1778; graduated from Harvard in 1798; studied law at Lincoln's Inn in London, and died at Charleston in 1841. He was far from being a professional writer. He was more particularly a lawyer and politician, and even in these activities of purely local, Massachusetts, importance. The bulk of this book is taken up with detailing his extra-literary life. Aside from his one successful story Austin wrote nothing worth knowing, a fact which is emphasized in reading his other fiction as given in this volume. His essay on Jesus Christ is merely a curiosity, apparently, and his 'Letters from London' of only slightly greater interest."—N Y Tribune

"The latest edition is the most satisfactory one ever made. The editor has been careful to give all the details of a biographical and genealogical nature; he has listed all of Austin's works that are known; he has traced to scarce and curious volumes the various illustrations used with the story of 'Peter Rugg,' and he has quoted and summarized the public opinion of Austin's masterpiece. As a piece of book making it is another example of the care and taste that have distinguished our Norwood book makers. Its publishers have been particularly desirous to make it a suitable reprint, one that will bring to all the satisfaction that can only come when the reader finds a literary classic attractively presented." D. E. Kennedy

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 18 '25 2500w

"However pleasant it may be to linger among old-fashioned ways and leisurely lives, when one actually peruses the tale of Peter Rugg one does not feel prepared to agree with Colonel Higginson that such work is on a level with the various versions of The Flying Dutchman or Rip Van Winkle as have come one's way. As to any association between the extremely dry humour of William Austin and the profound genius of Hawthorne, we must confess we can see nothing of it."

— Dial 79:263 S '25 160w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren
Nation 121:464 O 21 '25 650w

N Y Times p21 My 31 '25 750w

"Aside from accomplishing an act of piety, Mr. Austin's work was worth doing, because quite unintentionally he casts a further glimmer of light into the dark regions whence emerged the occasional stories in early American literature which are still interesting reading. Books like this one accumulate the evidence for a history of American literature which will take fully into account the social origins of the material." C. H. Grattan

+ N Y Tribune p12 J1 5 '25 750w

"The chief value of the volume lies in its reprint of not merely 'Peter Rugg, The Missing Man,' but the three other stories by which Austin added to his modest reputation. The genuine merit of all these stories in style as well as conception makes it regrettable that circumstances did not favor a literary career for Austin."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:31 Ag 8 '25 480w

AUTOLYCUS, pseud. See Bacon, L.

AVEY, ALBERT EDWIN, comp. Readings in philosophy. 2nd ed 602p $3 Appleton

108 Philosophy 24-22972

The volume consists of passages chosen from the classics of philosophic literature from Plato and Aristotle to Bergson and William James. The selections chosen present as far as may be the core of the writer's philosophy.

Booklist 21:308 My '25

"Dr. Avey's useful book will be welcomed by all who care for the literature of philosophy, wish to be reminded of its outstanding problems, and are even more interested in what has been written concerning them by master minds in this field."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 10 '25 180w

Lit R p13 Ja 10 '25 230w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 J1 '25

AYRES, RUBY MILDRED (MRS REGINALD WILLIAM POCOCK). Littl'st lover. 281p $2 Doran

25-24276

This is the story of two close friends who love the same girl. In order to avoid a distasteful match pretty little Josie Dawlish becomes engaged to Larry, her friend from childhood, and more recently, her "littl'st lover." She does not love him but he assures her he loves her enough for them both. Later she meets his friend Robert, to whom Larry owes his life, and falls in love with him. Neither has the requisite courage to tell Larry the truth. From a mistaken motive of loyalty, Robert tries to break off with Josie, telling her he is already married. Larry lives in his fool's paradise till the eve of his wedding day when, discovering the truth, he takes things into his own hands and makes what he believes to be the necessary sacrifice.

"'The Littl'st Lover' is neither an improvement nor a variation on its predecessors; if anything it stands far behind the best of them. For pages and pages people incapable of existing talk and weep and thrill with emotion."

— N Y Times p9 Je 21 '25 300w

"A wistful tale for the very romantically inclined."

Springf'd Republican p7a My 24 '25 180w

B

BABCOCK, MRS BERNIE (SMADE). Booth and the spirit of Lincoln; a story of a living dead man. 320p $2 Lippincott

Booth, John Wilkes—Fiction 25-25281

The author, who has written two stories based on the life of Lincoln, in this story of the life of Booth describes the events that led up to the assassination, tells of Booth's escape on that fateful night, and of the death of an innocent man supposed to be Booth himself. The fugitive drifted from place to place assuming many aliases. Visited repeatedly by the forgiving spirit of Lincoln with a message of "malice toward none and charity for all," the hunted man's violent hatred gave way to reverent love for his victim. The story records his friendship, as John St Helen, with Finis L. Bates, to whom Booth confessed the secret of his identity and told of his escape and subsequent wanderings. The book is based on documents now in the possession of Mrs Bates, widow of Booth's friend and confidant.

"Mrs. Babcock has wisely avoided introducing more elements of romance into the story than it contained already and these she has brought out with considerable skill. If Lincoln (who appears only as a spirit) suffers idealization and Booth undergoes something of the standardization common to heroes of novels the minor characters stand out well and the action is one of sustained interest. A sad story, but far from a depressing one." R. W. Thompson

+ — Lit R p5 D 19 '25 150w

"The theory the author advances is interesting, and as a statement of possible facts the book may be considered worth while. But as fiction it is poorly written, and the appearances of the 'Spirit of Lincoln,' which haunted the murderer fail to impress the reader. Regarded as a novel, 'Booth and the Spirit of Lincoln' is altogether negligible; as a painstaking marshaling of evidence on a debated question it is not without interest."

— + N Y Times p9 Ja 3 '26 550w

BABCOCK, EDWINA STANTON. Nantucket windows. 124p $1.60 Little bk. house, Nantucket, Mass.

811

25-377

"Through the 'magic casements' of Miss Babcock's poems we look out upon the town and the island beloved of 'off-islanders' as well as by those born there. We see the shady streets of Nantucket town; its quaintly lovely gardens, its porticoed colonial houses with great pillars and on their roofs the inevitable 'walk' whence, 'anchored' deep-sea captains could watch the comings-in and goings-out of sailing craft; and out beyond the town the dunes, moving imperceptibly with the touch of the never-ceasing wind."—Boston Transcript

"A small book of contemplative verse whose local flavor is perhaps its greatest charm."

+ Bookm 61:490 Je '25 200w

"Her poems are interpretations as well as descriptions. Or grave or gay, they witness a perception as delicately acute as is the restraint which makes them but the more compelling."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 21 '25 400w

"This volume of Nantucket verse reveals her in her off hours as a very indifferent and careless rhymers. Some of her pieces scarcely rise above the level of doggerel." Wilbert Snow

— N Y Tribune p9 F 8 '25 650w

"The versification is fair to middling, the observation of natural things and the feeling for the charm of the old town and adjacent countryside are pleasant and vivid. To Nantucketers the book will be a welcome souvenir of happy days. To the reader of much contemporary poetry the book must remain of only average merit."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:567 F 28 '25 100w

BABCOCK, FREDERICK MORRISON. Appraisal of real estate. (Land economics ser.) 380p 11 $3.50 Macmillan

333 Real property—Valuation 24-21784

The book sets forth the principles underlying real estate valuation and the procedure and methods of appraisal. It deals in separate chapters with the application of these principles and methods to the valuation of specific properties—income-producing, residential and farm property, and lease equities. The method of computing net income is explained and comparative value analysis. Working tables and formulas are appended.

Am Econ R 15:114 Mr '25 50w

Booklist 21:218 Mr '25

Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '24 120w

Harvard Business R 3:252 Ja '25 150w

"Technical in character, but containing, especially in the earlier chapters, information of value to students of housing who are somewhat familiar with economic theory."

+ J Home Econ 17:170 Mr '25 100w

BABSON, ROGER WARD. Recent labor progress; with special reference to the work of the Federal government as outlined in the reports of the Department of labor; introd. by Ethelbert Stewart, 336p $2 Revell

331 Labor and laboring classes—United States. United States. Department of labor 25-2084

"'Recent Labor Progress' is a complete study of the United States Department of Labor, which furnished the author with much of his material. Necessarily, such a treatise goes deeply into the work of the various offices of the government, such as Women and Children's Bureaus, the Employment and Conciliation Service, and the Immigration and Naturalization Bureaus. It is a valuable volume from the standpoint of the Department of Labor, for it informs the people of the country concerning the achievements of the Department, too little comprehended in the past. The author is admirably fitted for the presentation of such a study. The book has special reference to the work of the Labor Department under James J. Davis, its present chief, soon to retire."—Bookm

Booklist 21:326 Je '25

Bookm 60:adv F '25 140w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 14 '23 260w

"The citizen can get from this book what government documents would never give him—a clear, well-rounded conception of the scope and activities of this important department."

+ R of Rs 71:335 Mr '25 50w

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. Father Abraham. 419p $2 Bobbs

Lincoln, Abraham—Fiction

25-5539

In "Father Abraham," Irving Bacheller gives a picture of Lincoln's kindly paternal attitude toward youth. Tho he does not enter its early pages, his is the figure toward which the thought and affection of all the other characters converge. The story concerns a young northerner, Randall Hope, who leaves the home of his harsh and unsympathetic stepfather and wins his way South to the home of an uncle. There is the inevitable clash of ideas between the northern boy and his southern relatives, a clash that is intensified by the imminent approach of war. In the war Randall finds love and adventure. His is a romance with an historical background, dominated by the compelling personality of Father Abraham.

Booklist 21:301 My '25

"There are some quite charming pages, transcripts of wilderness scenes and pioneer domestic interiors, in 'Father Abraham.' And luckily, there isn't much moral indignation." Isabel Paterson

+ — Bookm 61:186 Mr '25 220w

"The story is of a distinctly commonplace sort. He seeks to draw portraits of rural types from the Middle West, with occasional Irish and German emigrants, but with all the goodwill in the world, the most friendly critic cannot proclaim that these portraits are anything but conventional." S. L. C.

— Boston Transcript p3 F 28 '25 1200w

Reviewed by Horace Green

Int Bk R p328 Ap '25 1300w

"The dividing line between reality and invention, thanks to the author's skill, can scarcely be traced. More than that, the combination of fact and fancy is so skillfully managed that by their reaction both become more real, and the living touch that every historian, even every biographer, misses is added." C: K. Gaines

+ Lit R p6 F 28 '25 1400w

"If Alger had ever written a historical novel this would be it, in polysyllabic version. It is an admirable volume, lush in language and moral in tone. . . Father Abraham is the sort of book that helps to insure young boys against literary discrimination in later life." B. G.

— New Repub 43:161 J1 1 '25 120w

BACHELLER, I. A.—Continued

"Those who are irrevocably committed to the 'modern' in literature will call both theme and treatment sentimental. These should not read Mr. Bacheller's story. Those who can recapture something of the simplicity of mood which takes at least momentary delight in hairbreadth escapes, in the comradeship of a clean and generous country boy with his horse and his dog, will find much of homely virtue intertwined with the warp and woof of Father Abraham."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 22 '25 550w

"A romance of this sort will always find its readers simply because it is a romance. However, the author's attempt to impress upon the imaginations of to-day the conditions and problems of the Civil War period, is at least tolerably successful." Elizabeth Wyman

N Y Tribune p13 Mr 15 '25 380w

"With all its weaknesses, this novel, like Mr. Bacheller's earlier Lincoln novel, will no doubt please many readers, who can take little harm from that in the book which is poorest, and may gain both pleasure and knowledge from that which is best."

+ — Outlook 139:620 Ap 22 '25 280w

"A story in which Lincoln is less essential than the leading young man cannot but cause many readers a painful overstrain to their sense of proportion. Mr. Bacheller has a natural sympathy for the rail splitter, and an aptitude for expressing the picturesque side of a man related, through the soil, to the best characters of his own creation. But he has not wedded fiction and history." Philip Coan

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:555 F 28 '25 700w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 430w

"Mr. Bacheller's second Lincoln story is a rather heavily weighted performance, much less successful than the first."

— Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

BACHMANN, ALBERTO ABRAHAM. Encyclopedia of the violin; with an introd. by Eugene Ysaye; tr. by Frederick H. Martens; ed. by Albert E. Wier. 470p il $5 Appleton

787.1 Violin. Violinists 25-9885

A comprehensive work covering the history and construction of the violin, noted violin makers, the technique of violin playing, analyses of musical compositions, violin collecting, etc. A glossary of musical terms; a biographical dictionary of violinists; a bibliography and a full list of music for the violin are also included.

Booklist 22:18 O '25

Outlook 140:341 J1 1 '25 50w

Wis Lib Bul 21:195 J1 '25

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Gospel of Mark: its composition and date. 340p $5 Yale univ. press

226.3 Bible. New Testament—Gospels—St Mark 25-9891

The Buckingham professor of New Testament criticism and exegesis in Yale divinity school, here examines the internal and external evidence concerning the composition and date of the Gospel of Mark. The volume amplifies an earlier historico-critical study entitled "The beginnings of Gospel story."

"In the present volume his theory is elaborated and defended with a brilliance and a wealth of learning that command admiration, even while we dissent, as we often do, from the author's conclusions. Professor Bacon's self-restraint commands our admiration. It is no doctrinaire or one-sided presentation; nothing is forced; it is a model of candid scholarly discussion. In the end much less Pauline influence is claimed than was the case, if we remember rightly, in the author's first book on St. Mark." G: A. Barton

+ Lit R p3 Ag 22 '25 700w

"Like all of Professor Bacon's contributions to New Testament criticism, this volume is bold, original, speculative, even audacious. It is not always convincing; sometimes it is extravagant and almost unbalanced; but it is always stimulating, and every word is written by an open minded citizen of the gospel country of which he writes." A. W. Vernon

+ — N Y Tribune p5 N 15 '25 500w

Outlook 140:342 J1 1 '25 20w

BACON, JANET RUTH. Voyage of the Argonauts. 195p $2.50 Small [6s Methuen] 292 Argonauts

"The author, a lecturer at Girton College, Cambridge, by a careful analysis of the story of Jason and the Argonauts attempts to discover in it the narrative of a yet earlier event, a real voyage made from Thessaly to the Black Sea in the fourteenth or thirteenth century before Christ. Upon this foundation other tales of Greek adventure, such as reminiscences of the amber trade from the Baltic to the south and the silk trade from China to the west, were later added, till with Appollonius of Rhodes, in the third century before Christ, the legend appears as an artistic whole, composed of science, history and romance."—N Y Tribune

"Miss Bacon's book throws the full force of a new light upon the old story of the Quest and makes us see it taking its place in recorded history."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 14 '25 250w

Nation 120:554 My 13 '25 20w

"This is an excellent book, clear, well-informed and well written. But it must not be supposed that Miss Bacon's theory accounts for everything. Why, for instance, is the voyage not one of discovery, but of recovery, to get back the Golden Fleece? And why are both the names Jason and Medea associated with healing? In conclusion, it must be mentioned that the habit of quoting Greek authorities in improvised verse translations is one to be eschewed."

+ — New Statesman 24:670 Mr 14 '25 650w

N Y Tribune p5 Ap 19 '25 100w

"Miss Bacon writes in such a manner that, learned as her investigations are, the romance both of the legend and of modern methods of investigating it is not lost."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 12 '25 250w

BACON, LEONARD (AUTOLYCUS, pseud.). Ph. D.s; male and female created He them. 76p $2 Harper

811

25-5566

The little book is made up of two narrative poems, both satirizing the dullness of academic culture and the dryness of doctors' theses.

Booklist 21:333 Je '25

"He has taken as the object of his often brilliant wit the doings and contrivings of that strange animal we dignify with the title of Doctor of Philosophy. In more than metre they resemble Byron, who apparently is still not entirely unknown to undergraduates, for the same brilliancy of metaphor, the same sense strained to fit the rhyme, the same pathos, that characterized the Romantic, are to be found reflected in this latest product of our education factories. The reflection may at times appear pale and distorted, but it is there nevertheless." E. B. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Mr 7 '25 950w

"The two poems in this volume are almost extraordinarily good performances of their kind. They approach the authentic tradition of the best satire—but they do not quite achieve it."

+ — Ind 114:246 F 28 '25 240w

"Back of his rhythmic facility, he has the wide experience of life which can come only from a keen and constant interest in it. He employs all the devices of art, but always to illustrate and illuminate human nature. My criticism here would be that there is a trifle too much of satire and too little of sympathy." Gamaliel Bradford

+ — Lit R p5 Mr 14 '25 700w

Reviewed by G. H. Busey

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 19 '25 300w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p7m Ap 26 '25 230w

"Though all allusions to 'technique' are barred by the author's expressed detestation of the word, still Mr. Bacon must be reminded that identity of terminal sounds, as in 'catalogued' and 'waterlogged,' is not rhyme, and that aberrations of this order, together with 'cockney rhymes,' such as 'bystander' and 'propaganda,' should be avoided for the adequate reason that they disappoint and offend the trained ear expectant of true rhyme. But it is good work, with a definite point well made." Arthur Guiterman

+ Outlook 140:112 My 20 '25 130w

"My heart has been rejoiced by the wit and the wisdom, the superb workmanship and the admirable feeling, of this verse. Here is a ripe poet who is not afraid to jest and who yet can leave a serious impression upon the reader, who can sum up a human being in a pithy stanza and at the same time write a swift-moving tale. In short, the publication of this volume is an event of importance." G. H. Gerould

+ Sat R of Lit 1:577 Mr 7 '25 1800w

Spring'd Republican p10 Ap 17 '25 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p226 Mr 26 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:197 J1 '25

BADE, WILLIAM FREDERIC. Life and letters of John Muir. 2v 398;454p $7.50 Houghton

B or 92 Muir, John

A25-247

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:230 Mr '25

"With an almost religious fervor, Professor Badè has for years collected the incidents and letters that cover many little known portions of Muir's life; and he has now sympathetically woven them into these eagerly awaited biographical volumes. Their literary quality is of high order, and all lovers of Muir's work are indebted to their compiler. There should be strong public demand for early publication of all the remaining material." LeRoy Jeffers

+ Bookm 61:83 Mr '25 750w

Reviewed by Llewelyn Powys

Int Bk R p97 Ja '26 1400w

"Fully and beautifully told." H: F. Osborn

+ Lit R p6 Mr 7 '25 1550w

"A man worth knowing is sure to leave the clue to his secret in his letters to his friends. It is these unique letters which constitute the charm of this work. Had Professor Badè not been so fearful of reproducing what Muir had already written in his Boyhood and Youth and in his descriptions of his travels, we should have had a fuller and more artistic biography, but these letters are sufficient to justify its publication." A. W. Vernon

+ New Repub 42:77 Mr 11 '25 800w

"Out of great piles of Muir's notebooks and half-finished manuscripts, out of his books and fascinating long letters Dr. Badè has woven the epic story of this American. It ought to become a national saga." L: Gannett

+ N Y Tribune p1 F 8 '25 1100w

R of Rs 71:221 F '25 150w

BADGER, RALPH EASTMAN. Valuation of industrial securities. 188p $5 Prentice-Hall

332.6 Securities

25-5477

"What Dr. Badger has succeeded in elucidating is the actual value of securities without regard to their market prices and their book values and he has placed within the reach of persons interested the methods of appraisal of bonds and stocks and a knowledge of the financial status of industrial corporations. He provides an insight into the valuation of investments, discusses the risks, defines and analyzes earnings and indicates the ratio of earnings to market quotations. He has a separate chapter dealing with the problems of public service corporations which present considerations not involved in ordinary investments."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:359 J1 '25

"The factors which are responsible for the differences between security prices and security values are presented through clear cut cases, and the appraisal process and the good-will methods of valuation are compared. Excellent statistical data are furnished, and there is information of a very practical nature concerning measures of valuation for industrial and public utility bonds and stocks." J. G.

+ Bookm 61:adv Je '25 120w

"Dr. Badger has really conferred a considerable benefit on the entire business community. It is not an easy task which he has undertaken, nor one frequently assumed with literary intent. The subject deemed intricate, is so no longer, so clear are Dr. Badger's explanations, so concise the descriptions of his varied estimates. Difficult as it is in a work of this kind to avoid technicalities, the author has so contrived as to render his disquisitions quite readable by the ordinary layman."

+ N Y Times p23 Je 7 '25 360w

BAERLEIN, HENRY PHILIP BERNARD. Over the hills of Ruthenia. 255p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d L. Parsons]

914.37 Ruthenia

25-7818

An account of a visit to the little state lying under the Carpathians at the far end of Czecho-Slovakia and wedged in between Poland and Rumania and Hungary—the country of the smallest of the Slav peoples, the Ruthenes. Mr Baerlein travelled about thru its little villages and into the great Ruthenian forest, talking with simple folk and learning much of their customs and traditions. There is something of their history in his descriptions and frequent allusion to politics.

"A charming, unconventional account of travel in a corner of Czecho-Slovakia, formerly a part of Hungary. It is filled with kindly humor, the beauty of simple things, and the anecdotes, tales and philosophy of the simple peasant folk."

+ Booklist 21:375 J1 '25

Reviewed by S. L. Rich

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 25 '25 1150w

"The pages of his running story are of the stuff of life; there is humor, pathos and gentle irony in them. They are a delight for the un-statistical minded." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p7 Je 13 '25 280w

"His study is an adroit blend of history and anecdote; it has plenty of first-hand information spiced with occasional pinches of first-hand prejudice. These pages have a freshness derived from the consideration of scenes which have not been rendered shopworn by the historians, or trite by the globetrotters."

+ Nation 118:212 F 20 '24 80w

"Through this interesting region, entangled in a dozen frontiers and as many more races and dialects, Mr. Baerlein browses very pleasantly, wandering aimlessly about, but always with a kindly, humorous and sympathetic eye on those about him. His observations are those of an alert and sensitive traveler, but he often fails to point interesting situations with sufficient significance, and his pages would profit greatly by the addition of a little more literary salt and heightened color."

+ — N Y Times p5 Je 7 '25 360w

"It is a book full of the beauty-loving spirit. It is a book in which things are mirrored magically. Reading it, you have the feeling that what was seen was viewed with the frank, delighted eyes of the enthusiast who took no note at all of the petty and sordid and mean."

BAERLEIN, H: P. B.—Continued

C: J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p16 Ap 26 '25 600w

"Mr. Baerlein is a delightful gossip. And what he has to tell us he relates with considerable charm and gusto."

+ N Y World p9 J1 5 '25 320w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

"There are pleasing sidelights upon local habits and the mentality of the simple folk."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p491 J1 19 '23 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

BAILEY, CLYDE HAROLD. Chemistry of wheat flour. (Am. Chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 324p il $4 Chemical catalog co.

664:7 Flour. Wheat

25-19400

"Thorough digest of the literature on wheat in its relation to flour composition, growth and development of the wheat plant and kernel, influence of environment on the composition of wheat, defects and impurities in commercial wheat, storage and handling of wheat, chemistry of roller milling, changes in flour incidental to aging, the color of flour and flour bleaching, flour strength and enzyme phenomena, flour strength as determined by the proteins of flour and colloidal behaviour of dough. Complete bibliography. Author is Professor of Agricultural Biochemistry in the University of Minnesota."—N Y New Tech Bks

"This volume fills a long-felt need in our American chemical literature, and will be indispensable to all investigators desiring authoritative information on the chemistry of wheat flour. The author's suggestion as to the need for a monograph devoted to the biochemistry of baking is most timely. Such a publication would furnish a most excellent supplement to the present volume." F. C. Blanck

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:1097 O '25 520w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 J1 '25

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. Knight at arms. 309p $2 Dutton

25-13522

A blithe tale of 15th century chivalry. It tells how Sylvain de St Lo sets out alone on foot to win back the castle of his ancestors from Sir Arnaud to whom it has been wrongfully given. In three days, by his prowess with the sword and his nimbleness of tongue the debonair knight-errant wins a loyal servant, horse and armour, a band of doughty followers and the castle of St Lo. That is the first adventure. But here is not honour enough. Sylvain restores St Lo to Sir Arnaud and with the trusty Thibaut at his heels sets out across France in search of further danger and higher honour.

"The story is a brisk one. Its hero flashes through his conquests with a cheer and braggadocio. He surmounts all difficulties. He ought to have met death a dozen times but superhuman strength, skill and cunning always intervene to save him. His hairbreadth escapes reach more than a respectable average, and his valor is equal to that of any soldier of fortune or fiction." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 380w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"It is a story of much adventurous incident, and if one can shut one's eyes, forget facts, be undisturbed by the writer's many anachronisms and rather sketchy scholarship, one can be thrilled by the good old romantic thrill. Sir Walter Scott found the formula, and it is still potent—even in an age of flivvers."

+ Ind 115:163 Ag 8 '25 80w

"Mr. Bailey has rung no startling variations upon a well-worn theme. But he writes engagingly, with the requisite light touch, a keen story-sense, and humor aplenty." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 J1 25 '25 300w

"It is an agreeable book, and, for all its fantasy, its pictures of France after the death of Louis XI, and of Italy at the time of the French invasion are really well done."

+ Nation and Ath 35:600 Ag 9 '24 200w

"The actual history which forms the background of the stories is quite well done, and the historical figures introduced, and they are many, are satisfactorily recognisable."

+ New Statesman 23:714 S 27 '24 200w

"Such swashbuckling adventures never could have happened even in the palmiest days of chivalry. But they make pleasant reading."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 2 '25 700w

"The great deeds piled one upon another become methodical before Mr. Bailey is done, and his hero seems a mediæval Sir Frank Merriwell. And Thibaut the squire becomes tiresome in his humor in Sancho Panza's vein."

— Sat R of Lit 2:180 O 3 '25 130w

"On the whole, Mr. H. C. Bailey gives his readers more entertainment when he is writing detective stories than when he plunges into the fifteenth century. The adventures of Silvain de St. Lo are, however, most of them exciting, although they resemble each other rather too closely; but as it is necessary for the hero to be victorious in every encounter, it is difficult for the author to provide a variety of theme."

— + Spec 132:234 Ag 16 '24 70w

"Mr Bailey has a pleasantly individual humor, a light and skilful touch, and a sound if somewhat satirical appreciation of the human comedy."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 180w

"Mr. Bailey describes Silvain's adventures with a touch of the simple directness of the old chroniclers, and if a suspicious degree of good fortune attends his hero it must be remembered that without success there could not be thirty-four stories."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p598 S 25 '24 250w

BAKER, MARGARET. Little girl who curtsied; with pictures by Mary Baker. unp $2 Duffield 25-17909

There was once a little girl who never forgot to be polite, who said "Good morning," and curtsied politely even to all the little creatures she met in the forest, and who whenever she could, did them a kindness. This is her story. The illustrations are in black and white, and sometimes when you least expect it, white and black. They tell as much as the words do.

Booklist 22:121 D '25

Cleveland p104 N '25

"As nice a story for little children as can be, with the most attractive of silhouette illustrations." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p136 Ja '26 30w

"Mary and Margaret Baker are sisters whose two gifts work together for whimsy and drollery and delicate phantasy. Miss Mary draws silhouettes of animals and small people, while Miss Margaret tells a delightful story."

+ N Y World p7m O 18 '25 120w

BAKER, MARGARET. Pedlar's ware. il $1.50 Duffield

25-9973

Four fairy stories for younger children. They are illustrated with silhouettes by Mary Baker. Contents: The sad princess; The leprechaun; The ghost and the shadow; The princess and the beggar maid.

Booklist 21:386 J1 '25

"These old standby recipes are good even without any new flavors—that is, if they have been stirred together by capable hands." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p490 Je '25 100w

"Very attractive book."

+ N Y Times p6 J1 19 '25 350w

"Skillfully and delightfully illustrated in silhouette."

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 10w

Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 160w

BAKER, NEWTON DIEHL. Progress and the constitution. 94p $1.25 Scribner

342.73 United States—Constitution. United States—Politics and government 25-21287

In these three lectures delivered at the University of Virginia on the William H. White foundation Mr Baker treats the constitution as a living and growing thing responsive to changes in political and social conditions. He follows the constitution as it meets this progress in three fields—institutions, industry and foreign relations. The third lecture deals with the treaty-making power and, in particular, with the conflict between the Senate and President Wilson over the ratification of the Versailles treaty.

"Their chief interest is popular and the manner of the presentation is more striking than their matter."

Boston Transcript p5 N 7 '25 250w

"The little volume, which any one could read in two or three hours, is of timely consequence just now, when there is so much uneasy, crude and uninformed demand for changes in our fundamental law. Mr. Baker writes in such clear, simple and readable style and out of such extensive knowledge and ripe thought that the book is well worth the attention of any one who wants to clarify and enlarge his conception of what the Constitution meant to the men of four generations ago and what it means to us."

+ N Y Times p12 O 18 '25 500w

"No saner, more thoughtful or better grounded discussion of the present situation with regard to the federal constitution has appeared."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 N 5 '25 550w

BAKER, OLAF. Peter in process. 300p $2 Dodd 25-19830

This study of a normally mischievous boy in a staid Quaker household in West Ireland covers a very short period of Peter's childhood. He lives with his elderly grandparents, a forbidding aunt who is much disturbed by his pranks, and an old Irish serving maid who is his confidante and mentor. Tobias the cat is the unwilling partner in Peter's enterprises.

"The style is somewhat affected, and at times wordy, but on reflection we wonder after all, if the rigid and cheerless decorum of the Quaker home, which we can reasonably suppose that the author experienced, did not tend to produce his factitious or artificial diction."

+ Boston Transcript p4, D 26 '25 220w

"A charming book."

+ Cleveland p123 D '25

N Y Tribune p9 D 27 '25 150w

"Despite the merit of possessing a first-rate narrative prose this succession of episodes in the life of the ten-year-old Peter is deadly dull and without a vestige of interest for the average reader."

+ N Y World p7m D 13 '25 130w

BAKER, RAY STANNARD (DAVID GRAYSON, pseud.). Adventures in understanding. 273p $12.50 Doubleday

814

25-20632

When for a time David Grayson exchanged his quiet Hempfield for the city, he found a way of living a kind of country life there. There were unexpected beauties in the streets and little open spaces and possibilities of coming close to people whom he met in most ordinary ways. He tells here some of his quiet human adventures with various kinds of people—with the impractical old Dane, Jensen, with the iceman, the mill worker, the man on the park bench, the rich man who was afraid of life.

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"Although there is that in David Grayson's style which is a trifle spiritless and 'muddy', and that in his point of view which strikes us at times as somewhat homely and complacent, we readily excuse him in deference to the genuine, satisfying quality which all his writing possesses."

+ Bookm 62:618 Ja '26 220w

Cleveland p123 D '25

"It is the kind of book that gives back just as richly or as poorly as the reader deserves, returning to him in proportion with the mental and emotional equipment which he brings to its understanding. It is an even richer, more mellowed, ripper book than were its predecessors, because its author has lived longer and so has become ripper and richer of spirit. It will be all the more welcome to lovers of the previous volumes of 'Adventures' because, as in them, Thomas Fogarty has added to the charm of the pages with many chapter headings and full-page drawings." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p2 O 11 '25 1200w

"This volume is a worthy successor to the former 'adventures' of David Grayson. There is the ring of truth in the author's confession that he 'enjoyed writing every line of it.'"

+ N Y Tribune p7 N 1 '25 200w

"David meets so many interesting characters in his experiment with city life and enters so happily into the lives and work of these people that the book has much of the entertaining quality of a novel. The book is charmingly printed, and Mr. Fogarty's drawings precisely interpret the author's gentle sentiment." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:485 N 25 '25 100w

"His gospel is good, but sometimes he almost spoils the effect by needless reiteration. However, we do well to be thankful for David Grayson. One may say, what one can say of few authors, that the world would be a better place if there were millions of him." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:443 D 26 '25 750w

BAKER, SARA JOSEPHINE. Child hygiene. (Harper's public health ser.) 534p $5 Harper 614 Children—Care and hygiene. Infants—Care and hygiene 25-6075

Dr Baker is consulting director of the United States Children's bureau and consultant in child hygiene of the United States Public health service and the New York State Department of health. Her book is a comprehensive treatment of the child-hygiene movement and the conditions pertaining to the health of children from the beginning of the prenatal period to the end of adolescence.

"Dr. Baker has brought together a wealth of material; cast it into logical sequence; and given us a very readable description of the origins, evolution and practical development of the various phases of child hygiene in the United States." R: A. Bolt

+ Am J Pub Health 15:721 Ag '25 320w

Booklist 21:363 J1 '25

"As a textbook for students of the subject, it makes absorbing reading for the lay person interested in child welfare, for it is well written and never dull." E. v. B. Hansl

+ Bookm 61:593 J1 '25 150w

"She has admirably organized and presented in logical order and lucid form her wide and profound knowledge of the subject, upon which she is, doubtless, the leading authority, both national and international."

+ N Y Times p26 Mr 15 '25 400w

"It is a thoroughly comprehensive approach to the social aspects of this subject, yet is written with such simplicity and insight into the whole problem of child welfare that even the parent with no scientific training will find much of its material both helpful and interesting." L. B. Symes

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 360w

BAKER, SARA JOSEPHINE—Continued

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w
St Louis p342 S '25

"Every student of child health problems will enthusiastically welcome Dr. Baker's book Child Hygiene. We have needed just such a comprehensive discussion and no one is better equipped to give it than Dr. Baker who is responsible for so much progress in child hygiene, not only in her own city and state, New York, but throughout the entire country." W. P. Lucas, M.D.

+ Survey 55:98 O 15 '25 580w
Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

BAKER-CROTHERS, HAYES, and HUDNUT, RUTH ALLISON. Problems of citizenship. 514p $2.75 Holt

320 Political science. Social problems
24-31813

The book is the outgrowth of materials developed and revised over several years in the Dartmouth college introductory course to the social sciences. Contents: Introduction; The newspaper problem; The immigration problem; The negro problem; The woman problem; The industrial problem; Problem of civil liberty; Problem of international relations; Problem of war and peace.

Am Econ R 15:153 Mr '25 60w

Reviewed by Edgar Dawson

Am Hist R 30:629 Ap '25 460w

Reviewed by R. M. Story

Am Pol Sci R 19:403 My '25 750w

Booklist 22:101 D '25

"This course in and of itself is a good foundation for intelligent American citizenship. Here is what we need: a real chance to study, to think and form constructive opinions and convictions about these great subjects."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 230w

"Each of the subjects is discussed at some length in an interesting manner, which leaves the reader with a much keener appreciation of the problems that will affect our future progress."

+ Management and Adm 9:187 F '25 60w

"I doubt if so much information about the woman question has ever before been crowded into eighty readable pages, and the theoretical deficiencies of the text are amply compensated in the bibliography, which is a model of selection from the welter of books about that strangest and most profoundly disturbing of all animals." A. B. Parsons

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ap 5 '25 720w

"The volume is not without faults, but it will repay examination by all instructors giving introductory college courses in social science. It also contains much of value to supplement advanced courses in the social studies in secondary schools." H. C. Hill

+ School R 33:634 O '25 650w

BALDWIN, BIRD THOMAS, and STECHER, LORLE IDA. Psychology of the preschool child. 305p il $2.75; educational ed $2.25 (8s 6d) Appleton

136.7 Child study. Mental tests. Education of children
25-3985

The book gives the results of three years' observations and experiments on normal and superior children from two to six years of age in the preschool laboratories of the Iowa child welfare research station of the University of Iowa. Here young children are scientifically observed in their physical, mental and social growth and systematically trained. Methods and materials used are described in detail. Appendices give references, lists of children's stories, songs and phonograph records, and names of supply houses for materials and apparatus.

"The reader is referred to this instructive volume for the results of these experiments in the different fields, which should be of value to every parent, teacher and worker interested in child health." Taliaferro Clark

+ Am J Pub Health 15:814 S '25 350w

"Less valuable to the medical specialist but better suited to the needs of parents and teachers."

+ Booklist 22:5 O '25

Cleveland p91 S '25

Reviewed by W. McAndrew

Educ R 69:278 My '25 1050w

"The reader feels the need for more interpretation of the descriptive material which makes up the greater part of the book; nevertheless, the volume is a valuable contribution to the field of child study and will undoubtedly aid in standardizing the methods of studying preschool children." G. T. Buswell

+ El School J 25:471 F '25 750w

Reviewed by J. W. Jefferis

Lit R p4 Ag 15 '25 460w

Reviewed by Caroline Pratt

Nation 121:493 O 28 '25 260w

"Dr. Baldwin's physical measurements of children are widely known and the present volume contains new and important material on physical growth, the first collection available of consecutive physical measurements on any considerable number of such young children. Far less successful, so it seems to me, are the results of the psychological and mental tests." Agnes deLima

+ New Repub 43:157 Jl 1 '25 350w

"In 'The Psychology of the Pre-School Child' Drs. Baldwin and Stecher, of the Iowa Child Welfare Research Station, add a valuable study to the growing literature of what has been called 'the neglected age.' It supplements in specific detail the work of Dr. Gesell, of the Yale Psycho Clinic, and is primarily a text-book for the modern nursery school worker and other educators in charge of pre-school groups." L. B. Symes

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 220w

Sat R of Lit 1:693 Ap 18 '25 300w

School Life 10:100 Ja '25 120w

Reviewed by J. L. Hunt

Survey 54:363 Je 15 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p175 Mr 12 '25 40w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

Reviewed by M. C. Jones

World Tomorrow 8:316 O '25 450w

BALDWIN, CHARLES SEARS. Ancient rhetoric and poetic; interpreted from representative works. 261p $2.10 Macmillan

808 Rhetoric
24-19428

"Professor Baldwin's volume begins with an interesting analysis of the terms 'Rhetoric' and 'Poetic.' After this, he proceeds to give an account of ancient oratorical theory, as seen in Aristotle and Cicero. He then illustrates the teaching of rhetoric from Quintilian, Seneca, Tacitus, and Pliny, and the literary criticism of rhetoric from Dionysius and Longinus. Turning to Poetic, he selects Aristotle for theory, and for practice Greek tragedy, Senecan tragedy, Roman comedy, the Aeneid, Ovid's narrative poetry, and finally, rather strangely Apuleius. He ends with a sketch of 'Rhetoric in ancient criticism of poetic,' giving extracts from Dio Chrysostom and Plutarch." —Sat R of Lit

"As an advanced text-book in the study of classical literature the volume would be usable and stimulating. The book bears the marks of scholarly and effective research."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 9 '24 300w

"Concentrated pleasure as well as knowledge are to be found in this orderly and expertly compact book."

+ Dial 79:79 Jl '25 150w

"This book, in due time, will undoubtedly be studied in all the colleges. At any rate, it deserves to be so studied." D. H. Verder
+ Int Bk R p542 J1 '25 320w

Nation 119:501 N 5 '24 40w

"It is somewhat to be regretted that a writer of such wide learning and such originality of thought should have hampered himself by attempting an almost impossible task. . . In general, however, the course of ancient rhetoric and poetic is admirably portrayed. Altogether, a book that fills a gap, and one likely to be widely read and appreciated." J. D. Denniston
+ — Sat R of Lit 1:432 Ja 3 '25 700w

BALDWIN, FAITH. See Cuthrell, F.

BALDWIN, FRANCIS GEORGE C. History of the telephone in the United Kingdom; with a foreword by Frank Gill. 728p $15 Van Nostrand [42s Chapman & Hall]

654.6 Telephone [25-10749]

"Mr. Baldwin devotes the earlier part of his book—nearly half of the whole—mainly to the history of the early development of commercial telephony in this country—the introduction of the Bell instrument from America, the formation of numerous small companies for the establishment of exchanges, the gradual absorption and amalgamation of these into the National Telephone Company, and finally the transfer of the telephones to the State in 1912. In the remaining chapters he deals with such outstanding technical advances in the art of telephony as the multiple switchboard, the introduction of dry-core, paper-insulated cable, the common-battery system, and machine-switching systems commonly known as automatic telephones, in many cases bringing his narrative down to 1922."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Mr. Baldwin has given us a very readable and interesting history of the telephone in Great Britain. The book contains a large number of illustrations showing the development of various appliances, whilst much useful information in the form of tabular statistics is contained in the appendices. A good index completes a book which will certainly be highly appreciated by all telephone men and those who have to explore the history of any part of the subject." J. A. Fleming
+ Nature 116:383 S 12 '25 1650w

"The book contains an enormous mass of information, but while the ordinary reader may perhaps find some difficulty in discerning the wood for the trees, the specialized telephone engineer may not be satisfied with the details given of what is probably the most complicated system of mechanical engineering yet evolved by the mind of man."
+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p227 Mr 26 '25 180w

BALDWIN, OLIVER. Six prisons and two revolutions; adventures in Trans-Caucasia and Anatolia, 1920-1921. 271p il $3 Doubleday [12s 6d Hodder & S.]

915.6 Armenia

Mr Baldwin, who is the son of the English prime minister, went to Armenia in 1920 as infantry instructor to the army. Between communist Russia on one side and nationalist Turkey on the other the new republic of Armenia could offer little resistance. The author was imprisoned first by the Russians and was freed in time to take part in the counter-revolution. Escaping from Erivan he fell into the hands of the Turks and was again imprisoned. He endured almost incredible hardships and perils before his final release at Trebizond.

"Should his book be read by those who still imagine Socialism and Communism are synonymous terms, it should help to shake the scales from their eyes; for the author, while transparently sincere in his Labour sympathies, can find no words strong enough to express his hatred and horror of the post-war régime in Russia, which he has seen as 'an ordinary mortal' and not as 'a Government tourist.' His whole story makes thrilling, though very depressing reading; and it is not surprising that one who has suffered so much should view the future with apprehension, and that he should foresee, as a result of the late Lord Curzon's 'diplomatic failures,' a 'greater conflagration than has ever been known.' Mr. Baldwin writes very heatedly at times. But many of his comments and warnings deserve serious attention."

+ Nation and Ath 37:770 S 26 '25 460w

New Statesman 26:364 Ja 2 '26 550w

"Oliver Baldwin has written a book that might very well make the British Government, especially its Foreign Office, wish it were possible for his father to chastise him and withdraw it from circulation. It is a thrilling, poignant, amazing book, worth reading in the first place because of the stark interest of his adventures, with their daily suspense and peril, and in the second for the intimate, first-hand light it throws on the interests, emotions, purposes, characteristics, convictions, determinations that have long been boiling in a witch's brew in the Near East. As a book of adventure or as a book of affairs it is too much clogged with inconsequent detail, but most of this detail is necessary to give in all its colors the deeply appealing picture of humanity in travail that fills so large a proportion of its pages."
+ — N Y Times p10 N 15 '25 550w

Sat R of Lit 2:345 N 28 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p648 O 8 '25 300w

BALDWIN, STANLEY. Peace and goodwill in industry; three speeches, March, 1925. 79p 75c Dial press [1s 6d Allen & U.]
331.1 Labor and capital [25-21293]

"These are the three speeches which raised Stanley Baldwin to a new stature in the minds of his countrymen and created almost as much comment abroad as they did in England. They transformed him from a respected but commonplace figure from whom no vital contribution to the post-war problems of Great Britain was expected to an acknowledged leader who had found the words to say what his compatriots most wanted to hear."—N Y Times

"These speeches are not marked by eloquence, save of the simplest sort, unadorned by rhetorical device. What they have is a fine lucidity and a sincerity and earnestness which stamp their every sentence."
+ N Y Times p2 Je 21 '25 450w

"On three occasions during March Premier Baldwin gave utterance to thoughts which, by their sanity, their vision and their sincerity, impressed every clear-thinking man who read them. Such a succession of events should not, perhaps, be momentous, but it is rare enough in the flounderings of contemporary statesmanship (as it is called) to justify their appearance in book form."
+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 21 '25 180w

Spec 134:777 My 9 '25 30w

BALLANTINE, WILLIAM GAY. Understanding the Bible. 203p $1.50 Johnson's bookstore, Springfield, Mass.

220 Bible. Whole—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 25-20033

The translator of the Riverside New Testament here tackles some of the present-day perplexities which assail the student of the Scriptures. He discusses the problems that face the modern translator, quoting from several recent versions of the New Testament, the difficulties in the way of a literal interpretation of the Bible, and the theology of St Paul, and closes with suggestions for a unique system of religious education, which if carried out would minimize these problems for a new generation.

BALLANTINE, WILLIAM GAY—Continued

"The fine moderation and sympathy of the author's mood cannot but persuade persons accustomed to a rigid way of interpreting the scriptures that the scientific method is at least deserving of consideration and respect. While the work is addressed primarily to college students, one may perhaps conclude that persons who have passed beyond the college age and have lost their youthful flexibility of thinking will benefit most by reading it."

+ Springfd Republican p7a S 27 '25 1200w

BALLARD, COLIN ROBERT. Napoleon; an outline. 325p $5 (18s) Appleton

B or 92 Napoleon I, emperor of the French 25-5636

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"To make racy, thrilling reading of battle accounts and yet be accurate is a job that few men could have succeeded in as General Ballard has. The whole story of Napoleon is here. Enough personalities to thrill the sensation-alist. Enough facts to satisfy the historian. Enough pleasure to satisfy anyone. The main emphasis is on Napoleon as the soldier. But his career as husband, politician, statesman and actor are carried along with the same enthusiasm that makes the military passages so informing." D. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 10 '25 450w

"Valuable contribution to Bonaparte literature. General Ballard's viewpoint is quite new." C: W. Thompson

+ Lit R p6 Ja 10 '25 150w

"It is a military history written by a military man who sticks closely to his last. Each of the dozen main campaigns of Napoleon is accompanied by one or more sketch maps, especially prepared for the volume, and illustrating most successfully the tactics of the battles. Even the expert student of the Napoleonic wars will find these clever sketches a welcome aide-memoire." D: S. Muzzey

+ Nation 120:359 Ap 1 '25 850w

"This concise account of Napoleon as a great soldier, written by the Professor of Military History at the Staff College before the war, is not only an expert appreciation of the Emperor's campaigns, but also a narrative of their history and strategy which can easily be understood by the general reader."

+ New Statesman 24:546 F 14 '25 200w

R of Rs 71:109 Ja '25 50w

Reviewed by W. R. Wheeler

Sat R of Lit 2:240 O 24 '25 460w

Reviewed by R: Aldington

Spec 134:sup456 Mr 21 '25 1000w

"Gen Ballard's particular contribution lies in his fresh study of Napoleon's campaigns. Instead of discussing strategy, a thing sufficient unto itself, as might be expected from a professional hand, he keeps always in view the factor of state policy—the ultimate end toward which strategy is only the means."

+ Springfd Republican p10 Ja 30 '25 400w

BALMER, EDWIN. That Royle girl. 358p $2 Dodd

25-15387

Joan does not love the man she is fighting to save, but she has a dream for him—a dream that his music may make him great. Ket is not worthy of the dream. But he is innocent and Joan knows it. Straight, slim and proud, with lovely head thrown back, she defies the state's attorney to prove Ket guilty of the murder of his wife. And Calvin Clarke, state's attorney for the people of Illinois, son of a long line of Massachusetts forbears, is forced to admit that here in this untutored girl of the West is an opponent worthy of his skill. The trial becomes a clash of wills between these two. But it is more than that; it is traditional old New England with its culture and its pride brought face to face with the groping, growing vivid young West. Fresh evidence proves the Royle girl right and the state's attorney wrong. Thrown together by an exciting turn in events, forced to fight for instead of against one another, the West capitulates to the East, and the East learns reverence for the West.

"While the story belongs in the 'thriller' class its action is so natural that no one may feel his intelligence offended."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '25 300w

"That Royle Girl' will allow of no dabbling into chapters, but insist on being read at one sitting. It is a one-night book. Once you've started it, it cannot be laid aside to finish tomorrow." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p4 Ag 29 '25 220w

"There are some bits that are excellently done, but as a whole the persons of the tale are blurred in the focus. The total impression is that of a fairly promising attempt at story-telling which has been robbed of all the significance of which it might have been capable by the exigencies of artificial and self-conscious plot complications."

— + N Y Times p22 Ja 3 '26 600w

"He has woven a yarn around Chicago's underworld that not only is unusual but so well done that it easily ranks among the best mystery stories so far this year. Purely a 'one sitting' book because it grips with a hold that is impossible to shake off."

+ N Y World p4m S 13 '25 80w

"For the murder mystery of this Chicago story and its love outcome one does not greatly care. But it has striking pictures of criminal gang life, brutal lawlessness, criminal court trials, and lawyers' court tactics."

— + Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 40w

BANCROFT, SIR SQUIRE BANCROFT. Empty chairs. 253p $3.50 Stokes [10s 6d Murray]

B or 92 Actors and actresses [25-9977]

"Sir Squire Bancroft and his wife, Marie Wilton, were for many years honored and successful factors in the theatrical life of London, both on the stage and as managers of several theatres." (N Y Times) "In this book Sir Squire pays tributes (friendly but not fulsome) to old friends and colleagues whose chairs are empty now, and in the course of the amiable gossip a good deal may be learned about the loftier side of the Victorian stage." (Sat R)

"For the most part he is content, in a mood of genial fellowship, to follow in very well beaten tracks. It is when he ventures a little aside from them, although he is always a pleasant gossip, that he is most interesting." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p1 O 3 '25 1350w

"Those writers of reminiscences who fear that if they avoid scandal-mongering their books will be tedious, may well take a lesson from Sir Squire Bancroft; he has not a bad word to say of anyone, but is dignified and well-mannered and not dull."

+ New Statesman 25:24 Ap 18 '25 320w

"Mostly they are of genial character, with touches of wit or humor now and then, making altogether a bright, entertaining picture of a social world peopled by men and women of achievement, of polished manners, of happy diversions."

+ N Y Times p18 O 4 '25 260w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p13 N 1 '25 120w

"If people are to be encouraged to write more than one book of reminiscences, Sir Squire Bancroft is an excellent candidate for that privileged class. His writing is concise and yet courtly; his enthusiasms are generous but discriminating."

+ Sat R 139:392 Ap 11 '25 200w

+ Spec 134:635 Ap 18 '25 820w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p217 Mr 26 '25 950w

BANERJEA, SIR SURENDRANATH. Nation in making; being the reminiscences of fifty years of public life. 435p $6.50 Oxford [16s Milford]

B or 92 India—Politics and government

"Two interesting questions are raised by these reminiscences, which were completed by the most famous of Indian orators a few months before his death. The first is concerned with the character of that national service which was accomplished by the great company of agitators who in India were the counterpart of the Victorian Radicals. The second has to do with the function of oratory in the contemporary world of affairs. Surendranath Banerjee, reviewing his long life with unflagging gusto and self-confidence, provides us with plenty of material for judgment on both counts."—Nation and Ath

Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 750w

J Religion 5:665 N '25 50w

Nation and Ath 37:738 S 19 '25 560w

"A Nation in the Making is one of the very few books, and it is the only personal record, coming out of the Indian reform movement, that can be read by the English reader with continuous pleasure."

+ New Statesman 26:154 N 14 '25 250w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 D 6 '25 2300w

"A book of considerable value, written in a lucid style with a charm of expression that distinguishes the author as a master of the English tongue. There is nothing crude about his phrases, and even when he unchains his contempt for certain people he at least tries to be fair, although he does not always succeed." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Tribune p16 S 27 '25 900w

Spec 135:837 N 7 '25 250w

"This is in many respects a unique contribution to the political history of modern India. No Indian politician has played so long and so active a part in it as did the great Bengalee leader, Sir Surendranath Banerjee. And none has ever given us such a full record of his career or such a reasoned statement of the Indian case from the Nationalist standpoint."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p575 S 10 '25 2950w

BANKS, ELIZABETH L. School for John and Mary. 314p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

25-15949

"This book purports to be an account of the experiences of an English family on their return to London after spending several years in Canada. While in Canada their two children, John and Mary, had gone to 'State schools' of the most ideal type and the parents believed they would find others like them when they returned to England. All their relatives opposed the sending of John and Mary to the County Council school known as the Arlington, but there they went. According to the author, the most intelligent and virtuous children are those whose parents rank lowest in the social scale; to send a boy to one of the great English public schools, where the children of the professional classes go, is to subject him to the most horrible influences. Finally, it is decided that John and Mary cannot be properly educated in England and they all go back to Canada."—N Y Times

"As enlightenment on the conditions of the present day English school system, the book offers first-hand information in great variety." C. H.

Boston Transcript p5 J1 1 '25 600w

"Elizabeth Banks's arraignment of England's abominable caste system in education—presented unfortunately in story form—ought to prove needed ammunition to the Labor Party, especially as she has wisely given due credit to the enlightened work of teachers in the county council schools." Agnes deLima

New Repub 43:159 J1 1 '25 70w

N Y Times p8 My 3 '25 250w

"In narrative form, and written in the copy-book manner of an ingenuous and sentimental child, the book loses the force of a dispassionate study of the failings found in the English school system, while the unreality of the chief characters frustrates the evident intention of vividness and direct appeal. We can see little interest here for American readers in general and even less value to educators in particular."

— Sat R of Lit 1:779 My 23 '25 230w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 40w

BANKS, HELEN WARD. Story of Holland; including The boys' Motley. 311p il $5 Stokes

949.2 Netherlands—History 25-17261

In the "Story of Holland" Miss Banks has included her version of Motley's "Rise of the Dutch republic," for boys and girls, and brought her history down to the days of Queen Wilhelmina.

Booklist 22:170 Ja '26

"It is the work of some one who has studied her subject thoroughly and then talks it over with you vehemently, vigorously, convincingly." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p746 O '25 160w

"Sumptuous in format, yet simple and readable in text. It should prove an excellent stepping stone to Motley for boys and girls with a liking for history and personages out of the past."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:281 N 7 '25 80w

BANNING, GEORGE HUGH. In Mexican waters. 208p il $4.50 Lauriat [18s Hopkinson]

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel. Voyages and travels [25-19580]

"Mr. Banning is as romantic about small islands as an English boy. In day-dreams he is a second Robinson Crusoe; in reality he has satisfied his hunger for adventure to the extent of cruising on the Pacific coast in a motor yacht. This book is an account of the Cruise. He always had his eyes open for strange creatures and tells us of the deep-sea fishes and of the birds that he saw."—New Statesman

"Mr. Banning has the faculty of telling his story in a thoroughly entertaining manner." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 1 '25 950w

"The humour runs occasionally to facetiousness, but it is an entertaining book and it has some excellent photographs."

+ — New Statesman 25:54 Ap 25 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p248 Ap 9 '25 580w

BARBEAU, CHARLES MARIUS, and SAPIR, EDWARD, eds. Folk songs of French Canada. 216p $4 Yale univ. press [18s 6d Milford]

784.4 Folk songs, French. Folk songs, Canadian 25-8559

With each of the forty-one folk songs in this collection are given the French text, English translation, musical transcription and introductory explanation. The songs are oral survivals among the settlers of the lower St Lawrence valley.

"No one could have been better qualified than Mr. Barbeau. Of the contribution to history made by this volume, one may say, without exaggeration, that it is excellent." E. Z. Massicotte

+ Canadian Hist R 6:252 S '25 280w

"Messrs. Barbeau and Sapir are to be cordially thanked and congratulated because of the book. It is vitally important to the interested,

BARBEAU, C. M., and Sapir, E.; eds.—Cont. of immense interest to the layman. It is a valuable addition to the knowledge already gained." C: J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p10 J1 19 '25 760w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

St Louis p348 S '25

"We prefer the work of M. Marius Barbeau, who has prepared the French texts and copied out the music in a hand which is attractive, though not always easy to read, and has added several metronome marks to that of Mr. Edward Sapir, whose English translations, hardly translate, do not fit the music, and are in a different world from that of folksong. The tunes themselves, mostly Dorian six-eights, have a very distinct flavor, and one can think of several singers to whom they will be a boon."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p347 My 21 '25 300w

BARBEY D'AUREVILLE, JULES AMEDEV. The diaboliques; tr. from the French, with an introd., by Ernest Boyd and an essay by Sir Edmund Gosse. (Blue jade lib.) 275p $3 Knopf

25-9160

"The trait common to all his stories, and the characteristic mark of Barbey d'Aureville's peculiar talent, is their Satanic mysticism, their preoccupation with what is diabolical, in the literal and original sense of that word. The title, Les diaboliques, describes not only the six women of this book, but the central figures in all the others, for all Barbey's characters are possessed by the devil." (Introd.) Contents: Jules Barbey D'Aureville, by Sir Edmund Gosse; The crimson curtain; The greatest love of Don Juan; Happiness in crime; Beneath the cards of a game of whist; At a dinner of atheists; A woman's revenge.

"A gorgeously entertaining book."

+ Dial 79:173 Ag '25 80w

Reviewed by D. F. McCord

Int Bk R p814 N '25 500w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

Lit R p14 Ap 4 '25 170w

"A rich talent, somehow deflected, self-hypnotized, lost in alluring but barren imaginings." J: Eversharp

+ New Repub 43:351 Ag 19 '25 460w

"His skill for portraiture has caused him to be compared with Saint-Simon. But it is portraiture of the elaborate and overloaded sort, quite in place where the facts of a life are history, but an incongruity in stories whose structure is slight and whose dénouements are arbitrary. Perhaps there is no surer sign that the equipment of a true novelist is lacking than this inability to deliver characters from the quandaries to which an unbridled imagination has committed them."

N Y Times p16 Mr 29 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley

Sat R of Lit 2:295 N 14 '25 350w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY (RICHARD STILLMAN POWELL, pseud.). Bases full! 277p $1.75 Appleton

25-5964

This story of the Wyndham baseball team centers around three boys, Clif and Tom and Loring, who form a pact of friendship and stick to it thru the vicissitudes of school life. There is a bit of a mystery about one of the three which adds interest to the story and clears up in a happy ending.

Boston Transcript p3 My 23 '25 100w

"Mr. Barbour begins his story as tho he felt it was a chore that must be done before he could be allowed out to play. But half-way through the book he evidently found some interest in his chore and began writing with more of his old talent. The people become more real, the mystery interesting, and the outcome more curiously awaited. But it is not one of Mr. Barbour's best." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p686 S '25 70w

"Mr Barbour keeps going strongly, and his story will strengthen his popularity."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 200w

BARBUSSE, HENRI. Chains; tr. from the French by Stephen Haden Guest. 2v 287;302p $4 International pub.

25-20710

"'Chains' is quite simply an apocalyptic vision of man's inhumanity to man from the dawn of civilization to the very real and remembered horrors of the great war. . . . Clément Trachel is a young Frenchman of twenty, a poet and artist of the newest school, in whom the racial atoms that compose personal consciousness awake to separate life and reconstitute, one by one, a number of ancestral experiences, invariably tragic. . . . All these experiences are described with a vividness that is very impressive."—N Y Times

"Story and plot in the accepted sense are missing, and if one reads these epic pages with appreciative understanding one should not regret their absence. . . . 'Chains', though fully within the comprehension of the average person, is immensely heavy, devoid of love interest, humor, action, adventure. It is, in fact, one of the most intensely serious and earnest works we have ever read." E. C. Beckwith

Lit R p5 Ja 2 '26 500w

"A confused salad of philosophy, yearning, dreaming, historical fantasy and exclamation." Moses Harpur

+ New Repub 45:119 D 16 '25 250w

Reviewed by H: L. Stuart

N Y Times p2 N 1 '25 1750w

"However inadequate as a novel and unscientific as sociology, 'Chains' is one of the most unique creations of the chaotic post-bellum years of our century. 'Chains' bafflingly evades all of the flexible nomenclature of literary classification. Despite its prose form, it is a poetical interpretation of the historical struggles of humanity. Suffering from what seems almost an infinitude of redundancies, the book, nevertheless, achieves in places a symphonic resonance of style and a vigorous analysis of social substance. Incoherent and bewildering in structure, it attains a unity of sentiment if not of situation." V. F. Calverton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:432 D 19 '25 550w

"Many ambitious authors have dreamed of writing a vast epic of universal history and the idea of ancestral memory which M Barbusse employs, has not infrequently been used in stories of this sort. But no one else has developed this catastrophic view of the world's history with the bitterness and weary pessimism which is written into 'Chains.' To anyone who reads it, 'Chains' is transformed from mere paper and print to something alive and suffering, the haunting outcry of the human soul for knowledge which it can never gain."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 680w

BARING, MAURICE. Diminutive dramas. 200p $2 Doubleday [5s Heinemann]

822

"These little plays are exceedingly brief (the longest can be read in less than ten minutes). All with but a single exception deal with the characters of history, legend and romance. In one play, we see Catherine Parr holding a heated argument with Henry VIII over an underdone egg. In a second and not dissimilar little drama, we observe Xantippe assailing Socrates much after the manner of the famous Mrs. Caudle in one of her verbose curtain lectures. He introduces us to one of the original rehearsals of 'Macbeth,' and reveals the stage manager in the act of directing 'Mr. Shakespeare' to rewrite one of the scenes; he treats us to a discussion between Julius Caesar and his wife when they are planning a dinner party for the notables of Rome; he retells the story of Jason and Medea in a way which leaves little that is heroic although much that is ridiculous. Aeneas and Dido, Ariadne and Theseus, Iphigenia and Agamemnon, King Alfred and the Neat-Herd are a few of the other characters that fall victim to Mr. Baring's satiric pen."—N Y Times

"Almost any three or four of them, picked at random, would provide an excellent evening's entertainment in the theatre, but as the charm of them is mainly, though by no means exclusively, intellectual, there is not much chance, under existing conditions of seeing them upon the professional stage. To the discriminating reader, however, they offer a great variety of diversion. A few of them, though clever, are a trifle strained and obvious." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p4 Mr 7 '25 520w

"They are diminutive in spirit even more than in physical size, for they consciously endeavor to measure with a foot rule that is too short; they consciously endeavor to make dwarfs out of giants, to link the sublime with the ridiculous, to convert the exalted, into the contemptible."

N Y Times p10 Ap 5 '25 820w

"Not all the twenty-two tiny plays, or dialogues, are masterpieces, to be sure, but most of them will tease your memory to recall the necessary classic background, and 'The Member for Literature' is rather a gem." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 220w

"They are so neat as to set me asking why Mr. Baring has never gone on to take the theatre as seriously in creation as he does in criticism."

+ Sat R 139:682 Je 20 '25 180w

BARING, MAURICE. Half a minute's silence, and other stories. 204p $2 Doubleday [8s 6d Heinemann]

The stories in Mr Baring's first group of tales are Russian. He tells us that it is the custom in Russia for people when they are starting on a journey and leaving a house, to sit down and spend half a minute in silence. The title story takes nineteen people who had made up a house party in a Russian country home and tells what each was thinking about in that half-minute before departure. The stories in the second and longer group are often humorous or farcical.

"In 'Half a Minute's Silence' he has little to say, but the quality of what he says is delightful. The short sketches of Russian life are easily the best; the farcical skits which take up a third of the book are not robust enough to make one laugh, nor fanciful enough to hold one's interest. Mr. Baring's fantasy is curiously banal for such an intelligent writer." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 36:816 Mr 14 '25 120w

"It is permissible, though perhaps not polite, to ask whether these fugitive gossamer trifles, twenty-five stories and sketches, were worth preserving. The answer will depend on whether you like the personality that Mr. Maurice Baring's lightest word exhales. It is this communication of a personality that makes him a writer; he belongs to that small, peculiar class about whose work there is really nothing to be said, except that it conveys a sense of themselves. Mr. Baring's speciality is that he does this without ever giving himself away; his irony is too well-bred, his culture too finished, for that." J. Franklin

+ — New Statesman 24:720 Mr 28 '25 180w

"The book is a graceful achievement in quiet, gentlemanly narration."

+ N Y Times p22 N 1 '25 620w

"None of them is more than an elaborated anecdote, and none of them can lay claim to intensity, either of thought or emotion."

— N Y Tribune p15 N 15 '25 150w

"Not all of the short stories collected in his new volume are themselves new; but it is sheer delight to read again those which one has read before. The wit, the reserve, the austerity of charm, are almost unfailing. Mr. Baring has a technique which seems to consist of having no technique—until you observe that nobody else can get the same effect by the same apparent artlessness. The first story, which gives its name to the collection is characteristic." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:247 Mr 7 '25 280w

"They are inconsequential little tales, scarcely more than genre pieces, which are pleasant and sometimes amusing (especially the imaginative ones) without ever achieving any high degree of distinction."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:467 Ja 2 '26 150w

"The stories in themselves are not unworthy of preserving in a more definite form; but there is something a little wraith-like not only in their matter but in their suggestion of being translations from Turgenev. The two that wear best are those least dependent upon Russian atmosphere—namely, the two reminiscences of the Russo-Japanese War."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p136 F 26 '25 500w

BARING, MAURICE. A triangle; passages from three notebooks. 193p $2 Doubleday [6s Heinemann]

[24-3001]

"There are at least two triangles in Mr. Maurice Baring's story: the triangle of viewpoints from which the narrative is unfolded, and the more obvious triangle formed by the relationships with which the narrative deals. A lawyer, a doctor, and a priest kept records of the incident as it affected them. They all wrote simply and sincerely, as though on oath. All three accounts are so circumstantial, so ready with fact and so sparing of opinion, that, necessarily, many furrows are ploughed two and even three times. . . . The separate narratives, with their deliberate reticence, reveal neither their authors' nor their subject's characters. The solution to the puzzle, which should, one imagines, have been deducible by a collation of the narratives in the fashion of the comparative historian, depends for its confirmation on an accident—the delirious confession of a dying maidservant."—Nation and Ath

"Only a talented writer could have coördinated the three versions as cleverly as Maurice Baring has done."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 20 '25 300w
Cleveland p123 D '25

"It is a slight little piece, and yet within that compass the same story is told three separate times—an interesting essay, in some ways, but I found the three recountals too much alike." J. D. Beresford

+ — Nation and Ath 34:sup403 D 8 '23 50w

"It is a pity that Mr. Baring did not find a theme weighty enough for his style, which has always the air and authority of a last will and testament." L. P. Hartley

— Nation and Ath 34:382 D 8 '23 250w

"The reader who relishes a quiet hour of literary craftsmanship without saxophone accompaniment will find enjoyment in Mr. Baring's book."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 29 '25 450w

"There is no pretense at characterization. The people are wooden types. And the narrative is a bare recital of facts. It is an interesting idea, and there is no abstract reason why it should not succeed. But it happens not to do so."

— N Y Tribune p13 Mr 15 '25 380w

"Mr. Baring writes competently, with just the right touch of bald, unimpressed narration. But it is one of those inflated hints of improbability about which Mr. Henry James would have woven his deprecating and insinuating elaborations."

— + N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 130w

BARING, MAURICE—Continued

"It is difficult to interpret this book otherwise than as a protest; the protest of a loyal Catholic against an intolerable conflict engendered by an article of the Faith."

Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 200w

Reviewed by Bertram Higgins

Spec 131:999 D 22 '23 450w

BARING-GOULD, SABINE. Early reminiscences, 1834-1864. 350p il $6 Dutton [16s Lane]

B or 92

[23-11865]

Looking back from his eighty-ninth year, Sabine Baring-Gould calls up these memories of the first thirty years of his life. They relate chiefly to the old family home in Devonshire and its life, frequent journeys to the Continent and the making of his religious opinions. The reminiscences are fragmentary, but so full and varied and anecdotal, that there is something in them for various tastes.

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 28 '25 1600w

"The most delightful portions of the book are the letters of his mother to her sisters, written while she was being dragged about Europe against her will. She was the most charming member of the party, and now, in his old age, her son seems to have taken after her, to have a touch of her simplicity, her kindness, and her sense of humour; and through his book one comes into curiously intimate contact with a very lovable personality."

+ New Statesman 21:654 S 15 '23 500w

Reviewed by Mary Kolers

N Y Tribune p14 N 1 '25 550w

"Never did anyone write more true to type than Parson Baring-Gould. It is clear that he was completely indifferent as to what any of us might think of him. He just blurted out what came into his head, and if offense was taken, so much the worse. His insular arrogance is often extraordinary, but so is a certain sterling honesty that is an essential part of his nature. His prejudices were fixed."

Llewelyn Powys

No Am 221:733 Je '25 1550w

Outlook 140:224 Je 10 '25 40w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p413 Je 21 '23 1000w

BARING-GOULD, SABINE. Further reminiscences, 1864-1894. 291p il $6 Dutton [16s Lane]

B or 92

[25-10083]

A continuation of his "Early reminiscences" which covered the first thirty years of his life, these memories take us over thirty years more of Sabine Baring-Gould's long and eventful life. The volume opens with his ordination to the ministry and is chiefly concerned with his travels on the continent, Devonshire life and lore and his experiences in collecting the folk-songs and melodies of Devon and Cornwall.

"Delightful, in an easy, flowing style." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:1xxviii D '25 220w

"Lovers of the quaint and curious will find much to enliven them in Dr. Baring-Gould's posthumous reminiscences." E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 25 '25 1300w

Nation and Ath 37:82 Ap 18 '25 220w

"It is a pity that Mr. Baring-Gould did not begin to write these reminiscences until he was so old that he had rather lost his sense of what appeals to the average man. He has a most uncommon fault in autobiographers—modesty. Looking back at his long life of work he saw his activities, his interests, his adventures, his aspirations, with something of that careless negligence which age borrows from eternity.

Only when he remembers something amusing does he recollect that for most of us the excitement of history rests in the telling of things which are trivial indeed, but have an importance as illustrations of man's attitude to life."

+ New Statesman 24:661 Mr 14 '25 1250w

Reviewed by Mary Kolers

N Y Tribune p14 N 1 '25 550w

"Open the book anywhere, and you will find something odd and entertaining."

+ Outlook 141:291 O 21 '25 160w

Reviewed by A. M. Low

Sat R of Lit 2:119 S 12 '25 460w

"Some of this matter is rather trivial, though the author went everywhere with a shrewd eye for a picturesque scene, a quaint folk-custom, or an unusual piece of ecclesiology. If not all Mr. Baring-Gould's anecdotes are instructive, there are few that one is tempted to skip out of boredom."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Mr 5 '25 480w

BARKER, LEWELLYS FRANKLIN, and SPRUNT, THOMAS PECK. Degenerative diseases. (Harper's public health ser.) 254p $4 Harper

616 Pathology. Degeneration (pathology)

25-5554

The degenerative diseases here treated are disorders of the heart, bloodvessels, kidneys, liver and other vital organs. The authors point out the causes of these conditions which induce premature death and indicate preventive measures.

"The balance of the book deals with a wide range of subject matter and is both well written and easy reading. On the whole, the book is well worth the time any interested person may care to devote to it." A. G. B.

+ Am J Pub Health 15:1002 N '25 100w

Booklist 21:291 My '25

"The authors disclaim any attempt to make their presentation comprehensive and have tried to prevent their treatment from being too technical for the average intelligent reader. The work is made universally interesting and useful by its constant application to the daily regimen."

N Y Times p33 Mr 1 '25 430w

N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 100w

"The layman who is interested in these chronic diseases either by reason of apprehension about his own health, or for any other cause, will find the leading facts succinctly presented. There is no sensationalism and no attempt at a fluent, journalistic style, such as disfigures so many of the popular health articles syndicated in the press, but a clear, dignified presentation."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:900 Jl 11 '25 250w

"An excellent book, free from needless technicalities and well worthy of the perusal of physicians as well as laymen, and soundly adapted to the audience for which it is intended." E. L. Fisk, M.D.

+ Survey 55:98 O 15 '25 800w

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

BARNARD, HARRY. Chats on Wedgwood ware. 260p il $4 Stokes [9s Unwin]

738 Pottery. Wedgwood ware

[25-26164]

The author of this book is himself a practical potter, and has been connected with the Wedgwood works at Etruria for over twenty-five years. He has had free access to the mass of manuscript records in the possession of the firm, and has thus brought to light many new facts bearing on the life and work of the greatest of English potters."—Sat R

Booklist 21:264 Ap '25

"The Wedgwood volume, as its name would indicate, is conversational in tone, and, while supplying all the necessary data, conveys the flavor of romance. The story of the first Josiah's difficulties in the manufacture of his ware, and of his persistent search for perfection in his work, is told by quotations from his letters. . . The whole makes a most readable volume and one which is admirably calculated to arouse an interest in the master potter as well as in his work." A. M. Hill

N Y Tribune p8 F 15 '25 800w

"A large number of illustrations, well selected and admirably produced, help to make this an invaluable handbook for the student and the collector."

Sat R 138:610 D 13 '24 110w

"Will appeal not merely to the special collector but to anyone sensitive to the romance in the creation of an outstanding artistic and commercial enterprise in the early years of industrial expansion."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:92 Ag 29 '25 150w

"It is a pleasant surprise to find so much fresh matter in a book bearing his disarmingly modest title. Although Mr. Barnard would be the last to claim for this work of his that it is the definitive study of its subject that we hope will one day be written, it is at least a stepping-stone on the way and an indispensable adjunct to any serious ceramic library."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p187 Mr 19 '25 560w

BARNES, HARRY ELMER. New history and social studies. 605p il $4 Century

907 History. Social sciences. History—Historiography 25-10476

Professor Barnes calls his book "a preliminary attempt to set forth the interrelations of history and the social sciences, and the mutual contributions which each has made or may make to the other." He first sketches the general nature of the newer and more dynamic history and then shows the successive contributions of the various social sciences to the methods and subject matter of history, concluding with a summary of the bearing of the new history and the social studies upon the problems of social reform and reconstruction.

"The general thesis of the book will be widely accepted. But it is not an easy task to describe the relation of these new historical tendencies to the older work, nor to define the precise contribution which each science can make to history. In both of these details the present work leaves much to be desired." A. P. Usher

— + Am Econ R 15:736 D '25 750w

Reviewed by F: J. Teggart

Am Hist R 31:297 Ja '26 1250w

"Everyone who is studying human experience, whether as a mere learner or with the purpose of becoming a teacher or an investigator, should hold this book up to himself as a mirror, to reveal whether his mental life is of the mid-nineteenth century or of the twentieth." A. W. Small

+ Am J Soc 31:89 Jl '25 620w

"All in all this pretentious volume constitutes a generous and valuable survey of the recent literature of all the social sciences, without often becoming a mere string of book reviews. It suffers somewhat in scholarship from being a collection of revised papers and lectures. Emphasis does not demand all its repetition, and accuracy might be improved by less rhetoric than goes well in oral presentation." T. V. Smith

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:826 N '25 600w

Booklist 22:66 N '25

"An excellent service is done by this book, and done with the aid of rich resources of material as well as of a remarkably skilful presentation of them, in stressing the fact that departments of knowledge cannot be usefully isolated from each other or studied according to the 'water-tight compartment' method so common to what is known as specialism." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '25 1000w

"There are very copious references to modern literature in various sections of the book, and the reader will find much information as to the discussions now going on in the social sciences. But, if one may judge from the chapter on ethics, he will need to be cautious in assuming that he is getting an objective picture of existing conditions." I. H. T.

+ — Int J Ethics 36:108 O '25 300w

"Whoever is frankly interested in the historical problem owes Dr. Barnes a debt of gratitude for further clearing the air. He has produced a work that will prove quite indispensable as a guide to historical thought. His copious bibliographical notes are themselves the basis for a more extended study that must be made. If he has been betrayed intellectually by a good deal of sociological hocus-pocus and by 'ologies' in general after all he had to work with the material at hand." F. S. Barr

+ — Lit R p3 Ag 15 '25 560w

"Another book of immense and many-branched learning. It would be difficult to find a more exhaustive reference book than this volume." G: E. G. Catlin

+ New Repub 44:335 N 18 '25 860w

"The present book is his best. It is more lucid and better integrated than previous volumes and adds more in the way of éclaircissement and synthesis to the comprehensive bibliographical work we have come to take almost for granted." W: Orton

+ N Y Tribune p4 O 11 '25 1800w

"It is scholarly, a readable, and a useful book. The volume is essentially an admirable bibliographical survey of the current trend of thought in the social sciences, accompanied by valuable suggestions as to the significance of these sciences for the historian. Excellent book though it is, I confess it leaves me more uncertain about the new history than I was." Carl Becker

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:38 Ag 15 '25 1400w

"The book should have many readers beyond the circle of those whose interest in historiography is special and professional. One may demur at many of Prof Barnes's specific propositions and one may feel that his critique of the democratic ideal is not fundamental. These exceptions, however, are in the strictest sense secondary. Only the most case-hardened fundamentalist could fail to find a tonic intellectual stimulus, as well as vast information, in his volume." Newton Arvin

+ — Spring'd Republican p7a Jl 26 '25 950w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p482 Jl 16 '25 120w

BARNES, JAMES M. Guide to good golf. 137p il $2 Dodd

796 Golf

25-15678

Grantland Rice writes in the foreword: "I know of no one better qualified to write on the subject of golf instruction than Jim Barnes. He combines to an unusual degree three qualities of golf. He is a player of exceptional ability, one of the closest students of form and style and the right way that golf has, and with this he is one of the best instructors to be found in any golfing country." The author's method has been to describe first the full swing, then to analyse in detail the shorter strokes which are its component parts. There are many detailed illustrations, drawn from life.

Booklist 22:60 N '25

Bookm 62:353 N '25 120w

Boston Transcript p7 D 5 '25 260w

"The opinion is vouchsafed here that Mr. Rice's opinion in turn will be found to be unanimous among all who do read this little masterpiece. 'A Guide to Good Golf' is just what its name promises." Paul Neumann

+ Lit R p8 S 12 '25 300w

N Y Times p15 Ag 30 '25 250w

"A thoroughly sane, common-sense outlook on golf is the feature of his book. He may not have anything very novel to say, but the rules of golf are old and simple."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p743 N 5 '25 350w

BARNES, WILLIAM. Twenty poems in common English; with an introd. by John Drinkwater. (Little nineteenth century classics) 45p 75c Duffield [2s 6d Blackwell] 821

William Barnes, a little known poet of the 19th century, was a native of Dorset. The first published works of this country schoolmaster and priest were in the Dorset dialect. Some of the poems in this little collection seem to be translations of the earlier dialect poems. In all of them there is reflected the quiet charm of the rural scene.

Boston Transcript p3 J1 25 '25 320w

"He celebrated the Dorset countryside in poems of smooth, singing tone, his themes being 'The Rooks,' 'A Brisk Wind,' 'By the Mill in Spring' and others of like simplicity." Lisle Bell
+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 16 '25 100w

BARNOUW, ADRIAAN JACOB. Vondel; with an introd. by [E. W. Bok]. 227p $2 (7s 6d) Scribner

B or 92 Vondel, Joost van den 25-6531

The third volume in the Great Hollanders series is a biography of the greatest of Dutch writers, whose long life covered the last decade of the sixteenth century and more than three-quarters of the seventeenth and who traveled an uphill road before he gained recognition as a poet. The background of the times in which he lived is clearly drawn.

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '25 300w

Nation 121:100 J1 15 '25 10w

"Professor Barnouw's biography may not prodigiously increase Vondel's reputation on these shores, but as a historical study of a man and his time, exhaustive and rich, simple and sincere, the book is a notable achievement."
+ N Y Times p17 Je 21 '25 650w

"It is an excellent piece of work, and it means a happy evening, well spent." H. W. Van Loon

+ N Y Tribune p3 Mr 15 '25 550w

Outlook 140:33 My 6 '25 20w

Sat R of Lit 2:31 Ag 8 '25 320w

BARRES, JEAN BAPTISTE AUGUSTE. Memoirs of a Napoleonic officer; ed. with an introd. by his grandson, Maurice Barres; tr. from the French by Bernard Miall. 316p $4 Dial press [12s 6d Allen & U.]

B or 92 France—History. Napoleon I, emperor of the French [25-10073]

"Just as M. Barrès has found in the pages which his grandfather revised with cheerful care a merit of their own, so the reader of Memoirs will be rewarded by many touches of humanity, many pleasant or illuminating details, and finally by the accumulated evidences of a very real and admirable human character, as he ploughs his way, a little heavily at first, through the well-known history of the First Empire, The Hundred Days, or The July Monarchy; attends the battles of Austerlitz, Jena, Eylau, Dresden, Leipzig; passes from Paris to Nancy, to Metz, to Strassbourg, and finally settles down with the half-pay officer at Charnes, and learns how he occupied the fourteen years of his retirement in putting his diaries into their present form."—New Statesman

"There is a delightful simplicity and honesty in his record."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 13 '25 350w

"A direct, straight-forward, but not particularly vivid or lively account of a well-behaved French soldier's career."

+ Dial 79:176 Ag '25 120w

"Barrès' diary, in spite of expurgation remains a vivid and unusually faithful document."

+ Nation and Ath 37:51 Ap 11 '25 1150w

"The Itineraries are full of vignettes of things seen; but with age, an eupeptic glow coloured the old soldier's memory of the horrors which counter-balanced the vivid moments, and so, while retaining his convictions that war is evil and useless, he deliberately softened the resentment of its harshness when recasting his diary in the form in which it has now been translated into English. But, revised and mellowed as the story we now can read may be, enough of its original stuff remains to show that officers and men in the Napoleonic campaigns saw as little of the general plan and suffered as keenly from the minor torments of battle as any soldier in the war of our own day."

New Statesman 25:20 Ap 18 '25 900w

"The memoirs of the military life of Jean-Baptiste Barrès make interesting reading. The book is in welcome contrast to the type of modern war literature that seeks to prove a point by painting war all horror or all glory."

+ Outlook 141:242 O 14 '25 460w

"An excellent English version of the volume which M. Maurice Barrès recently consecrated to the memory of his grandfather."

+ Sat R 139:250 Mr 7 '25 150w

Spec 134:976 Je 13 '25 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Mr 5 '25 20w

BARRETTO, LARRY. To Babylon. 322p $2 Little

25-3544

Anthony Thorne, a young westerner with ideals and charm of personality, comes to New York with the ambition to become a great architect. By business acquaintances, society, marriage, and by the discarding of his ideals, he climbed, and this is the story of what he gained and lost thereby.

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 14 '25 400w

"The novel is long, but it does not drag, and it is decidedly well written, in a style which has clarity, simplicity, and forcefulness where force is needed."

+ Int Bk R p356 Ap '25 380w

"Mr. Barretto is in spots a little too detailed in explanation, and slightly over-conscientious in his analysis. At crucial points, developments are described rather than galvanized with crackling forcefulness. At times the complexities of his characters resist synthesis and become almost disjunctive personalities. On the whole, however, the novel comes fairly close to that achievement which countless novelists and short story writers have striven for, a genuine picture of the whole of New York."

+ N Y Times p8 F 8 '25 780w

"The story flows smoothly; no incident is absurd or impossible; it makes easy and agreeable reading. The style is clear, almost distinguished. But the characters are somehow shadowy—they lack warmth and substance."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 1 '25 780w

Outlook 139:348 Mr 4 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

BARRINGTON, E., pseud. See Beck, L. A.

BARRUS, CLARA. Life and letters of John B. Burroughs. 2v 397;486p $12.50 Houghton

B or 92 Burroughs, John 25-23503

"This two-volume 'Life and Letters,' by Dr. Barrus, who was his friend and physician for twenty years, comes very near to completeness as a biography. It contains many pages of Burroughs' autobiographical material which had been collected but never published. There are special chapters of unusual interest dealing with Burroughs' early impressions of Walt Whitman."—R of Rs

"Throughout the story, Dr. Barrus keeps her own personality in the background. So far as possible she has permitted Burroughs himself to tell the story of his life and moods, his work and joys, and as he was so constant a letter-writer and so ardently devoted to his daily journal, the task for the biographer was largely that of sorting, sifting and chronologically placing the material. Few biographies have been written so successfully with this end in view." F. P. Hall

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 2 '26 1500w

"A very fine and complete biography."

+ Ind 115:652 D 5 '25 120w

"John Burroughs lives in these volumes. Rarely has a biographer been more abundantly supplied with data so intimately and convincingly revealed the life, growth and character of his subject. Even more rarely has one been better prepared to use them." F. M. Chapman

+ Lit R pl D 19 '25 1350w

"Dr. Barrus, whether or not she knows it, has demonstrated very clearly that there are limits to the capacity of Burroughs to be interesting. Without going out of her way—for nothing was out of her way—she has marked those limits with a fatal exactitude; so that in the present work we know we have all that we want of Burroughs and a great deal more. What we want of him is certainly not unimportant, and Dr. Barrus gives us that part more clearly than it has ever been given. The rest is official biography." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 121:664 D 9 '25 700w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y Times p3 Ja 3 '26 1750w

"Dr. Barrus's 'definitive' biography, in two large volumes, packed with excerpts from his letters and his diaries, becomes at times a little dull. Her volumes will always be a source book. But the collection needs critical sorting." W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y World p6m D 27 '25 950w

R of Rs 72:663 D '25 100w

BARTLETT, ALDEN EUGENE. Least known America. 286p il $2.50 Revell

917 North America—Description and travel 25-20251

"Mr. Bartlett's wanderings which ranged from the back country of the Southwest to Labrador and Newfoundland, brought him in touch with many odd people and customs as well as much interesting scenery. The most amazing and doubtless the most important part of the book is the report he gives of the mediaeval minded Penitentes of New Mexico, a perverted offshoot of ancient Catholicism, discountenanced and disowned by the Church of to-day."—Outlook

"Could even the most insatiable traveller desire a more delectably promising route of adventure! Nor will anticipation be disappointed." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 25 '25 900w

N Y Times p10 Ag 9 '25 750w

"The author is more interested in conveying an impression of the places he has visited than he is in awing the reader with the fact that he has been there. His pages are alert and well seasoned with information, although it is not disseminated with any show of guide-book conscientiousness."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ag 9 '25 150w

Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 150w

"If Dr. Bartlett were a more fascinating raconteur, this might be an extraordinary book of travel. As it is, the places and the peoples visited are so intrinsically interesting, one sets aside the book as reference for that golden hour when he shall be able to venture forth to see for himself what is so obviously well worth seeing."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:144 S 19 '25 130w

BARTLEY, NALBRO ISADORAH (MRS HOWARD LERCH). Bread and jam. 341p $2 Doran

25-19118

"A story of love and irresponsibly undertaken marriage between a penniless girl and a youth possessed of a fortune which, before the end of their first year together, is reduced through worthless investments to almost nothing.

Faced with poverty, and with no tried means to combat it, he bravely chooses a singularly hard course to demonstrate his unproved worth. He and his wife remain together during several trying years, though on her part loyalty is preserved only at the verge of irreparable missteps. Toward the close, when the man is about to reap the first, belated fruits of his long struggle, the wife asserts that all is over and they must separate permanently. But an unlooked for factor here arises to bridge the disaster safely."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"Always manifesting a sincere and profound talent for depicting the life of average Americans Mrs. Bartley has another assured success in this new story." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 14 '25 600w

Reviewed by C. P. Sawyer

Lit R p7 N 7 '25 160w

"In this novel it seems to us that Miss Bartley makes a significant and unexpected advance over all of her previous work which we have read."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:223 O 17 '25 180w

BARTON, BRUCE. Man nobody knows; a discovery of Jesus. 220p $2.50 Bobbs

232 Jesus Christ

25-8802

An unconventional portrait of Jesus by a business man who has gone out to discover Him for himself. It follows no chronological order but goes back and forth through His life picking up incidents and conversation to illustrate the qualities with which Mr Barton endows Jesus—leadership, strength, sociability, success in securing public attention, power of organization, mastery of men.

"The author has no new material for his book; he can only give his interpretation of the source material which has been available for centuries. We do appreciate a certain vigor of expression and a refreshing insistence upon the manhood of Jesus, but Mr. Barton has made no discoveries." C. F. Potter

+ — Bookm 61:590 Jl '25 650w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 25 '25 400w

"It is a book different from any other that has been written about Him. Mr. Barton's interpretation is certain to shock many readers, though it is reverent; it will convince many, though others will find it often dropping into absurdity. But it will interest everybody."

+ N Y Times p11 My 10 '25 1050w

"Try to consider this volume objectively and you will instantly be bewildered or else infuriated. Later you may laugh. For, regarded as a historical interpretation of Christ's personality, it is probably the absurdest jumble ever put into type. And when I say this I speak with feeling as well as with experience, having read most of the German, French and Italian output on this subject as well as the English." W. B. Pitkin

+ — N Y World p4m Je 7 '25 1750w

Outlook 140:304 Je 24 '25 20w

Springf'd Republican p14 Jl 3 '25 250w

"Mr. Adderley's commendation of the book is justified, and it will be a useful protest against much that is said and written of Him who is here described as the leader, the out-door and sociable Man. On this side of the Atlantic we might wish that its American illustrations were not so dominant."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 S 10 '25 180w

Reviewed by H. C. Herring

+ — World Tomorrow 8:382 D '25 450w

BARTON, WILLIAM ELEAZAR. Life of Abraham Lincoln. 2v 517;516p il $10 Bobbs

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham

25-7014

"This latest life of Lincoln is the result of investigations covering a number of years. The author has gone over the Lincoln country of three states and interviewed all persons who gave promise of having any information or material bearing upon the subject, besides examining MSS. and other sources in the principal libraries of Illinois, New York City and Boston and the Library of Congress. He is the first biographer to use the diary of O. H. Browning. The large amount of new material collected by Dr. Barton includes a number of full-page facsimiles."—N Y Tribune

BARTON, W: E.—Continued

Reviewed by Everett Kimball
Am Pol Sci R 19:830 N '25 500w
Booklist 21:336 Je '25

"There are many interesting points of information in this biography of Lincoln that are either new or given a new and more adequate treatment—so many, in fact, that one is tempted to wonder whether Dr. Barton has not given us the definitive biography of the Civil War President." L. E. Robinson
+ Bookm 61:227 Ap '25 920w

"Dr. Barton has not given us a new Lincoln. Such could not be expected, even though much new evidence has been brought to bear and many a canard has been demolished. But he has traversed his enthralling field with a broadmindedness and a sympathy, with scholarly perception and untiring industry and his labor will stand as a most notable contribution to the knowledge of one of the greatest figures history has produced." F. P. Hull
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 14 '25 2700w
Cleveland p113 D '25

"So far, Dr. Barton's book is the first elaborate biography which seeks neither to deify nor to reduce Lincoln. He has been a Lincoln student for years, has already written two books about him, and somewhat overemphasizes the extraordinary advantages he has had over other biographers in being born and having lived all his life in the Lincoln country, and being saturated with its atmosphere. For the general reader, tho not for the specialist, this phase of Dr. Barton is the weakest part of his work. His very familiarity with the Lincoln legend has led him to overemphasize his discoveries in Lincoln's early life." C: W. Thompson
+ Int Bk R p456 Je '25 620w

"Dr. Barton's really wonderful biography, which makes Lincoln more real than any other ever written, has certain defects of perspective, due to his vast research. Sometimes you cannot see the forest for the trees." C: W. Thompson
+ Lit R p1 My 9 '25 1750w

Reviewed by L. E. Robinson
Nation 121:283 S 9 '25 600w

Reviewed by Augustine Birrell
Nation and Ath 38:287 N 21 '25 2350w

"Need it be said that Mr. Barton's book will not destroy the Lincoln legend? If any book could do that it would be one by an author who possessed, in addition to Mr. Barton's knowledge and honesty, a surpassing talent for literary expression." Carl Becker
+ New Repub 44:207 O 14 '25 1450w

"If we are to understand a statesman obviously he must be shown in accurate relationship to the circumstances in which he worked, but the defect of Mr. Barton and those who pursue his method is that the background overwhelms the man."

— New Statesman 26:248 D 5 '25 600w

"On the whole, 'The Life of Abraham Lincoln' is the most distinctive contribution to Lincoln literature since William Herndon laid down his pen a half a century ago." Horace Green

+ N Y Times p1 Mr 22 '25 2800w

Reviewed by D. K. Dodge
N Y Tribune p4 Mr 22 '25 950w

"No one in years has given us the ambitious work to compare with Mr. Barton's delightful and fascinating biography. In it is much that is new, the dissipation of many erroneous impressions that are old. It is the most satisfying realistic record of the man yet written." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p6m Mr 22 '25 820w

"There are slips here and there—an erroneous date, a wrong name, a repeated statement not quite tallying with its forerunner. But these defects, easily amendable in a second edition, detract but little from the merit of a work well worth doing and destined perhaps to remain for many years as the standard life of the martyred President." W: J. Ghent

+ Outlook 139:502 Ap 1 '25 1200w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

R of Rs 71:557 My '25 300w

St Louis p358 S '25

"Dr. Barton brings together the results of more years of painstaking investigation and discovery, and makes Lincoln more normally human, than previous writers. His original study of so many phases of Lincoln's history makes his work an outstanding authority on the subject." L. E. Robinson

+ Sat R of Lit 1:628 Mr 28 '25 1250w

"There are rather too many styles in the book, which is furthermore not free from the element of conjecture where details are concerned. From the standpoint of biography the work is uneven. The new material might conceivably have been put into a monograph, but the publishers suggest that it is of sufficient value to justify a retelling of the story as a whole. Dr Barton will at least help to create fresh interest in Lincoln biography on the part of the public."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 29 '25 900w

"It is impossible to appraise the exact value of the new material which Mr. Barton's researches have made available. Substantially, the picture he gives us of Lincoln is that with which we are already familiar; but he succeeds in making it singularly vivid and life-like."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p727 N 5 '25 800w

BARTON, WILLIAM HENRY, and DOANE, LOUIS HENRY. Sampling and testing of highway materials. 355p il $3.50 McGraw

625.8 Road materials 25-17359

"A preliminary chapter on laboratory planning, apparatus, and operation is followed by definite instructions for sampling and testing of cement, paving bricks, aggregates, bituminous materials, miscellaneous materials, and subgrade soils. Numerous specifications, curves, diagrams and tables. Provided with good illustrations and bibliographies. Authors are professors in the University of Pennsylvania and the Pennsylvania Military College respectively."—N Y New Tech Bks

"The reviewer realizes that it is difficult to prepare a book of this general nature. The question always arises whether it should be held strictly to class-room needs or expanded into a complete reference work for practicing engineers. Judged by final results, the book under review falls in the first class. It promises to be useful and valuable for class-room work and to laboratory operators." H. S. Mattimore
+ Eng N 95:480 S 17 '25 750w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:31 Jl '25

BASKIN, JANET. Artificial flower making. 150p il $2.50 (8s 6d) Pitman

646.5 Artificial flowers 25-13529

"A practical craft for domestic science classes, girls' schools, women's institutes, trade classes for millinery and dressmaking and the home worker."—Subtitle

"A most complete, satisfactory, and practical manual on this fascinating home craft for women."

+ Booklist 22:13 O '25

Cleveland p117 D '25

"Excellent half-tone and colored illustrations show both finished results and process details."

+ N Y New Tech Bks 10:19 Ap '25

St Louis p348 S '25

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Christopher and the clockmakers. (Invention ser.) 246p $1.65 Little 25-16897

This is the sixth volume in the Invention series of fact in story form for young people. During a year of enforced leave of absence from school, Chris Burton goes into his father's jewelry store. There a keen old Scotch clock-maker takes Chris under his wing and teaches him many interesting things about clocks and their history. An unexpected bit of excitement comes when the boy witnesses a diamond robbery and helps in tracking the thief.

"The boy with a curiosity to know about the insides of time pieces—that is, every boy—will read this volume with interest."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:279 N 7 '25 70w

BATES, SYLVIA CHATFIELD. Andrea Thorne. 329p $2 Duffield 25-6857

In the little American city of Euston the dignified Thorne home on Madison street represented social and cultural triumph. Here Andreas Thorne reared his two children, Stephen and Andrea, under the influence of his scholarship and his innate love for beauty. After the father's death Stephen and his sister continued to live in the Thorne home and nothing of importance happened in their lives until Andrea's senior college year when she invited Dan Cotsmur, a young hospital interne, to her college dance. She was reproached by Stephen for associating herself with "those terrible Cotsmurs" about whom there were disagreeable rumors. When Andrea attempted to elope with Dan, Stephen decided to turn the tables on her by feigning an interest in Dan's gaudy little sister, Myrtle, but to his horror the farce became a tragedy. The book closes, however, with difficulties cleared away and happiness in view for everybody.

"The story is written with very keen observation of human nature, and should be read as a small-town study rather than an exciting novel. At times it is inclined to lag a trifle, but all this is amply compensated by the rest of the book. All the characters are very well done, the book is wholesome and sweet, the style is pleasant, showing an experienced hand; and if merit counts for aught, should be very widely read."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 300w

"The characters are portrayed with fine touches, and the author develops them with care and skill. The author is to be commended for the artistic discrimination and restraint of her style."

+ N Y Times p24 Mr 8 '25 480w

"The writing is smooth and effective for its purpose, if not really good."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:674 Ap 11 '25 160w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 23 '25 120w

BATTYE, JAMES SYKES. Western Australia; a history from its discovery to the inauguration of the commonwealth. 480p $8.35 Oxford [25s Milford]

994.1 Western Australia—History [25-4763]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Western Australia has been most fortunate indeed in her historian. Dr. Battye has given us a most careful and authoritative survey of the evolution of the colony from its discovery and early exploration to its incorporation in the Australian commonwealth. The author has apparently felt that was getting too close to present-day controversial events to express himself with certainty and entire freedom of judgment. Upon more than one important question he is strangely silent or non-committal." C. D. Allin

+ — Am Hist R 30:599 Ap '25 600w

"As a chronicle carefully composed, and crammed with facts, it will be useful to the student of colonial history. It is, however, weak in arrangement, and almost completely lacking in 'atmosphere.'" W. K. Hancock

+ — Eng Hist R 40:449 Jl '25 550w

"As a whole, the treatment is rather too carefully chronological, and at times almost episodic. The problem of the aborigines seems unduly slighted. There is but one small sketch map; the outsider would have welcomed additional help in following the wanderings of land-hungry and gold-seeking venturers. In spite of these slight deficiencies this first detailed history of Western Australia will serve as a useful and authoritative addition to the growing body of material on British imperial life." Howard Robinson

+ — Hist Outlook 16:179 Ap '25 400w

"Though we may sometimes wish that he had a more adventurous manner, there can be no doubt that Dr. Battye has done a real service both to Western Australia and to the history of the British Empire by compiling this monumental record of the growth of a colony."

+ — Spec 135:201 Ag 1 '25 720w

BAUER, JOHN. Effective regulation of public utilities. 381p $2.50 Macmillan 25-11329

380.16 Public utilities

"The main thesis is that valuation for rate making should and 'can be made practically an automatic process,' thus saving the immense amount of work that utility commissions and their staffs are compelled to do over and over again to establish rate bases and gaining time for other regulative functions now almost neglected. The chief means to this end proposed by the writer are (1) valuation appraisals of existing properties (where not already available) followed by proper capital accounting for added capital, both to be based on actual useful investment; (2) a fixed rate of return on the valuation so established, subject to reasonable variations to meet special local conditions."—Eng N

"This is an admirably clear and forceful presentation of the investment standard of public utility valuation. The reviewer finds himself in general agreement with the trend of Dr. Bauer's thought, recognizing, however, that many difficulties remain to be solved. It is a book worth reading carefully not only for the subject matter but for the clarity of style in presenting a complex subject." E. W. Morehouse

+ — Am Pol Sci R 19:842 N '25 720w

"Valuable contribution to the discussion of public utility problems. The book is not likely to be warmly welcomed by the utilities and their supporters, for the authors attack some of the theories and methods which are their chief reliance in attempting to get high valuations and rates."

+ Eng N 95:316 Ag 20 '25 580w

"Occasionally there appears a definitive book in a particular field, and in that field nothing remains but to re-say what that book has said. Such is John Bauer's 'Effective Regulation of Public Utilities.' Mr. Bauer knows, from long experience and thoughtful study, just what regulation has done and has not done." H: R. Mussey

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 11 '25 1400w

BAXTER, GEORGE OWEN. Shadow of Silver Tip. 320p $2 Chelsea house

"The Shadow was living in a frontier town recuperating from wounds given him by three men whom he had marked for death. There came to town a devil-may-care youngster, Tom Converse. The Shadow took all his money away in poker and then sent him on a chase that would eventually end in his death as the Shadow. But the fates were against him

BAXTER, GEORGE OWEN—Continued
this time. Tom lived up to the Shadow's reputation, except in killings, and, aided by Sylvia Rann, once in love with the Shadow, brought the bad man to bay and sudden death at the hands of Sheriff Algie Thomas."—Lit R

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 1 '25 80w

"It's a good story, very well told, bears all the marks of verisimilitude and doesn't let down for a minute." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p7 O 3 '25 180w

"The plot is excellently baffling, and the story as a whole worth the while of all lovers of Westerns."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 28 '25 150w

BAYER, F. J. Book of the popes; tr. from the German by E. M. Lamond; with a preface by Herbert Thurston. 132p il $4 Harper [7s 6d Methuen]

282 Popes

A list of the popes, chronologically arranged, with dates, coats of arms and brief notes comprises most of the fifty pages of letterpress. The rest of the book is made up of portraits of the popes and pictures of their residences and tombs. These illustrations number 686.

"The studious traveler, or the pilgrim with a flair for papal history, will find both delight and helpful guidance in the many drawings, engravings, and photographs which depict papal residences and papal sepulchers, both ancient and modern." J. McS.

+ Cath World 122:558 Ja '26 540w

"A convenient illustrated directory."

+ Spec 135:995 N 28 '25 100w

"Handsomely produced at a moderate price."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 29 '25 50w

BAYNE, SAMUEL GAMBLE. Derricks of destiny; an autobiography. 259p il $3 Brentano's

B or 92

24-25544

"The title Mr. Bayne has chosen for his autobiography is more picturesque than accurate. He was born in Ireland and came to the United States as a young man in 1889. In those days the excitement of the first oil discoveries in this country, in Western Pennsylvania was at its height. Thither he went and several chapters of his book recount conditions and events in the oil country. He made money in oil and believing in its future and the possibilities of finding it elsewhere he traveled much in various parts of the Orient, looking and sizing up conditions. On his return he went more enthusiastically than ever into oil production in Pennsylvania. Later on he engaged in the banking business and traveled widely through the Southwest and South of the United States, where he organized banks and undertook financial operations that would help on its way the bank in New York City of which he has been the head for forty years."—N Y Times

"As a testimonial to the joy and glamour of life for those who dare meet it more than halfway, the book is singularly convincing. Seemingly it was written at high speed, with the carelessness of zest, for it presents some weird aberrations of structure and syntax. But it has its moments when an agreeable suspicion crosses the reader's mind and he asks himself if a very estimable writer has not been lost in a remarkable adventurer and an eminent financier." Kenneth Latour

+ Lit R p14 Ja 17 '25 550w

"Mr. Bayne writes always with a sense of humor and with a keen appreciation of all those features and values of life that are outside of business. There is little indeed, in his book about business except when it led to exciting adventure, amusing incident, or entertaining developments of some sort."

+ N Y Times p23 Ja 11 '25 520w

Reviewed by W. E. Woodward
N Y Tribune p4 Ja 18 '25 320w

BAYNES, ERNEST HAROLD. Animal heroes of the great war; with an account of the writer "The man and his enemies" by Owen Wister. 307p il $3.50 Macmillan

940.4 Animals, War use of. European war, 1914-1918 25-25862

The part played by these inarticulate heroes of the great war makes a story that will appeal to all lovers of animals. Himself the enthusiastic friend of all animals and the author of several books about them, Ernest Harold Baynes spent the year following the war in the campaign areas of the allies, gathering material for this book. Here are stirring stories of animal heroes in action; messenger dogs, sentry dogs, oxen, camels, mules, horses and homing pigeons. Closing chapters describe the veterinary service of the British and American armies. Excellent photographs from the scene of action illustrate the book.

"A book is this which must take its unique place among the classics of the literature of the Great War; a book in itself 'a monument more enduring than brass.'" F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 9 '26 1000w

"An intensely interesting record by a man who loved animals and traveled far in order to learn at first hand of the services they rendered in the Great War."

+ Ind 116:79 Ja 16 '26 120w

BAZALGETTE, LEON. Henry Thoreau: bachelor of nature; tr. from the French by Van Wyck Brooks. 357p $3 Harcourt

B or 92 Thoreau, Henry David 25-26029

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:194 F '25

"If the book is not altogether a success, it is rather because of the author's limitations as a literary craftsman than because he has not tried very hard. Out of Thoreau's books and the invaluable 'Journal' he has woven a narrative in which he has aimed to show both the pattern of a life and its explanation. In a measure he has succeeded, since the figure of Thoreau emerges with some degree of clarity as the story proceeds." G. H. Gerald

+ — Bookm 60:768 F '25 550w

"His book has the lilt and passage and effect of a packed personal paean; and yet it is perhaps the best of all pictures of our great New England. Clad in the fine English of Mr Brooks, Bazalgette's Thoreau responds to our experience. It becomes an American classic as surely as it is a French one." Waldo Frank

+ Dial 78:232 Mr '25 1050w

"A vital biography of the impressionistic type in which much is sacrificed to effect, but the effect is good."

+ Ind 114:135 Ja 31 '25 60w

"It bans all smugness, frowns on every conventionality, pierces numerous windbags and turns its back on humbugs of every sort and description, just as Thoreau did." Theodore Stanton

+ Lit R p12 Mr 7 '25 1400w

"Mr. Brooks's translation of the new life of Thoreau is excellent as English, and M. Bazalgette's style has the merits of fluidity and a sort of undulating picturesqueness. The book will charm those people who can come to terms with a biographer whose purpose is to be incessantly and irresistibly engaging. M. Bazalgette is rather the chorister than the technical biographer of Thoreau; but he does cover the life in nine consecutive chapters or choric dances, the most interesting of which is the account of the brief intercourse with Whitman." O. W. Firkins

+ — Nation 120:552 My 13 '25 300w

"To read M. Bazalgette's book is not a wholly pleasant experience for anyone who respects Thoreau, who admires his independence, his serenity, his homely dignity. Mr. Brooks has done his best to mend matters and his version is certainly an improvement on the original, but even so the result is not very sympathetic." R: Aldington

— + Nation and Ath 38:58 O 10 '25 1000w

"Leon Bazalgette has not so much written a new life of Thoreau, he has lived through and lyrically rendered Thoreau's existence, as a lonely boy, as a tart, russet-sweet man, as the independent spirit who, with Emerson, Hawthorne, and Alcott, gave a village the dignity of a metropolis." L. M.

+ New Repub 43:81 Je 10 '25 150w

"Thoreau on this scale? Surely Thoreau, like Borrow and Richard Jefferies, should be dealt with more compactly as a writer of curious appeal but minor rank."

— Sat R 140:291 S 12 '25 60w

"Thoreau usually repels the first approach; diligence is required to discover and value the honey hidden in the rock. Whereas M. Bazalgette sets forth a quite credible personality, harmonizes and rounds it off. Almost too cleverly and pleasantly, perhaps."

+ — Sat R 140:346 S 26 '25 400w

"M. Bazalgette has saturated himself with his subject, reading not only the two volumes which Thoreau published during his lifetime and the eighteen others which he left to be collected after him, but in addition all the available scraps of information and anecdote put on record by acquaintances in Concord and elsewhere. He has taken the pains, furthermore, to feel Thoreau as a person, and has made him the hero of a volume that is fiction no less than biography." Mark Van Doren

+ Sat R of Lit 1:724 My 2 '25 520w

"M. Bazalgette illuminates his subject from the one point whence light could come—from within. For the purpose of biography M. Bazalgette becomes Thoreau himself. He inspects not only the snowstorms and forest paths to which Thoreau felt himself appointed, but the world as it then was, through Thoreau's eyes." Phillips Russell

+ Spec 134:534 Ap 4 '25 800w

"Translation into English (though the work is well done) is no doubt partly responsible for the jarring effect. The French was itself a removal, and therefore to some extent justified a compensating return. When the language is the same that Thoreau spoke we are conscious only of the impropriety of all this ease and freedom."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p614 S 24 '25 460w

BEACH, JOSEPH WARREN. Meek Americans, & other European trifles. 222p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press] 814 Europe—Description and travel. Americans in Europe 25-7102

A dozen essays about Americans abroad—especially the meek Americans who fall under the spell of the countries they visit. Mr Beach writes good humoredly of the concessions they make to French culture, of the extortions of servants and the importunities of beggars, and various other aspects of European travel. Contents: Meek Americans; On the depravity of Europeans; Dancing partners and dancing masters; International; Tipping and the law; Doorkeepers; The beggar in the forum; The poet of Sorrento; The model; Flowers and candied fruit; The olive branch; The dirty street.

"What raises his essays above triviality is that their real subject throughout is human nature. And it is this that gives originality to his book and keeps it from being 'only one more book' about European travel." R. M. Gay

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Jl '25 320w

Booklist 21:375 Jl '25

"Pleasant, if prosaic, series of essays relating a literary tourist's impressions of France, Italy, Switzerland, and Austria. They are distinguished from the mass of such commentaries by a keen faculty of observation, a polished, masterly style, and a rare command of descriptive values. Their weakness lies in a tame monotony—due, we presume, to the author's desire to be truthful—which is never relieved by anything remotely exciting."

+ — Bookm 61:490 Je '25 100w

"Reticence Mr. Beach has; while seeming to tell much of places, persons and family, he really is close-lipped, contained and, in the right sense of that much abused word, sophisticated."

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 4 '25 330w

Cleveland p100 S '25

"Mr. Beach is a charming essayist, but one wishes that, in the present instance, he had found some bypath which would not touch at a hundred points the highroad of every traveler's common experience."

+ — Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 100w

"Delightful collection of informal essays, written in the spirit of understanding." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p4 Mr 21 '25 550w

"There is much account, amusing, whimsical, ironic, philosophic by turns, and always kindly, of the author's mental reaction to the stimulus of scenes and experiences. And at the end one discovers that one has learned a good deal more about some things of vital consequence, such as the animating soul of a nation or two, than could be extracted from a dozen books of travel of the usual kind."

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 12 '25 1100w

N Y Tribune p16 Ap 12 '25 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Jl 23 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

"The book is frankly unpretentious, and if at times its humors of the crowded compartment on the railway carriage or the perplexities of the tipping system seem rather obvious, it has some acute observations, it is pleasantly written, and it presents with skill certain aspects of travelling." E: B. Reed

+ Yale R n s 14:801 Jl '25 120w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Goose woman, and other stories. 266p $2 Harper 25-13868

"A volume of vivid tales, some exciting, some amusing. This series contains five exceedingly compelling narratives. The author has set them in widely distant localities, one in the Middle West, two in his favored Alaska and two in the arid oil country of the Southwest." (Boston Transcript) Contents: The goose woman; Cave stuff; Cool waters; The Michigan kid; Powder.

"All these stories are in Mr. Beach's accepted vein. They are melodramatic but they are the work of an artist in melodrama. Therefore they are not to be held in contempt. In his way, Mr. Beach is a distinguished story teller. He adapts style to subject, and is never maudlin or feebly sentimental. In his chosen medium he stands out from the ruck as a competent and always interesting story teller." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Jl 29 '25 550w

"They are precisely the sort of thing the author has been doing for the magazines these many years, and no doubt will prove pleasing to his hordes of admirers. For the reader of restrained tastes, the volume is likely to be found to indulge in too much excitement of the kind that one does not get excited over." Morris Markey

+ — Int Bk R p681 S '25 260w

"Workmanlike yarns, all, but not one memorable for any especial quality." Carey Jeffreys

+ — Lit R p2 Ag 8 '25 200w

"As a weaver of mystery Mr. Beach fails to shine. But his plot has considerable originality, and the story moves with all the rapidity of a good newspaper report. It can be read without straining the mind—as can all of the pieces.

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD—Continued
And this, considering the season, is to commend the book, within those seasonal limitations."
+ — N Y Times p13 J1 19 '25 800w

"Good light reading. Embedded in each there is a neat and clean love-story of recognizable pattern."

Sat R of Lit 1:935 J1 25 '25 660w

BEACH, WALTER GREENWOOD. Introduction to sociology and social problems: under the editorship of William F. Ogburn. 369p $2.25 Houghton

301 Sociology. Social problems 25-8100

This text-book is designed for introductory college classes in sociology. The author's plan is "to present as simply and as concretely as possible the elements of sociological theory illustrated by social problems. Many theoretical questions have, therefore, been touched upon but briefly. Concrete social problems, however, are not developed independently, but in close relation to theoretical discussion." (Preface) A bibliography and a list of questions follow each chapter.

Reviewed by A. W. Small
Am J Soc 31:104 J1 '25 140w

"This is an excellent handbook for college classes or for the general reader, although somewhat brief for teaching purposes unless supplemented generously by outside readings. Its intellectual level is perhaps better adapted to juniors than to sophomores." L. L. Bernard
+ Ann Am Acad 121:198 S '25 320w

Booklist 22:8 O '25

"Professor Beach draws his materials and his attitudes from very wide ranges of life and experience, and his book is organized to serve admirably the purposes of a college text, since it is the work of a teacher of many years practical expertness in dealing with college classes."
+ Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 100w

BECK, JAMES MONTGOMERY. Constitution of the United States; yesterday, today—and tomorrow? new rev ed 352p $2.50 Doran

342.73 United States—Constitution 24-18344

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Mr. Beck's volume is not only interesting, it is good and it is timely." J. B. Scott
+ Am Pol Sci R 19:193 F '25 700w
Booklist 21:309 My '25

"Even if you are not interested in the Constitution for its own sake, you will like to read what Mr. Beck says about it because he is such a lovely writer. He is the kind of writer who likes to write just for the sake of writing. He shows how he loves his work. He is not one of those writers who have to stop in their writing while they are making up their minds what to say. You can read him right along because he is so simple in his thoughts. He does not get you all mixed up the way so many writers do, but he brings up in your mind beautiful pictures of the Constitution as a temple and a beacon and a floating dock and he lets you see the Supreme Court shining and balancing in a very wonderful way. I have read a great many books about the Constitution, but there is no other book that has given me just the same kind of pleasure that this one has." T. R. Powell

— New Repub 41:314 F 11 '25 1850w

"Readers, both in England and the United States, may be grateful for the timely publication of a work on the subject of the American Constitution by one of the most capable and informed legal minds of our generation. The graphic, simple style of the work, nowhere more effectively displayed than in his account of the historic Convention at Philadelphia and his descriptions of the participants, Washington, Franklin and their associates, makes the book a source of delight as well as a mine of information."

+ Sat R 140:104 J1 25 '25 350w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey
Spec 134:158 Ja 31 '25 1950w

BECK, MRS L. ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, pseud.). Glorious Apollo. 371p $2.50 Dodd Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, 6th baron
—Fiction 25-13520

"The story of Byron's life as 'E. Barrington' tells it in 'Glorious Apollo,' the latest of the 'novelized biographies' is largely the story of three women whose lives were linked with his—Lady Caroline Lamb, who for a time was his mistress; the brilliant, tender and pathetic Anne Milbanke, who was his wife; and Mrs Augusta Leigh, his too amiable and flabby-minded half-sister, partner in the scandal which wrecked his marriage and made his name execrated in a society accustomed to treat as matter of course any sexual irregularity not tainted with revolting abnormality."—Springf'd Republican

"Glorious Apollo unquestionably holds the interest. However, the not impossible reader whose study of Byron should be limited to this book might well be left wondering why the name of the highly deplorable lord should stand among those of the great." E. W. Hawkins
— + Atlantic's Bookshelf O '25 420w

Booklist 22:32 O '25

"This is an interesting book, and so far as I have read them, the best of the Byronic romances. But as an interpretation of a figure which, in the light of modern psychology, cries for interpretation, it is a failure. Since it was written obviously as a romance, it is perhaps unfair to call attention to its other shortcomings. As sweetly savored romance it is excellent, and it is, on the surface, accurate."
— + Bookm 62:73 S '25 380w

"Miss Barrington has a truth more confounding than fiction to work upon, and of it she makes a great book. Her prose is as lyric as his poetry and delights the ear as much as the sense. Technically speaking, she sins in deserting the hero for the heroine after his marriage, but even her insight cannot perhaps fathom the black depths of his mind at that period. She is a little swayed, herself, by the morbid horror of it all, and the background here creeps with things which nightmares feed upon." I. W. Lawrence

+ — Boston Transcript p4 J1 25 '25 1400w
Cleveland p108 N '25
Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 100w

"'Glorious Apollo,' if you are willing to overlook certain minor irritations—and you find, somehow, that you are—is a moving, breathless, vivid affair. The flaws are not major. They are mostly in the style. Obviously here is a book which will achieve wide reading and popularity, and, on the whole, deservedly." J: V. A. Weaver

+ — Int Bk R p672 S '25 1650w

"'Glorious Apollo' is just another sentimental romance about the glamorous Don Juan. Nor is it really about Byron himself. It is a woman's interpretation of Anne Byron, and as that, it makes excellent reading. No man, however, could possibly have written some of the perferid descriptions of this lovely youth." J: Farrar

Lit R p1 Ag 8 '25 1600w

"While it sets forth the facts of the case convincingly and readably, it is not the burning portrayal which might have been hoped. It is, rather, a defense of Anne Milbank, the virtuous and much mistreated wife. And as such it comes very near to the danger-zone of tract literature." B. G.

+ — New Repub 44:211 O 14 '25 130w

"It is refreshing to find a biography of Lord Byron which is explicative rather than indicative, which without praise or blame draws a portrait of the half-mad creator of Childe Harold. Reviewing E. Barrington's productions on the whole, one inclines to the view that where the essential historical truth is correctly interpreted and strictly adhered to, the novel is the best vehicle for biography." Horace Green

+ N Y Times p5 J1 19 '25 1300w

"Narrative it is; it never rises to the vital immediacy of drama. Lacking the veridical quality of genuine biography and the vitality of creative fiction, this book is still quite readable. After all, it is about Byron!" Isabel Paterson

— + N Y Tribune p5 Ag 23 '25 750w

Sat R of Lit 2:89 Ag 29 '25 430w

"The women whom Byron knew are at least revenge upon him to this extent—they quite outline him in E. Barrington's book. Apart from the feminine graces and emotions, the interest of 'Glorious Apollo' is chiefly in its portrayal of manners in high society at a period of lax and cynical morals and in its objective biographical narration of Byron's private life."

Springf'd Republican p3 J1 18 '25 130w

"E. Barrington's style has seductive allure-ment, marred only by traces of excessive sentimentality. Sensitive in emotion and brilliant in persiflage, she aims at and achieves a balanced portrayal of character, and at times is original in perception and philosophic insight."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a J1 26 '25 700w

BECK, MRS. L. ADAMS (E. BARRINGTON, pseud.). Way of stars. 408p $2 Dodd

25-8736

The reincarnation of a beautiful Egyptian queen is the theme of this story. The opening scene is in the desert, where two young Englishmen are breaking open the Khar tomb to which for two years they had been excavating a passage. Their discovery is marvellous, for in the tomb, seated on a black granite dais, is the life-like figure of a beautiful Egyptian queen whose jewels alone are worth a fortune.
At the foot of the throne Miles Seton finds a curious ring which had probably fallen from the hand of the queen. What was this, a token — a pledge? He slips it on his finger, and from that hour Seton becomes involved in the most amazing adventures. The malignant powers of a curious ring and the influence of an ancient queen bring Seton to the heart of India and face to face with death from which he miraculously escapes.

"The author faced a difficult task in blending the supernatural and the commonplace, but for the most part has succeeded in doing so in an interesting manner, although it must be confessed that there are places in which the credulity is so taxed that the reader has a bit of trouble in swallowing the story."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 280w

Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"On the whole, a first-rate novel for hot weather perusal. It is refreshing, frankly imaginative and free from the prevalent tendency to ultra-modernism." Harriet Henry

+ Int Bk R p549 J1 '25 220w

"In writing a novel which takes reincarnation practically for granted, he sets the hurdle of plausibility at a dizzy height, too stiff a jump, it is to be feared, for most of us Occi-dentials. Its audience, then, must be limited to those who can swallow the reincarnation business without discomfort. For these 'The Way of Stars' should be an entertaining story."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 17 '25 450w

"Of course it's all bunk, but still—a character remarks at an acutely occult stage. He might have added, 'It makes a readable yarn.'"

+ — N Y Tribune p11 My 24 '25 180w

"We were not the least scared or impressed, only disappointed that so competent a hand could wander utterly astray."

— Sat R of Lit 1:863 Je 27 '25 250w

BEEBE, WILLIAM. Jungle days. 201p il $3
Putnam

591.98 Natural history—British Guiana.
British Guiana—Description and travel
25-13209

These essays reprinted from the Atlantic Monthly and the Ladies' Home Journal, were written from the vantage ground of the tropical laboratory at Kartabo, British Guiana. Seen thru Mr Beebe's eyes, the least of jungle phenomena here recorded is invested with beauty and awe.

Booklist 22:27 O '25

"This collection is, I think, as good as any of the earlier ones and a better book by far than the elaborate 'Galápagos: World's End.'
... It was a terrible blunder to illustrate this magical and very beautiful book." J. F.

+ — Bookm 61:694 Ag '25 220w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 1800w
Cleveland p121 D '25

"It is impossible for him to turn over a stone or look at the under-side of a leaf in a tropical forest without presenting his readers with a fascinating and instructive narrative of what he has seen. His writings, however, can never really take a high place in the realm of imaginative literature."

+ — Dial 80:72 Ja '26 150w

"His style and manner are both admirable.
At times picturesque, vivid as a tropical bird,
he is always clear, always fundamentally simple. He works so easily, so smoothly in the medium of words that one is hardly conscious of the difficulty of his task or the dexterity of his success. Mr. Beebe will rank high, one feels, not only as a naturalist and a man of letters, but also as an artist—as a skillful creator of beauty out of words." D. R.

+ Ind 115:162 Ag 8 '25 1100w

"He sees life in terms of wonder and so adduces it for the pleasure of the reader. His high sense of humor animates this variegated phantasmagoria of strange aspects of the life impulse. Close behind his philosophical excursions looms a smiling realization of quaintness of being. One needs but to embark upon the essay called 'The Jungle Sluggard' to appreciate this fully." H. S. Gorman

+ Int Bk R p574 Ag '25 2300w

"He took with him to British Guiana a vast sympathy for all forms of life, a wide special knowledge and an unusual gift of expression, which are all exhibited in this book, 'Jungle
Days.'" F. O'Brien

+ Lit R p2 Ag 15 '25 500w

"Will Beebe has an astonishing gift of vivid writing. At his best, when he tells of his beloved jungles, few modern authors surpass him.
He can put the thrills of a dime novel into the march of an army of ants and make an opossum hunt as mysterious as a detective story.
Withal he writes as a trained naturalist, and although his articles are destined for lay readers they are based on scientific observations."
N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p3 J1 5 '25 1050w

"Zest for life lived with all the five senses as well as with the overworked brain must be the secret of William Beebe's science and of his writing. He never tires of the infinite discoveries which his nose and his ears and his eyes and his fingers constantly make for him, and the reader, lolling 5,000 miles from the Guiana jungle, finds his own dull perceptions sharpened in sharing Beebe's keen experiences." L: S. Gannett

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ag 23 '25 800w

"He has a charming style and narrative gift;
but in both respects Hudson is his superior.
It is rather by his combination of gifts, each in rich though not perhaps in supreme measure, that he takes rank with the best." H:
W. Bunn

+ Outlook 140:527 Ag 12 '25 850w

Pratt p13 autumn '25

BEEBE, WILLIAM—Continued.

"Like all of Mr. Beebe's books, these essays are characterized by a wealth of information and a delightful literary style."

+ R of Rs 72:336 S '25 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p733 N
5 '25 680w

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

BEEADING, FRANCIS. Seven sleepers. 317p
$2 Little

25-754

"The English hero, once a captain, now a hardware drummer, steadily, even a bit stolidly, goes through dangers that might well unnerve a Sherlock Holmes. The agents of the Seven Sleepers under the orders of the diabolical Professor Kreuzemark are always at the point of killing him by torture, and he is always escaping. The plot concerns a new German conspiracy to conquer the world under the command of a general famous in the Great War."—Outlook

"The author has devised a good story with a plausible and fascinating background. He has told the story well, too, and never neglected an opportunity to make the most of the element of suspense as a heightener of the dramatic qualities of any situation. It is well worth reading."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 7 '25 320w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"Good snappy adventure stuff. It is not literature, but it has its merits."

+ Ind 114:135 Ja 31 '25 70w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 150w

N Y World p8m Ja 4 '25 90w

"The most exciting plot-story of the season."

R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 139:114 Ja 21 '25 100w

"Of course 'The Seven Sleepers' rests upon the same insecure foundation which supports most of this sort of fiction. Once you accept all this hokus-pokus, the adventures herein recorded are perfectly plausible."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:498 Ja 31 '25 330w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 250w

"The story is well told and never pauses for breath but rushes at top speed to the fortunate finale."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 J1
2 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:89 Mr '25

BEER, MAX. Social struggles and socialist forerunners; tr. by H. J. Stenning. 224p $2 Small [6s Parsons]

335 Social conditions. Socialism [25-10954]

"This, the third volume in the author's 'General History of Socialism and Social Struggles,' carries the theme through the Middle Ages and down to the end of the nineteenth century. The various peasant revolts are covered comprehensively, as is the German social upheaval of the sixteenth century. The latter part of the volume is largely devoted to a résumé of Utopias, among them that of the Italian, Campanella, who wrote with such charming detail about eugenics, and that of the Frenchman, Meslier."—N Y Tribune

"It is a fascinating period to study and the author knows the facts and how to present them."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '25 180w
Nation 121:628 D 2 '25 80w

"The author's interpretation of history is sometimes debatable, but nevertheless the book is readable and stimulating."

+ Nation and Ath 36:502 Ja 3 '25 150w

"It lacks historic sense. Mr. Beer has gathered together an immense mass of information, and some of it is very interesting. But he has not written a good book."

+ New Statesman 24:214 N 22 '24 200w

"A clear, compact style, and the exercise of good judgment as to what to omit and what to include, enable the writer of this handbook to cover a wide field in brief compass."

+ N Y Tribune p11 Ap 5 '25 180w

"The book contains many familiar and some less known details, but they are scrappy and ill-arranged. The order is neither chronological nor ideological nor ethnological, but a little of all three. The impression given is of notes taken from extensive reading and put loosely together on no definite plan."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p735 N
13 '24 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 J1 '25

BEERS, LORNA DOONE (MRS C. R. CHAMBERS). Prairie fires. 367p $2 Dutton

25-9292

A story of the Northwest picturing the farm revolt in politics in which the Nonpartisan league took such a significant part. The action takes place in the small Dakota town of Besse-rud where Hans Erickson, a sturdy type of Dane, with the aid of his thrifty wife and children, runs a wheat farm. The central character of the story is Erickson's daughter Christine, who marries Christian Lövsstad, president of Besse-rud's first national bank. Lövsstad typifies the forces which are stripping the prairie farmers of their farms and homes. When the inevitable clash between the farmers and bankers comes, the house of Lövsstad suffers. Christine leaves her husband and returns to her old home; but later she surrenders to the call of duty as a wife and mother, and again slips into the role of industrious housewife for Lövsstad.

"The author shows unusual familiarity with the rural mind and conditions although she is less successful with the character of the young daughter of the prairie whose romancings and marriage form the slender love plot."

+ Booklist 22:32 O '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 320w

"In parts, the plot moves very slowly, and one cannot help wishing that the author had not been so intent on analyzing every waking thought of Christine's. Despite this defect, an interesting subject, splendid characterization, and keen satire combine to make this a first book of real merit."

+ Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 100w

"One of the things we have to learn is to think what is true is beautiful," says Hans Erickson to his daughter. One can well believe that this is the guiding principle of the author of 'Prairie Fires.' It is because of that tenet that she is able to add to an unsparing realism the still more infallible vision which makes this an extraordinarily vital book." M. S. Gerry

+ Int Bk R p547 J1 '25 760w

"The author recognizes the individualism, the isolation, and the absence of leadership that have made attempts at agricultural organization so often ineffectual but she views them with a deep, tolerant, and not too pessimistic sympathy." N. A. Crawford

+ Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 120w

"For a first novel, 'Prairie Fires' burns with unusual brilliancy and power—burns with a sure, steady light that betokens more than a sudden conflagration of sparks and flame that, when burned out, leave only a waste of barren land for the reader to gaze upon." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p8 Je 20 '25 360w

"If this is a first novel it is all the more a credit to its author. Of the importance of her book and its truth to essential conditions there can be no doubt." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:187 J1 8 '25 300w

"'Prairie Fires' has more than the strong and stimulating novel, which gives a sense of coming to grips with 'the baffling shadow of life.'"

+ N Y Times p8 My 17 '25 1000w

"Fresh from the flatlands, crusty as pie, comes this novel with its accurate observations and keen insight, and, somehow, it will not fit any category or class—it is too sure of itself. The chronicle lives with so little effort that its art can be taken for granted. I wait impatiently for Miss Beers's next volume." Carl Magg

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 17 '25 800w

"The reader leaves the book with a feeling of amplex, tolerance, breadth, and all-enveloping humanity."

N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 300w

Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 10w

"'Prairie Fires' has more than the strong fibres of its substance; it has vitality, variety, a power of making its narrative march without slackening or interruption to the last page. Her descriptions are indigenous and fresh; she recaptures the sounds and sights and odors of a farm; she gives us, marvelously, the taste and pleasure of food. She has written a first novel whose promise cannot be judged more remarkable than its performance." L: Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 1:891 J1 11 '25 700w

Spring'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 550w

"An admirable novel of farm life, written without bitterness."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

BEGBIE, HAROLD (GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud.). Great world. 371p $2 Doran [7s 6d Mills & B.]

25-23727

Herbert is grandson and heir to the Duke of Rothbury. With the old man's blessing he marries Isabel Townley, the daughter of a neighboring land-owner who like her husband cherishes a love for the land and a feeling of high responsibility toward its people. They have four children, three girls and a boy. While the latter is still very young Herbert enlists in the Boer war and is killed. As the children grow up they seem to share none of their mother's ideals or enthusiasms, but are apparently absorbed in the shallow gaieties of post-war London. Even the young duke has little sense of the duties that will devolve upon him, and his mother's disappointment in him is keen. The love of a serious-minded young woman and the kindly advice of her father, however, gradually fix his determination to become a useful member of the empire and to carry on the traditions of his father's family.

"The value of 'The Great World' does not lie in the tale it attempts to tell. The essential fable told with a knowledge of but no facility in the art of fiction writing gives an impression of clumsiness, even amateurishness and something of the immature mind. But the ingredients which the master of the duster contrives to work into his story are exceedingly worth while. He does write of life as it is lived; he does convince one of his characters and their utter reality." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 5 '25 450w

N Y Times p8 N 22 '25 600w

"He is much more at home splashing picturesquely about in the shallows of generalizations than diving down to explore the depths of character, and that is why he writes good journalism but an indifferent novel."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p676 O 15 '25 180w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, JUNIOR SUB, pseud.). Paid in full. 287p $2 Houghton

25-8667

The story of a charming rogue who cheats, lies, gambles, bluffs his way thru life and with one heroic gesture makes full payment for his past. Mildred Cradock has brought up her children to worship the memory of their father and to accept him as their shining ideal. The legend of his gallant death is a family tradition. Then Denis Cradock returns in person, the antithesis of all she has taught the children to believe, and Mildred faces the crisis of her life. The problem grows daily more acute, until it reaches a conclusion that is touching and dramatic.

"Outworn romantic theme but moderately diverting."

+ Booklist 22:32 O '25

"The main theme smacks of Post-War-ism in a new way. Usually Ian Hay makes himself content with telling of the splendid qualities the war brought to light. Here is the principal character the exact opposite, a man who battened upon the chances war gave, posed as an ex-officer, and exploited his supposed heroism with a collection of medals purchased from pawn shops, a person with a definite charm which makes you almost sorry for him, but a scoundrelly attitude toward life such as to cause detestation at the same time. It is not a theme in which the major is at home." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 1000w

"The laughter and tears recipe is an excellent one, but in this instance, the laughter element is fresh and good, and the tears ingredients just a little stale and artificial."

+ Ind 115:24 J1 4 '25 70w

"Every page is as clean as a whistle, but this does not mean immaculate dullness. The writer is cosmopolitan and remains a gentleman. He builds into his pages everywhere that he has been and all that he has seen and known, and the concoction is pure entertainment." F. L. W.

+ Lit R p11 My 2 '25 400w

Nation and Ath 37:628 Ag 22 '25 200w

"It is altogether an infuriating story."

+ N Y Times p16 Ap 26 '25 250w

"To produce a work so egregiously commonplace is almost an achievement. . . Mr. Hay's English is above reproach. His style permits one who is professionally obliged to read along without protest, albeit without interest. But no character is real enough to demand projection into breathing black and white. No idea is urgent enough to insist upon outlet. No situation is fresh enough to be worth exploiting. It is merely another version of rascal, regeneration and romance."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 7 '25 250w

Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 80w

"The construction is a standard pattern and the machina is plainly visible, while the deus brings about the essential coincidences. The book, however, is thoroughly readable and interesting, written smoothly, and livened by a mild, genial humor, which is neither slap-stick nor subtle, by delightful dialogue at times becoming epigrammatic, and by clever verbal chaffing and badinage. It is sentimental without becoming bathetic, and appeals to one's better emotions without stirring them deeply."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:747 My 9 '25 350w

"The six chapters of the story which deal with America just before she entered the War are particularly interesting. The reader gets a vivid picture of the threads of intrigue which were being feverishly pulled in contrary directions, and of the propaganda on behalf of the Allies, not always of the most creditable kind, which doubtless had its effect on the nation's ultimate decision."

+ Spec 135:242 Ag 8 '25 220w

"A good example of [the author's] smooth and pleasing story-telling."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 120w

"The story has no great depth. It is pleasantly told and there is skill in the delineation of Denis Cradock's character."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p510 J1 30 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

BELL, AUBREY FITZ GERALD. Contemporary Spanish literature. 313p $3 Knopf 860.9 Spanish literature—History and criticism 25-17910

"The standard history of Spanish literature, both in Spanish and in English, is Mr. Fitzmaurice Kelly's familiar tome, but even in its most recent edition this work is entirely inadequate in its treatment of contemporary authors. . . . Mr. Bell is the author of an excellent history of Portuguese literature; he has written extensively about Spain and things Spanish, and he is one of those Englishmen, like Fitzmaurice Kelly and Crawford Fitch, who have devoted their lives to the intensive study of the life and literature of the Iberian Peninsula. His name is a guarantee of scholarship combined with intimate first hand knowledge. Mr. Bell wisely confines himself to the Castilian writers. . . . He divides the modern period into two parts, 'hinging respectively on the cardinal years 1868 to 1898,' and his survey extends from Pereda to Ramón Gómez de la Serna, with five main divisions treating of 'The Novel,' 'The Drama,' 'Lyric Poetry,' 'The Essay' and 'Criticism and Scholarship.'"—Ernest Boyd in Bookm

Booklist 22:63 N '25

"The two most undeservedly neglected writers, Pérez de Ayala and Pío Baroja are singled out for special praise, and if Mr. Bell succeeds in sending American readers to the translations of these novelists he will not have lived in vain. Such, indeed, should be the general effect of Mr. Bell's history, for he has written with learning and infectious enthusiasm a book which has more than the advantage of being the first in the field." Ernest Boyd
+ Bookm 62:86 S '25 650w

"Mr. Bell's dicta are by no means final—and indeed he himself disarmingly admits this to be the case—but they are often vigorous and stimulating; and his book contains much valuable information excellently tabulated. The book may, and should, help wake the general reading public to the realization that there are other personalities in Spain today than Benavente, Blasco Ibáñez and Primo de Rivera." Muna Lee

+ N Y Times p6 S 27 '25 1350w

"This book will be valuable as a work of reference. Mr. Bell comes to the work with the breadth of view and the sense of proportion that only scholarship can give."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p838 D 3 '25 200w

BELL, AUBREY FITZ GERALD. Luis de Leon. 394p il $10 Oxford [30s Milford]

B or 92 Leon, Luis Ponce de [25-21414]

"Luis de Leon, the Augustinian friar who held an important chair at the University of Salamanca, represents most completely the Spanish Renaissance. A theologian, a translator and interpreter of the Bible, a philosopher, a moralist, a man of letters and a poet, Luis de Leon is the personification of Spanish science and Spanish art in the greatest century in the history of Spain. It is not to be wondered at, then, that his personality should have attracted the attention of modern scholars and of true lovers of Spanish literature. But in spite of the various monographs that have been written to date concerning this intellectual giant, we did not have until now a book, that, by its strictly historical and scientific method, by its widely distributed erudition and delicate sense of good taste, might be worthy of the immortal author of the 'Noche Serena.'"—Lit R

"Mr. Bell's vivid account of this atrocious persecution is particularly timely in these days of the Scopes trial and the recrudescence of Fundamentalism and Ku Klux Klanism." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 31 '25 800w

"If to the delicacy of style we add the most complete bibliography that has been made to date of Luis de Leon and a knowledge of the Spanish Renaissance such as Bonilla y San Martín, the best Spanish scholar living, might have, we may assert that the work of Aubrey Bell is the sort that forms an epoch in the literature of a people, and its author merits the admiration and applause of every scholar interested in things Spanish." D: Rubio
+ Lit R p2 J1 18 '25 420w

"For its learning and its understanding this volume must remain the authoritative account in English of the great mystic."

+ Nation 121:77 J1 8 '25 30w

"Professor Bell's book is a remarkably good one. It is condensed, well arranged, and very scholarly. As it is much the best biography of this poet and contains some new material, it ought to be translated into Spanish as soon as possible. It is also well produced."

+ Nation and Ath 37:140 My 2 '25 1000w

"Mr. Bell has richly documented almost every page of his fascinating volume with references and brief quotations—which whet our appetite for more. Perhaps he will supply this in a later book, after he has succeeded (as no doubt he will) in awakening very general interest both in Fray Luis' attractive personality, and in the literature and scholarship of his period."

+ New Statesman 25:107 My 9 '25 1200w

"Mr. Bell's study of Fray Luis is full and satisfactory in its accumulation of details regarding sixteenth and seventeenth century Spain." T: Walsh

+ N Y Times p13 Ag 9 '25 200w

"Excellent biography. It is excellent for this reason: it gives the events of Luis de Leon's life in proportion to each other and in proportion to his time."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p367 My 28 '25 1300w

BELL, AUBREY FITZ GERALD. Pilgrim in Spain. 240p il $4 Little [12s 6d Methuen]
914.6 Spain—Description and travel

25-12458

Mr Bell has traveled thru the byways and villages of Spain as well as thru the highways and cities. His travel sketches cover the three cities of Andalusia—Seville, Cordoba and Granada, old and new Castile, Barcelona and the Mediterranean coast, and the strange and little known region of west-central Spain called Las Hurdes.

"A traveller so wise as the author will certainly produce a better book than the average work on Spain, and though it is not a classic the present volume is well worth reading."

+ New Statesman 23:626 S 6 '24 820w

"His knowledge imparts a high flavor of scholarship to the book, but the average reader may be bewildered by pages packed so close with erudite references. Although figures and trappings for a Spanish pageant are brilliantly painted Mr. Bell's spectacle, through some mischance, does not move in life-like performance." Janet Ramsay

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 3 '25 350w

"Mr. Bell has added to his previous well-known studies of Spain a series of desultory jottings which are, as is usually the case with his work, thoroughly readable and interesting."

+ Sat R 138:520 N 22 '24 300w

"Beauty of description and sincerity of interpretation are here, a frank and unsentimental love of the country especially to be prized in something so well suited to be an intending traveler's first book on Spain." G. G. King

+ Sat R of Lit 1:772 My 23 '25 360w

Spec 133:263 Ag 23 '24 350w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 30 '24 1000w

BELL, SIR CHARLES ALFRED. Tibet, past and present. 326p il $8 Oxford [24s Milford]
951.5 Tibet—History. Tibet—Description and travel [25-8252]

"After nineteen years of experience as British political representative in Tibet, Bhutan and Sikkim, Sir Charles gives to the world an exhaustive outline of Tibetan history, and a faithfully drawn picture of this little known Asiatic people, with a fine, clear analysis of their customs, religion, and character. To the student of world politics, especially, this work will prove invaluable, setting forth as it does the problems confronting the Western Powers."—Bookm

"With a knowledge of his subject probably unequalled by that of any other Occidental, master of the languages, familiar with the literatures, sympathetic toward and in the confidence of the peoples among whom he has labored, Sir Charles has written at once a history and an autobiography." S. K. Hornbeck
+ Am Hist R 30:827 JI '25 650w

Booklist 21:374 JI '25

"Remarkable volume. Many writers might well emulate his lucidity of style and scholarly beauty of expression."

+ Bookm 61:493 Je '25 160w

"High-perched Tibet never had a better or more sympathetic interpreter than the author of this absorbing volume. Nor should its quality surprise, for Sir Charles brought to his task not only a love of the studies it involved, but also nineteen years of experience in administrative and diplomatic duties on the Tibetan frontier." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '25 950w

"The whole story is one of the most curious of the minor chapters of modern history; and Sir Charles Bell's version of it is to a great extent the story of an eyewitness or a personal actor, narrated with great modesty, and inspired with a tolerant wisdom that would have bettered more than one episode in our past Asiatic history had it been more in evidence." H. D.

+ Eng Hist R 40:641 O '25 400w

Reviewed by H: K. Norton

Int Bk R p573 JI '25 100w

"Although he writes from the standpoint of British diplomacy, always with an eye toward the balance of international relations, he is manifestly fair-minded, judicial and even sympathetic toward these folk whose ways are so emphatically alien to our own. He is also the author of the only important grammar and dictionary of the Tibetan language." H. L. Pangborn

+ Lit R p8 Je 13 '25 550w

"A very useful book. In its pages the general reader will find rich stores of facts, rather loosely set forth, without pretense of philosophical generalization."

+ Nation 121:309 S 16 '25 350w

"Sir Charles Bell's book is by far the most complete and authoritative account of Tibet that has yet appeared. It shows that he has made admirable use of opportunities such as no other European has ever enjoyed in that forbidden land."

+ New Statesman 24:367 Ja 3 '25 900w

Reviewed by G. L. Harding

N Y Times p19 Je 21 '25 2600w

Reviewed by Janet Rankin

N Y Tribune p7 Je 7 '25 300w

"His is a fine book, sincere, accurate, and very readable: the story of a great trust loyally and intelligently kept." Kenneth Saunders

+ Sat R of Lit 2:136 S 19 '25 750w

"Clear and most suggestive volume."

+ Spec 134:50 Ja 10 '25 700w

"Sir Charles Bell is chiefly concerned with political events in Tibet during the period in which he was so intimately connected with it; but he tells many attractive stories about the country and the people, of which the interest is greatly enhanced by an abundance of excellent illustrations."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p3 Ja 1 '25 1950w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Cruise of the Nona. 329p $4.50 Houghton

828

25-10997

A cruise along the Welsh, Cornish and Devon coasts is the outer framework on which Mr Belloc threads a cruise of his mind—reflections on history and politics, religion, literature and life.

"A brilliant chronicle of the 'adventures and misadventures' encountered in a sailboat, which gives a fresh, vivid impression of the Welsh, Devon, and Cornish coasts, combined with the author's reflections on life, expressed in his vigorous and sometimes bitter opinions on politics, history, science and religion."

+ Booklist 22:21 O '25

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p4 Je 20 '25 1550w

Cath World 121:849 S '25 560w

Reviewed by R: Le Gallienne

Int Bk R p699 O '25 930w

"The author skillfully combines a reflective mood with a sea setting and occasionally lulls one by his very 'atmosphere' into a lazy acquiescence with the wisdom and piffle that mingle in these pages." J. J. Smertenko

+ Lit R p6 N 28 '25 320w

"The pages are breezy enough; the intellectual ballast, however, was very light."

+ Nation 121:337 S 23 '25 50w

"Mr. Belloc is too good and too skilled a journalist not to be able to write still with an appearance of gusto, but the book itself leaves one with a bitter, dusty, gritty taste in the mouth." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 37:207 My 16 '25 1100w

"This book is no book to be read against time, as the hapless reviewer must. It is a book to be browsed over at leisure on first reading, and to stand upon the library shelves handy to take down whenever you want a gust of the sea and Mr. Belloc to blow the cobwebs from your mind."

+ New Statesman 25:169 My 23 '25 1200w

"In 'The Cruise of the Nona' he has woven together nearly all his diverse knowledge, skill and interests, so as to make the most highly Bellocian book he has yet written—a strange farrago of erudition and whimsicality, of deep thinking and deep-sea sailing. It is a simple book because the mind of the man who wrote it is really all of one piece, and it is also remarkably multiplex because Hilaire Belloc, more than any other contemporary writer we can think of, is at once—body and mind and soul—a decidedly compound person with a bewilderingly various experience." Odell Shepard

N Y Times p5 Je 28 '25 1350w

"One could keep on endlessly pulling out plums from this capital book. The choice is enormous. Yet to my grief, there are a few that Mr. Belloc has not included. There are 'those admirable songs which I learned in early manhood upon the Atlantic seas,' to wit, 'The Corn Beef Can' and 'The Tom Cat.' They are of the great songs of this world," says Mr. Belloc, and proceeds to omit them. I, for one, could never forgive him if he had not written the rest of the book." G: F. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p14 O 4 '25 850w

Pratt p28 autumn '25

R of Rs 72:112 JI '25 80w

"He has gathered together the strands of a hundred controversies, and presented us with an apologia which can hardly fail to evoke criticism (since that, no doubt, was part of the author's intention) but which alike from the lucidity of its style and the transparent sincerity of the convictions which it proclaims, must win a tribute of admiration from the most reluctant."

+ Sat R 139:623 Je 6 '25 400w

BELLOC, HILAIRE—Continued

"It is not, as you may guess, a book to take with joy the heart of a young man; but it is an exceedingly ponderable volume for those of 'this our time.' And it is a most revealing book for Bellocians, for the reason that, obliquely, it is very much about Mr. Belloc himself." R. C. Holliday

Sat R of Lit 2:23 Ag 8 '25 1350w

Springf'd Republican p8 F 26 '25 80w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 1000w

"His influence is healthy. There seems to blow through his pages a breeze as inspiring as those he met with in the Nona. There is small need at this stage to add to what has been said of his style; but we can promise the reader that he will here find no falling off in its power, its skill, of its charm."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p312 My 7 '25 1350w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. History of England. 4v v 1, Pagan England, Catholic England; I, The dark ages, B.C. 55 to A.D. 1066. 421p $3.75 Putnam [15s Methuen]

942 Great Britain—History [25-12421]

The general theses of Mr Belloc's very detailed work in four volumes, of which this is the first, are "that religion is the determining force of society, that the inhabitants of this island were never greatly changed in stock by an invasion, that its institutions derive not from an imaginary barbaric German ancestry, but from known and recorded civilization." The first volume deals with pagan England and Catholic England from Julius Caesar's first expedition to the Norman conquest.

"His narrative is clear-cut, forceful, and as dynamic as the thing it seeks to represent. It is written from an unmistakably Catholic bias and contains both major and minor inaccuracies that may discount it as authentic history."

— + Booklist 22:153 Ja '26

"The scholars will miss the liveliness and interest and provocation of this book because of distaste for, or distrust of, its method, and the others will get a false idea of the labors which are involved in an honest effort to attain historical probability, not to speak of truth." J: B. Brebner

— + Hist Outlook 17:35 Ja '26 360w

"Not the most determined of his opponents can deny that he makes the statement of his case absorbingly interesting. To get the full flavour of this first of his four projected volumes on English history one should take it in alternate sips with Green's Short History of the English People. The result may be bewildering, but it will be bewilderment with all the delights of intoxication. At least one of the tasks of the historian, even the dullest of them will probably admit, is to keep History alive, and who so well fitted to do this as someone with style and a point of view and the courage and ingenuity to develop it? Mr. Belloc has all of these. The philo-Teutons, no doubt, are already sharpening their battleaxes on behalf of our Anglo-Saxon ancestry; they can hardly complain that this intrepid gladiator is unworthy of their steel."

New Statesman 25:342 J1 4 '25 1100w

"There is little space for any one event (the battle of Hastings gets about three pages), but Mr. Belloc has a talent for condensation, and at the same time for a telling use of words."

+ Outlook 141:245 O 14 '25 80w

"This is a book to be read and digested with the certainty of much value resulting, and much interest for the historically minded who happen to be Protestants and believers in their Anglo-Saxon ancestors. It is a bad book for Catholics, who will be hurt not helped by its exaggerations; and useful to historians only in so far as it may flip them into self examination. For if Belloc writes with a Catholic bias, previous historians of his periods have undoubtedly suffered from its opposite."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:336 N 28 '25 800w

"Mr. Belloc's point of departure is familiar—the belief that the Roman church is the only basis of a happy civilization—and his purpose in these four volumes is to discomfort heretic historians by proving that English history is one prolonged piece of evidence in its favour. In this volume he sets out pugnaciously upon his task."

— Spec 135:241 Ag 8 '25 400w

"We can truly say that as a story this book has real merits. It is written with the force, skill, and aptness of phrase which the author possesses. It is admirably lucid and very interesting. Mr. Belloc's success is the more remarkable since, general theses apart, he takes a somewhat old-fashioned view of the functions of an historian. . . It is perhaps being over-serious to take Mr. Belloc so seriously. But there is a grave danger lest the unlearned reader, attracted by his style and assured by his magnificent dogmatism, will take him at his word and simply accept his theories as a serious contribution to historical learning. We can assure such readers that the very contrary is the case. The historical agnosticism into which the unsatisfactory nature of the sources of Anglo-Saxon has led many of our modern scholars is depressing enough."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p490 J1 23 '25 2300w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Mr Petre. 276p il $2.50 McBride 25-22114

He did not know where he had come from. He did not know where he was going. He did not know his own name. Suddenly out of chaos emerged a single word—Petre. To his surprise the hotel clerk recognized it with deference and supplied the John K. So he was John K. Petre. A man of affairs, it appeared. Someone with money, and power. The identity thus thrust upon him and thus accepted without choice carried with it responsibilities that harassed Mr Petre's soul. The day of deliverance came. But it could not remove the consequences that followed Mr Petre forever.

Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"'Mr. Petre' has the merit of never being uproariously funny but of setting under way delicious trains of chuckles." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:332 N '25 150w

"It is unquestionably one of the cleverest, most brilliant pieces of satirical writing published within the last decade. It is unceasingly original, absurdly witty, yet at the same time profound in its sardonic presentation of the forces which control the financial preoccupations of civilized man." D. F. Gilman

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 12 '25 1350w

"This is a light yarn, in a way but, like all true comedy, it has its deep, indeed its profound under-current of thought. Bright, clever, stimulating, all these adjectives may be applied to it. Clever it certainly is." C. P.

+ Cath World 122:425 D '25 160w

"Mr. Belloc is thoroughly successful in his satire. This very amusing book is illustrated by Mr. Chesterton with considerable dexterity and, of course, good humor."

+ Ind 115:479 O 24 '25 120w

"Entertaining light novel, in which the illustrations are more original and diverting than the text." H. B.

+ Lit R p3 S 19 '25 220w

Reviewed by H. C. Harwood

Living Age 326:124 J1 11 '25 100w

"'Mr. Petre' is an amusing, but very carelessly constructed satire on the workings of modern finance. . . The book is a mere improvisation, carelessly one-sided in its characterization; the incidents are approximate rather than likely." Edwin Muir

— + Nation and Ath 37:328 Je 13 '25 420w

"In Mr. Petre he has hit upon a most amusing idea, which, as should be, he treats with exuberant inconsequence. The early stages of Mr. Petre's mystification are thoroughly amusing and the later stages are quite neat, but in the middle are vast tracts of comparative dullness of the inexplicable details of business manipulations, for which Mr. Belloc has more appetite than most readers will forgive him for."

+ — New Repub 44:185 O 7 '25 120w

"On Mr. Petre I pounced the moment it came out. Needless to say, it gave me pleasure, not such keen pleasure, perhaps, as his former novels, yet I often rubbed my hands over the characteristic touches that I love."

+ New Statesman 25:223 Je 6 '25 1300w

Reviewed by Rose Lee

N Y Times p6 S 20 '25 1150w

"A diverting novel, pleasantly embellished by Mr. Chesterton's pencil sketches."

+ N Y World p4m S 6 '25 150w

Outlook 141:243 O 14 '25 100w

"Mr. Belloc is at the top of his form in this devastating allegory. He is as witty as ever, and as extravagant." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:621 Je 6 '25 300w

Reviewed by R. C. Holliday

Sat R of Lit 2:210 O 17 '25 580w

"His indictment is not lacking in wit, and his anticipations are not devoid of reason; but the fun is at times a little thin. Mr. Belloc's invention is happier with details than with the main theme; a less conventional idea than loss of memory would have served his purpose to bolder effect. We are not ungrateful, however. Apart from the admirably gentle satire on financial speculation and the aims and abilities of leaders of industry, there is Mr. Petre's contact with the medical profession. His interviews with the two great specialists are admirable little pieces of comedy."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p366 My 28 '25 320w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. The road. 218p $3 Harper [7s 6d Unwin]

625.7 Roads

25-26887

Mr Belloc brings to his essay on the theory and history of the road not only his historical experience and equipment but an imagination which gives more than a touch of romance to his account of "one of the great fundamental institutions of mankind." The first part of the book is devoted to the road in general—its origin, development and influence. The second part deals with the road in history and particularly the English road.

Booklist 22:56 N '25

"A volume which seems to bear a family likeness to the 'Short Rational Discourse, lately presented to His Majesty, Concerning the High-ways of England,' printed 'for a Publick good in the year 1675,' the title page of which serves Mr. Belloc for a frontispiece."

Bookm 62:220 O '25 150w

Cleveland p114 D '25

"Although the spirit of Belloc bursts through the dry disquisition in many irrelevant sallies, there is an architectonic symmetry in this book lacking in most of his work. Eliminating flourishes and flubdub, the author writes a plain narrative concerning the past and the future of roads." J. J. Smertenko

+ Lit R p6 N 28 '25 100w

"No one in our time wields a more trenchant prose and no better prose than his has been devoted to pure description of geography in its artistic and human values."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:228 O 17 '25 280w

Springf'd Republican p14 D 18 '25 520w

BELMONT, PERRY. National isolation an illusion; political independence not isolation; interdependence of the United States and Europe. 631p $4.50 Putnam

327.73 United States—Foreign relations.
United States—Politics and government.
Political parties—United States. Democratic party 25-3730

"The book is largely a political history of the United States, supplemented by an account of recent events, and made more interesting by frequent references to the author's experiences in politics and public life. Of especial importance are Mr. Belmont's account of the electoral commission of 1877, the sessions of which he attended as secretary to Senator Bayard, and the material in the appendix dealing with the author's fight for the publicity of campaign funds and his arguments in favor of giving members of the cabinet seats in Congress. The central theme is an attempt to prove that from the very beginning the interests of the United States have been closely bound up with those of Europe, and that the policy of the Democratic party from the time of Jefferson has been interdependence and not isolation."—Am Pol Sci R

"The usefulness of the book is somewhat reduced by the lack of systematic arrangement and the sudden transitions from one topic to another."

— + Am Pol Sci R 19:422 My '25 180w

"Mr. Belmont reviews our entire history from the time of the formation of the earliest parties; and he goes into such detail and documents his contentions so heavily as to make out a case which, at the very least, definitely challenges attention."

Bookm 61:711 Ag '25 160w

"He has written an unwieldy though interesting volume in which the reader finds himself jerked back and forth in the currents of political history, his attention distracted between the subject of international relations and various side issues in the history of the Democratic Party."

— + N Y Times p12 My 10 '25 620w

Reviewed by H: K. Norton

— N Y Tribune p10 My 10 '25 550w

BELTRAMELLI, ANTONIO. Piccolo Pomi; auth. tr. from the Italian by Leo Ongley. 254p $2 Dutton

25-12735

Piccolo Pomi was a little Italian boy of "six, but nearly seven" who lived with his cross old Aunt Andromache. Pomi was a kind hearted lad, so when he heard of a little girl named Veronella who had no place to sleep and nothing to eat he set out to find her. As the result of that day's adventures Pomi was sent away to the mountains to tend pigs. How Pomi got lost, found the count's little daughter, and earned a happy home for himself and Veronella makes a story which will please small children.

"The emotional effect is excellent. Combined with realism, with the beautiful Italian atmosphere is the light touch of the unreal, of the happy ending of the fairy tale. It is a charming story, beautifully told, to be enjoyed by both children and adults."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '25 120w

"Little Pomi, we are told, was six years old. Children of his age and older will enjoy the story for the charm of its Italian atmosphere and the reality of the daily life of both city and country as reflected in the amusing and pathetic adventures and pastimes of the little boy and the friends he meets on his way through the world."

+ N Y Tribune p6 S 20 '25 220w

"Of course the aunt is impossibly cruel, and Pomi's adventures by day and night are impossibly perilous for a six-year-old to survive. But it's all acceptable in the general makeup of the tale. The translation is sensible and sympathetic, except that in occasional spots the children talk and think too much like little grown-ups;—which may or may not be the translator's doing."

BELTRAMELLI, ANTONIO—Continued

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:283 N 7 '25 220w

"It is delightfully adapted for the entertainment of very little people."

+ Springfd Republican p7a S 20 '25 150w

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Selected articles on capital punishment. (Handbook ser.) 366p $2.40 Wilson, H.W.

343.2 Capital punishment 25-12471

"This volume replaces the compilation on Capital Punishment in the Debaters' Handbook Series, the third edition of which was published in 1917 and is now out of print. The work has been rearranged and brought down to date, the briefs and bibliography enlarged and extended, a limited bibliography on Murder in America, the Conviction of the Innocent, and the Pardon Power added, and a number of changes made in the material reprinted."—Explanatory note

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Selected articles on prohibition; modification of the Volstead law. (Handbook ser.) 380p $2.40 Wilson, H.W.

178.5 Prohibition, Liquor laws 25-4197

This volume deals with the results of national prohibition—its effects, physiological, economic, political and social—and with the Volstead act and its enforcement. Like the other volumes of the Handbooks series the volume includes a debater's brief on each side, a bibliography of the more recent literature on the subject and reprints of the best available material on both sides.

Booklist 21:257 Ap '25

St Louis p122 My '25

Wis Lib Bul 21:85 Mr '25

"An admirable attempt to assemble the evidence on both sides in the case of Wets versus Drys."

+ World Tomorrow 8:56 F '25 80w

BEMAN, LAMAR TANEY, comp. Superpower. (Reference shelf) 89p 90c Wilson, H.W.

621.312 Electric power—plants 24-31627

The development and unification of large scale production and distribution of electric power by the erection of enormous power plants is the subject of this volume in the Reference shelf series. The reprints include Secretary Hoover's address on the public relationship to power development, a statement of the world's present fuel resources, by E. A. Holbrook, an outline of the program of the Giant power survey authorized by Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, and an account of Ontario's hydroelectric power undertaking, by Sir Adam Beck. A bibliography is included.

Booklist 21:261 Ap '25

St Louis p343 S '25

"The articles and addresses which Mr. Beman has selected for reprint are fairly representative of the divergent technical and social points of view from which the problem of giant Power is being approached by engineers and statesmen. Because of the special connotation of the term Giant Power as contrasted with the commercial connotation of Superpower, we should have preferred the first as the title of the book." R. W. B.

Survey 53:774 Mr 15 '25 180w

Wis Lib Bul 21:53 F '25

BENCHLEY, ROBERT CHARLES. Pluck and luck. 294p il $2 Holt

817 25-25874

A merry medley of this and that, reprinted from Life, the Bookman and elsewhere, with illustrations by Gluyas Williams as amusing as the text.

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 6 '26 350w

"We recommend this volume to sad and cheerful alike. It will brighten up the long winter days and nights for any citizen, however atrabilious."

+ Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 180w

Reviewed by Edwin Clark

N Y Times p9 D 20 '25 1450w

"Mr. Benchley has written another funny book. It is funny." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:442 D 26 '25 600w

"A collection of humorous skits which are good-humored, even if the humor is not invariably impeccably good."

+ — Springfd Republican p14 D 18 '25 160w

BENEDICKS, CARL AXEL FREDRIK. Space and time; an experimental physicist's conception of these ideas and of their alteration; with an introd. by Sir Oliver Lodge. 98p $2 Dutton [4s Methuen]

530.1 Space and time. Relativity (physics) [25-15455]

"Discussion of the ideas of Space and Time as developed in Einstein's Relativity Theory, from the point of view of an experimental physicist. Professor Benedicks definitely disputes the validity of Einstein's conclusions and leans strongly to the emission theory of light as opposed to the current undulatory theory."—Publisher's note

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 220w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 29:1195 S '25 600w

Reviewed by E. E. Slosson

Nation 120:438 Ap 15 '25 230w

"Whatever one may think of the author's conclusions, one must admit that this book of some hundred pages contains much that is interesting and suggestive. It can be strongly recommended to any one interested in the logical bases of mechanics and physics."

+ — Nature 115:408 Mr 21 '25 300w

"We think that Professor Benedicks' book is premature. We cannot take much interest in the claims made for a theory which does not yet exist. A comprehensive discussion of the present position of physics may well justify the author in giving us his views as to probable future developments. But Professor Benedicks has not given us that."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p848 D 11 '24 800w

BENEFIELD, BARRY. Chicken-wagon family. 322p $2 Century

25-17118

"Mr. Fippany, who in New England would have been known as 'the tin peddler,' traveled about the South trading tin ware for chickens, until Mrs. Fippany demanded a permanent home and educational advantages for Addie May. The chicken-wagon's progress down Broadway, the final housing of the Fippanys in a deserted engine house and their subsequent family history in New York is related by Jim Pickett, a Texan who graduated from college to the position of traveling tutor to Addie May and played a leading rôle in their rise to affluence."—Cleveland

Booklist 22:115 D '25

"The Chicken-Wagon Family' is romantic nonsense, sublimely careless of reality and yet, in a Dickensian sense, thoroughly real. A combination of Locke and of Barrie, it has charm, pathos, and humor." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:206 O '25 220w

"Tender, whimsical, yet shrewdly keen in its knowledge of human nature." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 12 '25 900w
Cleveland p108 N '25

"Unusual characters and setting, together with a warm, human interest, are likely to make this first novel by a well-known short-story writer very popular."

+ Ind 115:364 S 26 '25 80w

"In Fippany, the chicken-wagon man, Mr. Benefield has created a character who can scarcely escape finding his way to the stage. And if the dramatist does his work as well as Mr. Benefield has done his, the play that will be made from this novel can scarcely fail to catch the popular fancy. But the star part will be Fippany, and not Jim Pickett, or Addie, altho theirs is the romance that binds the story together." I: Anderson

+ Int Bk R p744 O '25 660w

"An unusual story told with considerable originality." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p3 Ag 29 '25 560w

"The pity of it is that a novel which begins with genuine promise—a jolly, whimsical situation, charming characters and a free style—should slump so naturally into the facts and formulas that satisfy the popular sentimental appetite. Judged frankly for what it is, 'The Chicken-Wagon Family' is interesting and well done." L. G. Marshall

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 20 '25 360w

"To meet Jim Pickett is certainly a treat, not only because he is so original but for the plain reason that he is lovable. The 'C. W. F.' certainly will be one of the topics of the coming winter."

+ N Y World p4m S 6 '25 80w

"The latter part is too melodramatic to fit in with the pleasing charm of the beginning. But the end is happy."

+ Outlook 141:289 O 21 '25 150w

"It is a simple, straightforward, well-wrought narrative, with romance and sentiment well-mixed. Its atmospheric conditions are bright and fair, but it does not lack for irony or pursuing tragedy. And the ending is shrewd and deft." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:362 D 5 '25 650w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 220w

BENET, STEPHEN VINCENT. Tiger joy. 119p $1.75 Doran

811 25-19307

Mr Benét's latest volume of verse is made up of four stirring ballads, with some lyrics and sonnets.

"'Tiger Joy' is a great advance; it has all the former élan plus a canny restraint. If there is any recent American ballad more rousing and memorable than 'The Mountain Whippoorwill' or 'The Ballad of William Sycamore' it has not come to this reviewer's notice." L: Untermeyer

+ Bookm 62:496 D '25 250w

"Here is spontaneous poetry. It bursts with gay vitality; and those who read it will respond from the heart rather than the head." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 31 '25 400w
Cleveland p121 D '25

"Mr. Benét is obviously well equipped with the properties of his art. He is sensitive to rhythm and music; he has the swing and vigor of the true singer of ballads; he has a nice discrimination in words, and a strong turn of phrase. On the other hand, he is often affected; his strong writing at times rings false; his deliberate quaintness, his dramatization of the archaic, his assembling of stage ornaments and second-hand jack boots is clever, but somehow empty and unreal."

+ Ind 115:534 N 7 '25 250w

"Stephen Benét is at his best in the ballad form—in his own devised and developed ballad form, that is. And more than once he has given pleasure to the readers of American periodicals with the adroitness of his confessions." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 S 20 '25 1150w

"In these ballads Mr. Benét is at home, and therefore, since he is gifted, an efficient poet. They would have suffered from more loving care; they are refreshing precisely because they have sacrificed almost every poetic virtue to the one virtue which is fitting in their case. In his shorter pieces Mr. Benét is not so fitting or efficient." Mark Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p4 S 27 '25 520w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 141:286 O 21 '25 300w

"The volume presents a wide range of emotion, yet its predominant impression is that behind these pages is a young middle-aged man who can speak profoundly when he desires, but who avoids being solemn by now and then whistling a silvery and arresting tune. The combination is intriguing to say the least." Hervey Allen

+ Sat R of Lit 2:428 D 16 '25 850w

BENET, WILLIAM ROSE, comp. Poems for youth; an American anthology. 512p $3 Dutton

811.08 American poetry—Collections 25-7765

"The poems are arranged in chronological order according to the dates of birth of the poets, beginning with FitzGreen Halleck (1790-1867) and ending with Hilda Conkling (1910—), with a very brief biographical sketch and critical comment for each poet. These comments tell concisely the consensus of opinion about an author's work and present his most distinguishing traits."—N Y Tribune :

"An unusually discriminating selection."

+ Booklist 21:370 J1 '25

"William Rose Benét has accomplished a commendable bit of anthologizing, and has produced a collection which, on the whole, should fulfil its purpose of appealing to young men and women in their late teens and early twenties."

+ Bookm 61:492 Je '25 200w

Boston Transcript p5 J1 11 '25 260w

Dial 79:352 O '25 80w

Reviewed by K. L. Bates

Lit R p5 Je 6 '25 280w

"It gives an excellent survey of the more spirited and lucid examples of American verse."

+ Nation 121:100 J1 15 '25 30w

"The book bristles with facile narrative pieces on incidents of the Civil War, sentimental twit-terings, melodramatic vacuities. The compiler's personal bias is obvious enough. It is unfortunate that he decided to exclude his own productions, which are richer in fantasy, more sonorously rhymed and far less bombastic than most of the ballads of 'comparatively simple and direct appeal' which he has seen fit to offer to the unsophisticated high school seniors and college freshmen for whom his book is intended." Babette Deutsch

— N Y Times p13 My 17 '25 780w

"Generally youth likes anthologies, the larger the collection the better. It likes to roam over wide areas nibbling at this, rejecting that. It likes to explore. And here is an enticing field." G. H. Bussey

+ N Y Tribune p8 My 3 '25 400w

"Although the title indicates that the selection was made for young readers, it is an admirable collection for anybody." Edmund Pearson

+ Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 120w

"I know of no collection that is so likely as Mr. Benét's to tempt the youth of today to read American poetry, past and present, for pleasure, not as a task." G. R. Elliott

+ Sat R of Lit 2:154 S 26 '25 1100w

"The anthology is perhaps most remarkable for its inclusiveness; for no one school is exploited at the expense of another."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 J1 7 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

BENJAMIN, LEWIS S. (LEWIS MELVILLE, pseud.). Beau Brummell: his life and letters. 313p il $7.50 Doran [21s Hutchinson]

B or 92 Brummell, George Bryan [25-6239]

The social path opened to George Bryan Brummell, 1778-1840, when as a youth of sixteen he found favor with the Prince of Wales. He became a great man in society, a power in club-land and an arbiter of fashion. So great was his popularity, with women as well as with men, that not even his final quarrel with the prince could affect his position in society. Ruin came to him thru his passion for gambling and his last years were spent in Calais, in abject poverty. Mr. Melville's biography draws upon Brummell's letters and on the memoirs and correspondence of his contemporaries. There are sixteen illustrations and a collection of verses from his famous Album.

"Life, letters, verses, illustrations, even the exactly appropriate format of the volume, make this book, though in biographical form, a very comedy of manners." S. L. C.

Boston Transcript p5 N 25 '25 750w

"Mr. Melville fashions absorbing books. And this one is no exception." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 D 5 '25 400w

"Mr. Melville's latest biography fails. He has industriously accumulated the most trustworthy material, including several unpublished letters of interest; he has carefully sifted the best testimony from the verbose Captain Jesse's volumes. In short, he has made a book about Brummell. But the English biography of the Beau is not yet written."

+ New Statesman 24:340 D 20 '24 1200w

"This book will presumably take the place of Jesse's as the authority on Brummell. It is a good thing it was written. There is many a worse man in history than magnificent George." C. W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p5 O 25 '25 2000w

"'Beau Brummell: His Life and Letters' is less effective than it should be by the nature of its subject. It is more sympathetic than Jesse's 'Life,' but no more authoritative. It is palpably padded and sometimes repetitious." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 29 '25 1100w

BENJAMIN, LEWIS S. (LEWIS MELVILLE, pseud.). Lady Mary Wortley Montagu; her life and letters (1689-1762). 320p il $5 Houghton [18s Hutchinson]

B or 92 Montagu, Lady Mary (Pierrepont) Wortley [25-22662]

The book presents a fascinating figure of the early eighteenth century. Lady Mary was an unusually gifted woman, and she was by no means unconscious of her gifts. The volume bears ample testimony to the justice of her good opinion of herself as a letter writer. The letters here reprinted from the Everyman library edition have been chosen for their biographical or historical value. They have been amplified by further material prepared by the author to complete his presentation.

Booklist 22:157 Ja '26

Bookm 62:506 D '25 150w

"An uncommonly fascinating biography wherein the writer, while never omitting the shadows of the portrait he presents, never blurs its more numerous high lights." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 3 '25 1900w

"An entertaining, lively book, full of anecdote and reference. Quotations from the heroine's letters are both numerous and well chosen."

+ Ind 115:589 N 21 '25 150w

"The volume is fascinating, as all of Mr. Melville's books of this period and earlier have been. He is an indefatigable searcher, and he presents a mass of material with the lightness and the pertinence of a cultivated biographer who realizes that biography must catch the color and the vigor of life if it is to be somewhat more entertaining than an abbreviated weather report." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p6 O 17 '25 650w

"A misprint or two will creep into the best-regulated volume; but the number in Mr. Melville's exceeds all limits. But when we turn from Mr. Melville to his subject, we almost forget to criticize. By far the larger fraction of the book consists of extracts from Lady Mary herself; and here we have nothing but approval. Here appear in rich profusion her bad Latin, her loose but lively English, her keen and malicious observation, her sharp tongue; her escapades at home and abroad, her quarrels with Pope and others, her terrors lest compromising letters should be published."

+ New Statesman 25:452 Ag 1 '25 1300w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p10 Ja 10 '26 820w

"There is nothing new in his book. It has for a basis Lady Mary's letters, amplified by contemporary comment, and though it adds nothing to history may serve to interest the general reader in a brilliant and eccentric character."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p558 Ag 27 '25 300w

BENNETT, ALFRED GORDON. Forest of fear. 320p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Unwin]

24-25641

The scene of this story shifts from New York's Chinatown to a lonely atoll in the South seas. Beautiful Vanda Hardie, eager to have one more fling before she marries Monte Kilgour, a coming young novelist, visits the notorious Café of the Green dragon in Chinatown. Without warning a fainting spell overtakes her and Yen How, a wealthy Chinaman and Tong chief catches her as she falls. So begins the story of an infatuated Chinaman's pursuit of a white girl, which leads to the South Sea islands. Added to this are the elements of mystery and fear which overshadow the lives of two of the characters.

"The story depends wholly on its exciting adventures and strange denouements. There are certain moments when something of the tensely and nervousness of that strange hectic tropical island creeps into the story, but for the most part the author steadfastly refuses the attempt to make anything real of his tale."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 21 '25 260w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 160w

"It is all a wild absurdity but addicts of the film will find it entertaining."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:780 My 23 '25 160w

"Exciting story, well-constructed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p324 My 22 '25 100w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Bright island. 126p $1.50 Doran

822

25-26327

"Mr. Bennett has imagined the arrival of an aristocratic British airman and his aggressively feminine sister in a fabulous Pacific Island, where Pierrot is king and Harlequin, Columbine and Pantaloon chief dignitaries of a parasitical court, devoted entirely to a ridiculous etiquette and existing sybaritically on the product of sweated labor. The situation is one ingeniously devised as a target of political, social and economic satire. And Mr. Bennett avails himself, with great zest, of the opportunities which he has provided. In relating the tribulations of Caspo—which, of course, is but another name for England—he contrives to deliver his opinions on various outstanding personages and problems of the British Empire."—Lit R

Booklist 21:295 My '25

Cleveland p119 D '25

"The name of the author is sufficient assurance that this extravaganza is a sparkling and entertaining bit of writing. It makes amusing reading and, in the hands of capable actors, ought to provide a capital evening's entertainment in the theatre." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p9 Mr 7 '25 360w

"Mr. Bennett has always revealed himself as a skillful, albeit lightweight, playwright, and 'The Bright Island' is no exception to the rule. Lovers of Bennett will find his engaging and witty dialogue quite as good as usual and his situations as amusing and deftly combined. The satire is bright and gently malicious at times."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 8 '25 680w

"Such a mixture of Pierrots and politics can only be made a palatable full course dinner by an extraordinary cook. Mr. Bennett is not such a cook. The play becomes a bore after one act." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 250w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 100w

St Louis p351 S '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p20 Ja 8 '25 800w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

BENNETT, JESSE LEE, comp. Essential American tradition. 348p $3 Doran

308 United States—Politics and government. United States—Constitution 25-10551

"An anthology of striking and significant passages from our national documents, state papers and the writings and speeches of American statesmen and leaders from 1619 to 1924." (Sub-title) The extracts have been chosen as representing the essential political doctrines and principles of the American people as expressed in the Declaration of Independence and the Federal and state constitutions. The ideas and principles are grouped under such headings as natural law, the social compact, liberalism, the background of the Revolution, contemporary opinion of the Constitution, distrust of government, class differences, etc.

Am Pol Sci R 19:847 N '25 350w

"Interesting and somewhat original." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript pl Je 13 '25 800w

"A reader must possess a certain dogged valor and a high optimism to persevere beyond the publishers' blurb on the jacket of this book. When one reads the chilling sentence—'The true hundred per cent Americanism is here defined,' one's instinct is to give the book away, unread, to some worthy charity. But if the dauntless reader will persevere, he will be happily disappointed. His study is acute and sympathetic. His thesis is closely reasoned." D. R.

+ Ind 114:674 Je 13 '25 1050w

"The book will not be without usefulness for those who have occasion to punctuate or enliven their discourses on public questions with quotations from the great or near great, and Mr. Bennett's own contribution, while given to resounding rhetoric, contains a good deal of shrewd and informing comment on the strong and weak points of the American system, but the work as a whole belongs in the class of books which, if they are to be taken at all, are to be tasted rather than read."

— + Nation 121:310 S 16 '25 180w

Reviewed by C. A. Beard

New Repub 43:269 Jl 29 '25 900w

N Y Times p14 Jl 19 '25 1000w

"It cannot be said that Mr. Bennett's presentation of this thesis is very inspiring, but the thesis itself, as far as it goes, is true enough for the hortatory purpose that the author and compiler apparently has in mind." W. MacDonald

— + N Y Tribune p8 Ag 2 '25 320w

Outlook 140:566 Ag 19 '25 30w

"The volume has some value for reference by the historical scholar, and will also interest general readers who want a commonplace-book of political maxims and reflections, and cannot compile their own. It is full, however, of resounding generalizations and platitudes, and it reveals a less original and clear-cut body of opinion upon the several topics discussed than might be supposed."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:157 S 26 '25 300w

Survey 55:243 N 15 '25 250w

BENNETT, MARGUERITE (MRS ARNOLD BENNETT). Arnold Bennett. 128p il $2 Adelphi co.

B or 92 Bennett, Arnold 25-15698

"When a wife holds the mirror up to nature—and art—in her husband, and looks admiringly at the reflected image, it is a wisely act. . . It is much simpler for the confident male to present himself to the public as he sees himself—and let the dutiful female pretend to hold the mirror. That is what Arnold Bennett has done. The little book illuminates, unsparingly the sphere of the wife of an artist and reveals its rightful limitations."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p6 S 9 '25 1400w

Living Age 325:387 My 16 '25 380w

"Mrs. Bennett has written an interesting and a peculiar book, but she is more interested in the personal habits of genius and in genius than in popularity. No man is a hero to his wife, still less to the reader of his wife's book." Leonard Woolf

— + Nation and Ath 36:777 Mr 7 '25 350w

"Here in the space of 128 small pages in large type, is what every woman ought to know about Arnold Bennett, every word chaperoned—as it were—by Mrs. Arnold Bennett. Nothing could be in more thorough accord with the proprieties. Bennett, as usual, has thought of everything." H. I. Brock

— N Y Times p2 S 27 '25 1700w

"A little book on Arnold Bennett, by his wife, a French lady, has given me great pleasure, and, as a bachelor, great comfort. It is, so far as I know, the first absolutely honest book that any wife has ever written about her husband, during his lifetime or afterward. This Mrs. Bennett has all the peculiar literary virtues of her race; she writes very clearly and she is unblushingly realistic. Moreover, she is authentically female, and does not try to think or write like a man. Thus her little volume rises from the particular to the general. It offers, I believe, a brilliantly vivid and typical picture of the figure that every husband cuts in the eye of every wife." H. L. Mencken

+ N Y World p4m S 13 '25 1150w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. House of Menerdue. 332p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-9823

Excitement came into the tranquil life of Mrs Davenant and her daughter Molly when Robert Davenant, Molly's cousin, invited himself to Menerdue for a quiet holiday. He was a rising young man of affairs, married, but separated from his wife by mutual agreement. Molly and Robert were friends immediately and, before they knew it, lovers. At this juncture, Robert's wife Cynthia proposed resuming their old life together and he felt that he could not refuse. A woman of tact and skill, she succeeded before long in reestablishing herself with her husband and making friends with Molly and her mother, whom she included in her tactful generalship. By degrees she made herself indispensable to her husband, till Molly realized that Robert no longer needed her services and quietly took herself out of the picture.

"The thread of narrative is as placid as it is tenuous. Yet there is a quiet appeal, a far departure from the rush or acute self-analysis wherewith the average modernist would handle the theme. The story is restful and mildly quaint. It purrs along sometimes with a vexing leisure; but it is a leisure which at last begins to exert a Trollopean charm." A. P. Terhune

BENSON, A. C.—Continued

+ Lit R p3 Je 20 '25 380w

"Mr. Benson will add to his reputation with the House of Menerdue, a charming story."

+ Living Age 325:649 Je 20 '25 420w (Reprinted from Daily Telegraph)

"Mr. Benson is refreshingly old-fashioned. His people are ordinary and his situations unusual. The conversation, good essay English, is as unreal and as explicit as the characters. There is a melodramatic clergyman in whom is incarnated the idea of spiritual combat with the flesh. But in spite of all this, there is in the novel a tradition of thoughtfulness which one cannot but respect." Edwin Muir

— + Nation and Ath 37:79 Ap 18 '25 40w

"The book meanders along with a great deal of conversation and more than a little letter-writing. Its pace in fact makes that of our ancient and proverbial friend, the snail, seem nothing less than a gallop. Yet some of these conversations are well done, and there are some graceful pen-sketches of scenery."

— + N Y Times p9 My 10 '25 750w

"There is in the 'House of Menerdue' a 'sincerity almost irksome. This, because it comes so close to pomposity. And because it is expended on a subject which, though once it might have, now no longer merits such grandiose treatment. There may be other favorable qualities, but they do not come readily to mind. The treatment of the problem is so exceedingly old fashioned, so annoyingly stodgy. . . Mr. Benson has missed the opportunities of his age. He speaks in outmoded terms. . . in terms of self-sacrifice, of nobility, of ethics, of the church. He is anciently rhetorical." L. L. Hess

— + N Y Tribune p10 Je 21 '25 620w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 50w

"Mr. A. C. Benson provides, not perhaps for the first time, an almost embarrassing blend of stuff freshly and naturally observed with the formal and the conventional." Gerald Gould

Sat R 139:363 Ap 4 '25 180w

"In his new novel, A. C. Benson shows once more that, in the ordinary novelistic sense, he is not a constructor. He does not mind lingering when he ought to be dramatic and swift; his connexions are often dry and summary. However, it is not his intention to write a well-constructed novel, but to indulge in the reflective illustration of a sentimental situation and to draw at length the portraits of some characters. This he does well, in his leisurely way, with sympathy and grace and humour."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Ap 2 '25 500w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Alan. 356p
$2 Doran [7s 6d Unwin]

25-6166

Alan is a middle aged writer of pompous periods whose muse is spent. Agnes, his young wife, has been his faithful amanuensis—and nothing more—for fifteen years. The book is filled with his monologues, whether in the form of conversation or labored dictation. It is something of a break when a youthful cousin enters the household. With great propriety and restraint Tim and Agnes acknowledge their love for one another, and wait for the inevitable to bring them together.

"The truth is that we are so spoiled by the flaming fiction we read today that we get to the point where Mr. Benson's careful excursions to the edges of indiscretions do not stir the cooler waves of our emotions." I. W. L.

— Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 760w

Reviewed by V. R. Bowker
Int Bk R p549 Jl '25 280w

"This is a very fine specimen of a Benson book, and that is saying a good deal." Margaret Widdemer

+ Lit R p3 Je 20 '25 700w

Nation and Ath 36:276 N 15 '24 150w

"The subject of Alan is good, and none the worse for being an old one. The spirit that Mr. Benson so brightly and urbanely, albeit rather shallowly, expresses, sheers away instinctively from anything like tragedy. Its substitute is sentiment, but in that vein Mr. Benson does not sin overmuch, and when he indulges it his tongue is so obviously in his cheek that we do not wince." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:268 D 6 '24 270w

"Alan' is a fine study in egoism, but the reader has to plod through considerable dry reading to get at the true worth of the story. Mr. Benson is very verbose in his style."

+ N Y Times p16 My 3 '25 300w

"It is seldom that one meets with a book whose characters are so far removed from reality as to seem ridiculous and ludicrous. Alan talks, off hand, like a professor reading from a time-worn lecture."

— N Y Tribune p16 Je 7 '25 260w

Outlook 141:356 N 4 '25 350w

"The book fails to assume life; it is far too wordy and undramatic. . . What Mr. Benson required to show up his egotist was not scene after scene in Alan's workshop, but a few sharp incidents, a few revealing situations, a few clipped studies of the characters at interplay. What he achieved was a book as dull as one of Alan's own."

— Sat R of Lit 1:827 Je 13 '25 300w

"The theme is a little slender for a full-length novel, and the author himself appears to weary of the subject and cuts his way ruthlessly through his entangling cobwebs so as to have his heroine settled happily by the end of the book."

— Spec 133:996 D 20 '24 70w

"Though one does not expect Mr Benson to be deep, one does expect him to be clever; and this book is not clever. . . Mr Benson has done not a first-class, but a very fair job."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 350w

"If the moral side of the comedy had been the leading side, as, for instance, in Anne Douglas Sedgwick's 'Tante,' there would have been more power in the representation, as well as more truth; unfortunately Mr. Benson has yielded to the temptation of using an author's knowledge of specifically literary life as a basis of comedy. This life is not generically comic nor tragic in itself, and in this novel Alan Graham is too incredible to be tragic and too remote from humanity to be comic."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p706 N 6 '24 570w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Colin II. 308p
$2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-16490

Colin I made a bargain with the devil—his soul in exchange for wealth, prestige and the power to gratify every whim. Several generations later, Colin II renews the unholy pact. He binds himself to hate love and to love hate, and maliciously carries out his contract. He kindles affection only to kill it. Against the two who love him most, his wife and his son, this savage warfare is most relentless. Dennis is like his father, handsome as a young god, and like his mother incapable of evil. All the satanic forces in the father's heart compel him to attempt the moral perversion of the son. The final scene in the book seems a repetition of the visitation of Colin I but the outcome is far different.

Boston Transcript p5 D 19 '25 450w

"Mr. Benson weakens the effect of his strange tale through a constant reiteration of the Satan legend; the book assumes the heights of satanic fantasy without touching the poetics of fantasy. Nevertheless, "Colin II" is a mysteriously fascinating book, and provocative." C: M. Purdy

— + Int Bk R p818 N '25 750w

"The novel is written in that pleasant style so familiar to Mr. Benson's readers." L. M. Field

+ Lit R p2 D 12 '25 450w

Nation and Ath 37:736 S 19 '25 150w

"If one could grant the possible existence of a human being so utterly and coldly evil as his Lord Yardley, it would have to be admitted that his portrayal of the man and his deeds is a graphic, skillful, even brilliant performance. But Colin II is so impossible in his alliance with the powers of evil that he is beyond belief. Mr. Benson knew that he would be and in order to make him plausible he had to have recourse to the legend of compact with the devil. And so the very foundation of the fictional structure is a fantasy that does not harmonize with the modern setting and the realistic treatment."

— + N Y Times p24 O 4 '25 500w

"A skillful and interesting story." L. G. Marshall

+ N Y Tribune p13 O 18 '25 450w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Sat R of Lit 2:192 O 10 '25 360w

Spec 135:723 O 24 '25 180w

"Mr. Benson would be impressively emotional, but only from a desperate lover of lurid lords will he draw a tear."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p544 Ag 20 '25 500w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Mother. 248p il $3.50 Doran [10s 6d Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Benson, Mary (Sidgwick) (Mrs Edward White Benson). Benson family

25-23841

In this companion volume to "Our family affairs" Mr Benson continues his intimate record of family life, grouping his recollections about the figure of his mother.

"Mr. Benson writes quietly, with good taste, and with a wholesome, non-sentimental respect for his subject matter."

+ Booklist 22:158 Ja '26

"The book stands as a document of courage as well as a most interesting description of the growth of the creative spirit in its author."

+ Bookm 62:614 Ja '26 160w

"Mr. Benson's task is unusual, for he is dealing throughout this story with notable persons. One is likely to miss the tact which mingles with his frank intimacy, just as one might neglect to realize the deep personal tenderness which plays so large a part in his power to make of this intimate biography a revealing tribute worthy his mother. It is a very beautiful and tender piece of writing which he has done." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 14 '25 1450w

N Y Times p21 Ja 3 '26 450w

"Perhaps the most outstanding quality of Mr. Benson's picture of his mother is its insistence upon her humanity. Probably this was one of those rare and happy instances in which a vigorous personality found its way into a current which flowed with the times." Mary Ross

N Y Tribune p8 D 27 '25 1100w

Sat R of Lit 2:380 D 5 '25 280w

"Mr. Benson's book about his mother—and himself—is as interesting as it is frank."

+ Spec 135:839 N 7 '25 1000w

"In the greater part of 'Mother' Mr. E. F. Benson rises above his mannerisms. It is as though the theme were a tonic, a challenge to him to do a little better than his best."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p692 O 22 '25 1150w

BENSON, STELLA (MRS J. C. O'GORMAN ANDERSON). Little world. 306p il $2.50 Macmillan

910 Voyages and travels

25-19290

Miss Benson has traveled pretty much everywhere. She has seen all that the average tourist sees and a great deal more. These unusual sketches of places here and there all over the world whether along the beaten path or far from it, are written from her own strikingly original point of view and in her own richly humorous vein.

"Written with amazing and stimulating verve—even where the ground is most familiar."

+ Booklist 22:155 Ja '26

"Description in her hands is poetry, but she is too good a novelist ever to fall into any orgies of description. She paints with light suggestive strokes." Blair Niles

+ Bookm 62:211 O '25 650w

Cleveland p114 D '25

"This is a rather confused but delightful book. Miss Benson's fascination lies in her unexpectedness."

+ Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 100w

"Miss Benson has caught worlds—worlds of things and persons—and her worlds are as lovely as anybody's worlds we've read about in a long, long time." Virginia Stanton

+ Lit R p4 O 31 '25 250w

Reviewed by Robert Graves

Nation and Ath 38:184 O 31 '25 1000w

"Where Stella Benson lives nobody knows. There are people in the world who claim to have met her; and in this volume she refers to her husband. Well, mermaids used to marry mortal men, and no doubt other spirits of earth and fire and water may do the same; for we refuse to believe that Stella Benson is mortal. If she is, it would make us too bitterly ashamed of our negligences, our laziness, our spiritual cowardice, our disgusting bondage to use and wont, to time, to the need for comfort, food, pocket-money and home."

New Statesman 26:212 N 28 '25 950w

N Y Times p3 O 25 '25 250w

"Stella Benson skims the surface and yet there is more of revelation in the brush of her passing wings than in many ponderously pretentious volumes." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 25 '25 550w

"The whole book is an expression of an original temperament and a somewhat wry but delightful humor, and her own drawings reveal an unexpected and striking talent." Earle Walbridge

+ Outlook 141:448 N 18 '25 400w

"Have no fears that 'The Little World' is not interesting and well-written and clever and alive. Stella Benson is never, in any of these respects, a disappointment; she is too expert a journalist to fail the readers who for her sake alone will wander through India and China, and go across the American continent, and touch Africa, and swelter in Aden."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:364 D 5 '25 500w

"A colourful, alluring book."

+ Spec 135:659 O 17 '25 850w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p753 N 12 '25 1050w

BERARD, SAMUEL JOHN, and WATERS, EVERETT OYLER. Elements of machine design. 323p il $2.50 Van Nostrand [10s Blackie]

621 Machinery—Design

24-28588

"Intended for students in technical schools and for young draftsmen preparing themselves as designers. The purpose is to fill the gap between engineering drawing and advanced machine design."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:164 Mr '25

BERAUD, HENRI. Lazarus; tr. by Eric Sutton. 187p $2 Macmillan

25-7674

Jean Mourin, victim of an automobile accident in which his wife had been killed and he himself very seriously injured, regains consciousness after the lapse of sixteen years, during which time, under the name of Gervais, he has been carrying on the trade of a tailor. Mourin was a man of great refinement of manner and a musician of considerable talent. This other self, Gervais, had shown himself to be a very ordinary man with no musical taste whatever. The tragedy of the story lies in the effort of Mourin to recover his past and in the fear of again losing his identity in that of Gervais. Overwhelmed by the utter loneliness of a life which has no reality save in the memory of past happiness, and haunted continually by the fear of this other self, he loses consciousness once more, and madness returns upon him.

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '25 400w
Cleveland p123 D '25

"A curious and somewhat morbid tale that stretches credulity to the breaking point and then clears it all up in the orthodox way. Not a very striking book."

— Ind 114:423 Ap 11 '25 50w

"The author's capacity as a neuropsychiatrist is considerable; in his power to evoke the fantastic, he out Poes Poe." H. A. J.

+ Lit R p9 My 29 '25 160w

"M. Béraud does not seem to have been sufficiently under his own spell, for his effect is built up by little pieces, piece after piece, each one faithful, vivid, and all of them together labored, uninspired. The story progresses with the inexorable pace of a moving platform which receives, at exact intervals, another small load of incident or detail." J. Eversharp

— New Repub 43:351 Ag 19 '25 200w

"'Lazarus' is a story that would have delighted Poe—which Poe, one might almost say, forgot to write. It is gloom, pathos and terror unrelieved, and is only for readers able to relish such redoubtable fare. But to them it can be recommended whole-heartedly. No more powerful story of a dual personality has appeared since the vogue of 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.'" H. L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 29 '25 780w

"The French have a positive genius for constructing stories of this kind, and 'Lazarus' is as thrilling and eerie as the best."

+ N Y Tribune p7 Je 21 '25 400w

"An extremely singular, powerful, and fascinating study of a double personality and of psychopathic possibilities. It is gloomy, but is well told and has a startling surprise in its conclusion."

+ Outlook 140:303 Je 24 '25 30w

"An extremely deft piece of work, but I am prejudiced against it at the outset, and the prejudice is strengthened by the conclusion." Gerald Bullett

— + Sat R 140:215 Ag 22 '25 200w

"The data are presumably scientifically accurate, and the victim's strange mental wanderings are described with some elaborateness; yet the story itself is not at all fascinating. At most it unpleasantly prods the reader's curiosity, but at no time does its strangeness make the book the 'powerful romance' claimed by the blurb."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:811 Je 6 '25 320w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p465 J1
9 '25 300w

BERCOVICI, KONRAD. Marriage guest. 285p $2 Boni & Liveright

25-20828

Against the colorful background of New York's East side the author draws the vigorous portraits of Anton Zwenge, the violin repairer; of his wife, who betrays the old world in her ambition for the new; of Karl, the diffident musician of great talent and little means; of George, the hustling contractor; and of Greta who at nineteen had too little patience. Greta marries George, with Karl in her heart. Only by evoking Karl's loved image is she able to bear her husband's caresses. When her child is born she thinks of it not as her husband's but as Karl's. About this unusual situation the story revolves.

Booklist 22:115 D '25

"Perhaps the finest story which Gargantuan Gotham has ever produced is 'The Harbor,' by Ernest Poole. Taking the text and disregarding for a moment the texture a book which might well take its place along with 'The Harbor' is 'The Marriage Guest.' But it seems to us to be loosely constructed, weakly conceived, unpolished, in the rough. We do not mean that it is poorly written—at times it comes up to the tales in 'Iliana' for beauty. But there is something lacking in the style. Behind these faults, these irritations, there is a motive power of sincerity. He has written a novel of the melting pot with the cover off and the souls writhing within the cauldron in plain view." K. Schrieffesser

+ — Boston Transcript p3 S 26 '25 1200w

"The book is not particularly convincing."

— Ind 115:424 O 10 '25 120w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

Int Bk R p43 D '25 400w

"The novel has vigorous, exalted moments, and the figures involved are clearly drawn and certainly deeply felt. The marriage guest motif, the spiritual embodiment of the jilted Karl, however, belongs in another story—a short story, a vague and glamorous short story. A story not planned to present a period, a conflict of ideals and changing lives. It obtrudes and retards the movement; it needlessly distorts the picture. It is the flaw for us in the generally fine texture of truth and beauty which Mr. Bercovici's novel achieves." Walter Yust

+ — Lit R p3 S 19 '25 400w

"Mr. Bercovici is successful only when he writes of his own Rumania and his gypsies. It was bad judgment for him to venture in his latest book, 'The Marriage Guest,' into the field of American life, where he must bear comparison with Dreiser and with Sherwood Anderson." Angus Burrell

— Nation 121:680 D 9 '25 500w

"Mr. Bercovici's chronology is guilty of such ingenious anachronisms as bringing within the one year 'Alexander's Ragtime Band,' the shimmy, the 'Sweet Mama' songs, the first subway, the bridge at Delancey Street and the last of the horse cars. But much more than this would be forgiven for his clean, driving narration, his powerfully conceived and fully dimensioned characters and the mingled pathos and humor of his situation."

+ — N Y Times p8 S 20 '25 750w

"The great theme, our own familiarity with the phenomena that are basic to it, and Mr. Bercovici's fluent, vigorous articulateness would seem sufficiently attractive in themselves to require no such tawdry popularizing as this utterly undistinguished love affair gives them." J. J. Smertenko

+ — N Y Tribune p13 Ja 3 '26 720w

"Before Mr. Bercovici is done it is clear that the title must be applied to the reader rather than to the characters; like the listener in Coleridge's ballad, one is held under a spell until Bercovici has finished his yarn." J. W. Crawford

+ N Y World p4m S 27 '25 720w

"Mr. Bercovici's short stories have been so brilliant, so rarely otherwise than completely satisfying, that it would be a pleasure to welcome his first novel with undiluted praise. Praise indeed it deserves. But the pivotal theme of the story is inherently repulsive, and would remain so even were Mr. Bercovici more reti-cent in dealing with its disagreeableness than he has unfortunately felt it necessary to be."

+ Outlook 141:289 O 21 '25 200w

"In the unusualness of its complications, this love story is original, just as it is frequently poignant and intense; and it closes on a note which, superficially at least, has great power. But we do not think the love story equals Mr. Bercovici's story of the city in which it takes place."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:291 N 14 '25 380w

"The story has power and verisimilitude in its delineation of conservative Germans in a strange environment; but it is marred by the absurdities."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 9 '25 220w

"Konrad Bercovici in The Marriage Guest has drawn a delicate and sympathetic picture of the effects of economic change upon one of New York's immigrant colonies, but it is not the outward facts of poverty and wealth which interest him; it is those subtler inner histories bound up in humanity's attempts to adjust itself to environment." Walter Millis

+ Survey 55:310 D 1 '25 390w

BERCOVICI, KONRAD. On new shores. 302p il $4 Century

325.73 Immigrants in the United States.
United States—Foreign population 25-24664

Scattered thruout the United States, North, South, East and West the traveler comes upon little colonies of immigrants that have retained their national integrity in the land of their adoption and remain fragments of the old world intact within the new. Mr Bercovici has visited one after another of these distinct racial groups, and has found each to be unaffected by transplantation, unaltered in language and custom. His book describes many of these alien centers and evaluates their contribution to American life.

Booklist 22:142 Ja '26

"None of it is dry. Every line in the book is vivid with the color that we are sure the author himself sees wherever he happens to glance, and pulsing with the tender compassion that he feels toward mankind, especially the new comer to a strange country." L. H. Guyot

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 10 '25 1550w

"Although an occasional paragraph sounds like a textbook in sociology, the book is full of color and romance."

+ Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 80w

Reviewed by C. H. Grattan

Int Bk R p43 D '25 800w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

N Y Times p23 D 27 '25 750w

R of Rs 72:555 N '25 150w

"'On New Shores' undoubtedly will be used as outside reading for college students who will forget their text books in its perusal. A copy might well be in the hands of every literate citizen." A. M. MacLean

+ Sat R of Lit 2:376 D 5 '25 400w

Springf'd Republican p10 N 3 '25 250w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. Monkey puzzle. 311p $2.50 Bobbs [7s 6d Collins]

25-14666

Mr Beresford's book is written about two theses—that the artist needs a spiritual affinity to inspire his genius and that only the truly free are untouched by evil. Brenda Wing, the exquisite and spiritually intuitive young wife of the village squire discovers that she is possessed of a peculiarly potent influence over the creative power of a poor young artist. Her husband, who trusts her, looks on and tries to understand, but to the gossip mongers, Brenda's visits to Abby Mattocks and the kiss that she is plainly observed to have allowed him offer abundant opportunity for scandal. Together they defy the tongues of the gossips and Brenda continues her administrations to genius, only to come up herself against the blank wall of her inability to help Abby without a greater gift of herself than she is prepared to make. So he is driven back to his drugs. The whole thing is a monkey-puzzle.

Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Bookm 62:214 O '25 120w

"He is a good story teller who knows his characters and his setting, who is just a little bit clever, and who writes in this instance a novel that will make a very pleasant evening pass a little too quickly." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 1100w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"The chief merit of the novel lies in its portrait of the thoroughly sophisticated, fascinating Brenda, the wife of the squire. Her personality is delicately individual, and her story is well worth reading." Sidney Shultz

+ Int Bk R p745 O '25 360w

"Mr. Beresford's novel is written, in the main, with a persuasiveness so logical and compelling that one is reluctantly conscious, at the close, of minor flaws in its substance which slightly impair the story's soundness as a whole. A book for the leisurely and thoughtful reader, written with an eloquent and profound restraint, it is worthy of a place among the best of Beresford novels." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 O 3 '25 260w

"An excellent story as well as an interesting psychological document." J. W. Sydenham

+ Living Age 325:696 Je 27 '25 150w (Reprinted from Empire Review)

"One feels as one reads that it is always the desire to demonstrate something that decides the turn of the story, the reactions of the characters; and once one feels that, one cannot take the novel seriously. The art with which Mr. Beresford conceals all this is consummate; he does all that can be done with an essentially false form. The book is not free from sentimentality, as very few novels can be which, ostensibly presenting a picture of life, wish to prove something. Mr. Beresford's artist is very adroitly done, but to see how sentimental he is one has only to compare him with a really admirable sketch." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 36:816 Mr 14 '25 450w

"The signs that Mr. Beresford's work is not really à these, that it comes, such as it is, from a genuine adventure, that he is trying to state a moral problem in the creative way, are, to my sense, infallible. It is as if his vision were too big for his powers as executant. Yet he is a good executant, and will therefore do what he can, and what will pass current in the market place. In surface texture this book is lighter and more varied than its predecessors." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:719 Mr 28 '25 700w

"Let nobody who does not like philosophy be frightened away from the book by the application of its tractarian quality. In spite of the title, which requires an elaborate explanation to fit it to the book, the fact is that we have here a very entertaining and exceedingly well-written story." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 9 '25 1450w

"He has analyzed human nature until he has lost, first, his love for it, then his understanding of it, and, lastly, his compassion for it. As an amusing, even as an absorbing tale, this novel is to be recommended; but with the author's talent, his ability to use his mother tongue, and his inventiveness, it is a sorry proof of misspent gifts." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ag 30 '25 1250w

"The novel, as a whole, gives an effect of slightness, and because of this slightness it lacks power. But the tale is a dramatic exhibition of the evil power of gossip, and its interest is unflagging from beginning to end." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p3m Ag 16 '25 550w

BERESFORD, J. D.—Continued

"The Monkey Puzzle" is the most carefully thought out and humanly interesting novel Mr. Beresford has given us for a long time." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:98 S 16 '25 160w

"The story, purely as a story, is good; far the best that Mr. Beresford has given us for years. Though I do not believe in the artist for a moment, and believe in the squire's wife only far enough to find her dull, I recognize in the squire himself, in the vicar and the vicar's wife, and above all in poor Mrs. Priestley, Mr. Beresford's old creative touch; and the events are marshalled with a skill equal to that displayed in 'God's Counterpoint.' The way in which the unclean suspicions of the village gossips fester, and achieve tumescence and burst, is a masterly study in the sordid; but the force and fineness of Mr. Beresford's mind suffice to ensure that sordidness shall not gain more than that superficial victory which the vanity of seasons and events affords." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 139:305 Mr 21 '25 450w

"The Monkey Puzzle" will have paens sung in its honor as long as a judge of good literature has breath to utter its praises. . . Here is a story more powerful in its presentation of painful, overwhelming futility than Dostoevsky's 'Idiot,' yet it never disarranges the punctilious combination of trivialities which constitutes the normal course of English country life. There is no undefined craving, no muddled abstraction, no impotent frenzy; there is poise and certainty and good taste." J. J. Smertenko

+ Sat R of Lit 2:39 Ag 15 '25 750w

"While the husband and his wife are puppets in a discussion rather than vital creatures, the novel displays a quiet intensity in narrative and in the portrayal of psychological environment."

+ — Spring'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 300w

"The upshot is that every personality, whether a gossiping vicar's wife or a liberal-minded Brenda, is a monkey puzzle, a thing bristling with spikes which you touch at your peril. Mr. Beresford works the whole thing out with his usual ingenuity and restrained grace. The characters are drawn with a sure clarity, especially that of the egotistical artist. But the criticism most obviously to be made is that the expository element is too prominent. Brenda especially, for all her 'intuitions,' sometimes talks to her husband like a psychological treatise."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p154 Mr 5 '25 400w

BERKMAN, ALEXANDER. Bolshevik myth (diary 1920-1922). 319p $3 Boni & Liveright
947 Bolshevism—Russia. Russia—Politics and government 25-8806

The diary of the two years' stay in Russia of the anarchist leader, who was deported from America on the same boat with Emma Goldman is, like her recent book, a record of disillusion. "Terror and despotism," he writes, "have crushed the life born in October. The slogans of the Revolution are foresworn, its ideals stifled in the blood of the people. Dictatorship is trampling the masses under foot. The Revolution is dead; its spirit cries in the wilderness."

Booklist 21:374 Jl '25

Bookm 61:709 Ag '25 320w

Boston Transcript p3 My 9 '25 250w

Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 120w

"There is nothing new in the volume. The world had either known or guessed all that Berkman tells. The value of his book, if any, is in its pictures of a shattered country, whipped to its knees by a handful of Red adventurers." C. M. Morrison

+ — Lit R p5 S 26 '25 220w

Reviewed by Jerome Davis

New Repub 43:213 Jl 15 '25 60w

N Y Times p13 Ap 26 '25 80w

Reviewed by H: Alsberg

N Y Tribune p5 Ap 26 '25 900w

"His recital of official idiocies, graft, murders, is vivid, but hardly new." P. F. Sifton
N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 200w

"Mr. Berkman was brought into contact with most of the chief actors of the Russian scene and his territorial range of observation was considerable. He has given us a well-written, vivid, pictorial, and horrible record, which circumstantially bears out the impression entertained by most of us."

Outlook 140:406 Jl 15 '25 180w

St Louis p361 S '25

"He who wants to know the inner life of the Russian Revolution, the real pictures of its leaders, the manner of behavior of many foreign 'labor' delegates and notables in Russia, at last, he who wants to read something 'adventurous and thrilling': he will find a great deal in this remarkable book." Pitirim Sorokin

+ Sat R of Lit 2:237 O 24 '25 300w

BERMAN, LOUIS. Personal equation. 303p ll $2.50 Century

612.4 Glands, Ductless. Personality. Endocrinology 25-8858

Dr Berman discusses the glands of internal secretion and their influence upon life and character. Are we gland-controlled marionettes? he asks. The answer apparently is yes unless, by a proper application of the increasing knowledge of what the scientist calls the chemistry of temperament we learn to control the glands which control us. The author points out that here lies the solution of the personal equation.

Booklist 22:56 N '25

Bookm 62:352 N '25 160w

"Better than character analysis, this newer study, but we think that no matter what efforts to popularize the subject are made, the doctor as specialist will be the only trustworthy analyst in future perspective."

Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 120w

J Home Econ 17:669 N '25 100w

"Dr. Berman has cracked the shell of this difficult subject and has given an easy access to its meaty center. He has taken an absorbing theme, and by gradual stages has made easy of assimilation that which was previously hard to digest." Dr Martin Ross

+ Lit R p6 D 19 '25 400w

Reviewed by L: C. Johnson, M.D.

N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 550w

"Dr. Berman is far ahead of modern science, so far ahead that some scientists cannot see him at all. Perhaps this is jealousy. And, then again, perhaps it isn't."

Outlook 140:195 Je 3 '25 40w

"Dr. Berman is a skilful popularizer and is under the temptation of his gift to make telling statements that heighten the color-scheme of his picture. Those who follow his personally conducted tour will 'get off' at different stages of the journey; and biologists and psychologists alike, if of critical temper, may discredit the entire enterprise." Joseph Jastrow

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:407 D 12 '25 900w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p774 N 19 '25 150w

BERNARD, LUTHER LEE. Instinct; a study in social psychology. 550p $3.60 Holt

158 Instinct. Social psychology 24-28005

"This is an investigation of the relative importance of instinct and habit—of the inheritance and the environmental factors—in the development of social institutions and social control. It has been undertaken with the assumption that the proper determination of this question has very great significance for the development of both a sound social theory and an effective social policy."—Introd.

"The book is very valuable and will for a long time be an authoritative monograph on the points covered, more important perhaps for its destructive contribution than for any alternative consideration, which it was not primarily the author's intention, apparently, to set forth. . . But the language is the language of absolute and separate types of forces, and the individual is thought of as the result of the interplay of two forces, the heredity and the environment, with the environmental forces predominating. It seems there is great need for careful thinking and careful writing just here." Ellsworth Faris

+ Am J Soc 30:600 Mr '25 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 D 27 '24 500w

"Professor Bernard's book is a very useful antidote for the type of educational and social psychology which has been confusing teachers through over-emphasis on instincts." C: H. Judd

+ El School J 25:467 F '25 420w

Reviewed by J. R. Kantor

Int J Ethics 35:429 Jl '25 1250w

"As an environmentalist, Bernard has rendered psychology a service in helping to bury some of the earlier speculative conceptions of instinct; it is regrettable that he did not completely reject the instinct-habit dichotomy, and thus clear the way for an unprejudiced experimental study of development." H. E. Jones

+ J Philos 23:20 Ja '26 800w

"Mr. Bernard reduces human nature to a few unimportant reflexes plus a mass of nebulous and unshaped nerve tissues out of which society makes whatever personality it pleases. It is an absurd conclusion. It is eighteenth-century utopianism all over again. It is a rejection of the whole contribution of biological evolution in order to join hands with the discredited rationalists of a pre-scientific age." F. H. Hankins

— Nation 121:238 Ag 26 '25 680w

"One wishing to acquaint himself with the literature on instinct, and the present stage of the controversy will find this volume valuable. But those who are looking for a solution, must continue to wait and hope." L. A. White

+ New Repub 42:352 My 20 '25 200w

"Except that he has made a useful summary of current theories, and has reminded us that 'inherited' means inherited at conception and not at birth, we are bound to say that Professor Bernard seems to us to leave the problem very much where it was."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p875 D 17 '25 720w

BERNHARDT, SARAH. Art of the theatre; tr. by H. D. Stenning. 224p $3 Dial press [7s 6d G. Bles]

792 Theater. Acting [25-11716]

"During the very last months of her life Sarah, the irrepressible, began the dictation of a book about her art and got it far enough along so it could be put into shape after her death and published. It has now been translated into English and furnished with a preface by James Agate. Except for some specific instructions on make-up and voice production, the book as a manual for actors consists chiefly of the following advice: Be born with personal charm and then work like the devil."—N Y Tribune

"Lively, unconventional chats, illustrated with anecdotes and reminiscences from personal experience, which will be found interesting and entertaining, but unimportant from a literary viewpoint or as a handbook of the theater."

+ Booklist 22:18 O '25

"This little volume, which really contains a good deal of valuable if not always particularly fresh information, is especially interesting as a reflection both of the views and personality of one of the most famous actresses of modern times. There can be no doubt that it is, in the main, the voice of Sarah herself, although the matter in it has been selected and rearranged by Marcel Berger, from a mass of occasional and disconnected notes dictated to her secretary as the spirit moved her. The style and spirit are sufficient proof of their essential genuineness. In the vivacity, shrewdness, frankness and complete self-confidence of the comment one can easily recognize the speaker." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p2 Ap 25 '25 1050w

"The Divine One, marvelous technician, sensitive artist that she was, also was a bit of a fraud—and enjoyed it. One reads her book, at times, with the salt cellar handy. She is at her best, perhaps, in her chapter on the relative merits of Racine and Corneille. For the latter's female characters she has only contempt, and her reasons are piquant. Many will find them cogent."

N Y Tribune p12 Ap 12 '25 470w

"Anecdote and reminiscence come in to enliven and adorn the text, and the more disorderly and vagrant the argument becomes the more one likes it."

+ Sat R 138:576 D 6 '24 500w

"There is no doubt that half a dozen eminent young actresses in London to-day would be the better for a very humble study of what Sarah Bernhardt has to say." A. Williams-Elis

Spec 134:468 Mr 21 '25 200w

"Its frankness has not been sifted out by editorial discretion, and it is interesting mainly for the light it throws on its author."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p791 N 27 '24 800w

BERNSTEIN, HERMAN. Celebrities of our time. 347p $3 Joseph Lawren, 220 W. 42nd st., N.Y. [18s Hutchinson]

920 Biography

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"His book is entertaining and, on the whole, instructive, although the temporary and formal aspect of much of the material in it leaves scant opportunity for the reader to derive a lasting impression." A. S. W.

+ Cath World 120:853 Mr '25 350w

"The manner is that of the snapshot; often the voice heard in the interview is that of a man not quite visible; the sentences wear the tall starched collar labeled 'for publication.' But the sheer weight of these decisive personalities is impressive. In the sketches of Shaw and Andreyev, happily, and in a few others, Bernstein has kodaked a unique profile." Harlan Miller

+ Lit R p9 Ja 17 '25 400w

"What distinguishes these interviews is the fact that Mr. Bernstein approaches his celebrities as an intellectual equal. It is easy to see why the great figures of every land have, under his skilful questioning, given fully their opinions on the questions peculiar to them but of universal interest."

+ Nation 120:473 Ap 22 '25 150w

Nation and Ath 37:214 My 16 '25 300w

"He has not been concerned, he tells us in his preface, with portraiture or fine writing. We lament his limitation, because within his limitation Mr. Bernstein is one of the most capable journalists in America; and his book, within its limitation, is a repository of information which we feel to be accurate and uncolored by any intentional prejudice. The pity is that so much has been lost and that so much of what remains is trite."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 26 '25 400w

R of Rs 71:109 Ja '25 120w

Spec 134:726 My 2 '25 200w

"Mr. Bernstein's most amusing adventure was with Mr. Bernard Shaw; from him, at least, there were neither revelations nor platitudes. But for the most part his subjects can hardly be expected to be grateful to the author

BERNSTEIN, HERMAN—Continued
for republishing these opinions, which the living among them would in many cases have probably preferred to revise or even suppress."
— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p307 My 7 '25 850w

BERRIDGE, WILLIAM ARTHUR; WINSLOW, EMMA ANNIE, and FLINN, RICHARD A. Purchasing power of the consumer; a statistical index. 318p $4 Shaw, A.W.

331.331 Consumption (economics). Income. Cost and standard of living. United States—Economic conditions 25-7899

"In this volume are presented the three studies receiving the awards in the J. Walter Thompson Prize Essay Contest for essays on the subject: 'A Statistical Index of the Purchasing Power of the Consumer in the United States.' These studies offer definite, valuable contributions to the development of a trustworthy technique in measuring the buying capacity of consumers living in different parts of the country, in different and varying types of communities, and under divergent conditions of prosperity or depression."—Publisher's note

"Should ultimately prove to be of great value to industry and should be encouraged. The J. Walter Thompson Company is to be congratulated on its happy thought in arranging for the Prize Essay Contest which resulted in these valuable studies. The publishers also have done a very creditable piece of work." E. E. Lincoln

+ Am Management R 14:331 O '25 1050w

"The analyses of the various budget studies, with the valuable bibliography appended, will surely be received gratefully by teachers and researchers." F. A. Armstrong

+ J Home Econ 17:666 N '25 550w

"It will be noted that the studies here brought together have value other than their contribution to the statistical measurement of the purchasing power of the consumer. That of Mr. Berridge is an important addition to the literature on factory workers' incomes. Miss Winslow's study clears the ground and organizes the material in a field where a critical survey was badly needed. But although these papers will probably be consulted by students with widely varying interests, there is an underlying unity in the volume that should be stressed." Hazel Kyrk

+ J Pol Econ 33:572 O '25 600w

BERRY, JAMES BERTHOLD. Farm woodlands; a textbook for students of agriculture in schools and colleges and a handbook for practical farmers and estate managers. (New-world agriculture ser.) 425p il $2 World bk. [5s Harrap]

634.9 Forests and forestry 23-16069

"Collects much useful information on practically the whole field of forestry as applied to small forest areas. Descriptions of trees and woods are given in three supplementary volumes entitled 'Northern woodlot trees,' 'Southern woodland trees,' and 'Western forest trees.'"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:298 My '25

BERRY, JAMES BERTHOLD. Southern woodland trees. (New world agriculture ser.) 214p il $1.20 World bk. [3s 6d Harrap]

582 Trees. Wood 24-13820

"A guide to the identification of trees and woods to accompany Farm woodlands; a handbook for students, teachers, farmers and woodsmen, illustrated from photographs and with drawings by M. E. Eaton."—Subtitle

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:293 My '25
R of Rs 69:671 Je '24 50w

BERTIE OF THAME, FRANCIS LEVESON BERTIE, 1st viscount. Diary of Lord Bertie of Thame, 1914-1918; ed. by Lady Algonon Gordon-Lennox; with a foreword by Viscount Grey of Fallodon. 2v 367;347p il $10 Doran [42s Hodder & S.]

940.32 European war, 1914-1918 25-4679

Viscount Bertie was British ambassador at Paris during the war and for ten years previously. His private diary, which is confined to the war period, is a day by day record of his personal comments, forcibly and bluntly expressed, upon men and events of the moment, diplomatic gossip, dinners and luncheons, the comings and goings of ministers and state officials.

Booklist 21:299 My '25

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 4 '25 1950w

"It is a mixture of small talk, high gossip a la Colonel Reppington, a day-by-day record of information and misinformation, of comment often shrewd and pungent, and occasionally of insight. Like most old-timers in the diplomatic service, often he could not see the forest for the trees."

Ind 114:303 Mr 14 '25 250w

"Such a frank record of the mood of England's responsible representative in Paris, watching the conflict draw near, is a useful corrective of the distorted mirror of those days which propagandists have since made all but universal." L. S. Gannett

+ Nation 121:672 D 9 '25 300w

"For all that the book contains as to the secret history and hidden movements of the war, it might have been written by the head butler at the British Embassy at Paris instead of by the Ambassador himself. There are the unceasing comings and goings of distinguished people, innumerable dinners, preparations for conferences, much about wines, infinite gossip about the political intrigues, an interminable discussion of persons, usually those whom Lord Bertie disliked. But at the end of it all there is the feeling that we have been left in the hall at the Embassy rather than introduced to the mysteries within. There is no sense of the great movement of events, no hint of the real forces engaged in the struggle, no illuminating phrase that gives significance to an episode or throws a searchlight upon character. . . I hope that Lord Grey, having written a preface to the book, will find time to read it. It should give him seriously to think about many things." A. G. Gardiner

— Nation and Ath 36:323 N 29 '24 1600w

"These diaries of Lord Bertie's have an interest for the student of affairs quite out of proportion to their intellectual or literary value. They are commonplace in style and in thought; they are concerned continually with a small circle to which etiquette is more important than statesmanship; they never betray any imagination more profound than that of the ordinary popular press. On the other hand, Lord Bertie was evidently a kindly man; he was civilised; he was an accomplished and distinguished host and guest; he was courageous, stuck to his principles and never suspected, so far as we can tell from these documents, how extremely small was the range of his interests and the grasp of his intelligence."

+ — New Statesman 24:510 F 7 '25 1150w

"It is apparent that the diary now published was not intended for public perusal, but was rather a collection of notes, as reminders to the author if he should ever feel inclined to write comprehensively of his Parisian war sojourn. In these circumstances the editing has been done in the spirit of faithful portrayal rather than that of interpretation and commentary. Lord Grey's preface is a becoming tribute from a superior. But the biography of the 'father of the Entente' is yet to be written. It would be a nice tribute if some Frenchman were to occupy himself with it." Walter Littlefield

N Y Times p3 F 15 '25 2600w

Reviewed by W: Orton
N Y Tribune p5 Mr 8 '25 1000w

Reviewed by Morris Markey
N Y World p1m Mr 8 '25 450w

"The Diary was submitted to the Foreign Office before publication, and no doubt we have to regret the elimination of some spicy items. What remains, however, is of the most vivid interest and importance, its value being immensely enhanced by the fact that obviously it was not written with a view to publication." H: W. Bunn

+ Outlook 139:620 Ap 22 '25 850w

"It is not distinguished by style or acute observation or philosophic insight. It is the intimate record of a man who did his day's work correctly and loyally without losing his nerve or his savoir faire. One is usually a trifle suspicious of diaries. It is the charm of the present Diary, and makes it of value to the serious student of history as well as of profound interest to the casual reader, that one feels the sincerity of the writer and realizes his simplicity and honesty." A. M. Low

+ Sat R of Lit 1:705 Ap 25 '25 1150w

"Possibly, in the hands of a more skilful editor, a readable and interesting book might have been made if half had been cut out and the two volumes had appeared as one. There is little sign of editing. The footnotes only offer obvious information, which is irritatingly unnecessary."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p741 N 20 '24 1550w

BEST, MARY AGNES. Rebel saints. 333p il
$3 Harcourt

289.6 Friends, Society of 25-22006

"Miss Mary Agnes Best's theme is liberty, and her examples are drawn from the lives of the early Quakers in England and America, which she relates partly in the words of the early Quaker historians, Sewal and Besse, and partly in her own pungent and epigrammatic style. Miss Best tells the story of George Fox, the leader; of Margaret Fell, his wife; of Thomas Lurting; of Mary Fisher, who carried the new faith to the camp of Mahomet IV; of Katherine Evans and Sarah Chevers, who on the same mission to the Turk were detained at Malta and treated with unspeakable cruelty by the Inquisition; of the Callow and Christen families, exiled from the Isle of Man by the bishop thereof and condemned to an odyssey of deportation lasting for years; of William Penn who founded his colony on principles of liberty and toleration; and Mary Dyer who was hanged on Boston Common."—New Repub

Bookm 62:xx Ja '26 120w

"For strictly scholarly purposes there is perhaps too much reliance on purely Quaker sources of information, and possibly a little tendency to gloss over the fanaticism that was occasionally part of the Quaker movement. Yet the total impression is one of fairness and moderation. And in this day and generation, when the need for tolerance is so great, the lessons it teaches should not be overlooked." E: B. Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 12 '25 1350w
Cleveland p111 D '25

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 44:309 N 11 '25 950w

"These studies are alive not only in their manner of narration but in their sympathy with the spiritual attitude of the persons involved." Gamaliel Bradford

+ N Y Tribune p6 D 6 '25 800w

"'Rebel Saints' affords romantic reading of a high order."

+ Outlook 141:612 D 16 '25 200w

"If Miss Best in her desire to make her Quakers vital has adopted a false style of over emphasis, full of cant colloquialisms drawn from stale military journalism, that is because the Quakers whose principles she well understands have not given her their spirit, which though often excessive was never cheap. Not her Quaker subjects, but Mr. Strachey and Mr. Guedalla, who began some years ago to rewrite history in epigram, are responsible for such lapses from taste as the style of this their less gifted imitator." H: S. Canby

— + Sat R of Lit 2:253 Ja 2 '26 2100w

BEST news stories of 1924; ed. by Joseph Anthony and Woodman Morrison. 331p $2.50 Small

070 Journalism

"In 'The Best News Stories of 1924' Joseph Anthony and Woodman Morrison have selected a wide variety from among some three thousand submitted to them. They are classed under 'Human Interest Stories,' 'Feature Stories,' 'Short Stories,' 'Interviews and Personality Stories,' 'Foreign Correspondence,' and 'Straight Reporting.'"—Bookm

"Some readers might wish that a larger proportion of humorous contributions had been included, but no one could cavil at the high standard of the collection. Nor could the general reader quarrel with the range of choice offered him."

+ — Bookm 62:94 S '25 160w

"The foreign correspondence is the best written of the classifications, and the humorous stories are the feeblest kind in the book. It is interesting in these days of discussion of the desirability of news of crime that of seventy stories in the book only ten are stories of crime. Nor does a reading of these ten make it appear that their contents are a menace to the morals of the reader." W. A. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 1600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:165 Je '25

BEST poems of 1924; ed. by L. A. G. Strong. 246p $2 Small

821.08 English poetry—Collections (24-3693)

"This is the second volume in a series which editor and publisher hope will so prove its value as to become a fixture. The purpose is to make a yearly anthology of the best poems appearing in the United States and England, or, more broadly, as time goes on in all the English-speaking world. In this volume Mr. Strong has been quite impartial as to the two sides of the Atlantic and includes a great many American names."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:227 Mr '25

"Contains many selections of imagination, beauty, and technical excellence by poets known and unknown; but it likewise abounds in selections of no excellence whatever by poets equally known and unknown."

+ — Bookm 61:364 My '25 180w

"There are many poems I would not have included; there are some that are quite (to me) meaningless and pointless. But there are very few outstanding poems of the year which Mr. Strong has failed to reprint." C: Norman

+ — Lit R p12 F 28 '25 250w

"As a whole the collection leaves with the reader the very definite impression of vitality, of a living, restless energy. One may not like this poetry, but there is no denying that it is expressive of the time, that these poets are close to the heart of life as it is in this second decade of the twentieth century."

+ N Y Times p31 D 28 '24 450w

"A volume full of pungency and spice, with a number of new names and a number of poems probably ephemeral which still contribute scintillations of various ray."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:515 F 7 '25 200w

BESTON, HENRY. Book of gallant vagabonds. 231p il $3 Doran

920 Biography 25-2428J

Here are the portraits of six sons of unrest, who catching an urgent summons from an unknown source, blithely set out to follow it. They are "John Ledyard, the runaway college sophomore who thought of walking round the world, Belonzi the monk who became an acrobat and then an archaeologist, Edward John Trelawny, the deserter, pirate, and country gentleman who came so mysteriously into the life of Shelley; Thomas Morton, the jovial Elizabethan who scandalized the New England Puritans with a Mayday revel, Arthur Rimbaud the poet who became an African trader, and James Bruce the sturdy Scot who rose to be a great lord in Abyssinia." (Foreword)

BESTON, HENRY—Continued

"Mr. Beston describes these extraordinary men with sympathy, understanding, and humor."

+ Ind 116:50 Ja 9 '26 180w

"Mr. Beston's fine enthusiasm adds color to every page. He has long since won his literary spurs, but in this most excellent volume he proves himself to be a worthy squire to his sextet of knights of the open road." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p7 D 5 '25 850w

"It is difficult to see how one could be other than captivated by the spirit which pervades 'Gallant Vagabonds' and the highly lifelike movement which the author imparts to his narratives."

+ N Y Times p8 D 6 '25 1200w

"Whether these vagabonds were gallant or miserable, or both, Mr. Beston has told their tales most entertainingly." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p7 D 20 '25 1000w

BEWICK, THOMAS. Memoir of [the author] written by himself, 1822-1828; with an introd. by Selwyn Image; [ed. by James Bewick and first published in 1862]. 274p il $4 Dial press [10s 6d Lane]

B or 92

[25-9176]

"This edition of the autobiography of Thomas Bewick is a reprint of the first edition published in 1862. Bewick began the story of his life in 1822 and finished it in 1828, just a few days before his death. In the beginning his purpose in writing it was the very modest one of entertaining his children. As the work progressed, however, he seems to have visualized a much wider audience than his own family circle. Whole chapters are given over to discussions of the Landed Gentry, the Irish Question, the Magistracy and Marriage, Religious Philosophy, the Clergy, the Holy Scriptures, etc."—N Y Tribune

"No better light on past times can be obtained than through the medium of biography, and from autobiography the pictures of the times are still more distinct and illuminating. Therefore, when such a man as Thomas Bewick, who has wielded a great influence on wood-engraving in the past, and through a long period since, undertakes to tell the story of his life and experiences, the student of history or literature is sure to find information and criticism worth considering." J. S. Barrows

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 1000w

"The reader of Thomas Bewick's story of himself will be impressed with a certain justice of mind in the writer, and an easy and mature originality in his narrative. The reason may lie in the fact that this excellent writing was the occupation of his leisure, as he was six years in composing what a modern novelist, so far as length goes, would readily produce in six weeks. Or it may be because his faculties had put on a last ripeness by the time he began to write, which was in 1822, his sixty-ninth year; so that the effect is that of an old man, once active, but now quietly and brightly ruminating in the chimney corner." C. K. Trueblood

+ Dial 79:418 N '25 1250w

"The second half of the book loses in some measure the unique charm and intimacy which mark the opening chapters. Bewick as pulpit-er grows a little tedious—as more celebrated writers than he have become before his time and after; but throughout his didactic utterances one will look in vain for mere flatulence. He is singularly intelligent and broadminded, at times pithy and sly in satirical comment, for he hated hypocrisy, cant, dishonesty, and above all he hated war. No autobiography that I know, old or new, has so persuasively and simply revealed a truly admirable man." Glen Mullin

+ — N Y Tribune p3 S 6 '25 450w

"These memoirs have not the finished perfection of the letters of the Oriel Fellow, but their unassertive independence and the justice and originality of their comments give them a strong attraction, in addition to their biographical interest. Written for his children, the book gives a striking picture of life at the opposite end of England from Selborne at the period when Gilbert White was still writing."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p763 N 20 '24 100w

BEYLE, MARIE HENRI (DE STENDHAL, pseud.). Chartreuse de Parma; tr. from the French by Lady Mary Loyd. [new ed] 534p $2.50 Appleton

This long novel of court life and intrigue, written in 1830, centers about a young Italian nobleman, the Marchese Fabrizio del Dongo who, fired by admiration for Napoleon, at sixteen journeys to France to fight for his hero. At home this conduct is regarded as treachery, and on his return, only the clever intervention of his lively and beautiful aunt saves Fabrizio from imprisonment. He joins her at Parma where, as the wife of a negligible duke and the mistress of the powerful prime minister she enjoys unrivalled prestige. The novel recounts the further adventures of nephew and aunt.

"It is a story of other days and other manners, but the frank relations between lovers and their mistresses are not so very immoral (from the Latin standpoint) and the general flavor of the novel is instructive—at least to anyone who likes the study of history. The translation is admirably smooth and natural. It is one of the masterpieces of world-fiction." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 5 '25 650w

"It is well done and really modern in spirit—but, oh, so slow!"

+ — Outlook 141:29 S 2 '25 80w

BEYLE, MARIE HENRI (DE STENDHAL, pseud.). Life of Henri Brulard; tr. from the French by Catherine Alison Phillips; with an introd. by Harry C. Block. (Blue jade lib.) 361p $3 Knopf

25-7975

"The Life of Henri Brulard," Stendhal's unfinished autobiography, was first published in 1890, half a century after it was written. Thru a mass of incidents and impressions set down in seeming disorder the novelist recreates the scenes and personages of his childhood and youth, revealing himself to an unusual degree.

Boston Transcript p4 My 23 '25 220w

"The selection of Stendhal's autobiographical novel, 'La Vie de Henri Brulard'—the book, available in imperfect editions since 1890, has only just been completely deciphered by M. Debraye—as the first volume to be issued in the Blue Jade Library is significant. 'That precursor, that admirable diviner,' as Nietzsche called Stendhal, has at last undoubtedly come into his own." W. A. Drake

Nation 120:550 My 13 '25 360w

"The Life of Henri Brulard,' which is Beyle's autobiography of his boyhood and early manhood, is the most valuable collection of documents for the understanding of this strange character. One need not be one of the 'happy few,' as the Stendhalists are fond of calling themselves, in order to enjoy 'The Life of Henri Brulard'; it is only necessary to be interested in writing, and particularly novel-writing, as an art. Any one whose business or amusement it is to analyze character and to present that analysis to the minds of others, will certainly find profit in the study of Stendhal's methods."

+ N Y Times p5 Ap 5 '25 1100w

St Louis p358 S '25

"It forms the exact portrait of a state of mind, but is more a document than a work of art." Malcolm Cowley

Sat R of Lit 2:295 N 14 '25 200w

BIANCHI, MARTHA GILBERT (DICKINSON) (MRS ALEXANDER E. BIANCHI). Wandering Eros. 115p $2 Houghton

811

25-4402

Emily Dickinson's niece and biographer is the author of this book of love lyrics which closes with a group of war poems.

"The Wandering Eros' does not bite. It is archaic for the most part, repetitious in thought, and lacking in any fine elements of inspiration. The author is scholarly and evidently fully aware of the technical demands of verse, but she is far from being touched by the fire that stirred that near relative of hers, Emily Dickinson." H. S. Gorman

— Bookm 61:597 J1 '25 60w

Reviewed by Margaret Widdemer

Lit R p4 Ag 8 '25 80w

"Many of her poems are sophisticated things, highly wrought, of consciously carved workmanship. But she knows also how to sing simply, directly, withal subtly—how to carve out the sides of her prism without overelaboration. And she is at pains to deal with life truthfully as its colors have been refracted in the spectrum of her own consciousness." Mary Siegrist

+ N Y Times p14 Je 7 '25 900w

"Voluptuous passion unlike the clear white intensity of Emily Dickinson. It is painted with a honey-thick richness of phrasing and adorned with the ornaments of passionate love." G. H. Busey

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 15 '25 200w

"One is the more acutely disappointed because Mrs. Bianchi was once Miss Dickinson, and her distinguished name deserves better of her. The book's virtue is in two delightful little cuts, whose effect is Pompeian rather than Greek, which make the head-and-tail-piece." Babette Deutsch

— Sat R of Lit 2:216 O 17 '25 100w

"Mrs Bianchi's ability as a writer of prose is scarcely matched in her verse."

— Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 480w

BIANCO, MRS MARGERY (WILLIAMS). Little wooden doll. (Little lib.) 65p $1 Macmillan

25-18186

This story of a lonely wooden doll rescued from her attic, dressed up like a princess and very much elevated in life is for the six to eight year olds. The author's young daughter furnished the illustrations in color and black and white.

Booklist 22:121 D '25

"It is the sure sense of the personalities of her characters, whether toys or living creatures, and her complete grasp of dramatic requirements that give Mrs. Bianco's work an assured high place among children's stories." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:181 O '25 80w

Cleveland p104 N '25

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p813 N '25 100w

"The story is as delicate as the illustrations. We prophesy that again and again children who have learned to love it will call for the story of the little wooden doll who lived neglected in the attic with the mice and the spiders." Marcia Dalphin

+ N Y Tribune p6 O 11 '25 1050w

"Pamela Bianco has illustrated it. Both pictures and story are intriguing and fanciful."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 60w

BIANCO, MRS MARGERY (WILLIAMS). Poor Cecco. 175p il $3 Doran

25-21158

This delightful story relates the truly remarkable adventures that began when Poor Cecco opened the door of the toy cupboard and all the toys fell out. There are seven full page illustrations in color, and a spirited tale piece at the end of each chapter.

Booklist 22:121 D '25

"There is color, flavor, sophistication, yet a child's delight, in Margery Williams Bianco's story." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:180 O '25 250w

"Mrs. Bianco has written a book of absurd, yet convincing, fun about the little people in the toy cupboard." A. M. Jordan

+ Ind 115:560 N 14 '25 260w

"A perfect story of its kind for small children." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p47 D '25 60w

"The incidents are new and well-conceived, and, best of all, it gives the impression of having been written with gusto by a writer who has imagination and humor. The illustrations by Arthur Rackham are hardly on a level with the text."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:sup382 D 5 '25 70w

"The publishers have given 'Poor Cecco' a large and handsome format. A little ungratefully, perhaps, one wishes that so enchanting a set of characters might live in a book with which one could feel more intimate. It is almost too handsome. In spite of this, 'Poor Cecco' is decidedly a book to be put on your holiday gift list. It is abundantly able to stand on its merits as a story." Marcia Dalphin

+ N Y Tribune p6 O 11 '25 1050w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

N Y World p7m D 6 '25 30w

"A truly delightful book for children."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:302 N 14 '25 80w

"Mr. Rackham's illustrations, which are not in his most fantastic vein, have an imaginative reasonableness which is irresistible. It is cheerful but never saccharine, written in a terse, economical style, and full of adventure and variety."

+ Spec 135:sup1036 D 5 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p809 N 26 '25 120w

BIBLE. WHOLE—SELECTIONS. Bible readings for schools and colleges; ed. by John M. Thomas and A. Howry Espenshade. 288p $1.25 Macmillan

220.8

25-3759

"The practice of reading a selection from the Bible at the opening exercises of public schools is now very generally observed in most States of the Union. The selections in this volume have been chosen in order to make available the great passages from both the Old and New Testaments for reading without repetition in the course of a school year. The book is also suitable for use in private schools and colleges that hold chapel services. A table of passages appropriate to special days and occasions is included. The text used is that of the authorized version."—School Life

"The Bible student would not wish for a better selection or for a more orderly arrangement."

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '25 270w

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott

School Life 10:160 Ap '25 100w

"The rhythm, dignity and style of the King James version commend it to the editors, but they have modernized the spelling and punctuation and have paragraphed the text like a modern book."

BIBLE. WHOLE—SELECTIONS—Continued
Spring'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 240w

BIBLE. WHOLE—SELECTIONS. Poetry from the Bible; ed. by Lincoln MacVeagh. 180p il $1.50 Dial press
220.8 25-8085

"Contains 'the most beautiful and famous passages of Biblical poetry from the Riddle of Lamech and the Songs of Moses and Deborah to the Canticles of Saint Luke.' The text followed is, in the main, that of the Revised Version."—Bookm

Booklist 21:358 Jl '25

Bookm 61:xxx Ag '25 80w

Cleveland p92 S '25

"One must in every case be sensible of the splendour of the famous passages assembled here, of the careful choice of version, of now a metrical, and now a prose arrangement, of the compact magnificence of this small volume."
+ Dial 79:77 Jl '25 80w

"There may be disagreement with Mr. MacVeagh. But there can be no quarrel. For Mr. MacVeagh's taste, while it isn't mine, is probably quite as good. Altogether he has produced a noteworthy little volume which makes accessible a good deal of fine and neglected literature." Allen Tate

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ag '16 '25 350w

Outlook 140:33 My 6 '25 10w

BIBLE. OLD TESTAMENT. Old Testament; a new translation by James Moffatt. v 2 561-1031p $2.50 Doran

221

(24-31828)

"The final volume of this new translation includes the books from Job to Malachi."—Outlook

"Professor Moffatt has made a real contribution. He has also caught the 'flying allusions and characteristic metaphors' of the Hebrew and put them into twentieth century English."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 220w

"Dr. Moffatt's richness of scholarship is only equaled by his amazing industry, making his achievement one of the outstanding feats of our generation." J. F. Newton

+ Int Bk R p309 Ap '25 1300w

"The English of this rendering is fresh and vigorous."

+ J Religion 5:219 Mr '25 80w (Review of v 1)

"The style of the translation is one of the most important points. Professor Moffatt has made an entirely fresh and independent translation in a style all his own. One feels at once that all of it is clear and intelligible, much of it undignified and colloquial. It is better adapted to some books than to others. It never lacks clearness, but it frequently lacks dignity." J. A. Bewer

+ J Religion 5:314 My '25 3700w

J Religion 5:331 My '25 50w (Review of v 2)

"The authors of the Revised Version had a great opportunity, but it cannot be said that they made the most of it; a very considerable number of beautiful and moving phrases were still left in the work after they had done with it. But Professor Moffatt has put things right. In his crisp and nervous version, the Bible should at last come into its own, as a book which no gentleman's library should be without. Its influence among the clergy should also be considerable." G. G.

New Statesman 24:270 D 6 '24 1550w

"It is clear that this translation will not take the place of the older versions, but it will be used as a companion volume. It illumines many dark places, invests familiar passages with new meaning and gives to the whole Old Testament a fresh interest." J. A. Bewer

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 29 '25 650w

"A very interesting book, but it's not the Bible. Not all of Mr. Moffatt's learning can justify disguising Job as 'Eyob.'"
+ Outlook 140:159 My 27 '25 40w

"The great strength of Prof Moffatt's translation, apart from its scholarly arrangement, lies in its lucidity and matter-of-fact fluency. He seldom leaves a passage obscure. He imparts the cogency of skilful narration to chapters which lack coherence. Simple things to which in the King James version a portentous sonority is imparted come forth intelligible and logical."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Mr 3 '25 450w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p54 Ja 22 '25 700w

BIBLE. OLD TESTAMENT—SELECTIONS. Authentic literature of Israel; freed from the disarrangements, expansions and comments of early native editors; ed. with an introd. by Elizabeth Czarnomska. 2v v 1 432p $4 Macmillan

221

(24-28985)

The author in an endeavor to show that the Bible is a collection of papers, and not a book, has arranged Hebrew literature that was written before the year 518 B.C., according to its historical value, placing these writings in the age to which they belong. The book opens with the Decalogue, then come two chapters of Proverbs, and this is followed by the history of the children of Israel. There are also included four appendices, and three maps.

"The idea of the book is excellent, but its execution would have been improved by a more precise scholarship and better-balanced judgment."

+ J Religion 5:104 Ja '25 100w

"I wholly approve what Miss Czarnomska has attempted and done, but I wish that she had confessed more definitely that it is the method and basis of her undertaking which are alone certain and that the details of its working out are more or less problematical." J. H. Holmes

+ N Y Tribune p9 F 15 '25 750w

"The probabilities are that this volume will be helpful in popularizing the results of Old Testament criticism. Multitudes of people who had neither the time, the training nor the inclination to toil through the studious volumes of scholars in which these questions were discussed can readily pick up this work and see before their eyes the decision of at least one scholar in regard to these matters."

Spring'd Republican p8 Ap 21 '25 370w

BIDWELL, PERCY WELLS, and FALCONER, JOHN IRONSIDE. History of agriculture in the northern United States, 1620-1860. 512p il $4 Carnegie inst.

630.973 Agriculture—United States 25-13458

"This volume was prepared by an economist of the United States Tariff Commission, formerly a professor of economics at Yale University, and by a professor of rural economy at Ohio State University. It brings the history of agriculture in the northern United States down to 1860. The book is divided into four parts: part I, Agriculture in the Earliest Settlements; part II, Rural Economy in the Eighteenth Century; part III, Expansion and Progress, 1800-1840; and part IV, Period of Transformation. The persons who have contributed in various ways to the collection of the materials are Kenyon L. Butterfield, Henry C. Taylor, John L. Coulter, A. E. Cance, O. E. Baker, and O. C. Stine, the burden of this work being delegated, however, to P. W. Bidwell and J. I. Falconer, who prepared the manuscript for publication. There is a table of contents; a critical and classified bibliography, followed by an alphabetical list of 725 authors; and an index."—Am Econ R

"The proof reading has been carefully done. Very few errors have been noted. The maps and charts have been well executed. The chief merit of this work is that it will serve as a useful encyclopedia of information on this important phase of American history." L; B. Schmidt
+ Am Econ R 15:742 D '25 1250w

"The inadequacy of the index is all the more serious when one remembers that this is even more a work of reference than a text for continuous reading. The treatment is almost always objective. Facts are generally allowed to tell their own story. And these facts are so numerous and so pertinent that none can read without learning. It is difficult to accept some arguments. In spite of such probable discrepancies, this book is sure to prove of great use. Every library and every student of American economic history would profit by the possession of this work." N. S. B. Gras
+ Am Hist R 31:329 Ja '26 850w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford
Int Bk R p26 D '25 450w

"The book is not merely a treatise. The narrative is vivid and vigorous and will appeal to any one interested in the rural economy, which was the dominant economy of early America." N. A. Crawford

+ Nation 121:708 D 16 '25 400w

BIGELOW, POULTNEY. Seventy summers. 2v
332:290p $10 Longmans [32s Arnold]

B or 92

The son of John Bigelow, ambassador to France under the Lincoln administration, Poultny Bigelow had a cosmopolitan upbringing. He has been a world traveller and for years a newspaper correspondent. As a boy in Germany he played with the young kaiser and some of his most interesting memories relate to Berlin and Potsdam in the seventies. Mr Bigelow is a good hater and outspoken. Roosevelt and Wilson alike come in for a generous amount of his venom. The first volume is pleasanter in tone than the second.

"His opinions on men and things as given in these two interesting volumes are as far removed from the conventional American standpoint as can well be imagined. He runs blithely counter to many of our accepted ideas and is most happy trampling on our popular fears and inhibitions. Without, however, taking him as the last word in wisdom, one can find great pleasure in reading his book, which sparkles with vitality and personality."

+ Ind 116:79 Ja 16 '26 200w

"His rather ferocious attack on the Wilsonian administration is too personal to please an English mind, even if one agreed with his views. Like many sturdy democrats, he is impressed by aristocratic blood, and dislikes majority rule."

— Nation and Ath 38:sup374 D 5 '25 200w

"Interesting as a travel record."

N Y World p6m D 27 '25 50w

"The secret of his inconclusive life lies in his hostility to the general current of American opinion. His youthful experience of Europe had impressed him with the arrogant provincialism of his fellow-countrymen. How far his judgment is to be regarded as sound is another question. . . . The most agreeable passages of this book occur in its earlier chapters, before the author's cantankerousness had asserted itself. . . . Mr. Bigelow is always at his happiest when he is able to view the foreign scene with understanding and sympathy, and this gift came to him very early."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p749 N 12 '25 1050w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. House without a key.
316p $2 Bobbs

25-7069

The scene of this mystery story is set in the Hawaiian islands. Genial old Dan Winterslip is found murdered in his comfortable home on Waikiki beach. A cigarette stub, a brooch, an illuminated wrist-watch with a distinguishing mark—these are the clues which Charlie Chan, a notable Chinese detective, follows, with the aid of his flivver, to strange places. Young John Quincy Winterslip, a very proper Bostonian, gets some real thrills in helping Charlie to find the man who entered the house without a key. But John Quincy does some successful sleuthing and receives ample reward for his services.

Booklist 22:72 N '25

"Real humor is rare enough to be appreciated almost anywhere, but one wonders why in a mystery story it was needful to make such a sad attempt at humor. The careless burlesque quality, the obvious exaggeration in characterization, does much to detract from the interest of the mystery."

— + Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 300w

Reviewed by L: Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 70w

"A very good yarn in an unusual setting." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p5 Je 13 '25 300w

"Melodrama, naturally, but good stuff if one can swallow the prize clue."

+ N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 450w

N Y Tribune p12 My 17 '25 200w

"Mr. Biggers has a neat turn with the mystery yarn. And if you are feeling bored and spring-feverish, you could do a great deal worse than canter through his novel."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 150w

"The reader of the book is in for two or three hours of genuine entertainment."

+ Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 50w

"An entertaining story well told, with a dash of humor to give spice to its mystery, and a skilfully sketched in background to lend glamour to its incidents."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:732 My 2 '25 230w

BILL, ALFRED H. Clutch of the Corsican
241p $2 Atlantic monthly

25-8052

This is one of the three books chosen for its high merit in a recent prize contest for stories of adventure. The action takes place during the last years of Napoleon's reign. Madame Wright and her son, Americans, are held as British hostages in Verdun. The boy's father is believed to have been taken prisoner by the French. Mrs Wright supports herself and Barclay by doing laundry work for British prisoners amongst whom the boy finds staunch friends who later aid him and his mother in their escape from Verdun. On the way they have many adventures, the most thrilling of which is the finding of husband and father.

"Well told against a picturesque and historical background of the times. Will be enjoyed by some adult readers as well as older boys and girls."

+ Booklist 21:386 Jl '25

"It is evident that he has been a careful student of contemporary literature and of certain biographical or narrative writings of the time. In this detail he has maintained the atmosphere admirably, and kept it free from anachronisms of speech, making the story as convincing as an authoritative journal or autobiography. The entire story progresses at a high speed. This story would be made more interesting and convincing if it were accompanied by endpaper maps, indicating the route of the fugitives, and incidents thereon." J. S. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '25 450w

Ind 114:423 Ap 11 '25 50w

"The emotional content of the story is high, but the delicacy and restraint with which the author has handled situations of great tension have spared the book the slightest taint of sentimentalism." Mildred Wasson

+ Int Bk R p134 Ja '26 560w

"The thrill and charm with which 'The Clutch of the Corsican' abounds lies in the author's ability to keep his action, swiftly moving, tense and exciting, and to outline a character with quick, deft strokes." E. H.

+ Lit R p9 Ap 18 '25 320w

BILL, ALFRED H.—Continued

Reviewed by Ruth Sapin

N Y Times p12 Je 21 '25 460w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

N Y Tribune p6 My 3 '25 80w

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 20w

"The Clutch of the Corsican" will be found to be a delightful informative story of the life of British prisoners and hostages in France during the Napoleonic wars."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a. Ag 23 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:144 My '25

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Cross trails (Eng title A debt of honour). 320p $2 Stokes

25-4861

"This story of the friendship of two men has many of the familiar marks of a Bindloss novel with scenes laid in British Columbia and Scotland."—Wis Lib Bul

Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 160w

"Mr. Bindloss's present and thirty-ninth novel follows closely the trend of its numerous fore-runners, except that here we are offered a considerably diminished concern with the woods of the Canadian Northwest."

N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 60w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. Prairie gold (Eng title The broken net). 312p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Lock]

25-20026

"Hugh Stannard's mission might have ended disastrously had not Alice Cunningham interfered, for he played into the hands of the villain until the very last moment, when Alice opened his eyes for him. Thereafter ensued a flight through the woods and moors with the boy he had crossed the ocean to rescue, which is full of adventure; the journey in safety to Canada and subsequent tribulations at the hands of the villain, who had followed Hugh to get revenge. Again Alice, who has also come to Canada, steps in and the villain is once more undone and all ends well."—Lit R

"Were it not for the author's maddening habit of using short, jerky, sentences and his eternal phrases 'some reserve' and 'rather keen,' we might get as interested in this as the improbabilities of the plot would permit. But we do wish Mr. Bindloss would get a dictionary and hunt up a few new words."

— Boston Transcript p5 D 19 '25 300w

"Mr. Bindloss is not the first to send a young man from Canada to England to straighten out the family affairs of his friend. Yet his tale is very interesting and rings true whether the scene is in the century-old English home or the wilds of Manitoba. The characters are well drawn and the tale holds the interest to the last page." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p11 N 21 '25 200w

N Y World p7m N 8 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p601 S 17 '25 160w

BIRD, JAMES MALCOLM. Margery: the medium. 518p il $4 Small

134 Spiritualism

25-8086

"Here is a fairly complete account of the famous and much discussed séances at which 'Margery,' the wife of Dr. L. R. G. Crandon, a Boston physician, submitted her gifts of mediumship to investigation by the Scientific American's committee of experts. As one of them, Mr. Bird had an excellent opportunity of studying the 'phenomena' in detail, and he gives us, from the first sitting up to and beyond the night on which 'Margery' found herself 'boxed up' to satisfy the Houdini requirements, a mass of more or less sensational incidents, which included table rapping, levitation, the ringing of bells, the playing of a Victrola, the dropping of flowers, 'ghostly finger taps,' 'arctic breezes from nowhere,' 'physical pocket-picking,' and all the way to ectoplasm."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '25 1050w

"A sympathetic and readable account. An interesting book on a mysterious subject."

+ Ind 114:507 My 2 '25 150w

"Mr. Bird is not a qualified investigator, and his book must be taken with large quantities of salt." Houdini

— N Y Tribune p1 J1 5 '25 1250w

Outlook 139:622 Ap 22 '25 30w

"The book is most highly to be commended as not only admirably arranged and written, but as a contribution to our knowledge of psychic phenomena that cannot be ignored."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:766 My 16 '25 520w

BIRKENHEAD, FREDERICK EDWIN SMITH, 1st earl, and others. Approaches to world problems. (Inst. of politics publications. Williamstown, Mass.) 126p $1.50 Yale univ. press [7s Milford]

341 International law and relations. Peace. World politics 24-21391

These three addresses delivered before the Institute of politics at Williamstown illustrate three different methods of approach to the fundamental question of peace. Contents: Problems left by the Great war, by the Earl of Birkenhead; World relations in their bearing on international peace and war, by General Tasker H. Bliss; World problems of today; World law and world peace, by Philip Henry Kerr. Index.

Am Pol Sci R 19:208 F '25 80w

Booklist 21:182 F '25

"Public appreciation of the work done at Williamstown in recent years must be vigorous indeed, if it is to match the excellence of the tasks there accomplished. A study of this volume will do much to hasten a deserved recognition."

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 10 '24 350w

Reviewed by Drake de Kay

Lit R p14 Ja 24 '25 300w

BIRMINGHAM, GEORGE A., pseud. See Han-nay, J.BISHOP, JOSEPH BUCKLIN. Notes and anecdotes of many years. 236p $2.50 Scribner 920 25-21429

In his long experience on the editorial staff of three New York newspapers Mr Bishop has met and known many famous personalities. Among those whom he here portrays in incident and anecdote are Horace Greeley, Henry Ward Beecher, John Hay, Edwin L. Godkin, Theodore Roosevelt and Gen Goethals.

"The sheer entertaining qualities of the book would alone be sufficient excuse for its existence."

+ Bookm 62:615 Ja '26 150w

"Readers who enjoy books that dip into the harmless past and emerge with anecdotes of the departed great and near great clinging to every page, will take keen delight in reading Mr. Bishop's latest book. One cannot help feeling upon reading this quietly humorous and good-natured book that the days which are passed were happy ones." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 17 '25 520w

New Statesman 26:supxxii D 12 '25 30w

N Y Tribune p15 Ja 10 '26 300w

"Mr. Bishop's stories are admirably revelatory of a half dozen distinguished men whom he has known. Roosevelt seems to have hypnotized Mr. Bishop, and the chapters on him are more than a little naive." Allan Nevins

+ — N Y World p6m O 18 '25 650w

"After all, there is nothing like 'anecdoteage' for presenting personality in a vivid and intimate way. Perhaps 'Notes and Anecdotes of Many Years' represents only the carefully-chosen bits from a very full life of experience. If so, Mr Bishop should fall still deeper into his 'anecdoteage' and tell us some more."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 16 '25 580w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p701 O
22 '25 150w

BISHOP, WILLIAM WARNER. Practical handbook of modern library cataloging. 2nd ed 152p $1.75 Williams & Wilkins
025.3 Cataloging 24-23255

"The book is essentially a reprint of the first edition. It is a manual of cataloging practice on the administrative side, rather than a guide to the cataloging of individual books or a discussion of the theory of entry."—Preface

"Especially valuable for large libraries. Changes are not important enough to make substitution necessary."

Booklist 21:239 Mr '25
Wis Lib Bul 20:288 D '24

BLACK, ALEXANDER. American husbands, and other alternatives. 253p $3 Bobbs
814 25-20046

These genial essays take their text from the book of American life. The author makes acknowledgment to Harper's, Century and the Bookman for permission to reprint several of them. Contents: American husbands; The young person; The hokum saga; One night stands; Painting the lily; The great art delusion; Quarrel texts: The double standard, Facts, Founders; How old is genius? Four Men: The blind giant (Joseph Pulitzer), The friend (Charles M. Skinner), The man who was alone (O. Henry), The king in white (William Dean Howells); The waiter complex; Meeting authors; The false alternative; The hush; Le quartier; The happy ending.

"'American Husbands' is informal enough, but the style is always scholarly and finished. The essays that compose the volume are so full of wit, acuteness, and common sense that they remind one of those of the lamented Frank Moore Colby, and that is high praise." R. M. Gay

+ Bookm 62:337 N '25 180w

"In his latest volume of essays Alexander Black approximates but falls short of the spiritually perfect essay—which renders his achievement paradoxically human. One could wish Mr. Black's essays less cold in quality. The essay form should evoke a certain personal charm, in the absence of which—well, one is less superficially informed by going directly to the more logical treatment of philosophy or science." L. B. Gilkes

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 1 '25 480w
Outlook 142:33 Ja 6 '26 30w
Sat R of Lit 2:319 N 21 '25 220w

BLACK, ALEXANDER. Stacey. 343p $2 Bobbs 25-890

"Ralph Stacey, comes to New York city knowing only small-town life in the Middle West and attempts to succeed in business—for which he has no ability. His dreams are ever large; always he looks for 'big money,' but honestly; and his dream continues when he meets under extremely questionable circumstances the woman who is to be the one woman in his life for years, though he later learns from herself that she has an ugly record on the western coast. He loses her in the end, and his dreams go with her. He marries the stolid daughter of his respectable though bourgeois landlady and becomes part owner in the deadly common 'hash house.' His prospect, now, like that of most mortals, includes safety and comfort, but no romance." —Springf'd Republican

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

"Stacey is a good story, told with a restrained satire that makes it doubly delightful." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 21 '25 730w

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p208 F '25 1400w

"Mr. Black can write. And he knows how to speak amusingly and divertingly about serious things without robbing these of their inner seriousness. His sense for character is good and well served by his stylistic craftsmanship. All these are qualities that should make for a success not merely measured by the number of copies sold. And yet they fail to lift his book up to that final level of achievement. After having one's expectations raised to a disturbing pitch, one issues at last from the final chapter with a double sense of disappointment—with the book as completed, and with being disappointed by it." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 Ja 17 '25 1350w

"Mr. Black has written a strong and thoughtful novel, but one, all the same, that rather skirts realism than enters into its essentials."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 11 '25 1150w

"Mr. Black is at times a little too competent; the story never gets out of hand. Stacey is, however, an individual, and also a type; his failure has its personal pathos; yet Stacey conveys an undertone of satirical comment on the gigantic fraud and waste of human values which is inherent in modern business."

+ N Y World p8e 460w

"There are good character values here and the substance of a strong novel. But we can't like the way it is told—machine-gun fashion, with four, five, or six word sentences popping at you as badly as in the first part of Hutchinson's 'This Freedom.'"

+ Outlook 139:274 F 13 '25 150w

"The author shows a good sense of style and workmanship that, together with the very creditable list of works in his name, shows that here at least is one writer who is not one of the 'hustling, self-centered, get-it-quick crowd' now squabbling on the tinsel slopes of the Fools' Hill with the naïve idea that they are storming Parnassus when they are merely playing the childish game of 'King-of-the-Castle.'" J. Carter

+ Sat R of Lit 1:444 Ja 10 '25 780w

"In its originality and understanding of human psychology 'Stacey' is often keen and deep and always appeals."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 450w

BLACK, MRS DOROTHY. Romance, the loveliest thing. 307p $2 Holt 25-17699

Miss Kirkhope put the idea in Marcia's head. And the £800 made it possible. "If you want to marry, child, you must move about. Meet people," she had said. Promptly an uncle died and left Marcia £800, and promptly Marcia gave up companioning Miss Kirkhope and bought herself a car. She would move about. Meet people. Catch up with romance. Even before finding the marquis in the midst of his weed-tangled acres and hiring out to him as casual labor because it seemed so romantic, Marcia had been fairly successful in her quest. And after that, she was far too successful for the peace of her tender heart. Romance flooded her, overwhelmed her, buffeted her about. So that, "I'm tired of Romance," she sighed, and Errol cried, "Dear darling, be practical with me."

Booklist 22:115 D '25

BLACK, DOROTHY—Continued

"Miss Black has given us a clever penetrating study of human nature, garnished with delicate little frills of sentiment and served upon our favorite platter, adventure in the good old reliable blue and white willow pattern. Still over and above the practical commercial aspect this novel has great charm. Candid comedy, mingled with true romance and ironic wisdom make Miss Black's first novel a very rare book in these days of expressions and repressions." D. F. G.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 23 '25 850w
Cleveland p124 D '25

"Quite commendably the book is free of all sentimentality. It is by no means lacking in humor, and sometimes there lurks between the lines even a faint note of burlesque, as though the author would concede to you that life has things undreamed of in Marcia's philosophy. It is for this reason a pity that 'Romance—The Loveliest Thing,' with its unfortunate title, is not put together with truer lightness and discrimination or written with more charm and verve."

+ — N Y Times p18 S 27 '25 550w

BLACKMORE, SIMON AUGUSTINE. Spiritism; facts and frauds. 535p $2.90
134 Spiritualism 25-1673

The writer belongs to the Jesuit order and his book expresses the attitude of the Roman Catholic church toward spiritualism and its practices. He reviews its history, especially its more recent manifestations, and discusses mediums, phenomena, automatic writing, etc. His conclusion is that "spiritism is the sworn enemy of God and man" that "innumerable phenomena of Spiritism are manifestly fraudulent and that preternatural manifestations when genuine, "are to be ascribed, not to the angels of heaven, nor to souls departed, but to fallen angels known as demons."

Bookm 61:adv Mr '25 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 31 '25 900w

"Among the best and most logical works on spiritualism that has come to hand out of the recent flow of works on that subject."

+ N Y World p8e Ja 18 '25 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p419 Je 18 '25 150w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Tongues of fire, and other stories. 288p $2 Dutton [7s 6d H. Jenkins]

25-4769

For the stories in "Tongues of fire" Mr Blackwood draws his material from the vague shadowland that lies just beyond the border of our every-day consciousness. Each of the tales is touched with its atmosphere of mysticism and glamour, "the splendour of awful dreams." Contents: Tongues of fire; The Pikestaffe case; Malahide and Forden; Peter-shin and Mr Snide; Playing catch; The olive; A continuous performance; The world-dream of McCallister; Alexander Alexander; Picking fir-cones; The little beggar; The falling glass; Nephelê; S. O. S.; Lost! The other woman; A man of earth; The man who was Milligan; The laughter of courage; The open window; The spell of Egypt.

Booklist 21:301 My '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 13 '25 420w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

Reviewed by L. M. Field
Int Bk R p482 Je '25 1000w

"'Tongues of Fire' adds very little either to our psychology or our spook-lore. Occasionally—and more often in the essays with which he alternates the stories—there are paragraphs of descriptive splendor. Occasionally, too, he has power to draw you into the wizard's house, chain you with cobwebs and daze you with formless colors which leave you, an instant later, asking 'Was I crazy then or was he?' But the book as a whole is a jumble of queer, clever angles without any apparent reason for being." Wallace Irwin

— + Lit R p3 Mr 7 '25 900w

Nation 120:634 Je 3 '25 120w

N Y Times p14 F 22 '25 880w

"Mr. Blackwood has that rare power, not to depict or to describe, but to transport one into the experience which he is imparting—and not emotionally, but by another set of contacts. His style illustrates, for literature, that which he is conceding to physics!" Zona Gale

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ap 26 '25 1200w

N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 380w

"The two best are the first two: 'Tongues of Fire,' the title giving tale, and 'The Pikestaffe Case,' an excellently creepy achievement and by far the most striking in the collection. Some of the others are indeed so far inferior as to suggest a suspicion that they have been included only to bring the book to the requisite number of pages."

+ — Outlook 139:382 Mr 11 '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 1 '25 300w

BLAKE, CLINTON HAMLIN. Acquiring a home. 280p $2 Doubleday

692 Building. Architectural law 25-8669

An adviser in architectural law and editor of the legal department of the American Architect and the Architectural Review writes this book of advice for the prospective home builder. He explains the legal relationships of architect, client and contractor, the contract of sale and examination of the title, the contract with the architect and the builder, and the duties and compensation of the architect.

Booklist 21:363 Jl '25

"Well-ordered in presentation and clear in style; useful as reference in the study of home ownership."

+ J Home Econ 17:463 Ag '25 120w

"If any one considering the acquiring of a home thinks the matter is simple he and his wife, both of them, so they will both fully understand the situation, ought to read Mr. Blake's book which they will find a very well-informed and careful guide, philosopher and friend through all the devious and many-sided affair."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 5 '25 550w

N Y Tribune p8 My 3 '25 160w

Pratt p21 autumn '25

St Louis p346 S '25

BLAKE, GLADYS. Mysterious tutor. 254p $1.75 (6s) Appleton

25-4853

A mystery story that boys and girls will enjoy. The setting is a large southern plantation belonging to the Cuthberts, a delightful family with five jolly children. The story opens with the arrival of their new tutor, a tall, dark and handsome person, unquestionably an aristocrat altho he calls himself Mr Dahl. But in the imagination of the children he is perhaps Prince Dolgoruki who has come to search for hidden treasure which years ago his ancestor left with their great-great-grandfather! The amazing events which follow the arrival of the tutor make it evident that his interest in the hidden treasure really is personal, and he is branded as a thief and impostor before the startling truth is revealed.

"When you add to the attraction of the South and the family and the plantation the fact that here is a very good mystery story indeed, you can see why it will be popular. There is even, for those of you who are just turned fifteen, a hint of a romance as well. Not very much, in case you think that sort of thing silly, but a bare suggestion, and when there is an ancient family title and all sorts of Russian thrills involved as well—just possibly—you can readily see the fascination."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 320w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner
Int Bk R p686 S '25 80w

"Both girls and boys of fifteen and over will be delighted with this story."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:750 My 9 '25 120w

BLAKE, VERNON. Relation in art. 326p il $6
Oxford [18s Milford]

701 Art. Esthetics

"Mr. Vernon Blake has made a heroic effort to write the great book on art, to co-ordinate the diverse æsthetic manifestations of all periods, to explain why the modern man may be stimulated by such opposites as Turner and the Egyptians or Cézanne and the Greeks, in short, to establish a complete philosophy of form. The book is divided into two parts. In the first we have an analysis of the abstract nature of art as a form of thought; in the second, the co-ordination of the various thought-forms of different peoples and epochs with the technical instruments of expression."—N Y Tribune

"The student who tries to master this work will obtain much art and much philosophy. But he must be a student. A mere reading of the book will give him very little. The work is not easy reading, and some of the author's positions are not thought through. But he warns his readers that, while he has confidence in his philosophy, it is all offered as hypothetical." F. W. C.

Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 600w

"Vernon Blake's volume must be approached with respect, the philosophical projection of a man who is primarily an artist and a teacher of art, doubly a student, therefore, in subjective and objective analysis." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p5 Ja 9 '26 360w

"Mr. Blake has not succeeded, but all the same he has contributed a remarkable addition to the literature of art criticism. He has carried his investigations into every quarter of the world, and his scholarship is truly immense, but unfortunately his English is exasperatingly involved and his heavy peri-phrastic style almost terrifying to the reader. It is difficult in a short space to convey a clear idea of his thesis." T: Craven

+ — N Y Tribune p13 N 8 '25 450w

"This book is not easy to read. The opening chapters in particular demand close attention, but those who are not afraid of being made to think, above all those who have some acquaintance with modern philosophy and mathematical relativity, will find it of absorbing interest."

Sat R 140:266 S 5 '25 250w

"With this reservation, that in his account of relations Mr. Blake allows too little for the relation of form to content and substance, his book is to be welcomed as an important contribution to the study of æsthetics. In spite of his disclaimer of a technical treatise, it is in the more technical applications of his ideas that Mr. Blake is at his best and clearest; as in his chapters on drawing and colour. Apart from their bearing on his general argument, they can be read with profit by any practising artist, or by anybody who wishes to have an intelligent understanding of pictures."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p593 S 17 '25 1650w

BLAKE, VERNON. Way to sketch. 111p il $2.50
Oxford

741 Landscape drawing. Colors 25-15366

"The Way to Sketch' is beautifully illustrated and discusses at length such problems as perspective, light and shade, choice of subject-matter, color and simplification. It is intended as a primer for the beginner."—N Y Tribune

"The amateur of art who aspires to learn to sketch will find competent instruction in this volume on landscape sketching. Mr. Blake is an artist himself, and he has an excellent way of presenting the principles of perspective, shading, etc."

+ Booklist 22:60 N '25

"Any aspiring artist would do well to read thoroughly this exhaustive treatise on the essential principles of drawing. There is little left unsaid in this very comprehensive discussion, and the text is amplified by good illustrations, which are carefully analyzed to make them comprehensive."

+ Boston Transcript pl Ag 29 '25 250w

"I have no doubt that the young student might learn a good deal from it if he should have the patience to follow it. But my experience with artists has led me to believe that unless the beginner is placed under the guidance of a real artist he should learn to draw without instruction. If he followed the precepts laid down by Mr. Blake, he would draw in the accepted British fashion, and end up in the Royal Academy or some other pernicious institution." T: Craven
N Y Tribune p13 N 8 '25 130w

"This is a masterly little exposition in its recognition of the limits to which amateur sketching may go, and at the same time of the high aim which alone makes amateur sketching worth while. The excellently selected illustrations are analysed in a final chapter, which is of interest to the most initiated."

+ Sat R 140:168 Ag 8 '25 120w

BLAKER, RICHARD. Oh, the brave music!
332p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-19105

After retiring from the sea, George Tyson could not bring himself to settle down to the staid manner of life contemplated by his wife. His first move toward fresh adventure was to buy a vast store of mahogany ship-fittings to resell at a good profit. This business plunge was new and zestful, a pleasure to Tyson, however distasteful to his wife. She was more occupied with the problem of Fred, their growing son, and his future—a problem rendered delicate by the presence in the house of Laura, the dependable, loyal and personable maid. When a crisis arrived in the family affairs it was Laura more than his mother who helped young Fred in a way he but dimly understood.

"There is a quiet humor and a very keen sense of character in Mr. Blaker. He knows a situation and he understands how to make the most of its dramatic qualities, without lapsing into sensationalism. Richard Blaker is like Hugh Walpole at his best." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 14 '25 920w
Cleveland p107 N '25

"Mr. Blaker's story is a typical representative of the minor English novel, which deals with middle-class provincial life. Like its numerous fellows, therefore, the book has a superficial and commonplace excellence of writing, no concern with plot, average and not very interesting people for its principals, a vast preoccupation with the trifling details of their daily existence." E. C. Beckwith

+ — Lit R p3 N 7 '25 220w

Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 40w

"Though occasionally it drags a little, it is on the whole extremely well told."

+ — Spec 135:614 O 10 '25 100w

"The author has the merit of telling his story as if he were himself interested in it and we are prepared to agree with him to a certain extent in the case of the hero. But the saving of the son's soul leaves us quite cold, and we should not mind if he had been left to go to the devil in his own way."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 S
17 '25 200w

BLAKESLEE, GEORGE HUBBARD. Recent foreign policy of the United States; problems in American cooperation with other powers. (Wesleyan Univ. George Slocum Bennett foundation) 368p $2 Abingdon press

327.73 United States—Foreign relations
25-17948

A survey of American foreign policies during the four years that Mr Hughes was secretary of State. "The lectures embrace the policy of the United States toward Europe; The Monroe Doctrine and related policies; recent developments in Pan-Americanism; cooperative action in the Far East; the question of Japanese immigration; and the future of American foreign policy."—Am Pol Sci R

"This book will be welcomed by every student of foreign policy and every friend of world peace." C: E. Martin

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:833 N '25 520w

"As an indication that Mr. Hughes and his friends are not particularly proud of it the Hughes attitude towards Soviet Russia is not here touched upon. Mexico, too, remains in the background where dwell the unconsidered trifles." Vincent Sheean

— New Repub 44:25 Ag 26 '25 450w

"These addresses form an excellent running account of our dealings with foreign governments during the past four years."

+ R of Rs 72:335 S '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p603 S
17 '25 50w

BLANCHARD, HAROLD FREDERICK. My automobile; its operation, care and repair. 394p il $3.50 U.P.C. bk

629.2 Automobiles 24-31809

"A very valuable practical guide, including car selection. Primarily for the owner who has little mechanical ability and will attempt only minor repairs."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 21:291 My '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:298 My '25

Pratt Technical Books p8 '24

BLANCHARD, HAROLD FREDERICK. My Ford; its care and repair. 293.36p il $3 U.P.C. bk.

629.2 Automobiles—Repairing. Ford automobile 25-5678

"Thorough treatment, especially valuable for the full and concise details for identifying and remedying troubles. Also discusses purchase, operation, overhauling, painting, washing, and the private garage, and has a chapter on the 'Fordson' tractor."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 21:330 Je '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:420 Jl '25

St Louis p344 S '25

BLANCHE, JACQUES EMILE. Manet; tr. by F. C. de Sumichrast. (Masters of modern art) 62.40p il $1.75 Dodd [5s Lane]

759.4 Manet, Edouard 25-16725

Monograph, with forty illustrations, on one of the masters of modern French art.

Booklist 22:60 N '25

Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '25 50w

"M. Blanche is always worth reading when he writes on art. He writes vividly and from a frankly personal point of view. He makes little attempt at an unbiased objectivity of attitude, but since he never pretends to impartiality no harm is done. One can make allowances all the time for his, so evident, enmities and alliances. He scarcely attempts, either, a methodical description of Manet's career or a critical analysis of his art. He just sits down to tell us whatever comes into his head à propos of Manet. One must take his book for what it gives, occasional sidelights on Manet's character

—we get glimpses of the charm of his manner—and shrewd appreciations of some aspects of his art. M. de Sumichrast has done the work of translation with more zeal than discretion." Roger Fry

+ Nation and Ath 37:599 Ag 15 '25 700w

"The text of the volume is by a painter, who as a boy knew Manet and his studio, and it is sufficiently near the generation of those fascinating late-middle decades of the last century to be able to revive something of the atmosphere of a Paris not yet ruined by a motley crowd of foreigners."

+ New Statesman 25:606 S 12 '25 600w

Reviewed by T: Craven

N Y Tribune p16 S 27 '25 50w

Sat R 140:218 Ag 22 '25 120w

"This little volume, French in conception and manufacture, has to recommend it many unhackneyed illustrations of good quality conveniently grouped at the end, and an unconventional introduction by a famous painter who actually knew Manet. The essay abounds in sidelights which are unhappily veiled in an unidiomatic translation."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:319 N 21 '25 100w

"This book, which contains forty good reproductions of Manet's pictures, is of the kind that is chiefly valuable for its illustrations. But in this case there is an interesting critical and biographical note, in which Manet's character is described and his place as a painter discussed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p665 O
15 '25 550w

BLASCO IBANEZ, VICENTE. Old woman of the movies, and other stories. 391p $2.50 Dutton

25-9692

"Fertility of invention, gaudy coloring, heavy emphasis upon background and atmosphere—these qualities stamp Blasco Ibanez's short stories as they do his novels. The dozen tales here collected range in scene from Mexico to Serbia, from Argentina to France; and the scene is always strongly painted in. The majority are rather flashy pieces of journalistic fiction." (Sat R of Lit) Contents: The old woman of the movies; The hero; The widow's loan; A shot in the night; Sunset; The four sons of Eve; The caburé feather; The serenade; The general's automobile; Martinez's insurrection; A life sentence; A Serbian night; The monster; The sleeping car porter; The mad virgins.

"The creator of 'The Four Horsemen' could not be better represented than by this volume of short stories. As a writer his fault is verbosity, ad infinitum, a piling of adjective upon adjective to prolong a good situation usually of short story length. When he makes up his mind to call it a short story, and let it go at that, he gets perfection." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 8 '25 920w

Cleveland p87 S '25

"Those who like Blasco Ibañez will like these stories. They are pleasant and quite innocuous."

+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 120w

"Such is the tragedy of Blasco Ibanez, which has a bearing on his art in this: that his art will always lack the serenity of a spirit truly master of its world. It is an art that must necessarily remain fragmentary: tho some of those fragments, such, I predict, as 'The Widow's Loan' will live." Arthur Livingston

+ Int Bk R p543 Jl '25 1850w

Reviewed by H: L. Stuart

N Y Times p9 My 31 '25 1000w

"I especially recommend the first two stories in this book as representative samples of the egregious shallowness which Blasco Ibanez can so magnificently achieve." Eliseo Vivas

— N Y Tribune p9 Je 21 '25 400w

"No one of the fifteen short stories in this volume fails to attain an obvious effectiveness; Mr. Ibanez is too able and experienced a master of his craft for that. But for the very reason that his best so far transcends the lesser achievements with which he too often contents himself, a critical reader may be moved to impatience."

+ — Outlook 140:527 Ag 12 '25 260w

"The collection illustrates Blasco Ibanez's wide range, his busy imagination, his interest in the social contrasts of a dozen nations, and his lack of a fine artistic touch. Like the long shelf of novels which his translators have given us, it is worth having, but would be better for use of the pruning knife." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:871 Jl 4 '25 400w

BLAU, JOEL. Wonder of life. 229p $2 Macmillan
242 Spiritual life 25-8225

The wonder of life is made apparent to the man who finds God immanent in the natural world and in himself. The author thus views his world and here interprets what he sees. Each chapter in the book is a mood or meditation which finds its source in some fragment from the Scriptures.

"Both an inspiration and a challenge." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p4 Jl 25 '25 320w

"Here is a book that members of Christian churches, including Mr. Priceman himself, ought to read with careful attention. It is not always wholly intelligible, logical or tolerant, but it is full of the poetry and fire and moral earnestness which are the Jew's great contributions to civilization." R. L. Duffus

+ — N Y Times p16 Ag 30 '25 580w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

"It is a book of feeling rather than of argument, of human experiences, environment, passions, appreciative of life's wonder, beauty, mystery, pain. The subjects are varied and simple, the titles and texts are cleverly chosen. The spirit and style are uniform, fresh, epigrammatic, serious, and rugged. The book reflects the best type of liberal Jewish piety." H. J. Cadbury

+ Sat R of Lit 1:874 Jl 4 '25 80w

BLOEM, WALTER S. Soul of the moving picture; auth. tr. from the German by Allen W. Porterfield. 168p il $2.50 Dutton

778 Moving pictures 24-23394

The author, a German scenario writer, describes the moving picture as an art based on feeling, not on thought, and his book is an attempt to define its peculiar nature and drawing power. The illustrations are from well known European cinema plays.

Booklist 21:222 Mr '25

"The reader may not agree with all Mr. Bloem's conclusions or predictions, but the book cannot fail to make one see a new significance in moving pictures, and realize that one thing needed to judge a moving picture is a better understanding of it as a distinct form of art."

+ — J Home Econ 17:226 Ap '25 550w

St Louis p111 Ap '25

"The only true interest that Mr. Bloem's badly written and badly translated book can have for theatre lovers lies in its twenty-two illustrations."

— Theatre Arts Mo 9:280 Ap '25 50w

BLUM, SOLOMON. Labor economics. (Am. business ser.) 579p $4; students' ed $3 Holt
331.8 Labor and laboring classes. Labor laws and legislation 25-14399

"Labor Economics presents factually and without bias the inception, development and present status of labor legislation; the growth, tactics and theories of the labor union; and the wider aspects of the labor movement as visualized by the impartial investigator. The author sympathizes in the main with the demands of labor, but he criticizes sharply some of the tactics and theories of the leaders of labor."—Publisher's note

"A decidedly useful and fairly objective review of 'labor economics' is furnished by this book." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 5 '25 950w

Management and Adm 10:290 N '25 100w

"A valuable dull book."

+ — N Y Tribune p5 O 4 '25 130w

"An interesting and ably written volume." P. H. Douglas

+ Survey 55:246 N 15 '25 750w

BOBBED hair; by twenty authors. 357p $2
Putnam

25-7829

"Twenty well-known persons, mostly of the world of local letters, labored on this story. But they did not labor together, for there were no conferences. George P. Putnam, the publisher, became enamored with the notion of having twenty authors pile up a mystery story. He was, it seems, eager to see what twenty men and women would do to one idea. This idea was contributed by Mr. Putnam; but the revolutionary feature of the collaboration was that, in the beginning, no actual plot was designed to chart the course of the action. Carolyn Wells, was chosen to write the first chapter. Then on the basis of her chapter Alexander Woolcott, who is always prepared to be sparkling and inventive, added another chapter. And thus 'Bobbed Hair' proceeded, each writer building up the mystery, peopling the story with new characters, new situations and, of course, contributing his or her wit and mannerisms." —N Y Times

"The staff is facile, clever, worthless, and so is the great majority of the fiction with which those who know no better are fed today."

Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 300w

Cleveland p87 S '25

"Our choice is Mr. Louis Bromfield's chapter. It is easily the most amusing, and, consciously or unconsciously, takes off some of Michael Arlen's phrasal gestures. As a stunt, 'Bobbed Hair' is diverting. It should make a capital movie."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 5 '25 1250w

"If a single author had done this, he might be accused of loud speaking. But somehow, for twenty, the book seems reticent. Cheerful idiocy could have gone farther only at the expense of plot interest. 'Bobbed Hair' is a monument to the great truth that even nonsense may thrive best within the austerities of a pattern."

+ — N Y Tribune p9 Ap 5 '25 360w

"Though the book is humorous enough, there is evidence its perpetrators had lots of fun writing it. Only three or four have given any past signs of artistic distinction."

— + N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 60w

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 20w

"The story moves forward with directness and consistency, though with the happy hazardness that the gods vouchsafe to no single author. The interest of the tale never flags."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:650 Ap 4 '25 230w

BODELSEN, C. A. Studies in mid-Victorian imperialism. 226p $3.50 Knopf

325.342 Imperialism. Great Britain—Colonies

"The author uses the term imperialism in one sense only, 'denoting that specifically British movement which aims at preserving and consolidating the unity of the British empire.' The economic background of British imperialism is lightly touched on, the central theme of the book being the change in English public opinion on the relation between England and the colonies from the middle of the century till the end of the 'eighties.' The author finds that the years 1868 to 1870 are critical in the change from the separatist tendencies of the Manchester group so influential in the middle of the century to the 'Greater Britain' of Dilke, Seeley and Froude."—Am Pol Sci R

BODELSEN, C. A.—Continued

"The book is a well written presentation of most of the important personalities and opinions in nineteenth century British imperialism."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:655 Ag '25 150w

"It is a good piece of historical and political writing."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 3 '25 220w

"Mr. Bodelsen has made an important contribution to the study of the modern British Empire by his lucid and dispassionate survey of the origin and growth of imperialism in England. He has employed an immense range of printed authorities, from Hansard and the daily press to Tennyson, Trollope, and Dickens; and the result is a thoroughly documented account illuminated by copious and well-selected quotations." H. H. Wrong

+ Canadian Hist R 5:356 D '24 550w

"The work is particularly rich in quotations and references. Writing in good and for the most part quite idiomatic English the author shows an unusually complete grasp of our language for a foreigner. But the text is marred by a large number of typographical errors—sometimes there are several on a single page—the result, no doubt, of the book having been printed in Denmark."

+ — Sat R 138:145 Ag 9 '24 560w

Sat R of Lit 2:111 S 5 '25 850w

"This book is one which deserves a wider circle of readers and more attention than is usually paid to productions of this nature. The work has been written in admirable English."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup 507 Ag 21 '24 950w

BODINGTON, OLIVER EATON. Romance churches of France. 262p il $5 Houghton [18s G. Richards]

726 Church architecture. Architecture—France. Architecture, Romanesque [25-23004]

The author begins his study of the French churches of the 12th century with a chapter on the historical background of the period. He then describes the various schools of Romance architecture citing examples of each, and tells how to distinguish them. Technical details are omitted, thereby extending the interest and use of the book to the non-expert public. The book is profusely illustrated with photographs by the author which as much as the book itself attest to his enthusiasm for his subject.

Boston Transcript p5 O 3 '25 560w

"Mr. Bodington's book is intrinsically an exceedingly valuable study of French regional architecture and an interesting guide to some of the less familiar examples, but it is in presenting the Romanesque or, as he prefers to call it, the Romance style in something like its true proportions that it is likely to make most impression on English readers."

+ New Statesman 25:530 Ag 22 '25 1050w

"We hope that this book will prompt many visitors to France to follow the author's example and give an object to their tour. There is hardly one fine church of his period which is not described in it and its chief beauties indicated. Such students cannot do better, in the more remote districts, than follow, book in hand, Mr. Bodington's route. It has been a pleasure to renew in these pages our acquaintance with the rich stores of statuary and column in French churches, and to join with the author in acknowledging the debt of civilization to France."

+ Sat R 140:165 Ag 8 '25 450w

"It is no disparagement of Mr. Bodington's writing to say that when it comes to the discussion of particular churches the interest is with his own photographs rather than with the text. Nothing is more difficult than to give a just idea of particular architectural beauties, as distinct from general architectural principles, by verbal description; and the great value of Mr. Bodington's text is not so much in this respect as in the careful directions he gives for getting to out-of-the-way or little-frequented places by motor or bicycle or on foot."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p473 J1 16 '25 900w

BOILEAU, ETHEL (MRS RAYMOND BOILEAU). Hippy Buchan. 310p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-8155

Hippy Buchan, thirty and good-looking, comes home on a year's leave from India where he had been with his cavalry regiment, to marry the Most Wonderful Girl. But the wonderful one informs him that there is someone else. The next day the fates play a prank on Hippy by relieving him of his heart and making him the Marquess of Fort George. Then life for Hippy becomes an ironic adventure—a mockery of everything worth while until he meets Goldenheart who restores in him the courage and faith and love with which to face the future.

Boston Transcript p5 F 21 '25 1250w
Cleveland p82 J1 '25

"Mrs. Boileau's story is well handled and captivatingly told, even if it is not in the main altogether new." H. S. H.

+ — Lit R p10 Ja 31 '25 160w

"In spite of triteness and emotional excess the book has a certain charm and fineness of texture. The people exist. The characters may be stock, but they have vitality and give reality to the book."

+ — N Y Tribune p12 Ja 25 '25 270w

N Y World p8e Ja 25 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p653 O 16 '24 100w

BOJER, JOHAN. The emigrants; tr. from the Norwegian by A. G. Jayne. 351p $2 Century

25-26996

Here Bojer tells the story of the Norwegian pioneer settlers in America. The story opens in Norway where a group of emigrants gathers under the leadership of a returned settler, Erik Foss, who has offered to do his best to assist them. Several young men, two of them newly married, and a small crofter with his family make up the nondescript company. They feel like one large family and the bond becomes closer in America when the misfortunes common to the pioneer overtake them. On their prairie farms in North Dakota they struggle against heavy odds but there are many compensations and sure, if small, gains. Gradually their old viking saga gives way to the new one of "the heroes of labor battling with the virgin soil."

Booklist 22:115 D '25

"Bojer, as a capable dramatic story teller, accustomed to international scenes, should be especially equipped for the task of writing this particular novel. Yet he has failed. He has limited himself to the European point of view; he presents the spectacle of a disinterested Norwegian objectively observing the American saga." Karsten Roedder

+ — Bookm 62:494 D '25 300w

"It is said that Mr. Bojer spent several months working on a farm in the Middle West in order to gather material for this novel. It is easy to believe that he did so, for only by becoming intimately associated with those who had been pioneers could he have found the right colors for such a convincing picture. And if the picture contains some inaccuracies and anachronisms, that too is to be expected, for he has probably interviewed a number of people who came to America at different times, and the conditions described by each, would apply only to the time at which he came. And if the novelist took something from this account and something from that, he might easily include some material in other than its proper place. In the main the picture is accurate enough to be a real contribution to the literature concerning our Middle West." I: Anderson

+ — Int Bk R p735 O '25 1100w

"A tremendous story of the soil—of American soil." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 O 3 '25 520w

"Johan Bojer writes with authority and with an inevitable instinct for central, instigating significance. He wastes no motions, stops to spin no useless words. He frankly essays no more than a simple progression in time; he does not need an elaborate inversion of order and a mediatized narration in order to build up suspense and the gratifying friction of organic conflict. Mr. Bojer has organized and correlated his material with a swift and sure feeling for its values."

+ N Y Times p8 O 11 '25 550w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y Tribune p8 N 1 '25 1050w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

N Y World p6m D 6 '25 200w

"The narrative is simple, true to life, cheerful and hopeful in tone. The translation is well done."

+ Outlook 141:610 D 16 '25 130w

R of Rs 72:558 N '25 70w

"Mr. Bojer has hurt his case in a few instances by his tendency to a platitudinous sort of moralizing. He has also revealed a bit of naiveté—it was to be expected—in his descriptions of such things as prairie fires, coyotes, and corner saloons. But it is much to be doubted whether the 'hyphenate' has ever—and that adverb goes way back—been treated with as much penetration, discrimination, soundness of judgment, and genuineness of studied vision as have been accorded him in 'The Emigrants.'" A. W. Porterfield

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:361 D 5 '25 520w

BOK, EDWARD WILLIAM. Twice thirty; some short and simple annals of the road. 539p il $4.50 (18s) Scribner

B or 92

25-1686

On the completion of twice thirty years Mr Bok describes some of the experiences of the road he has travelled. Having reached the age of wisdom, which he says begins at sixty, he allows himself here to express his opinions and it is this quality which distinguishes the book from the "Americanization of Edward Bok," which was largely narrative. But the second book is like the first in being an essentially happy book, full of Mr. Bok's zest and confidence in life. There are memories of his industrious boyhood, more experiences in the pursuit of autographs, ideas about bringing up boys, recollections of two presidents—Roosevelt and Wilson, a chapter on the American peace award and some words of wisdom to the young. Some of the chapters have already appeared in periodicals.

Reviewed by R. M. Gay

Atlantic's Bookshelf Ap '25 550w

Booklist 21:230 Mr '25

Boston Transcript p2 F 7 '25 1050w

"In an age when critical cynicism is the fashion, perhaps it will be a novelty to say that one likes the tone and spirit of 'Twice Thirty.' If it fails at times to prove that the author is wondrous wise, it is quite as noteworthy, in its slightly different way, as 'The Americanization of Edward Bok,' and those who liked that will find some even better things in 'Twice Thirty.'" E. L. Shuman

Int Bk R p257 Mr '25 1700w

"Mr. Bok possesses that rare quality—readability. In other words, he is not a victim of that modern literary curse, conscious art, or, to be quite plain, a writer in search of a style. He has a story to tell and he tells it in his own way—a good way, too. He writes at white heat of enthusiasm and spontaneity." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p4 Ja 31 '25 1400w

"The impersonal narrative tone that dominated 'The Americanization of Edward Bok' vanishes in 'Twice Thirty,' and 'preachy' episodes bristling with 'I's' take its place. Mr. Bok has some of the virtues and all of the defects that distinguish the 'healthy' mind. He is catholic enough to admire such incongruous personalities as Roosevelt, Wilson, and himself."

Nation 120:698 Je 17 '25 150w

Reviewed by J. D. Adams

N Y Times p3 Ja 18 '25 2700w

Reviewed by Frank Walsh

N Y Tribune p4 Mr 15 '25 950w

"There are two chapters here the Wilsonians should not let die. 'The Man Who Saw the Sea' is the narrative of a personal friendship beginning in Wilson's Princetonian days and ending with a poignant moment in the house on S Street. And then the other chapter, 'The President,' is a little classic in a few pages that should be separately published and a copy printed for every one of the hundred million Americans to read over and over again to eliminate the poison of an offensive propaganda. Reading these fascinating pages, glowing, as they do with the virile personality of the author, one is persuaded that here, too, is a man who has seen the sea." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p9e Ja 18 '25 720w

Outlook 139:194 F 4 '25 230w

R of Rs 71:334 Mr 25 200w

Reviewed by Briton Hadden

Sat R of Lit 1:507 F 7 '25 750w

"This book might perhaps be called an autobiography in didactic form. The writer depicts his own personality very clearly indeed—a man with a delight in living so intense that the hardships of life are nothing but the difficulties which improve the game. His goal is success and his preaching relates to the way there, and the way is by unceasing hard work, work such as an Englishman would hardly think worth while in any cause. The average man in this country if he reads the book (and it is well worth reading) will feel the game not worth the candle, but how well the game is described!"

+ Spec 134:1017 Je 20 '25 450w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p183 Mr 19 '25 700w

BOLITHO, WILLIAM, pseud. (WILLIAM B. RYALL). Cancer of empire. 60p $1 (2s 6d) Putnam

331.83 Glasgow. Housing

"Mr. William Bolitho published the greater number of the short essays of which this little pamphlet is composed in the Outlook. He draws a terrible picture of the six hundred thousand over-crowded people who exist in Glasgow—a people needing on the official local municipal estimate, fifty-seven thousand houses before they are housed even according to the comparatively low Scottish standard. Mr. Bolitho's picture is terrible, but he does not exaggerate."—Spec

"His little book is rich in pictures, images, rhythms, associations. Reading it is a deep and sombre pleasure. McKissack, who did the illustrating photographs, is, in a measure, as Doré to Dante." G. Soule

New Repub 42:298 My 6 '25 600w

Spec 134:248 F 14 '25 300w

"So firm and brilliant a book about the slums of Glasgow that it brushes aside sociolo-

BOLITHO WILLIAM, pseud.—Continued
gical classification and steps with assurance into its place on the shelf where books are friends instead of merely bundles of information." G. S.

+ Survey 54:181 My 1 '25 900w

BONE, GERTRUDE HELENA (DODD) (MRS MUIRHEAD BONE). This old man. 132p $2.50
(6s) Macmillan

[25-26897]

"This is an idyll of rural life in England—with its gossip at the blacksmith's forge, its village comedies and tragedies, the carrier's cart, the farmer, the ploughman, the hawkers of lavender, the hedger, and the farrier, the changing seasons and the growing crops. Old
John Dutton, the carrier, and Mary, his wife,
'a motherly, sheltering nature,' find their interest awakened by their new neighbors from the city—David Niven, a gifted young wood carver, and his gentle wife, Elizabeth. The friendship between the old and the young couple is the theme of the story. 'This Old Man' is full of the tranquil beauty of the English country, and the leisurely manner of the tale is beautifully in keeping with its subject and its setting."—Publisher's note

Booklist 22:72 N '25

"To read this little idyll of rural life in England, after long experience in adventuring through the omnipresent problem stories of our day, is like listening to the melody of some old ballad, after a program of modern jazz music."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 400w

"The book itself is singularly pictorial in quality, with the delicacy and fine selective-ness of an etching. The author, Gertrude Bone, is herself an artist: if she is also something of a moralist with a touch of the mystic, the moral is kept subservient to the picture." H.
L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p680 S '25 500w

"I think any one who knows village life at all will find 'This Old Man' interesting and memorable. And not even the most confirmed city dweller can miss its quiet, unhurried charm." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 Jl 11 '25 200w

"Mrs. Bone has a knack of giving shapeliness and space to simple objects and actions. Her peasants have an air of conviction; she makes us feel the force of their preoccupations, the fullness and profundity of their intentness on ordinary things. One begins to notice that there are no bad qualities in Mrs. Bone's characters; no deceit, envy, disappointment, hatred, or even physical desire. Even back-biting, the most constant attribute of English rural life, is absent here. On the other hand, the descriptions of the externals of rustic life and of its pleasanter humours are excellently done." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 37:271 My 30 '25 180w

"Sometimes, at rare intervals, one finds a story that is like a rest, as sweetening as quiet sleep, from which one rouses gentler and relaxed. 'This Old Man' is such a story."

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ag 9 '25 300w

"Here is a book, of genuine beauty and excellence, for the quiet hour. It is a work upon which everyone concerned, author, artist, publisher, printer, papermaker, and binder, can be whole-heartedly congratulated. It would bring an expression of approval even from those stern and implacable craftsmen, the binders
of fine books." W. McFee

+ Sat R of Lit 2:134 S 19 '25 400w

"The effect of the gracefully written volume is that of a train of reflection worked out in the form of fiction."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p410 Je
18 '25 320w

BONE, JAMES. London perambulator. 195p il
$5 Knopf [12s 6d J. Cape]

914.21 London—Description 25-20725

"Mr. James Bone gives twelve impressions of London under diverse aspects, in which the desire to offer information is subordinated with happy consequences to simple enjoyment of the various places, regions, and 'atmospheres' evoked. Mr. Muirhead Bone gives sixteen plates, showing his beauty of line and detail at their finest."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A leisurely, musing record of the ever-changing face of London. He appeals to Londoners to use their eyes; and this appeal is irresistibly backed by his brother's etchings, which are as finely pencilled and boldly shaded as London itself."

+ Nation and Ath 38:266 N 14 '25 220w

"His writing is as clear cut as his brother's drawing of Waterloo Bridge, one of some sixteen illustrations with which Mr. Muirhead Bone has embellished a book to which all concerned in it, author and artist, printer and publisher, have contributed beauty."

+ New Statesman 26:supxii N 14 '25 180w

"Besides being an unusually attractive piece of book-making, the type being a reproduction of Caslon Old Face, the volume will be in demand for its rich assemblage of reproductions from the drawings and etchings of London by Muirhead Bone. The author has the trained eye of the newspaper man and facility and dexterity in handling his pen."

+ N Y Times p3 O 25 '25 400w

"Few people could claim to have read all or nearly all the books on London, and it would therefore be extremely rash to declare this to be the best book of its kind; but the probabili-ties point strongly in that direction. The curios and antiques of street life can never have been more zealously explored, more sensitively tasted, and more richly described." I. B.

+ Sat R 140:482 O 24 '25 1100w

"When, more than a year ago, one began to hear of a book on London to be written by James Bone, with pictures by Muirhead Bone, one's mouth watered. Well, the book has come to hand, and one's anticipations are fulfilled; It is a Book! It has a tang of its own; when one thinks of it hereafter, as in thinking of a friend a special feeling will rise in the mind.
It is the result of a happy collaboration such as can only take place once in a blue moon. The men happen to be brothers; but that is an accident; the grand fact is that in our day no better man could be found to write about the beauty of London than James Bone; nor, to limn it, a better one than Muirhead Bone." Hulbert Foot-ner

+ Sat R of Lit 2:364 D 5 '25 1050w

"An entirely original book about London. The pile of other new books on the same subject do not in the least detract from its value. It is a real offering to London."

+ Spec 135:991 N 28 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p758 N 12
'25 50w

BONN, MORITZ JULIUS. Crisis of European democracy. (Inst. of politics publications.
Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 103p
$1.25 Yale univ. press [6s Milford]

321.8 Democracy. Europe—Politics. Political science 25-15474

"The crisis confronting democracy is found in its attitude towards Parliamentarianism or government by conference. Dr. Bonn believes in Parliaments, and holds that democracy can make them work if it gives proper safeguards to minorities and if it alters an unstable economic condition in which the many have votes and the few have wealth."—The Times [London]
Lit Sup

Outlook 141:58 S 9 '25 10w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p646 O 8
'25 380w

BONNER, MARY GRAHAM (MRS EUGENE EDWARD EARLY). Parents' guide to children's reading. 177p $1.75 Funk
028.5 Children's literature—Bibliography
25-27744

The editor of the children's book department of the International Book Review writes this guide to the world of reading for children, from picture-books for the child of four to history and romance for boys and girls of sixteen. Each book she recommends is briefly and aptly described.

"Mrs. Bonner writes in a lively intimate manner, her method is to take her readers directly into her confidence. One cannot help responding to her very evident sympathy with youth; and she has given us a small compact volume without one superfluous word filled with information for parents of all classes, a book in fact which is as indispensable for fathers and mothers as it surely is for librarians."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 2 '26 300w

"Mary Graham Bonner writes in an easy, agreeable style, touched with sympathy and humor. Her book is no mere dry-as-dust compilation, full of dull lists; each chapter is a charming little essay, and every book she mentions has at least a line or two of comment, terse, vivid, and as varied as the volumes she describes." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p108 Ja '26 600w

"An admirably practical handbook for the use of parents. In addition, the introductions and discussions are written with such sincerity, wide knowledge and charm that they add much to the interest and usefulness of the book."

+ N Y Times p23 Ja 10 '26 230w

BOOTH, WILLIAM STONE. Subtle shining secretaries. 292p il $10 Baker, W.H.

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Authorship
25-8471

"The subject of this book is the search for evidences of the hand of Francis Bacon in the works of William Shakespeare. Mr. Booth has gone about his task by noting down every discernible acrostic and telestic in the plays and sonnets, marking significant passages in the text and leaving the final judgment to the reader. Naturally enough, there are many which appear to be accidental or irrelevant, but there are many more which are not easily refutable, and the author has been consistent in presenting comments which explain without attempting to amplify."—Ind

Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 150w

N Y Tribune p8 Jl 19 '25 150w

"He has most patiently, and lavishly, rubricated certain letters and syllables here and there in the pages of Shakespeare, and he finds acrostics, 'mesostics,' 'telestics,' and other devices, as thick as autumn leaves. For the life of me, I cannot see what the system is, unless it is whenever you can find a B, an A, a C, an O, and an N, to print these letters in red ink, and leave them to dazzle your reader." E. L. P.

— Outlook 140:301 Je 24 '25 1200w

"Mr. Booth's ingenuity in finding acrostics by reading the initial letters of lines downwards or upwards fills his book with entertainment for readers with taste and time for loitering."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 3
'25 180w

BORDEN, MRS LUCILLE (PAPIN). Gentleman Riches. 377p $2.50 Macmillan

25-18278

Greedy for power and fame, Ewen Hayle, chief justice of Dalnoba—Gentleman Riches to those who knew and scorned the materialistic ambitions of the man—came to England to search for the perfect wife. Ginestra was only eighteen. She was shyly in love with Tony and quite willing to marry him, tho she did not share his ardent Catholic faith. But her strong-minded stepister preferred the chief justice, and Ginestra, carried away by the older man's determined wooing, yielded, and married him. Disillusionment followed swiftly. After three years the marriage was annulled, leaving Hayle free to pursue an earlier love, while Ginestra was reunited to Tony.

"This novel is permeated with a great deal of religious discussion. The discussions center inevitably about dogmas and beliefs. But there is sincerity in the book; and even though it may not bring about conversions it will at least make the subject of religious faith of singular appeal to the unchurched."

Boston Transcript p3 O 24 '25 320w

"The vital strength of Mrs. Borden's ably written novel is undermined by the irrelevant introduction of lengthy discussions, by the characters, of conflicting religious doctrines and beliefs. These constantly and unwarrantably impede the natural progress of the tale and divert the reader's attention from the central interests of the narrative, which are well worth following."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:223 O 17 '25 180w

BORDEUX, JEANNE. Eleonora Duse; the story of her life. 308p il $6 Doran [21s Hutchinson]

B or 92 Duse, Eleonora

[25-9365]

An enthusiastic biography which, tho it lacks critical value, provides an intimate and detailed account of Duse's life, the people with whom she came in contact and the development of her art.

Booklist 22:70 N '25

"Although inclined to be over-eulogistic, gives none the less a comprehensive, detailed history of the celebrated tragédienne."

+ — Bookm 61:708 Ag '25 120w

Cleveland p80 Jl '25

"It is a great story, and Jeanne Bordeaux tells it well; but there is even more interest in her revelation of the heart-life of the talented actress." E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p531 Jl '25 1800w

"This is not a masterpiece of biography; indeed it can scarcely be said to be a biography at all. Dates are scarce; facts are swallowed up in the rosy mist which Mlle. Bordeaux throws over the figure of her adored and idolized friend. It had been better if Mlle. Bordeaux had shared Duse's own faculty of saying in ten words what other people say in a hundred . . . Her charm has to penetrate a very thick blanket to reach us."

— Nation and Ath 36:656 F 7 '25 300w

"In three months Miss Bordeaux compiled and wrote these three hundred pages of biography, and it is not surprising that her work should show signs of haste and carelessness. From no point of view can it be called good or even satisfactory. The actual facts of La Duse's life are given incoherently, and one is continually distracted by the inapposite anecdotes which are rudely forced into the wrong context. The homage of many publics has been made the criterion of her genius; there is but little evidence of the author's own critical ability, by which the actress should have been judged. Of the life itself nothing better can be said than that the biographer has written with enthusiasm."

— New Statesman 24:606 F 28 '25 250w

"Opinion may differ as to the merits of this biography of Duse, but it is certain that none can gainsay the fact that the story of the life of the great tragédienne was written with genuine feeling for the theme, and that it is absorbingly interesting."

+ N Y Times p6 Je 7 '25 1900w

"This book may be inaccurate in places; it may omit some names and dates, it may tell us far less than we wish to know about Duse's theories of dramatic art; it may be at times extravagantly written, with Latin abandon trying to bubble through bad English; but it is quite evidently the naïve and honest reaction of a woman who knew Duse well to the spell that character imparted, and as such it has a value quite its own. It gives us a living impression." W. P. Eaton

BORDEUX, JEANNE—Continued

+ — N Y Tribune p1 Je 28 '25 1350w

"It is one of the larger tragedies of life that sincerity can be utterly ineffective. The sincerity of the author is obvious, but that does not render her the right interpreter of Duse to the English mind. . . This book, which traces closely the inter-relation of her life and her art, cannot fail, despite its burdensome richness of style, to be a valuable guide to the understanding of the actress. But it is all too much of what cinema people would call a 'closeup.' There is no critical acumen to reveal the essence of Duse's magnificence."

+ — Sat R 139:106 Ja 31 '25 550w

"No life of Duse could fail to be interesting and this book has many lively, moving, and suggestive passages, but it would be all the better for a free use of the blue pencil." J. R. Towse

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:68 Ag 22 '25 700w

"Highly coloured and sentimental; but for all its faults it provides us with a mass of information."

+ — Spec 134:48 Ja 10 '25 20w

"We fear that this life of Duse is somewhat imaginative. And we are confident that it has been written in too great a hurry. The florid style of the narrative, the excess of sentiment with which its heroine is presented, the partisan judgment and uncritical enthusiasm—these are defects which might have been at least partially mitigated by a little thoughtful patience. Still, quarrel as we may with, for instance, the author's extraordinary theories of acting, we must allow that much of the contents of her book is interesting enough. . . Those parts of the book which do not prompt the reader's curiosity as to the means by which such intimate knowledge was gained are illuminating and of considerable human interest. But innumerable passages are ruined by the most unattractive sentimentality and sometimes by extremely slipshod writing."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p23 Ja 8 '25 450w

BOSWELL, JAMES. Letters; collected and edited by Chauncey Brewster Tinker. 2v 270:550p $10 Oxford [36s Milford]

B or 92

[25-26165]

"In this edition Boswell's letters to his friend William Temple, the manuscript of which is in the possession of J. Pierpont Morgan, are for the first time published in their complete form. These letters were first published in 1857. But the editor of that volume omitted illegible passages and expurgated indelicate ones and left out the important items of dates. The new edition not only restores the letters to Temple and incorporates all of Boswell's other letters that are now in print, but includes 100 other letters, many of them on business subjects and of more economic than literary interest, which have never before been published."—Springf'd Republican

"Professor Tinker has annotated the letters with scholarly thoroughness and care, and the publishers have given the volumes a handsome dress. Taken in connection with the Birkbeck Hill editions of the Life and Letters, the primary literature of Johnson and Boswell as literary figures may now be regarded as complete." W: MacDonald

+ Am R 3:361 My '25 800w

Booklist 21:273 Ap '25

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 17 '25 2750w

"As an editor, Professor Tinker is modest, entirely competent, and self-effacing. Just enough personality emerges in his footnotes to give a hint of that distinction and charm which has been for years the continued delight of the undergraduates of Yale College."

+ Ind 114:162 F 7 '25 400w

Reviewed by Augustine Birrell

New Statesman 24:364 Ja 3 '25 2300w

"The letters will not impress the reader as possessing any unusual merits of style. James's pen never quite loses its Scotch burr-r-r. And this lack of literary feature is the more remarkable in an age when felicity in prose composition was so generally an object of striving." P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p10 Ja 25 '25 2500w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p1 Ja 25 '25 1050w

"This is a fair and goodly text. Boswell pours out his laments and joys to Sir William Temple without suddenly muttering etc or stabbing us with a printer's dagger. For this, and for other reasons, the book thus fulfils Professor Tinker's wish that it supply the lack of a contemporary biography." S. T. Williams

+ No Am 222:189 S '25 1200w

"Prof. Tinker has annotated everything with wide knowledge. We have only observed one slip in the text." Vernon Randall

Sat R 139:57 Ja 17 '25 750w

"He has executed his task with a learning and a tactful sagacity which defeat praise. With the publication of this work Professor Tinker takes his place among those delightful editors who elucidate dark matters without intruding upon the reader's privacy. Necessary, integral, illuminating, and modest, his notes clear up difficulties or suggest vital connections." Leonard Bacon

+ Sat R of Lit 1:553 F 28 '25 3500w

"Professor Tinker deserves the praise and thanks of all readers of Boswell for publishing this large collection of letters."

+ Spec 134:244 F 14 '25 900w

"In technical matters, alike of editing and typographical arrangement, the two volumes deserve unqualified praise. But if the book is a notable triumph of literary scholarship, it also supplies an autobiographical record, set down with almost disconcerting candor and the most penetrating self-scrutiny, of the life of an 18th-century young man of letters."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Ja 12 '25 1100w

"The worst thing that can be said of his editing is that here again, as in 'Young Boswell,' he has not made absolutely clear which of the letters now published have never been published before. He says there are nearly a hundred of them. But his notes to the letters seldom, perhaps never, state that a letter is now printed for the first time."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p29 Ja 15 '25 4000w

"Professor Tinker has done his work as editor so very satisfactorily as to leave little to be desired. To a carefully reproduced text he has added quite adequate notes, a list of the recipients of the letters, and a good index." R. H. Griffith

+ Yale R n s 15:170 O '25 550w

BOTOME, PHYLLIS (MRS ERNAN FORBES-DENNIS). Old wine. 346p $2 Doran 25-8906

Vienna is the background of this novel dealing with social conditions of post-war Austria. The story concerns itself with the fortunes of the Wolkenheimb family, a remnant of Austrian aristocracy, and the reaction which the loss of the Hapsburgs had upon its several members. Otto, the head of the house, sacrifices his honor by becoming allied with the Jews and radicals. His younger cousins, Eugen, Franz and Eugénie hold fast to their ideals in the face of disaster, while Carol Hunter, a self-reliant young American who plays an important part in the affairs of the Wolkenheimbs brings happiness to at least one member of the family.

Booklist 22:32 O '25

"For me there are men in the abstract." This is the largest subject which Miss Bottome has ever tackled and it is easily her most brilliant novel." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 13 '25 1150w
Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"The story is written from a sympathetic knowledge of conditions in the time and place described. It is also well written."

+ Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 80w

"Miss Bottome is deliberate and painstaking, both with her characters and with their background. The dialog is full of wise sayings. The story develops consistently, and the author skilfully avoids cheap melodrama." Madeleine Thayer

+ Int Bk R p549 J1 '25 350w

"Old Wine" is her tenth book; we believe, in some essentials, it is her best, and still it has a variation of the same qualities which seem to limit its appeal to the few and to offer no striking incentive to the voices of authority for an outburst of united welcome" E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 My 23 '25 620w

"The chief merit of Miss Bottome's stirring story, resides in the sparkling and mordantly witty dialogue. A temptation to quote some of the aphorisms of her characters is almost irresistible, but they are too firmly imbedded in the texture of her narrative. It is a meaty novel."

+ N Y Times p8 My 3 '25 520w

"She holds a steady hand. There is an occasional forced cleverness, but the characters make no false motions, speak few false words. They anticipate and answer unspoken thoughts, checking and counterchecking subtly; yet they do not impede by their awareness the coming of the end." G. V. Curl

+ N Y Tribune p12 J1 12 '25 600w

"Immensely significant and haunting novel." N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 200w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 10w

"In spite of the seeming triviality which a bare statement of the story indicates 'Old Wine' is a well conceived and well written book. In her assessment of 'conditions,' Miss Bottome reaches real heights. She has the journalistic instinct of Philip Gibbs and draws individual character better."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:72 Ag 22 '25 320w

"The narrative sharply contrasts the ideals dear to prewar Viennese and new conditions with the proletariat in the commercial saddle. If the picture is a true one the ethics of the old regime were not superior, save in a higher degree of refinement, to those of the frankly predatory commercial conditions today. There is a certain pictorial interest in the narrative, which is well conceived and developed."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ja 3 '26 300w

BOTTOMME, PHYLLIS (MRS ERNAN FORBES-DENNIS), and THOMPSON, DOROTHY. Depths of prosperity. 321p $2 Doran [7s 6d Collins]

25-12734

This is the unpleasant story of a mother's insane jealousy and hatred of her daughter. Mrs St Clair never loved Hilary. From her babyhood she saw her always as a potential rival. And when the child's increasing loveliness found its way to her father's heart, the mother's aversion grew into the brooding vindictiveness of a maniac. Hilary was plunged from one horror into another. Forced into a hateful marriage, she escaped from her husband and after months of degradation returned to her father's house, a drug addict. A young nurse employed to look after Hilary tried to help her, but the doctor was Mrs St Clair's unscrupulous ally. Thus the morbid theme is unrolled from one melodramatic scene to another, until the rescue is finally effected.

"Interesting as the tale is from the standpoint of plot and charming as Hilary can be, she is quite outside our experience of the American girl." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 7 '25 1300w

Reviewed by J: Franklin

New Statesman 24:508 F 7 '25 120w

"The Depths of Prosperity' is not immoral, but it is unmoral and unethical in so far as dragging into the fiction field horrors that might better remain unexposed; for with all its mad melodrama, stark truth does prevail—the sort of truth that should be reserved for doctors' shelves."

— N Y Times p8 Ja 3 '26 820w

N Y Tribune p11 N 15 '25 150w

"If there were so much as a hint of life in the characters, the story would be dreadful indeed; but it is possible to read it with interest, and to admire the slick effectiveness with which the authors devise and compile their horrors, because never for a single moment is there the illusion of reality. The book is extremely clever in its kind." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:108 Ja 31 '25 120w

"The story's initial assumption fails to withstand the simplest test of reason. When the torment of the girl is ruthlessly prosecuted through the whole book at the same pitch of violent, unconvincing malevolence, one's sense of the preposterous is finally reduced to unprotesting muteness."

— Sat R of Lit 2:323 N 21 '25 160w

"We miss the spontaneity of the author's usual writing, and it is difficult to feel much interest in the heroine."

— Spec 134:733 My 2 '25 60w

"The tale is rather lurid."

— Springf'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 280w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 22 '25 180w

BOULESTIN, X. MARCEL. Second helping; or, More dishes for American homes. 156p $1.75 Stokes [6s Heinemann]

641 Cookery

[25-17057]

In his "Second helping," instead of restricting himself to France, M. Boulestin has gathered his recipes from far and near.

"Its practicability is the result of his offering dishes which may be used by those who have good cooks, those who have only plain cooks, and for those who must cook for themselves."

+ Boston Transcript p2 J1 11 '25 120w

"A Second Helping should be the favourite bedside book as well as the kitchen stand-by of every woman interested in her house and in the food she sets before her family and guests."

+ New Statesman 25:208 My 30 '25 200w

"The book is delectable reading—and interesting to those who aren't incurious or afraid of unusual food. Not even Charles Lamb in his famous 'Dissertation on Roast Pig' wrote more feelingly, more personally or with finer gusto of the pleasures of the table than does this urbane gentleman of France, and in doing so he keeps up the great and glorious tradition that in the art of cookery the French are the despair of us all." Lettie Gay

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ag 16 '25 400w

"One can omit the cream in his soups, the wine in his meat dishes, and the liqueurs in his sweets, and still find his instructions perfectly sound. They suggest scores of new ways of presenting old foods."

+ Spec 135:74 J1 11 '25 260w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p208 Mr 19 '25 50w

BOUSFIELD, EDWARD GEORGE PAUL. Sex and civilization. 294p $5 Dutton [10s 6d K. Paul]

136.1 Sex. Woman. Psychoanalysis 25-3958

"The particular subject under discussion in this book is the condition of the sexual energies

BOUSFIELD, E. G. P.—Continued
in civilized society, as it effects the relative position of men and women; and especially our conception of masculine and feminine ideals." The author traces the causes of the so called disabilities, both physical and temperamental, of women, and shows that many of the characteristics which are considered as distinctly masculine or feminine are artificially induced and would gradually disappear under wiser education and more sensible social regulations.

Booklist 22:8 O '25

Bookm 61:600 J1 '25 300w

"His debating ability is excellent, but at the finish, despite his manifest sincerity, we feel that there are real difficulties still unsolved." T. S. Knowlson

+ — Lit R p4 Ag 29 '25 250w

"The book is of interest to the layman, and it is indispensable both to the analyst of human behavior and to the feminist." A. B. Parsons

+ Nation 121:390 O 7 '25 550w

"An instructive volume." Van Buren Thorne
N Y Times p12 Ap 19 '25 1750w

Reviewed by L. P. Clark, M.D.

N Y Tribune p15 O 4 '25 1050w

Outlook 140:195 Je 3 '25 40w

"At this time of day, when women are in a sufficient majority, it would seem that the attempt to substitute a real quality for what Mr. Bousfield calls the spurious imitation of it that at present exists is one that requires serious thinking based on full knowledge and plain speaking, and these will be found in this book."

Sat R 139:107 Ja 31 '25 300w

"Dr. Bousfield argues well and with much learning; but we think it unfortunate that he has not spent more time upon explaining what in fact are the necessary differences between male and female, and how their separate qualities may be best turned to use."

+ — Spec 134:160 Ja 31 '25 150w

"Most of Dr. Bousfield's pages, though written for the general public, are in substance esoteric. Broadly speaking, we incline to think that, while many of Dr. Bousfield's correspondences are far fetched and the ordinary man and woman more emancipated than he allows, the disposition in his pages to isolate phenomena and say, 'This or that is sexual,' has led him to form for mankind an ideal, of which it is no criticism to say that it is impossible, but of which this criticism arises—that it is, as it were, already outlived."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p263 Ap 16 '25 1300w

BOWDEN, ROBERT DOUGLAS. Evolution of the politician. 248p $2.50 Stratford

324 United States—Politics and government. Corruption (in politics). Politics, Practical 24-14199

"A suggestive insight into the forces which influence American government and governmental policies. The author states that his purpose 'is not to dwell merely upon the mechanics of party; not to tell a simple narrative, but to follow the political undercurrents from their sources through their devious and tortuous windings to their ultimate results. Politics has so woven itself into the very fabric of the nation, it colors so greatly the operation of the economic life of the nation, it vitates so thoroughly the work of patriots, it affects the daily life of every American in so many ways, that it calls not so much for praise or condemnation but for understanding.' (p.3) To contribute to this understanding is the chief object of the book."—School R

Reviewed by H. D. Lasswell

Am J Soc 30:492 Ja '25 40w

"Some of the author's criticisms are well founded but few persons of judicious mind would agree that government and politics have been as thoroughly controlled and corrupted as he pictures by so-called 'big-business,' 'monopoly corporations' 'predatory wealth' etc., which is the central theme of the book."

— + Am Pol Sci R 19:213 F '25 130w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 6 '24 400w

"The volume is thought-provoking; teachers of the social studies will find it stimulating." H. C. Hill

+ School R 33:230 Mr '25 330w

BOWDEN, WITT. Industrial society in England towards the end of the eighteenth century. 343p $3.50 (15s) Macmillan

331 Industrial revolution. Great Britain—Economic conditions 25-2302

The book is concerned with the period of English history commonly known as the industrial revolution during which machinery operated by power was replacing hand labor and factories were driving out the simpler home industries and handicrafts. In particular, Mr Bowden deals with the forces which brought about the transition and the social changes which it necessitated.

"This is an important book for students of British history in the past several centuries. The most serious weakness in Dr. Bowden's work results from insufficient familiarity with the political organization of English society in the eighteenth century, which obscures for him in some cases the difficulties and methods of the large industrialists in asserting their strength to the extent that their importance deserved. Dr. Bowden raises many interesting questions, but the answers he suggests are not always as specific as the facts he adduces would seem to warrant." W: T: Laprade

+ — Am Hist R 30:808 J1 '25 550w

Am Pol Sci R 19:426 My '25 70w

"This is good reading for capital and labor alike, as well as for economic or industrial students."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 250w

"Lucid and scholarly monograph." R. L. Schuyler

+ Nation 121:625 D 2 '25 1350w

"It will be valued by all students of English economic history."

+ Spec 135:459 S 19 '25 50w

"On the whole, Prof Bowden has made an important contribution to our knowledge of the industrial society in England towards the end of the 18th century. He has clarified many topics left vague in other books and has enriched our knowledge with a wealth of detailed information. Our knowledge of the industrial revolution is fuller for his work." C. P. Higby

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p290 Ap 30 '25 2000w

BOWER, B. M. pseud. (MRS BERTHA [MUZZY] SINCLAIR-COWAN). Desert brew. 311p $2 Little

25-757

"Woods Morgan, the poet of western life, who, under the disguise of 'Bill Woods' and an unshaven face, is first mistaken for a prohibition agent and then for a tramp, is a charming, courageous sort of person. The plot centers about a weakling whose wife and daughter bring him to the desert to cure him of drinking. Woods Morgan, lost on the desert, finds refuge with this family and helps them trace the source of the liquor supply, which somehow reaches the desert ranch."—Lit R

Booklist 21:276 Ap '25

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 28 '25 550w

"The story is not too tense to be agreeable and moves rapidly enough to be diverting. The ending is pleasant, the not surprising, and sustains the mildly humorous note that characterizes the whole narrative." E. H. Wyman

+ Int Bk R p484 Je '25 220w

"Though the bulwarks of the story are the usual ones, B. M. Bower's handling of its elements is markedly different. Somehow we feel that she, along with the hero-author, is laughing at the old Wild West stuff." H. B. A.

+ Lit R p9 F 21 '25 240w

N Y World p4m F 1 '25 80w

Outlook 139:69 Ja 14 '25 50w

"The narrative moves smoothly and rapidly, to good dramatic situations and a lively finish. There are also humorous touches, and the inevitable love story is not allowed to interfere unduly with the rest of the tale."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:513 F 7 '25 270w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 29 '25 120w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (MRS BERTHA [MUZZY] SINCLAIR-COWAN). Meadowlark Basin. 302p $2 Little

25-16900

Lark is a cowboy knight-errant. Since there is a dearth of ladies in distress in Meadowlark Basin, he gathers in crippled or wounded creatures of the woods to look after. And when he finds Palmer's eight-year-old grandson alone in the fields, trying to do a man's work and crying for fear of the quirt which has already left its vicious mark on his thin little body, Lark lifts the child to his saddle and quite naturally rides home with him to Maw. The act does not win him any love from old Palmer. He is out for revenge. A bank robbery causes excitement and much gun play on both sides before the culprit is caught. A bit of romance and quite a bit of humor are scattered thru the story.

"This author can always be depended upon for an interesting yarn, and her latest is no exception to the rule. In fact it is fully as good a tale as the score or so she has written, both in plot and characters." C. P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p6 S 19 '25 120w

"There are no touches of beauty or grace; nothing pure and fine. The book is poor as much through what it lacks as because of the sorry adventures of a set of persons wholly devoid of principle or attraction. But the strongest objection to it is the language of the characters; entirely colloquial—a dialect which resembles nothing on land or sea."

— Sat R of Lit 2:416 D 12 '25 220w

BOWER, FREDERICK ORPEN. Plants and man; a series of essays relating to the botany of ordinary life. 365p il $4.25 (14s) Macmillan

581.6 Botany, Economic

25-19284

"Series of essays 'relating to the Botany of Ordinary Life' (most of which have already appeared in the Glasgow Herald and other journals)." (Sat R) "From the humble potato to the splendid cactus; from Kentish pinewoods to bamboo groves in Ceylon, his illustrations range, and there is one of lovely seaplanes under the water. From the leaf he works up to the plant-body generally, to woods, fields, gardens, orchards, fungi, bacteria, ending with two excellent chapters on man's dependence and influence on vegetation." (Spec)

Boston Transcript p5 Ag 8 '25 520w

"In its enjoyable presentation of the life and work of plants themselves, Prof. Bower's book has a value all its own."

+ Nature 116:304 Ag 29 '25 800w

"This book contains something for every one young and old and it is splendidly illustrated."

+ N Y Times p20 S 6 '25 1900w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 10w

"A learned but at the same time very readable dissertation on one of the most fascinating aspects of natural science."

+ Sat R 139:624 Je 6 '25 200w

"The scope of the book, the immense stores of its knowledge, the brilliance and clearness of its style, recall Fabre. Mr. Bower is already well known as one of our distinguished botanists, and this book will certainly add much to his fame." Mary Webb

+ Spec 134:1052 Je 27 '25 120w

"An untechnical and fascinating story of the many ways in which man's life is bound up in the vegetable kingdom, written for those who have no time to inquire deeply into the subject."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 O 6 '25 220w

"Many readers with no special botanical knowledge will appreciate a review of the mutual relations of plants and men which goes a little deeper into the subject than most popular surveys and is kept as free as possible from hard technical phrases. The author is never content with second-hand repetitions, but by working out each aspect of his subject in plain language helps the reader to understand it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p378 Je 4 '25 520w

BOWER, WILLIAM CLAYTON. Curriculum of religious education. 283p $2.25 Scribner

377 Religious education

25-10897

A philosophic discussion of the new curriculum of religious education. The author outlines no course of study but discusses the various conceptions of the curriculum and the principles upon which it should rest. He bases his curriculum upon the experience of the learner, not upon materials and shows it as a changing and dynamic thing, the highest purpose of which is to develop a creative attitude toward life.

Bookm 61:xxx J1 '25 130w

"The author has done a scholarly and fundamental piece of work preparatory to the making of a new curriculum for religious education." F. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 200w

"The most thorough-going treatment of the curriculum of religious education now in print."

+ J Religion 5:559 S '25 100w

"His ideas are developed somewhat verbosely and intricately, but with more than a kernel of value for the thoughtful student."

+ — N Y Tribune p7 O 11 '25 50w

Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 20w

"The detailed educational plan, as Prof Bower sets it forth, is most stimulating." J. S. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 25 '25 1200w

Reviewed by A. T. Case

World Tomorrow 8:318 O '25 220w

BOWERS, CLAUDE GERNADE. Jefferson and Hamilton; the struggle for democracy in America. 531p il $5 Houghton

973.4 United States—History—Constitutional period, 1789-1809. United States—Politics and government. Hamilton, Alexander. Jefferson, Thomas

25-23830

This book is a history of the twelve years' struggle between the conflicting ideals of Hamilton and of Jefferson and the imprint they left on the character of the new republic. Jefferson's faith in democracy prevailed over Hamilton's distrust of it and the hard fought battle, closing with the collapse of the Federalist party, determined that "this should not only be a republic, but a democratic republic." Mr Bowers paints living portraits of the two great protagonists and their associates in the struggle, against a background of the social life of the times. While his sympathies are clearly with Jefferson, he shows how essential a part both played and how fundamental were their differences.

"Mr. Bowers is frank and aboveboard as a partisan of Jefferson, albeit an honest partisan. Moreover he strives to be fair, and he succeeds better than most special pleaders. So notwithstanding his partiality, Mr. Bowers's book is the best story of the origin of Jeffersonian democracy that has been published. . . . Attractive as is every page and line of his book, dramatic as all and thrilling as some of it is, every statement is supported by a foot-note reference to original data." A. J. Beveridge

BOWERS, C. G.—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 12 '25 5700w

"That excellent American scholar and historian who wrote 'The Party Battles of the Jackson Period' has added new laurels to his brow with this study of the long conflict between Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton. The two chief figures are admirably drawn."

+ Ind 116:23 Ja 2 '26 200w

"He has admirably succeeded. Bowers has the art of making dead people live and move as flesh and blood again. This is one of the most striking features of his delightful book." W: G. McAdoo

+ Int Bk R p83 Ja '26 2500w

"Mr. Bowers takes his readers through the long-dead period with verve and sustained interest. He lights up the unhappy habit history has of repeating itself. The generation of today should read Mr. Bowers' valuable volume. It is full of red lights of warning, and is truthful, interesting and fair." D. C. Seitz

+ Lit R p1 D 5 '25 1500w

"The pen portraits which the author draws of the main figures are scarcely less interesting or indicative of more care and research than the portraits of their many followers. Every figure is distinct and lifelike. And while the author never fails to give in full the facts and reveal the littleness which seems inherent in politics, nevertheless, when you draw toward the close, there is an atmosphere of sincerity, an impression of greatness, attaching to the whole group." W. E. Borah

+ New Repub 45:140 D 23 '25 1200w

"Those who read his previous volume, 'Party Battles of the Jackson Period,' will rejoice to know that in this new book he has fully equaled the vividness and vitality with which that notable study is presented. But it is a much better and more important book than the other, partly because of the greater fundamental importance of its theme and partly because the author has so thoroughly grasped its significance." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p7 D 20 '25 2000w

"The most interesting book that has ever been written about the two greatest antagonists this country has produced, and the truest story of Jefferson and Hamilton." W: E. Dodd

+ N Y Tribune p1 D 20 '25 2000w

"The reading of history is for its lessons. Mr. Bowers's book is full of them. No lover of American history and no student of American politics can afford to overlook it." J: W. Davis

+ N Y World p6m D 6 '25 1550w

"A vivid account. The book as a whole contributes little or nothing by way of hero-worship, but it gives us a realizing sense of the personal ambitions and bitternesses which so largely made up the background of our early politics."

+ R of Rs 73:109 Ja '26 140w

BOWIE, WALTER RUSSELL. Some open ways to God. 235p $1.50 Scribner

230 Belief. Christianity 24-29429

These chapters by the rector of Grace church New York "are meant to show that the grounds of those modern conceptions of science, of life, and of religion, over which alone our twentieth-century minds can easily move, do give firm footing for the advance of faith, and that the ways of our truest and most unfettered thinking are open ways which lead to God through Jesus Christ." Contents: The need of religious conviction; The reality of God for personal experience; Jesus Christ; The indwelling spirit; Why belong to the Christian church?

Bookm 60:adv F '25 60w

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 10 '25 260w

Lit R p11 Mr 7 '25 300w

"It is with courteous lucidity that he emphasizes what he considers to be the essentials to the religion of Christ. Every word is selected with care. The illustrations are pertinent as parables and the anecdotes fit the argument." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p16 Je 21 '25 1100w

"The author writes with grace of style and with irenic temper."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:676 Ap 11 '25 100w

"A broad and tolerant point of view, a style that charms, a wide acquaintance with the literature of the subject, and a peculiar facility in the use of illustrations all combine to make the book of unusual appeal." J. S. B.

+ Spring'd Republican p10 F 3 '25 950w

BOYD, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. H. L. Mencken. (Modern American writers) 89p $1 McBride

B or 92 Mencken, Henry Louis 25-17292

Mr Boyd lays the myth of the Mencken legend. Quoting freely from Mr. Mencken's writings he gives in the three sections of the book entitled The American, The philosopher, The critic, a glimpse of the personality of the man, a résumé of his views and their derivation, and a summary of his work and the criticism against it.

Booklist 22:158 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p6 O 31 '25 320w

"Mr. Boyd's outline of Mr. Mencken's position as critic and philosopher is just and illuminating." M. K.

+ Cath World 122:282 N '25 320w

"Mr. Boyd talks rather sparely and politely about a very hearty phenomenon."

Dial 80:71 Ja '26 180w

"He quotes voluminously from Mr. Mencken's works, but his own comment is so shrewd, so quiet, and so searching that it seems like a rapier to Mr. Mencken's club, particularly when—as is sometimes the case—Mr. Mencken's weapon is a stuffed club. An entertaining, witty, and well-written book of criticism."

+ Ind 115:508 O 31 '25 150w

"The brilliant Irish critic has written joyfully, without fulsomeness or blather, and he has made his subject stand out in the dimensions with which the sculptor is advantaged." J: E. Rosser

+ Int Bk R p773 N '25 1100w

"A compact, lucid, well-informed exposition, often in the subject's own words, of the man, the philosopher, and the critic. As criticism it reveals neatly both the strength and the weakness of Mr. Mencken's doctrines." G: Genzmer

+ Nation 121:664 D 9 '25 580w

Reviewed by H: L. Stuart

N Y Times p2 S 20 '25 1400w

Outlook 141:320 O 28 '25 260w

Reviewed by L. M. Hussey

Sat R of Lit 2:295 N 14 '25 420w

BOYD, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. Portraits: real and imaginary; being memories and impressions of friends and contemporaries. 265p $2.50 Doran

814 24-28258

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Not distinguished by amiability in the imaginary section nor by any special quality of illumination in the real. The latter, however, are accurate, fair, considered, and unmalicious reports of a variety of literary men."

+ Dial 78:339 Ap '25 100w

"Mr. Boyd does not fly high, but he succeeds in being generally vivacious and occasionally shrill. He hits off types neatly enough but some of the force of these American figures is lost on an English reader. He does not utter any very profound criticism of books or men, but he certainly succeeds in snapping people in characteristic attitudes, giving to each some little trinket or knickknack which illustrates their work."

+ Nation and Ath 37:302 Je 6 '25 200w

"Mr. Boyd must be read, as one of the major diversions of the season. But he will go rather better in sips than in deep draughts, and preferably when the gastric juices of human kindness happen to be in fullest flow." H: B. Fuller

+ New Repub 41:236 Ja 21 '25 900w

"The imaginary portraits are mainly of American types and pests and by the time that the writer has finished with the literary minnows of his own country there is considerable confusion of the Greenwich Village waters. On the other hand the fisherman still has energy to tackle the authentic salmon of both countries and he can play a Shaw, a Chesterton, or a George Moore with a skill that is delicious to the observer on the bank."

+ Sat R 139:561 My 23 '25 150w

"We should prefer more of Mr. Boyd's real critical acumen and less of the peccadillos of Greenwich Village. But Mr. Boyd has hidden his light under a bushel of irritations." T. K. Whipple

+ Sat R of Lit 1:458 Ja 17 '26 650w

"Synthetic satire affords some scope for ethical questioning; but there is no doubt that it is highly diverting. No one interested in literary matters can fail to find excellent entertainment in Boyd's book." H. M. Parshley

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ja 18 '26 520w

"Considered for what it is, an example of pamphleteering by an Irishman in America, Mr. Boyd's book is both remarkable and amusing; but it is undeniably tiring, partly through the difficulty of knowing at whom the blows are aimed, but chiefly because the manner demands brevity."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p380 Je 4 '25 1000w

BOYD, ERNEST AUGUSTUS. Studies from ten literatures. 333p $3 (12s 6d) Scribner
804 Literature—History and criticism 25-7663

Studies from the contemporary literatures of France, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Switzerland, Germany, Scandinavia, Poland and Canada. Among the writers discussed are André Gide and the brothers Tharaud in France; Unamuno, Pío Baroja, Benavente and Concha Espina in Spain; D'Annunzio, Pirandello and Papini in Italy; Carl Spittler and C. F. Ramuz in Switzerland; Brandes, Bojer, Gustav Wied and J. Anker Larsen in Scandinavia. The literature of expressionism in Germany is treated, and in Poland the work of Wladyslaw Reymont. There is a brief chapter on Canadian-French fiction.

Booklist 21:370 Jl '25

"A good book. Mr. Boyd is informed on a variety of subjects and writes with amazing facility. This is one of his best efforts."

+ Bookm 61:471 Je '25 70w

"With the increasing interest generally becoming manifest in the writers without our own country, of which interest the larger number of English translations of them appearing since the war is a proof, Mr. Boyd's book should find a welcome." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 600w

"The book is informative, but information, in Mr. Boyd's work, is not always illuminating. His study of Flaubert and French Realism is excellent; it defines terms and gives character to literary movements; but a great many of the studies are only book reviews (d'Annunzio, les Tharaud) and some seem to be several book reviews rolled into one, so that trivial facts are repeated in the same essay and even on successive pages."

+ Dial 79:433 N '25 150w

"This is a book of sound criticism based on a vast amount of reading and written with charm."

+ Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 120w

"It is not only that he knows his French, or Italian, or Spanish, or whatever the language may be, but that he is ever on the alert for new authors who are worth while. On this account his contributions to the literary press, likewise his studies in volume form, are particularly interesting. They contain critical comparisons which his wide knowledge of modern authors enables him to offer with the confidence of first-hand knowledge." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p2 My 9 '25 430w

"As a reporter he reveals a greater erudition in modern foreign literatures than is to be found in anyone else now writing in America. As a critic he has a distinct preference for the solid, realistic, intellectual, and sophisticated; he is the enemy of all cults, of sciolists, and of aesthetes. As a wit he brutally knocks down what as a rule is not deserving of much tenderness."

+ Nation 121:363 S 30 '25 120w

"Mr. Boyd reaches out in his various directions with a ready confidence that begets confidence. He shows immense evidences of studiousness; he can be witty at need, and he can offer slight effects of touch-and-go scandal when the indifferent children of the pen lay themselves open. His close-packed volume stocks us up with the necessary data for the next few years." H: B. Fuller

+ New Repub 44:183 O 7 '25 580w

"Mr. Boyd has carried out his difficult task with so much judgment and spirit that one regrets the end of these studies and asks for more. With no small skill he avoids the clutter of names." C: de Kay

+ N Y Times p13 My 24 '25 1350w

"His admirations are consistent, his dislikes are compatible; sound observation, sound thinking, and sound representation in literature are the virtues that he cherishes, and their opposites are the vices he detests. For beauty in its more substantial forms he has an appreciative eye, while the same quality when somewhat more fragile seems sometimes to escape him." B. R. Redman

N Y Tribune p4 Je 7 '25 420w

"His papers are gay, accurate, witty without being destructively light, and somewhat in advance of the critical crowd who are up on everything. For the purposes of this book Mr. Boyd is perhaps this country's most able and amiable guide to the darkest Europe of literature."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 160w

Outlook 141:128 S 23 '25 300w

"Mr. Boyd is a little too humble in these essays: he has great powers of attack and the quality of mercy does not provide his most engaging temper. But in his present part of temperate guide he often does useful service, putting us right, for instance, about the agreeable but not remarkable Spanish dramatist, Benavente and suggesting the parallel between Madrid's Martinez Sierra and London's J. M. Barrie. As far as one compact volume can achieve it this book supplies a cosmopolitan education."

+ Sat R 139:495 My 9 '25 450w

"Mr. Boyd ranges as widely as Signor Croce in his 'Poesia e Non Poesia' and is more informative if less stirring and controversial. He is as sane a critic with as definite judgments. But these judgments do not seem to penetrate or illuminate." A. W. Colton

+ Sat R of Lit 2:292 N 14 '25 750w

"When all is said, this volume is well worth while, for it points the way to outstanding foreign masterpieces to be found in English translation."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 O 19 '25 520w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Ap 16 '25 70w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

BOYD, GLADYS LILLIAN, and STALSMITH, MARION D. Manual for diabetics; introd. by F. G. Banting. 90p $1.50 Funk
616.63 Diabetes. Diet in disease 25-1861

The book explains in simple language the origin and symptoms of diabetes and gives directions for its treatment with diet and insulin. Tables of food values are included and recipes for the preparation of the diabetic menu.

Booklist 21:292 My '25

Reviewed by Lettie Gay
N Y Tribune p12 Ap 26 '25 550w

BOYD, JAMES. Drums. 490p $2.50 Scribner
25-8792

"The scene, for the greater portion of the book, is North Carolina prior to the revolt of the Colonies against the Crown. It shifts to England for two years, then changes to the sea, where the action is carried on aboard Paul Jones' marauding frigates, the Ranger and the Bonhomme Richard. Finally, after the historic fight between the Richard and the Serapis, the youthful rover, whose career provides the main source of narrative development, is invalided home with a bullet-shattered arm. His return is in time for a brief experience of active service with Morgan's Men . . . There is no hint here of the standardized puerilities invariably employed for imaginative treatment of the Patriot and Redcoat theme. Instead there is a solid reconstruction of a country and a people during the most precarious decade of their history—1771-'81."—Lit R

"In Drums there is a 'sweet humanity of the whole' rather than of the part. But the action is supreme, and as a sincere study of our beginning civilization Drums is as valuable as it is picturesque." E: A. Weeks, Jr.

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '25 600w

Booklist 21:382 J1 '25

"Mr. Boyd writes with great attention to atmospheric detail and with an uncanny sense of dialects. Still, for all that there is something missing. I suspect that this Boyd will some day be considered one of our best; yet he lacks poetry and fire, and that curious quality of romance that one finds in others of his generation."

+ Bookm 61:470 Je '25 170w

"Many novels of the American Revolution have been written, many will be written, in years to come. It seems to us that this will take a very high place in the literature of that period and that American historical fiction has been greatly enriched by this important novel." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 1300w

"The general picture is well composed, and the general effect excellent."

+ Cath World 122:286 N '25 200w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"It has the prime quality of holding the reader's attention. But above all, it has something of youth and war and love. A fine performance, among the best historical novels written in America in years."

+ Ind 114:480 Ap 25 '25 100w

"Mr. Boyd, naturally, has much growing to do before he can aspire to the stature of a Thackeray, but this book indicates that he belongs to that family rather than among the writers of romance in a more or less historical state-setting. He is a social historian in the best sense in which one may apply that label to a novelist." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p400 My '25 1300w

"We are inclined to believe that this is the finest novel of the American Revolution which has yet been written." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 Ap 11 '25 600w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 43:212 J1 15 '25 180w

"Its artistry is not perfection, but fine in spirit; it sees life whole and with deep feeling." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 5 '25 850w

"If America has produced a more compelling historical novel than this I have failed to see it. It is not fiction; it is history—history in its most vital form; history told with all the thrill and feeling of actuality; history treated with creative imagination just as Crane treated the Civil War in 'The Red Badge of Courage'; history that leaves with the reader the atmosphere and the soul of a vanished era." F. L. Pattee

+ N Y Tribune p3 My 31 '25 950w

"The book has character, humor, and action. Few better-told tales of fighting have been written than the account of John Paul Jones's sea battle in the Bonhomme Richard against the Serapis, in which young Fraser took an active part." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 140:68 My 13 '25 300w

"For most of us this is a new angle from which to view the progress of the Continental fortunes. The vigor, as well as the literary grace, of the narrative leaves little to be desired."

+ R of Rs 71:671 Je '25 150w

"Much research went into making this book so accurate historically that the most meticulous antiquarian will find no error in the geography, in the customs and manners depicted, or in the record of events, but this labor is not apparent on the surface; no parade of knowledge breaks the continuity of the story, no attempt is made to create illusion by filling the foreground with pictures of the past; but when one of the characters acts or speaks, we are aware that he is immersed in the atmosphere of his own time. So subtly is this done that the attention is never distracted from the character; it is he that is in focus and not the background against which he is seen." Aymar Embury II

+ Sat R of Lit 1:687 Ap 18 '25 520w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 460w

"The characterization is clear and firm, free from exaggeration, and lifelike. It is fiction, but it is of a kind which is an aid to history."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p700 O 22 '25 350w

Wis Lib Bul 21:199 J1 '25

BOYD, THOMAS A. Points of honor. 328p $2 Scribner
25-7673

Eleven stories of the American soldiers in France. In each episode described, it is some ideal of honor which guides the conduct of a very human being in a moment of stress or emotion under the shadow of war. Contents: "Unadorned; The Kentucky boy; Responsibility; "Sound adjutant's call"; Rintintin; A little gall; The ribbon counter; The nine days' kitten; The long shot; Uninvited; Semper fidelis.

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

"Boyd can use the American language with telling effect. He writes of canteen and camion, of French girl and American sweetheart, of officers and of men. He is not sentimentally a worshiper of his heroes, nor does he waste time deploring war. His stories are of men under a special set of conditions: but primarily of men." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:344 My '25 420w

Boston Transcript p4 My 9 '25 520w

"Unquestionably genuine characters, scenes faithfully presented, and a growing power of dramatic and ironic grasp mark this collection of stories. Ex-soldiers will recognize the veracity of the book; other people who are forced to take its truth for granted will appreciate the power and distinction of the writing."

+ Ind 114:419 Ap 11 '25 60w

"Highly illuminative and interesting to the last word." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p11 My 2 '25 350w

Nation 121:144 Ag 12 '25 60w

"These are real stories of real men told with gusto and excellence. They do not slip into the common pattern, but grope for their own crude but vigorous design."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 22 '25 700w

"It is to be hoped that this will not be the last of Mr. Boyd's war fiction. It forms, on the whole, a better memorial than granite monuments or Fourth of July orations." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p11 Ap 26 '25 700w

"There is a mighty pleasant quality in these eleven short stories, a quality which is compact of easy writing, careful structure and a more than fair sense of the dramatic. But of swing and lunge, and hot panting after the unattainable, such as there was in the author's 'Through the Wheat,' this volume is completely lacking."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 5 '25 150w

"Mr. Boyd seems steadier of eye and hand than almost any other writer of war fiction."

+ Outlook 140:222 Je 10 '25 300w

"Fifty, a hundred years from now these stories may well be a source-book for an historical novel, stripping from the events of the World War their then mossy romance. For, whatever else Mr. Boyd has accomplished, he has shown how insufferably dull and uninteresting the War appeared to the average man. Unfortunately this quality of dullness escapes from the book, and seeps into the consciousness of the reader. In the whole 328 pages there is only one trace of humor, only one passage that can stimulate a smile."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:764 My 16 '25 580w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:199 Jl '25

BOYD, THOMAS A. Samuel Drummond. 308p $2 Scribner

25-16486

The scene of the story is an Ohio farm at the time of the Civil war. Inarticulate, plodding Sam Drummond and the valiant Marthy Jane work early and late to make their land prosper. They are succeeding comfortably when, with the advent of the war, hard times come upon them. The land yields less and living costs more. Sam enlists, and during his absence old Christy and Marthy Jane are unable to manage. Little by little the farm falls into decay. After the war there are years of dogged effort when Sam uses all the skill and force in him to win back prosperity. His children grow, marry and leave the farm, and finally he and Marthy Jane must leave it too, and at middle age start life afresh in town.

Booklist 22:115 D '25

"By far Boyd's best book; better, as a book, than his magnificent 'Through the Wheat.' I do not think everyone will enjoy Mr. Boyd's clipped style, his careful development, his pages which lack luminosity but gain in understanding and clarity. Yet here, I believe, is a novel which compares more than favorably with 'Barren Ground' and with any one of the Herbert Quick trilogy." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:206 O '25 200w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 1250w
Cleveland p107 N '25

"The novel is written with a splendid restraint and repression. It is a sad, but convincing story."

+ Ind 115:396 O 3 '25 150w

"The dignity and simplicity of the story's style are occasionally marred by lapses into the commonplace; but the narrative is continuous and restrained, and, in addition, the book is valuable for the depiction of the social and economic forces which changed the self-sufficient husbandman into a purchaser of things available only for money. A good story this makes, and well told, with a gratifying insight into the living characters and the social influences which control them." H. H. Balos

+ Int Bk R p65 D '25 550w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 70w

"One cannot deny a sense of reality to the book. It has faults of style, in particular the seeming carelessness of choice of words; it is prolix, and often borders on sheer dullness, but if the reader wishes to live with Ohio pioneers of the period he may do it with the aid of Mr. Boyd's imagination and research." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 Ag 29 '25 250w

"Excellent in small quantities, but somehow unexciting. Accuracy is not one of the qualities one demands of bread, nor pungency, nor the revelation of truth, and so, because what he writes seems to involve so much of the staff of life, one does not at first ask of Mr. Boyd as much of these virtues as he needs." Moses Harper

+ New Repub 44:105 S 16 '25 180w

"As a historical work, it is a superficial, but on the whole accurate, piece of observation. Detail is scrupulous, is sparse; dialect is of the 'By Heck!' variety, but probably fair; character is distinct, if not profound. Where Mr. Boyd succeeds is in his dealing with the huge human forces which have in three generations so profoundly altered the character and status of the American farmer. Yet he has not allowed his consciousness of their existence to tempt him into sociological or economic discursiveness. He has remembered that he is writing a story about people. The large public who are intrigued by novels of farm life will find his book true to life and with greater insight than the majority of such volumes."

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 30 '25 1100w

"To the American reader it is an old story. Mr. Boyd is honest and sincere, he does not write a line of nonsense. But his province would not appear to be the historical novel."

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 15 '25 480w

"Soundly wrought, simple, serious, sincere."

+ Outlook 141:290 O 21 '25 100w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko

Sat R of Lit 2:312 N 21 '25 600w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 480w

BOYD, THOMAS ALVIN. Gasoline; what everyone should know about it. 211p il $2.50 Stokes

665.5 Gasoline

25-9269

The book tells in a simple way what the motorist needs to know about gasoline, its sources and properties, what distinguishes good gasoline from bad and how to get the most miles out of a gallon.

Booklist 22:56 N '25

"Here is a book in which the technical facts known about gasoline are translated into popular language. The presentation is worthy of Dr. Slosson's inimitable style." G. A. Burrell

Ind & Eng Chem 17:655 Je '25 600w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:32 Jl '25

N Y Tribune p11 Je 14 '25 120w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 80w

Pratt p19 autumn '25

St Louis p406 N '25

"A well-rounded and ably-written book."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:900 Jl 11 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:195 Jl '25

BOYLE, CONSTANCE ANTONINA. Anna's. 314p $2 Seltzer [7s 6d Allen & U.]

25-8371

"By introducing the summary ruthless and secret methods of the ancient West-country smuggler into post-war England, and linking the handsome and wicked landlady of an inn for sailormen with the fortunes of an ancient county family, Miss Boyle has produced something new in the way of thrillers. So intricate is the inter-relationship of her characters that she has appended a family tree to explain the marriages, legal or bigamous, that form the foundations of a plot, the superstructure of which is built of the strong family sense of the Le Telleurs and the mocking hatred of Anna Hellicoe, whose inn, a show place for American and other visitors and a screen for all kinds of villainy, gives its title to the story. Although the greater part of the work is concerned with the Le Telleurs, and their search for and subsequent dealings with a nephew and heir—the presumed son of a Le Telleur who has died more or less scandalously in America—it is dominated from start to finish by Anna Hellicoe and her sinister companions."—New Statesman

BOYLE, C. A.—Continued

Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 100w

"One of the most intricate tales imaginable."

L: Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 100w

Nation and Ath 36:896 Mr 28 '25 180w

"There is a mystery in the story, but the thrills are not dependent upon it, nor upon the actual crimes that are committed, though they are exciting enough; rather do they arise from the interplay of character, and the ironic entanglement which gives that interplay unusual scope."

+ New Statesman 24:634 Mr 14 '25 220w

"It is an extremely complicated tale, ingenious and interesting. There are too many characters, so many that the various Le Telleurs and their relations become rather confusing at times, the more confusing because several of them seem quite unnecessary to the narrative. Still, the important ones are most of them sufficiently well individualized to stand out as definite personalities. For a mystery story the book is unusual in that the last page leaves it still unfinished."

+ N Y Times p22 Ap 19 '25 750w

N Y Tribune p12 Je 21 '25 380w

Spec 134:643 Ap 18 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p173 Mr 12 '25 160w

BOYSON, V. F. Falkland islands; with notes on the natural history. 412p il $5 Oxford [15s Milford]

997 Falkland islands 25-1553

"A history of the treeless islands of Patagonia which entered history with Amerigo Vespucci and became a plaything of Spanish, French and British ambitions. Today the strange huge Falkland fox is extinct and the last king penguin is dead, its oil used to seal the Falkland roofs. A commercial company takes profits from a million sheep and kills the wild geese who dispute with the sheep the succulent native tussock-grass. But the mysterious stone rivers, in which no water ever runs, remain to puzzle the geologist and the geographer."—Nation

"It would have been exceedingly difficult to make the internal history of this remote and unimportant colony very interesting, and Mr. Boyson, with the best of good-will, has not succeeded in doing so. He gives plenty of evidence of research in printed and manuscript sources, but little evidence of a sense of the salient in historical evolution. The narrative, especially in the later chapters, is a chronicle of events rather than a history." R. L. Schuyler

— Am Hist R 30:658 Ap '25 400w

"A clear and vivid account, based upon original authorities." H. E. E.

+ Eng Hist R 40:473 Jl '25 60w

"Altogether a useful and informative volume."

+ Geog R 15:681 O '25 100w

"The story is told by Mr. Boyson with an energy of phrase and a fine sense of dramatic and poetic values found seldom and hence all the more to be appreciated in works like this, primarily historical and scientific." Muna Lee

+ Lit R p6 D 20 '24 1050w

Nation 119:659 D 10 '24 80w

"Altogether it is a work of great value and fills a distinct gap among authoritative works on the British Empire."

+ Nature 115:940 Je 20 '25 460w

Spec 134:18 Ja 3 '25 680w

"The volume is full of facts well arranged and agreeably stated. Moreover, it is copiously illustrated in the right way by pictures of places and birds, of modern whalers at work, and the floating factories or stations of the 'Southern Whaling and Sealing Company.' A copious—indeed an exceptional—body of writing, both literary and purely informative, concerning the Falkland Islands has already accumulated. The authors have brought it all up to date."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p659 O 23 '24 900w

BRACKETT, CHARLES. Week-end. 157p $1.75 McBride

25-13518

"About this book of yours. Have it light—if you could have it clutch the heart occasionally it might be wise. Don't have a plot. Just use anecdotes. If you can't think up the right ones why not go to some Frenchman or Italian? As to style, keep one eye on Huxley, and you might just glance at Firbank. The soupçon of decadence, you know." Thus, in brief, Mrs. Pendarvis advises the awkward young author, her fellow guest over the weekend. It is the author's formula for his book.

"'Week-End' is entertaining, and a trifle mad, and not half so good as most of Mr. Brackett's fine short stories one sees in the magazines."

— + Bookm 62:76 S '25 120w

Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 460w

Cleveland p87 S '25

"A highly diverting book, packed with sly sarcasm." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:161 Ag 8 '25 1100w

"A little naughty; from page to page, however, increasingly amusing and curative." W. Y.

+ Lit R p7 S 12 '25 100w

New Repub 44:51 S 2 '25 150w

"It is a delightfully deft study of a 'society' which has neither meaning nor direction. It is clever dialogue. Above all, it is finished, entertaining and thoughtful satire."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 2 '25 800w

"Is so clever and so light-hearted and so frivolously well informed that there must surely be enough Americans to welcome one of our few native books which manages to be intelligent without being heavy and gloomy and without showing a solemn respect for depravity." Frances Newman

+ N Y Tribune p5 S 20 '25 350w

"A most successful and amusing little volume." Morris Markey

+ N Y World p3m Ag 23 '25 320w

Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 60w

"The book is brief and frothy. There are all sorts of diverse tastes in fiction. We ourselves prefer such a trifle to many significant novels. This is a pure jeu d'esprit, and, as such, an applaudable performance. Young Mr. Brackett is distinctly clever."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:89 Ag 29 '25 180w

Reviewed by Walter Millis

Survey 55:310 D 1 '25 250w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Wives. 298p $3.50 Harper

920.7 Woman—Biography. United States—Biography 25-18266

Mr Bradford has chosen as the subjects of his latest "psychographs" seven women whose prestige has come from their connection with men honored or execrated in American history. Yet tho these women would probably have lived quiet, unknown lives except for the position their husbands' prominence gave them they appear in Mr Bradford's portrayal as personalities by their own right. "It is curious," he writes in his preface, "that, in every instance except that of Mrs. Lincoln, one gets an indefinable sense of full equality with the husband, and in one or two instances a sense of decided superiority." Contents: Confessions of a biographer; Mrs Abraham Lincoln; Mrs Benedict Arnold; Theodosia Burr; Mrs James Madison; Mrs Jefferson Davis; Mrs Benjamin F. Butler; Mrs James Gillespie Blaine.

"For several years, the growing strength of Mr. Bradford's style has been for me a source of great admiration. When he is at his best, his words flow easily, rhythmically, without strain. Frequently in Wives there are crystal passages of fresh, limpid beauty. All in all, the volume presents one more interesting variation of immensely suggestive and individual biographic and literary method." E: Wagenknecht

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 620w

Booklist 22:114 D '25

"'Wives' is particularly interesting in this connection because it contains a portrait, and a remarkable one, of Theodosia Burr. Mr. Bradford's abilities are mellowing. These sketches, in my opinion, are among the very best he has done." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:500 D '25 550w

"Mr. Bradford's methods are too familiar to need either explanation or praise. To the present volume he brings an unusual touch. Not only does he search his character objectively, but he studies the influence of its contact upon another character. He shows his exceedingly delicate understanding and his absolute sympathy with human traits and motives quite as ably as in anything he has yet done." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 3 '25 2250w

"Absolutely original in its plan and treatment. Dealing with several American women who were associated by relationship with great men, but who were themselves for the most part obscure women, he has illuminated their character in a way to arouse not only his readers' interest but their admiration." J. E. Chamberlin

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 25 '25 100w

Cleveland p111 D '25

"Mr. Bradford's easy, gracious style, his good manners, his patient willingness to learn, and his boldness of imagination, qualify him for this difficult and delicate task. His book is delightful biography. It is also the work of a cultivated, ripened gentleman and scholar."

+ Ind 115:508 O 31 '25 100w

"He has the rare faculty of making biography interesting at the same time that he makes it convincing; he has the power not only of portraying the external lives of his characters, but of adumbrating their inner selves; he writes in a style that is at once reserved and charming, fluent and polished, intimate and yet never undignified or flippant." S. A. Coblenz

+ Int Bk R p8 D '25 800w

"With unerring judgment, taste and humor he selects from the data he has gathered such illuminating bits as help us, for ourselves, to build up our own picture of his woman-in-hand. He knows thoroughly what he is about." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p4 O 24 '25 1050w

"It may not be fair to quarrel with Mr. Bradford. For in spite of the fact that he wrote his characters around a thesis, Wives is a worthwhile book. It is one of those volumes which is better read slowly than at a hasty gulp." Margaret Evans

+ New Repub 45:92 D 9 '25 480w

Reviewed by Horace Green

N Y Times p1 O 11 '25 1350w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p5 D 6 '25 1050w

"He has so well mastered the incredibly difficult art of not saying what one does not mean that what he does mean stands out with remarkable clearness and with all the naturalness of simple truth. His approach to American characters is fresh and illuminating." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 222:358 D '25 460w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Outlook 141:526 D 2 '25 950w

"Mr. Bradford prefaces his portraits with a familiar and unpretentious essay on the aesthetics of biography which, despite the modesty of its tone, is a lucid, valuable statement of doctrine. One reads it with a sense of regret that the resources of Mr. Bradford's excellent craftsmanship have not been enlisted in the service of more impressive material." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 2:273 N 7 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p686 O 22 '25 950w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

BRAGG, SIR WILLIAM HENRY. Concerning the nature of things. 250p il $3 Harper [7s 6d Bell]

541 Atoms. Crystallography. Gases. Liquids 25-8681

The book consists of the juvenile lectures of the Royal institution, 1923-1924, the subject being the structure of the atom and the molecular forms exhibited by gases, liquids and crystals. This Christmas course of lectures, which was instituted a century ago, is always fully illustrated by experiments and is attended by adults as well as juveniles.

Booklist 21:364 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p2 Je 6 '25 550w

Nation and Ath 36:721 F.21 '25 760w

"The lectures cannot have failed to stimulate a vital curiosity as to the nature of things in some of the young hearers, and may perhaps have laid the foundation of more than one future career to be devoted to the successful deeper delving into that very 'nature.'"

+ Nature 115:523 Ap 11 '25 1050w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 44:75 S 9 '25 550w

"These lectures are a pattern of lucid exposition. Perhaps the one danger of the book is lest the numerous diagrams in which atoms are represented by wooden spheres inculcate in the unwary too materialistic a conception of matter."

+ New Statesman 24:226 Mr 28 '25 100w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:19 Ap '25

"I would suggest to the reader and writer of pure literature to lay aside his book for a few days and dive into Sir William's pages. He will emerge viewing a much wider horizon than before his plunge." B: Harrow

+ N Y Times p28 Je 14 '25 1150w

"No clearer or more charming exposition of the nature of gases, liquids and solids has ever been written. To the surprisingly large number of readers who have in recent months been conscientiously struggling with esoteric rays and the complexities of atomic structure it is a blessing, and it should be read before anything else is attempted." G. L. Wendt

+ N Y Tribune p2 My 17 '25 630w

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 20w

Pratt p12 autumn '25

"Old readers will find a clear and interesting exposition of the latest discoveries as to the internal construction of the atom and its groupings into gases, liquids, and crystals in the lectures now published with certain additions. The author is one of the greatest living authorities on crystallography, and his gift of luminous description is here put to most serviceable use."

BRAGG, W. H.—Continued

+ Sat R 139:166 F 14 '25 160w

"The text reads as easily as a novel, and will stimulate as well as charm anyone who is interested in the physical processes of nature, no matter how little or how great may be his antecedent familiarity with the subject matter."

Leigh Page

+ Sat R of Lit 1:818 Je 13 '25 300w

"Most people are interested to know something about the stuff things are made of, and these lectures on gases, liquids, and crystals will set them a good way on the path and moreover will convince them of the beauty of the scenery." W. P. K.

+ Spec 135:201 Ag 1 '25 480w

"One of the best scientific popular expositions that have appeared for many years. It is not only an extremely clear and readable piece of work, but it has the very unusual merit of being, besides perfectly comprehensible by the layman, a store of recently discovered facts and new theories with which many professional physicists are but imperfectly acquainted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p114 F 19 '25 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 21:194 J1 '25

BRAMAH, ERNEST. Specimen case. 313p $2
Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-7086

It was the author's youthful ambition to have to his credit one example of every sort of literary effort. Here in the "Specimen case" he offers a collection of short stories written over a period of thirty years, and covering a wide range of subject and style, beginning with Ming Tseuen, a tale of Chinese love and intrigue, and ending with a tragic episode on a London balcony. Contents: Ming Tseuen and the emergency; The delicate case of Mlle Célestine Bon; The dead march; A very black business; The bunch of violets; Revolution; Smothered in corpses; Fate and a family council; Lucretia and the horse-doctor; The war hawks; The great Hockington find; Haute-pierre's star; The goose and the golden egg; The making of Marianna; Bobbie and poetic justice; The heart of the pagan; Once in a blue moon; The marquise ring; The "dragon" of Swafton; The dream of William Elgood; From a London balcony.

Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 1250w

"The Specimen Case" would be an excellent book to take on a short railway journey—say the distance between New York and Philadelphia. It would never cause the reader to ride beyond his station; but it might prove sufficiently entertaining to blot from his consciousness any unpleasant fellow traveler across the aisle." A. Z.

Int Bk R p553 J1 '25 450w

"Judged in its entirety, it is characterized by that stylistic perfection which seems inseparable from this writer's work. It is clear that while catering to a market hardly less ephemeral in its appeal than the daily press, he has never let this fact tempt him into slighting the claims of true craftsmanship which to him appear the main reason for all creative writing."

Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 Ap 4 '25 700w

"It is a very interesting volume, this 'Specimen Case,' interesting on its own account, as well as through its connection with other, much-praised work by its notable author. And its varied contents should certainly establish, once for all, the reality of that widely discussed 'mythical person,' Ernest Bramah."

+ N Y Times p19 My 3 '25 900w

"For those who scorn any but psychological tales the careful reading of this collection of stories is an interesting experiment, because Ernest Bramah is a story teller whose primary interest is in plot. His characters are all sacrificed on that altar and his style is clipped to fit the action. These stories represent, in part, his desire to have to his credit an example of every kind of 'literary exercise.'"

N Y Tribune p7 Ap 26 '25 470w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 150w

BRANDANE, JOHN. The glen is mine, and The lifting; two plays of the Hebrides. 240p $2 Houghton [6s Constable]

822

The hero of the first play is old Angus, a peasant who resists the attempt to dispossess him of his land. When the scheme to oust him falls thru, the old man plays on his bagpipes his favorite tune "The glen is mine." The second play tells of the rescue of a condemned man from the gallows, by a comrade who was really the guilty man. There is robust humor in the scene in which rescuer and rescued argue heatedly about the manner of "the lifting," and poignant tragedy in the death scene of the rescuer.

"There are qualities in these two plays which ought to insure for the author a high place in the ranks of contemporary dramatists. Among them may be noted a vivid conveyance of local atmosphere, vital characterization, originality of invention, veracious yet imaginative dialogue and a variety of amusing, pathetic or exciting incident all kept within the bounds of a genuine realism. And both pieces, widely different as they are in theme and character, have a distinct claim to recognition as good acting drama, fairly representative of their respective periods." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p2 D 26 '25 750w

"Of Mr. Brandane's two plays of the Hebrides, the second is the better, for though the first is gay and spirited and full of fun, Mr. Brandane has not yet cleared his mind as to his treatment of comedy. His tragic drama, 'The Lifting,' is a good play, but for a little weakening at the end." Bonamy Dobree

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup246 N 14 '25 320w

"It is perhaps too early to say that Mr. Brandane is to be the Synge of the Scottish movement, but that is within his means if he continues to seek the artistic integrity and first-hand achievement of these plays. There is a long life ahead for the plays." Gordon Bottomley

+ New Statesman 26:31 O 31 '25 1300w

"There are minor criticisms to be made of Mr. Brandane's technique: for instance, he is given to having his persons move on and off stage too much, thereby creating confusion for the reader and giving to the progress of the action an unnecessary chopiness. There are also faults of verbiage. Yet these faults sink to insignificance before the sheer power of the play taken as a whole." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p13 D 20 '25 1100w

"Mr. Brandane's plays, which have been performed by the Scottish National Players, hold by the lucid, haunting English of the Highlands in which they are written—a pure cold well of speech. But he lacks, as yet, intensity."

+ Spec 135:1051 D 5 '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p894 D 24 '25 100w

BRANSON, EUGENE CUNNINGHAM. Farm life abroad: field letters from Germany, Denmark and France. 303p $2 Univ. of N. C. [9s Milford]

630.1 Agriculture—Germany. Agriculture—Denmark. Agriculture—France. Europe—Economic conditions 24-31472

Going on a traveling scholarship as a representative of the University of North Carolina, Mr. Branson studied the country end of things in Germany, Denmark and France, an aspect of life in Europe usually neglected by tourists. He describes in simple narrative form for the people at home the conditions he found. The letters center attention on the farm people, homes and practices, on country communities and institutions and on the standards of living in the countries visited.

"A more entertaining and instructive volume on things as they are in the countries visited has rarely been written."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 150w
Ind 114:419 Ap 11 '25 80w

"Here is a delightful book of travel. It is an admirable example of a scientist presenting facts in such form that they are agents for popular enlightenment." B: R. Andrews
+ J Home Econ 17:292 My '25 480w

"It is a pity that this meaty little volume was not sent out into the world with a more revealing title. For, while it is concerned primarily with agricultural conditions and country life in the three countries mentioned, it throws so much light on the financial and social conditions and the prospects for the future of all three that it is well worth the reading of any one interested in the relations between the United States and Europe."

+ N Y Times p6 F 15 '25 1100w
N Y Tribune p3 Mr 1 '25 180w

"It is popular in form; for it was written for the people; but it is all the better for that. The serial method of publication gives it the attractiveness of freshness." Herbert Quick

+ Sat R of Lit 1:664 Ap 11 '25 1450w

"Whoever wishes to keep in touch with trends in agriculture throughout the world will find Professor Branson's book rewarding. In view of the astounding ignorance of rural life displayed by numerous social workers who have recently been campaigning for the Child Labor Amendment, one might perhaps urge some state and national executives to read this book and other books about rural United States. They might learn a few things about rural social control." B. Y. Landis

+ Survey 54:114 Ap 15 '25 260w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p139 F 26 '25 50w

BRASHEAR, JOHN ALFRED. John A. Brash-ear; the autobiography of a man who loved the stars; ed. by W. Lucien Scaife. 262p il $4 Houghton

B or 92 25-26443

The autobiography of a Pittsburgh millwright who became the foremost astronomical lens maker of his day, a man peculiarly loved and honored. His interest in astronomy began early in life and he devoted his evenings, with the help of his wife, to making his first telescope. Soon he was devoting his whole time to the making of optical instruments and observatories everywhere were using the apparatus that he made. In the famous Allegheny observatory with which he was so long associated he designed a place where all the people who loved the stars might enjoy them and a telescope was given up to their use. His reminiscences of his long life are written with the modesty that was characteristic of him.

Booklist 21:336 Je '25

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 1050w

"The book is the simple record of a rare personality—a 'human document,' if ever there was one."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Mr 15 '25 560w

"One of the finest chapters of idealism with which our generation has been familiar. His story is told with a simplicity and modesty that might have been expected of so unaffected a man."

+ R of Rs 71:446 Ap '25 220w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 330w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

BRAYBROOKE, PATRICK. Considerations on Edmund Gosse; introd. by Gilbert Frankau. 162p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Dranes]

824 Gosse, Sir Edmund William

"In this work on Sir Edmund Gosse I have concentrated on him as a writer of critical studies. For these are undoubtedly his most valuable books. I have also endeavoured to give some small idea of his poetical position, while a chapter attempts to catch him when in a 'gossiping' mood."—Patrick Braybrooke

"Frankly, it is unworthy of its subject; being a mere hash-up in wretched English of what Sir Edmund has said in excellent, seasoned with a few trite and ill-expressed reflections of the author's own." Robert Jordan

— Nation and Ath 38:20 O 3 '25 400w

"Mr. Braybrooke's small volume, unevenly written as it is, may be approached with some interest."

N Y World p7m D 13 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 200w

BRAYBROOKE, PATRICK. J. M. Barrie; a study in fairies and mortals. 162p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Dranes]

822 Barrie, Sir James Matthew 25-9681

Each of Barrie's plays is given a chapter, which includes a critical study and a summary of the plot. The closing chapters are devoted to a general study of Barrie, his philosophy, and his place in the theater today.

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

"Mr. Braybrooke has, no doubt, been wise to devote the greater part of his book to a summary of the incidents of the plays. He shows no special understanding of them and little ability for converting them into short stories, but this part of his work is infinitely preferable to the unintelligent final chapters."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 8 '25 300w

BRECKINRIDGE, SOPHONISBA PRESTON.

Family welfare work in a metropolitan community. (Univ. of Chicago social service ser.) 938p $4.50 Univ. of Chicago press

361 Social service 25-1557

From the records of two social agencies in Chicago in the field of family welfare work forty-four cases are selected as typical of some of the principal problems with which the social agency is called upon to deal. The complete history of each case is given and the method of treatment. The book is intended to serve the same purpose in social science training that the study of legal cases serves in the law school.

"Too special for a small library."

Booklist 21:289 My '25

"Technical, but illuminating for the social and family conditions described."

J Home Econ 17:293 My '25 130w

"Though the general reader may find much in these pages to interest and instruct him, the book is, of course, mainly intended for the social worker. Copious notes and appendices round out a thorough compendium of social case work."

+ N Y Tribune p8 Mr 15 '25 220w

"Miss Breckinridge has done an important service for training in social work. These histories bring together fruitful and varied teaching material. They are followed by a valuable appendix which gives statutes and reports to show the kind of limitations under which public welfare agencies fulfil their obligations." A. E. Sheffield

+ Survey 54:637 S 15 '25 750w

BRENNAN, JOHN F., comp. Automobile identification; the method of identification used since 1916 and now compiled for use in police training schools. 176p il lea'tte $2.50 Scientific American pub.

629.2 Automobiles

24-19322

"Detailed instruction in methods of identification, supplemented by sensible advice to automobile owners, and by chapters on such subjects as scientific detective work, automobile thefts, and regulations for street traffic."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:420 J1 '25

BRENNECKE, ERNEST. Life of Thomas Hardy. 259p il $5 Greenberg

B or 92 Hardy, Thomas

25-26435

"In this study of Hardy and his work the author proves himself an abler critic than biographer. He himself explains the lack of 'spice' and 'story' as due in part at least to his unwillingness to make any revelations during Hardy's lifetime that might appear indelicate."—Booklist

"It is the most comprehensive work up to date and will have a place in all collections of any size."

Booklist 21:337 Je '25

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 450w

Dial 79:262 S '25 150w

Reviewed by Frances Dublin

Nation 121:122 J1 22 '25 300w

"Whatever else this book may be, it is not a 'life' of Thomas Hardy. It might be called a study or a sketch or what you will, but certainly not what we have come to mean by a life of a great writer or a great figure. And let it be said that the present reviewer is not one of those exasperatingly carping critics who is forever bent upon telling a writer what his book should or should not be and why it ought to be some other book." H: J. Forman

— N Y Times p7 Ap 12 '25 1600w

"One hopes that the book will give us another artist sculptured in the round. What we are given is a handful of meager facts, minute investigations of Hardy's works for traces of his knowledge of architecture, music and German philosophy, long digressions on the history of his family and of his Wessex countryside, before he was born to acknowledge either, and chiefly an impression that Mr. Brennecke, the most reverent, earnest and ardent of Hardy's vocal admirers, wrote his book in continual fear of having the master damn his remarks as 'impertinent.'" Babette Deutsch

— N Y Tribune p5 My 24 '25 350w

Reviewed by L: Weitzenkorn

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 180w

"This is an able work, well presented by author, publisher, and printer."

+ Outlook 140:501 Ag 5 '25 120w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

BRENTANO, CLEMENS MARIA. Fairy tales from Brentano; told into English by Kate Freiligrath Kroeker. 326p il $2.50 Stokes

26-299

The book contains seven fairy tales translated from the German. The first and longest story tells how Father Rhine helped his friend the miller win a princess for a bride. One of the others, "Dear-my-soul," was left unfinished by the author. There are several illustrations, and a frontispiece in color.

"They are whimsical, extravagant tales, sometimes suggesting Stockton and sometimes 'The Rose and the Ring.'" Marcia Dalphin

Bookm 62:459 D '25 200w

"'Fairy Tales from Brentano' came to me with all the pleasure an old and excellent writer can bring to some one reading him for the first time." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p136 Ja '26 150w

"He was the Lewis Carroll of his place and time, and the colors and conceits and delicate enchantments and boisterous humors of his tales remain as fresh today as in the era of their creation."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:282 N 7 '25 200w

BREWSTER, MRS KATE L. Little garden for little money. (Little garden ser.) 109p il $1.75 Atlantic monthly

716 Gardening

25-26022

"This book is a sort of 'first aid' in garden books, and no pains have been spared to make it the practical guide that it is to the inexpensive garden. Mrs. Brewster, with a goodly estate of her own, can write as if she owned one measured in feet, not acres; and this because she has gone through every step of the way in the practical work of gardening and can speak from experience sustained and minute. Those who read these pages will learn quickly how to organize their gardens, how to carry them on with the least expenditure of money."—Editor's preface

"Restates pleasantly the primary gardening essentials for the amateur gardener but adds little to the numberless books already written on the subject."

+ — Booklist 21:186 F '25

"Notwithstanding the author's constant preoccupation with details and facts, she is herself so interested that she writes interestingly and her book makes charming reading for any one who cares about gardens."

+ N Y Times p18 N 16 '24 430w

"This charming volume is a 'first aid' in garden books, full of practical suggestions to the beginner, and yet a beautiful thing in itself."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:811 Je 6 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

BRIDGES, T. C. Young folk's book of discovery. 263p il $2 Little [7s 6d Harrap]

910 Discoveries (in geography)

The book contains stories of the brave explorers of the old world and the new, and their discoveries, from early times down to the tragic and heroic Scott expedition to the South Pole. There are many illustrations in color and in black and white.

"It is far too good a product, alike in the material gathered, in the arrangement of the material and the style of its presentation, to appeal merely to youthful readers. They are sure to enjoy it to the full, but many of the elders also need and will welcome just such an account of that venturing out to strange lands and seas."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '25 420w

Cleveland p103 N '25

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p746 O '25 50w

"Whole books of discovery are far more attractive to parents and teachers than to children or young people. Mr. Bridges's book has the merit of brevity and definiteness, and it contains some interesting pictures."

+ — N Y Tribune p6 Ag 16 '25 100w

BRIGGS, LE BARON RUSSELL. Men, women, and colleges. 180p $1.50 Houghton

378 Colleges and universities. Education—Addresses, essays, lectures 25-23784

The book contains five addresses on college problems delivered before student bodies on different occasions.

"Originally addressed to hearers in the academic world, both teachers and students, these talks are so broad-minded, so informed with the spirit of culture in its application to the practical affairs of life that they are well worth the attention of the larger audience to which their collection in book form introduces them."

+ N Y Times p14 D 6 '25 350w

"If he followed his argument to its logical conclusion he would be led to Thorstein Veblen's position that the college and the university should be entirely separated. It seems a pity that President Briggs did not see fit to lend the weight of his authority to some such radical solution. Instead, he comes back in the end to a rather pale optimism which solves nothing."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:413 D 12 '25 220w

BRIGHTMAN, EDGAR SHEFFIELD. Introduction to philosophy. 393p $3 Holt

190 Philosophy 25-7207

"This book is an introduction to philosophy. It presupposes no prior acquaintance with the subject and is intended either for the student or the general reader. The author has undertaken to present fairly what may be said for and against the solutions of the chief problems offered by the important schools of philosophical thought. He has also sought to interpret his own point of view, which may be called personalism or personalistic idealism."—Preface

"It is honest, able, and, we think, the best introduction to philosophy for the student and the general reader." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 2 '25 1050w

"Professor Brightman's book is a vigorous presentation of the philosophy of personalism. He sees that such a view just now is not fashionable, and that there are objections to it, as to every possible theory; but he contends that the proper method of philosophy is the synoptic method, that the proper criterion of truth is coherence, and that when this method and criterion are applied to the problems of philosophy, the results lead by various converging roads to personalism as on the whole the most inclusive and satisfactory view of the world." G: P. Conger

J Philos 22:441 J1 30 '25 1250w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 43:24 My 27 '25 380w

BRILIOTH, YNGVE TORGNÝ. Anglican revival; studies in the Oxford movement; with a preface by the Lord Bishop of Gloucester. 357p $5 (16s) Longmans

283 Oxford movement 25-6865

"A critical study of the conception of the Church out of which the Oxford movement arose, based upon a thoroughgoing examination of sermons of Newman, Pusey, and others, as well as Froude's Remains. An estimate of the influences of the Oxford movement upon the Church of England is also given. An exhaustive appendix supplies a critical review of bibliography."—J Religion

J Religion 5:333 My '25 80w

"This is an exceedingly interesting book, well written in English." Augustine Birrell

+ Nation and Ath 37:17 Ap 4 '25 1400w

"Everyone interested in the Oxford Movement will welcome this contribution to its history by a learned Swedish Lutheran pastor. Dr. Brilioth has at his command a width of reading which few other writers of his subject can command."

+ New Statesman 25:140 My 16 '25 850w

"Dr. Brilioth deserves praise for his industry in tracing the origins and affinities of the Movement: his knowledge of the byways of English Church history is, in a foreigner, remarkable. Yet the value of his book lies not so much in its scrupulous documentation as in its discriminating sympathy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p209 Mr 26 '25 1000w

BRIMMER, FRANK EVERETT. Camps, 108 cabins, lodges and clubhouses. 139p il $2 (8s 6d) Appleton

728 Camps. Log cabins. Architecture, Domestic—Designs and plans 25-7465

The prospective builder of a camp, be it lean-to or lodge, will find in this little volume plenty of suggestive material for his needs, well illustrated with photographs and sketches by the author. There is also a helpful word about sites, outbuildings and furnishings suitable for the rustic retreat.

Booklist 21:368 J1 '25

Reviewed by T. R. Coward

Bookm 61:707 Ag '25 50w

"To make a shelter from one log, or one hundred, or, if no logs are handy, from boards, one need only consult Mr. Brimmer's volume, which compacts a very large amount of information in its hundred and forty pages."

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 11 '25 200w

Cleveland p116 D '25

"An expert here provides a practical handbook for all who are interested in building permanent camps or hunting lodges in the woods or on the shore. The drawings, plans and photographs add to the book's utility."

+ N Y Tribune p11 My 10 '25 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:140 My '25

BROADBENT, ELLINOR LUCY. Under the Italian Alps; with a geographical essay by Marion I. Newbigin. 263p il $3 Brentano's [8s 6d Methuen]

914.5 Italy—Description and travel. Tyrol

"Under the Italian Alps' is frankly a guide-book, written with the minimum of generalization or of personal anecdote. But it certainly arouses a desire to visit Venezia Tridentina and those delectable mountains—Tofana, Nuvolau, Becca di Mezzodi, Antelao, Pelmo, Sorapis, Faloria, Marmarole, Popena, Cristallo—wonderful in shape and colour." Miss Broadbent outlines the history of the Brenner Pass, which was the main trade-route between Venice and Germany; and she tells the story of Andreas Hofer, who led the Tyrolean revolt against Napoleon. She indicates what of carving or frescoes may be found in the various churches, and what of food in the various inns; but she does not overwhelm with advice."—Nation and Ath

"Thoroughly up to date, yet transfused with a conspicuously vivid historic and romantic lore, Dr. Broadbent's study of present-day conditions in 'redeemed Italy' opens a new world to conquer for the tourist; opens visions beyond the power of disappointment to blur for those who can travel only in books." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 17 '25 1150w

"It is a difficult book to read at home. But it would evidently be ill-judged to embark on a walking-tour in the Dolomites without this book in one's rucksack. And as her style is simple and direct, it would not be tiresome to read among gentians and alpine roses."

+ Nation and Ath 37:626 Ag 22 '25 250w

"A good guide-book no bigger than a novel, with a map, an index and numerous illustrations, at a reasonable price."

+ New Statesman 25:430 J1 25 '25 280w

"The author of 'Under the Italian Alps' is well versed in the history of the country through which she travels, and discourses upon it in a very pleasant fashion by the way. She persistently speaks of Chiuso instead of Chiusa for Klausen. But these are very small blemishes in an otherwise very good and careful piece of work."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p456 J1 9 '25 450w

BROADHURST, JEAN. Bacteria in relation to man. 306p il $3 Lippincott

589.95 Bacteriology. Micro-organisms
25-6652

This combined text and laboratory outline, prepared by the associate professor of biology at Teachers college, is designed as an introduction to microbiology. The topical arrangement should encourage students to add material from other sources, and the pages are so spaced as to afford room for original drawings or notes as the student requires.

"That the book is authoritative and of very wide scope there can be no doubt. That it is competently edited is the obvious presumption. That it is prepared with a full appreciation of the value of visual education through illustration is pleasingly obvious. It forms a welcome addition to the bacteriological library." I. W. M. Bunker

+ Am J Pub Health 15:644 J1 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 My 14 '25 40w

BROCK, LYNN, pseud. See McAllister, A.

BRODNEY, SPENCER. Rebel Smith; a play in three acts. 120p $1 Siebel pub. corp.

812 25-10325

The scene of the play is the barroom of a small public house in Central Queensland, Australia. Kitty, the barmaid, daughter of the proprietor, has quarreled with her lover, a young farmer of the neighborhood. She becomes interested in Rebel Smith, an I. W. W. enthusiast who has long heckled the government. In order to win him over, the Labor party offers him a responsible position. Bill considers accepting but the force of his ideas is stronger than his temporary attraction toward Kitty and respectability, and he declines to give up his life of agitation and revolt.

"For the most part, Mr. Brodney tells his tale well. There is no question it will act. But he seems at all times to be content to be superficial. His detail work needs much building."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 60w

"It is a homely drama with unusual vigor. Its primitiveness has appeal. And with some retouching Bill Smith might be an interesting figure, even among Broadway's many oddities."

+ N Y Times p15 Je 21 '25 560w

Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 10w

BROMFIELD, LOUIS. Possession. 493p $2.50
Stokes

25-19113

Ellen's one feverish dream is to escape from the mental and social confines of her small Ohio town to the wide and satisfying life of the world her gift of music can bring. She marries because her husband offers her a chance to study in New York. Once there, progress is rapid. She is taken up by society and her playing becomes the rage. The son of her patroness becomes interested, and in turn attracts her strongly. She grows further from her husband whose dumb devotion has never aroused more than a grateful affection mixed with pity. He has never possessed her. To music alone she has surrendered completely. Now, that allegiance is threatened by this new power over her senses. The ensuing years bring tragedy as well as triumph, and the unceasing contest of rival forces struggling to possess her.

"An exceedingly well-written story."

+ Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"If Bromfield has made a boast, he has lived up to it in 'Possession,' a book rich in character and in drama; a long, leisurely story with a wealth of interrelated incident and a fascinating sure progression; a novel to read and read, through which wisdom and a fine sense of color run parallel." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:330 N '25 350w

Boston Transcript p4 O 24 '25 1350w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

Int Bk R p58 D '25 800w

"It bears the evidence of hurried composition; the story of the central figure is buried under a variety of tangential matter, interesting but obstructive; dramatic moments seem over-emotionalized; the grotesqueries of this story, unlike those of the first novel, suggest a superficiality which, judged upon the testimony of 'The Green Bay Tree,' is natively foreign to Mr. Bromfield. [Yet] there are pages in it glamorous and rich as any in 'The Green Bay Tree,' and there are at least two three-dimensional characters out of the author's opulent store." Walter Yust

Lit R p2 O 17 '25 750w

"It is disappointing that this second novel by Mr. Bromfield shows no improvement over the promising first one, that it as consistently fails in the concrete working out of a really fine design, and that the writer, who has a definite talent for easy-flowing rhythmical prose, should still be as little disturbed about exactitude or poignancy of word or phrase." A. B. Parsons

+ Nation 122:66 Ja 20 '26 750w

"Such a theme would make thin reading, unless buttressed with massive cross-sections of life. This Mr. Bromfield has accomplished. Of American writers today only Sinclair Lewis would be capable of writing a readable novel equally long and equally thronged with living characters."

+ N Y Times p8 O 4 '25 1150w

"Mr. Bromfield writes with extraordinary facility; but this facility, in itself a merit, too often betrays him into its accompanying defect of superficiality." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 150w

"Mr. Bromfield's zestful pleasure in the suave surfaces and harmonious color of the spectacle abides as a kind of distinction among our contemporary satirists, revolvers, and experimenters in new ways of penetrating to the internal flame of life. He does indeed shrewdly appropriate, almost exhaustively appropriate, the 'sure-fire' interests of current fiction: sex, business, religion, wealth, politics, labor, foreign types, luxury, art, Paris, mistresses, titled society, war; but he insists on none of them; he interweaves them all in a glamorous flowing movement which affects me like the cantabile style in music." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 O 11 '25 3100w

"Its lack of swift dramatic action is atoned for by the extraordinary richness and saliency of its portraiture."

+ Outlook 141:486 N 25 '25 300w

"It all moves like the brilliant circumference of a pinwheel around its dark center. For the center—the firmly rooted, all converting Ellen—is not truly exhibited and explored." B. H. Lehman

+ Sat R of Lit 2:403 D 12 '25 850w

"A fine and massive work." Walter Millis

+ Survey 55:310 D 1 '25 390w

BRONSHTEIN, LEV DAVIDOVICH. See Trotsky, L., pseud.

BROOKINGS, ROBERT SOMERS. Industrial ownership; its economic and social significance. 107p $1.25 (5s) Macmillan

331.1 Industry. Labor and capital 25-5734

The author maintains that the capital-labor problem is in process of solution thru the continually widening distribution of industrial ownership among relatively small stockholders. The problem has now become a labor-public rather than a capital-labor affair and when the principle is accepted that labor, management and public have each an equal interest in the efficiency of management, cooperation will take the place of blind competition in industry.

"It shows a breadth of view, a sanity and wisdom in interpretation, and a first-hand knowledge of the facts with which the author is dealing that are too likely to be absent from an academic treatise. On the other hand, it shows little acquaintance with what has already been said and written on the same subject. Inasmuch as books of this type are somewhat scarcer, their marginal utility is likely to be higher than that of academic treatises." T. N. Carver

+ Am Econ R 15:342 Je '25 620w

"At last we have presented to us a book on capital and labor that has an appeal to all the groups concerned. Its very title arouses one's curiosity and once you open the cover you are likely, regardless of your convictions on the subject discussed, to read it through." G. K. Wilson

+ Am Management R 14:208 Je '25 500w

"Anyone in search for good grounds for optimism about the labor problem in the United States would have to look far before finding as interesting and stimulating a book as Industrial Ownership."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:649 Ag '25 150w

"Mr. Brookings has crystallized his life experience as an industrialist and as educator in this readable book. His conclusions are worthy of consideration, although his book is too tiny to allow him room for more than a suggestion of the proof of his contentions."

+ Ann Am Acad 121:197 S '25 350w

Booklist 21:359 Jl '25

Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 120w

Cath World 121:570 Jl '25 320w

"You can follow Brookings through a few pages of easy reading and get more satisfaction out of the reasoning than from the prettiest geometry demonstration you ever delivered, because the conclusion matters much. You can read this book at a sitting. It is a 1925 book. It is not written for schools but for citizens." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 69:280 My '25 320w

"I believe that Mr. Brookings is everlastingly wrong in his basic assumption; but that assumption is shared by nine hundred ninety-nine out of every thousand persons in the Western world, whether they call themselves radical or conservative. All such, whether they agree or disagree, will find in Mr. Brookings's book much food for thought." H: R. Mussey

Nation 121:285 S 9 '25 860w

"His little book is saturated with tolerant and balanced optimism. What is lacking in quantitative data is more than made up for in cheerio. . . One finds in this book little more than a pious hope so far as quantitative evidence is concerned. Mr. Brookings as a life-long student of industry, and as a philosopher at large is certainly worth listening to. His observations are shrewd and sound." Stuart Chase

+ New Repub 42:242 Ap 22 '25 550w

Reviewed by Evans Clark

N Y Times p3 Ap 12 '25 1050w

N Y Tribune p11 Ap 19 '25 230w

"Mr. Brookings's career as capitalist, manager, educator, investigator and economist spans more than a half-century of highly responsible positions and his opinions should have weight, although essentially his view seems to be that of the managing capitalist." H. E. Gaston

N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 780w

St Louis p123 My '25

"The brevity of the book excuses it from detail. Its author has simply supplied a noteworthy suggestion which others may elaborate."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:222 O 17 '25 480w

"A thoughtful and optimistic paper on current industrial trends, written by a man whose record entitles him to some attention."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 10 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 30 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 Jl '25

BROOKS, CHARLES STEPHEN. Like summer's cloud. 262p il $2.50 Harcourt

814

25-8655

It is the lightness of the author's touch in these genial essays that is "like summer's cloud." Contents: Like summer's cloud; These years of freedom; Hints for scholars; On playing the trombone; A mug of neglected beer; On going to the movies; A spear in Caesar's army; Beyond the mountains; Me too! Fences on Parnassus; Once there was a furnace boy; A ballot of bookish persons; A million in 1930; Lazy ink-pots; Trippingly on the ear; A few dark thoughts on Broadway; Conrad in further quest; In defense of plagiarism; The world is so full of a number of things; Wind in the south.

Booklist 21:370 Jl '25

"It has charm, wit, and wisdom, and shows Mr. Brooks's gift for the nice phrase—a growing, not a lessening one." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:472 Je '25 200w

"It is the work of a more than clever essayist at his best. To read the essays of Mr. Brooks in the spring time is an enchanting experience. It is exhilarating. Perhaps it is a bit cruel, too. For reading him we forget gray office walls, the rumble of presses, the cries and clangings of the street below, and we float like summer's cloud on a wind from the south into an unreal land." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 25 '25 820w

"Mr. Brooks' return to the field of the essay—he has been away from it for some time writing plays and travel books—is to be welcomed, for he has exceptional qualities in abundance. It is marred, we must add, by several irritating errors, such as 'The Admirable Creighton.' Inexcusable, but not unforgivable in a book as fine as this." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 Ap 11 '25 420w

"In spite of Mr. Brooks's nimble sense of words, in spite of his facile knack of composition, these essays are essentially commonplace. The thoughts contained in them are commonplace thoughts, the turns of their sentences are commonplace, and the facetiousness which constitutes so large a part of their appeal is also commonplace." Llewelyn Powys

+ N Y Times p13 Ap 26 '25 1100w

Reviewed by G. W. Wynne

N Y Tribune p9 My 3 '25 450w

"I am aware that Mr. Brooks has written many essays that have been highly praised, but I cannot find many in this book." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 150w

"The tangible charm of his essays is to be found not in his ideas, but in the temper of his mind—urbane, witty, incisive, provocative—and in his command of a style as polished as it is precise. Both express a temperament and personality with which intercourse is definitely pleasurable." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 1:852 Je 27 '25 380w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 17 '25 500w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

BROOKS, EARLE AMOS. Handbook of the outdoors. 238p $2 Doran

796 Outdoor life. Nature study. Camping

25-9257

This handbook is intended not as a manual of camping and woodcraft but as an inspirational guide to the things of outdoors, for the use of leaders of boys' and girls' clubs, Sunday school teachers and others engaged in religious education. The book tells where to go, what to do and how to get the most out of the outdoor activities.

Booklist 22:18 O '25

BROOKS, EARLE AMOS—Continued

Reviewed by T. R. Coward

Bookm 61:707 Ag '25 60w

"Although it is very valuable for any group setting out on a vacation into the country, the book is designed particularly for leaders of clubs of boys and girls who are planning to spend a period of several weeks in the open. The author is an enthusiast and is thoroughly competent to discuss his subjects."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 270w

"The volume ought to be a very fruitful book for anyone in whose care young people go into the country, whether for a few hours or for several months. An appended bibliography offers a wide variety of titles of books, bulletins and magazines for the benefit of those who wish to pursue further the general theme or any of the special subjects dealt with by the author."

+ N Y Times p12 My 3 '25 620w

N Y Tribune p9 Je 14 '25 160w

Pratt p25 autumn '25

St Louis p407 N '25

"While the least inspiring book of the sort we have yet come across, has the virtues of thoroughness and a fair bibliography."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:900 J1 11 '25 120w

BROOKS, VAN WYCK. Pilgrimage of Henry James. 170p $2.50 Dutton

B or 92 James, Henry 25-7502

Mr Brooks views the life of Henry James as a pilgrimage in search of a congenial soil. He shows how profound his dissatisfaction was with the American scene and his fear for his art in the American air. He describes Henry James's visits to Europe, the failure of both Italy and France to satisfy his romantic vision and then his siege of London, his sense at first of having come to his own, but again the failure to take root, the inescapable feeling of being an alien and his loss finally of touch with life itself. "An absorbing figure, an immortal symbol," writes Mr Brooks. "For is he not the embodiment, complete and unparalleled, of that deep, that impossible yearning of which Hawthorne somewhere speaks—the yearning of the American in the Old World, 'of the blood within his veins, for that from which it has been estranged?'"

Reviewed by Mary Treadwell

Atlantic's Bookshelf Ag '25 650w

Booklist 21:378 J1 '25

Reviewed by Joseph Collins

Bookm 61:477 Je '25 1100w

Reviewed by Karl Schriftgiesser

Boston Transcript p5 My 16 '25 2150w

"Animated throughout with the geniality, grace of style, and persistent insight into the more recondite that have made its author, Mr. Van Wyck Brooks, known as the most brilliant and creative of the younger literary essayists in America." J. E. J.

+ Cath World 121:854 S '25 350w

"Mr Brooks, besides being nimble, is persuasive, and all the little bits of evidence he so ingeniously gathers, so sedulously and absorbedly picks out from the writings of the great man himself, with the sharp, nipping unwearied eagerness of a woodpecker, a woodpecker, whose red cap flashes in the sun as it draws reluctant booty from under the crinkled bark of some solid delicately blossoming locust tree, are made in the end to form a pattern which, if dubious in intention, is at least brilliant in design." Alyse Gregory

Dial 79:235 S '25 1450w

"There is not an ounce of superfluous tissue here, only the muscle and sinew of ideas. . . Mr. Brooks, has given us a veritable tour de force, for his narrative is at once an elaborate exercise in the style of Henry James, and a critical study which does not surrender a tittle of the critic's own mind. The voice is the voice of Henry James, but the hand is the hand of Van Wyck Brooks. James's story at the hands of Mr. Brooks becomes a masterpiece of creative biography—rich in material and unique in treatment." Ernest Boyd

Ind 114:448 Ap 18 '25 1250w

"Even if not entirely convincing, is an admirable work. It will help every reader to understand Henry James, and it will add positively to the author's reputation as a constructive critic." W: L. Phelps

+ — Int Bk R p521 J1 '25 2000w

"He handles his tools with the grace and economy of an expert; he lets no rubbish of irrelative material mingle with the seamless stuff that serves his constructive purpose, and, above all, he is painstaking in his search for the best and very clear and lively in laying it out for inspection. Like every good workman, he offers real entertainment to those who are privileged to follow his operations from the basic start to purposeful end." C. C. Buel

+ Lit R p6 My 9 '25 1600w

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes

Nation 121:191 Ag 12 '25 1250w

"Mr. Brooks's book, as an accomplished, penetrating, well-rounded study, has its present value; indeed, as a work of art it possesses a continuing value. Within twenty years James's career and Brooks's account of it may alike seem 'dated.' . . Meanwhile, Mr. Brooks's volume will stand as a decisive monument to one passing phase of our national development, as well as so fine an example of grace, dexterity and humanitas as promises to help usher in the newer day." H: B. Fuller

+ N Y Times p4 Ap 19 '25 2250w

"The chapter called 'The Sacred Fount,' in which Mr. Brooks investigates the sources of James's inspiration and the psychology of his creative years, and the chapter called 'The Wheel of Time,' in which he investigates James's reason for turning playwright, are, I believe, two of the most memorable chapters in critical writing done in our time. They represent a new discovery in critical method and an extension of the boundaries of what is commonly called literary criticism. The soundness of Mr. Brooks's conclusions as to James's real world are incontrovertible." M. M. Colum

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 31 '25 2000w

"Mr. Brooks contemplates his material as would an artist; he is acutely and delightedly conscious that his story has a pattern, and from that pattern he does not remove his eyes. Not essaying biography in the complete sense of the work, he gives us the study and the record of a temperament, of an unusual temperament, and he does it with the simplicity, with the sense of form, of a Flaubert writing a 'Saint Julian.' The final product is art, and yet—because the treatment is inevitable to the subject—it is also truth. In fine, it is just what biography, partial or complete, should be." B. R. Redman

+ N Y World p6m Ap 19 '25 950w

"The book is a deeply interesting study which should be sent as a tract to those who glorify aloofness in an author as a virtue, instead of accepting yet deprecating it as a regrettable if inevitable limitation."

+ Outlook 140:194 Je 3 '25 170w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 60w

St Louis p358 S '25

"This is not the final book on Mr. James, but it is the book which has been needed for years and, independently of its subject, it happens to be a composition of extraordinary merit—sagacious, witty, and engaging." T: Beer

+ Sat R of Lit 1:701 Ap 25 '25 3300w

"The Pilgrimage of Henry James' is a work of scholarship as well as art. It exhibits the virtue of documentation. Without riding any psychological fantasm, the author, by employing his wonted subtlety, attains a psychological or spiritual portrayal. He has purged his work of irrelevant originality and has not disdained to avail himself of the interpretative aid afforded in the writings of other persons—critics or memoirists—of discernment and sympathy.”

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25

900w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

BROUSSON, JEAN-JACQUES. Anatole France himself; a Boswellian record, by his secretary; tr. by John Pollock. 356p $5 Lippincott [10s 6d T. Butterworth]

B or 92 France, Anatole 25-13633

Here is a "Boswellian record" of Anatole France as he revealed himself in anecdote and table-talk to his secretary, a young man from the country who came to help him with his Joan of Arc. He talks about everything under the sun, expressing himself with an astonishing frankness, that amounts at times, as his translator says, to impishness.

Booklist 22:70 N '25

Reviewed by Gamaliel Bradford

Bookm 61:705 Ag '25 650w

"From Boswell to Brousson is a long stride, and it is extremely doubtful if, some two hundred years from now, this French historiographer will still companion Anatole France in the halls of literary fame. But at the present moment he is extremely diverting and an ingenious chronicler who makes it easy for the reader to while away an otherwise weary hour." E. F. Edgett

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 1350w

Cleveland p105 N '25

"An amusing book, it is perhaps too intimate a picture."

+ — Ind 115:363 S 26 '25 120w

"M. Brousson, who writes almost as delightfully as his master, and who shares somewhat the same master's 'alert love of mischief,' gives us a series of brilliantly amusing pictures of a sexagenarian who put love above all other aspects of life, and who did so in a sense anything but platonic." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p4 Jl 3 '25 700w

"M. Brousson has produced an interesting book. The word 'Master' is used more than once too often; references to the hero's fame become superfluous before so very long; and his basking in that fame even though he smile a little cynically as he purrs, cannot always be contemplated with the pleasure which M. Brousson finds in it." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 121:119 Jl 22 '25 520w

"It is one of the most brilliant and amusing volumes that I have read for a very long time. But though one may be thankful to Mr. Pollock and make allowances for the difficulties of his task—the record of France's conversation, which fills nine-tenths of the volume, would be extraordinarily difficult to translate well—yet there are certain things in his translation against which it is necessary to protest. The first may seem to some a trivial matter, but I object strongly to the custom of translating foreign books and of not giving somewhere the title of the original in its original language. The second point is Mr. Pollock's sub-title, which gives a wrong impression of the atmosphere of the record." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 37:370 Je 20 '25 1250w

New Statesman 25:339 Jl 4 '25 1200w

"The author is intelligent, appreciative, assiduous, but the quality of reverence is not in him. He presents Anatole France, therefore, as a fascinating and very French bundle of human contradictions—a mixture of genius, wit, childish cunning, petty foibles and cardinal sins—the last taken so lightly that they are purged of any deep damnation. He is not a hero to be worshipped, but an object of curious and charmed interest." H. I. Brock

N Y Times p6 Je 14 '25 1500w

"A first-rate book of its class. Acceptable as a basket of choice assorted nuts and fruits. Whether for consecutive reading or for random sticking in of thumbs, the repast is excellent.

A precious contribution to what we, journalistically, call the 'human' side of Anatole France's life." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 Je 21 '25 3300w

"Fortunate, indeed, is Anatole France in having had, during the last eight years, Jean Jacques Brousson for his secretary. To Brousson we are indebted for a book that will stand as a bulwark against the sentimentalizing of time. In his pages Anatole France lives, talks, poses, is the actor, the mountebank and the coldly logical reality." L. Weitzkorn

+ N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 950w

Reviewed by Edmund Pearson

Outlook 141:27 S 2 '25 200w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

"The sub-title of this book, a 'Boswellian Record,' is apt as a compliment to M. Brousson for his admirable skill in reproducing intimate ways and familiar talk. But he does not copy Boswell's reverence for the sage on whose words he hung."

+ Sat R 139:678 Je 20 '25 1000w

"Including even Boswell's 'Life of Johnson,' I know of no record of a great author which is more vivid, more entertaining, and more helpful in the light it throws upon the author's personality and writings than this volume of Brousson's." Ernest Boyd

+ Sat R of Lit 1:853 Je 27 '25 1000w

Spec 134:934 Je 6 '25 400w

"Neither a revealing nor a credible book. All the incidents are obviously staged. The stories, placed in France's own mouth, are of a common order of sensual mockery."

— Spring'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 260w

"There are but scanty traces here of the tender, almost Franciscan, gleam that lights up many pages of France's books."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p399 Je 11 '25 920w

BROWN, ALICE. Charles Lamb; a play. 121p $1.75 (6s 6d) Macmillan

812 Lamb, Charles—Drama 24-29880

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:225 Mr '25

"To take a character so deeply beloved in his own period and so continually revered in the generations which have passed since his day as Charles Lamb, and out of the traditions, out of fact and out of fancy, to make a Charles Lamb who is charming and lovable—and something more—that is a real achievement. And this is the thing which Miss Brown has done." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '25 1250w

Cleveland p88 S '25

"She is open to question when she focuses the light on the pathetic wanderings from mental sanity of Charles and his sister and does not even spare us from witnessing the ghastly spectacle of Mary's mad fit. Miss Brown lavishes much loving art upon her hero and succeeds remarkably well in bringing to life his whimsicality and his substantial humanity, but was it necessary in the process to reduce to poor automata the men of genius who moved in his circle?"

— + Nation 121:310 S 16 '25 400w

"Lamb hissed and boomed one of his own plays. What would he do to this one, where he holds the boards a noble figure of domestic trust and bookish oddity? As Miss Brown says, who knows?" Edwin Clark

N Y Times p16 Ja 25 '25 1550w

"The reader is sympathetically all set to receive the imaginatively distilled 'essence of Charles Lamb's life, ripe with hidden drama.' To make no bones about speaking bluntly, he gets an awful shock. To be plumped into a scene of blithering idiots, John and Charles and Mary, is a thing decidedly rasping upon the nerves. Much startled, he begins to question the good taste of this performance. Those who love their Lamb, and who would continue to love him, would perhaps do just as well to keep away from it." R. C. Holliday

BROWN, ALICE—Continued

— Sat R of Lit 1:610 Mr 21 '25 420w

"Much as she distorts history, she gathers into her comedy a good deal more of Lamb than his stammer, his smoking, and his drinking. The others whom she feels bound to bring on the scene, do not fare so well. For all that, her knowledge of the period and the persons is to some extent proved by the liberties that she takes; and her attitude towards Lamb is at least some excuse for her making free with him in this comedy. But the play would have little meaning or interest were all the characters in it wholly fictitious. And that, after all, is the test."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p369 My 28 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

BROWN, ALICE. Mysteries of Ann. 274p $2 Macmillan

25-8113

Ann Hale, aged sixty or more, had a new hobby—she had discovered the thrill of reading detective stories. In the New England village where she lived Ann had always been considered queer, but this was the limit. Ann, however, pursued her way sublimely unmindful of the village. Then she began to plan out on paper a murder story in which she herself would take the leading part. Fascinated by the possibilities thereof she made the fatal mistake of discussing the plot before Mrs Sheriff Holt. Two days later the murder occurred just as Ann had planned. And Mrs Sheriff spread her story and the fat was in the fire. But they had reckoned without Ann and her knowledge of crime as it is written, and the dénouement was anything but the expected.

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

"She has never penned a shrewder, more deft or more captivating study of New England character than in this short novel which seems to me technically a masterpiece." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:470 Je '25 150w

"Without reading so much as a line of actual description of roads, of farms, of fields, of brooks, of villages, we find ourselves in the midst of its countryside during every moment of the story, and we know we are there. It is like a stage set in the Elizabethan manner, the boards, a few draperies and—men and women with all their emotions and their passions. Our mind's eye sees all the rest; our imagination stimulated by Miss Brown does all the rest." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 11 '25 1200w
Cleveland p87 S '25

Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 100w

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 230w

"The novel is a rather curious mixture of extravagance and realism. There are times when Ann's behavior passes the bounds of the credible, yet she herself is usually real, and so are the other characters in the book. There is a good deal of clever comedy in the tale, and if the story does at times become a bit too far-fetched, it is much more often entertaining or appealing."

+ — N Y Times p24 Ap 19 '25 900w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m My 3 '25 160w

"Amusing in two ways: as a sly dig at detective-story readers and as a clever study of an eccentric Yankee old maid. Preposterous to literal-minded readers, but excellent fun all the same."

+ Outlook 140:405 Jl 15 '25 120w

"There is some adroitly veiled raillery at the stock figures and situations of mystery fiction, an occasional few pages of burlesque, humor not unmixed with pathos in the character drawing, and enough of suspense in the tale itself to hold the interest to the end of the story. It is good light reading." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 1:687 Ap 18 '25 370w

"Though scarcely probable, this is a defective tale of diverting freshness, and in Miss Brown's New England vein."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 230w

BROWN, BRIAN, ed. Wisdom of the Hebrews. 280p il $2.50 Brentano's

296 Jews—Civilization. Hebrew literature 25-9536

"This volume, compiled by Brian Brown, consists of excerpts from the philosophy and religious teachings of the Hebrews; their sayings and proverbs as taken from the Talmud, the lives of the famous rabbis of the race, and from the writings of Josephus, Spinoza, Maimonides, Mendelssohn and other learned Hebrews of the past."—N Y Times

Bookm 61:xxviii Jl '25 40w

Reviewed by J. L. French

Lit R p4 Jl 11 '25 450w

"Much time, infinite patience and endless research have gone into the making up of 'The Wisdom of the Hebrews,' a book that will appeal alike to Jew and Gentile."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 14 '25 820w

"It will be welcome to students of racial patterns and national mores. Mr. Brown has perhaps laid a trifle too much emphasis on religiosity, but not so much as to shut out the variety of intellectual interests and general opinionativeness which are characteristic of the Jewish race."

+ — N Y Tribune p2 My 24 '25 230w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Ten short stories from the Bible. 225p $1.75 Century

220 Bible. Whole—Stories 25-5632

Contents: The man who scorned "Safety First"; The soldier who fought the stars; The young woman in the far country; The king with the green eyes; The three mighty men; The prince with the big head; The woman who painted her face; The man with a handicap; The girl who risked it; The spectre at the feast.

"They are great short stories in themselves and Dean Brown proves himself a master of this type of short story. They carry sermons for the times, to be sure, but much needed sermons and so well and so interestingly told that the vividness of the story is bound up with the challenge and the inspiration of the message." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv My '25 220w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '25 420w

"An ingenious little book that ought to be exceedingly valuable in these days when it seems difficult to administer ethical principles to the younger generation. But any normal young person ought to find these ten tales, as Dean Brown tells and discusses them, both interesting and inspiring."

+ N Y Times p20 Mr 29 '25 450w

"A book of moral earnestness."

N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 200w

"The treatment is as sprightly as the manner in which he has dressed up the titles. As homilies, they are among the best of his popular and pungent sermons. Their wit and wisdom penetrate to the center and soul of the tendencies of our day."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 O 27 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:165 Je '25

BROWN, GEORGE DOUGLAS (GEORGE DOUGLAS, pseud.). House with the green shutters. 314p $2 Seltzer

24-27747

Reissue of a novel first published in 1901. "The entire Gourlay family, whose House with the Green Shutters is the symbol of the book, falls as the House of Usher fell, but with less fantasy and a grimmer realism. The chief protagonists are John Gourlay and his son. The elder John Gourlay is one of the more brutal, contemptuous, pitiless types of Scotsmen whose brutality takes the place of intellect. The glower of John Gourlay's 'een,' backed by his brutal strength, dominates the book. His tragedy is that his brutality and lack of intellect cannot after all cope with the progress of the world. A younger rival, not much better than himself, but more cunning, comes back to the town and becomes its big man, the while Gourlay steadily declines in power and affluence."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:240 Mr '25

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley
Nation and Ath 34:672 F 9 '24 160w
New Statesman 22:338 D 22 '23 1250w

"When a book is revived after more than twenty years of oblivion it may be a miracle. But the chances are that it is like any other resuscitation—proceeding from the simple fact that there was too much life in the book to permit death. 'The House With the Green Shutters' is such a book. It is one of those rare first novels that shows the spark of genius in its author—not necessarily popularity but genius."

+ N Y Times p9 D 14 '24 1450w

"The situation of 'The House With the Green Shutters' begins to unfold with the first word and develops organically to the very last page. It has a continuous, implacable, irresistible drive. Each character is woven into the design. The style is full of a dour, earthy wit and a certain pawky analysis of character and motive. Mr. Douglas lures the reader with his sly vivid pictures and his tart revelations. One is drawn imperceptibly into the very thick of the little Scottish village and its affairs." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p9e N 2 '24 420w

"The closeness to the soil, the unfeigned energy and wit of the author detach the book from its time. It possesses some of that fantastic and heedless cruelty which Nature herself has, and also man in the natural or naked state." Matthew Josephson

+ Sat R of Lit 1:395 D 20 '24 750w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 11 '24 850w

BROWN, HARRY GUNNISON. Economics of taxation. 344p $3 Holt

336.2 Taxation. Economics 24-25813

"Intended as a text-book, this volume represents a new departure in the field of economics, being a critical study of the theory of the incidence of taxation, including cause and effect. . . . No attempt is made to set up an ideal tax system—that depends upon the ends society desires to reach. . . . The entire discussion is deductive, a fact which the writer regrets as much as does the reader. Yet there can be little present basis for inductive proof of the theories advanced."—Harvard Business R

"The work is a step in the right direction, but a step which will not be greatly relished by many undergraduates. The arguments presented are frequently partial and incomplete, largely because of the very long-time point of view adopted. Theory is paramount while expediency is practically ignored. Some of the taxes discussed are practical, while others are merely used as a basis for mental gymnastics. Very few concrete results are reached, but then, the author did not mean to reach conclusions which would be applied directly—the material does not permit it."

—+ Harvard Business R 4:122 O '25 1400w
"A careful deductive study. A clear, excellent, and straightforward piece of work." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 121:389 O 7 '25 120w

"The mathematics of taxation offers an excellent approach to the economics of taxation. Of this anyone who examines Professor Brown's book will be convinced. But the book on the economics of taxation, in spite of the title attached to Professor Brown's work, remains to be written." Alvin Johnson

New Repub 41:100 D 17 '24 580w

BROWN, HENRY COLLINS. Last fifty years in New York. 432p il $5 The author, Gracie mansion, foot 88th st., East river, N.Y.

974.71 New York (city)—History

"The picturesque story of New York during the '70s of the last century is told in this new volume of Valentine's Manual. The title is rather a misnomer, for the account comes down no later than the early '80s and covers hardly as much as fifteen years. But the picture of that one decade is filled with detail as to the appearance of the city in all its parts, social manners and customs, important events—in short, a full panorama of the life of the time sketched against its streets, architecture, parks, ensemble."—N Y Times

"It all reads like a fairy tale. Yet somehow it sounds very real, and if even a modern flapper should take up this volume and read a few pages she would soon become interested in something beside herself. Mr. Brown's humor is of the delicious, rollicking sort, and probably there is not a man living today who knows his old New York better than he." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 1000w

"Any old-timer of the city whose memory goes back forty-five or fifty years will feel as he reads the book that he is reliving his youth. Mr. Brown knew the city in the '70s and his account of it during those years and into the early '80s is enriched and vivified by his recollections, although most of the great masses of facts with which he has worked out and colored his picture into such realistic and vital portrayal are the result of extensive research."

+ N Y Times p10 N 1 '25 350w

"A fascinating story of New York's most important half-century in the past."

+ R of Rs 72:555 N '25 120w

BROWN, IVOR JOHN CARNEGIE. H. G. Wells. (Writers of the day) 128p $1 Holt
B or 92 Wells, Herbert George [24-11647]

A brief appreciation of H. G. Wells and his works. Following his books in chronological order from "The Time Machine" to "Men Like Gods" Mr Brown analyzes his developing genius and social criticism.

Booklist 22:29 O '25

"The writer of this biographical summary of Mr. Wells's work has entered gracefully into the spirit of contemporary biographical style, which appears to be standing serenely, if somewhat contemptuously, apart from the more ragged prose of novels. While nothing like a comprehensive work is undertaken, the book is an easy and sufficient biography of what was and is really H. G. Wells—the writer's mind and his esprit."

+ Bookm 61:608 J1 '25 160w

"In Mr. Ivor Brown's study the student will find all the essential facts in handy form." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p11 Je 7 '25 950w

"Mr. Ivor Brown's very readable monograph combines with a generous personal enthusiasm for all of Mr. Wells's achievement an ability not to provoke the adverse-minded reader into a paroxysm of disagreement. Though convinced, he is balanced, without the bullying zeal which great and debated figures commonly inspire in their votaries." Mary Kolars

+ N Y Tribune p9 S 20 '25 500w

"Brief, timely and sympathetic."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

BROWN, JOHN MACMILLAN. Riddle of the Pacific. 312p il $6 Small [30s Unwin]

919.6 Easter island. Polynesians [25-1030]

"A study of Easter Island, a thousand miles from the nearest land, seven thousand from the nearest considerable civilization, inhabited by a handful of natives who would be miserable if they were not so cheerful; and filled with funereal monuments of a grandeur that rivals the pyramids. These stone platforms constructed with gigantic blocks, accurately planned and squared to their emplacement, and these vast statues, some of them seventy feet high, cannot he thinks, be the work of such folk as now live there; and by a process of reasoning (into which a good deal of imagination enters), working on the suggestions of local legend and mythology, Mr. Macmillan Brown infers that an island empire in the Pacific disappeared under water within the last few centuries."—Spec

"As fine a tale of mystery and adventure as any of the more popular brand. This story of the vanished civilization of Easter Island, the island of magnificent sepulchre, is an intriguing one, and Mr. Brown understands the art of making archaeology interesting to the non-professional mind."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 18 '25 220w

"His great contribution to the elucidation of the riddle presented by Easter Island lies in his analysis of the social order—or lack of social order—there, and its departures in culture from the Polynesian norm. He spoils it from time to time by pressing too hard upon scraps of evidence."

+ Dial 80:64 Ja '26 1200w

"The author's habit of frequently presenting the products of his imagination as unqualified facts is the stumbling block to the student. The value of his book lies not only in the full discussion of Easter Island culture and its comparison with the culture of other Polynesian islands but also in the series of excellent illustrations." E. W. Gifford

+ Geog R 16:172 Ja '26 950w

"To those who love the isles of indolence and their peoples it is commended as a most useful and instructive work. On those whose literary efforts about the islands took origin in three-day visits to Paumotu trading stations, or Oahu country clubs, it is urged as a positive necessity for the acquisition of that knowledge that will make their published writings have, at all events, the appearance of real contact." Paul Neumann

+ Lit R p4 S 26 '25 450w

"Professor Macmillan Brown has dramatized a special theory of his own. His is a very imaginative solution. And yet 'The Riddle of the Pacific' is a fascinating book, and it is full of odd and interesting information about Polynesian life. I do not think that the riddle propounded by the giant images has been answered in it. But Professor Macmillan Brown has probably thrown out many clues for a solution of the riddle." Padraic Colum

Nation and Ath 36:527 Ja 10 '25 1700w

"Mr. Brown, who is Chancellor of the University of New Zealand, writes as becomes his office with deep knowledge of the immediate object, illustrated by such study of perhaps related antiquity among the Peruvian remains."

+ Spec 134:18 Ja 3 '25 200w

BROWN, LILIAN MABEL ALICE (ROUSSEL) RICHMOND, lady. Unknown tribes, uncharted seas. 268p il $5 Appleton [21s Duckworth]

918.6 Chucunaque Indians. Panama—Description and travel. Indians of Central America 25-26564

Lady Richmond Brown, in company with Mr. Mitchell Hedges, explored some of the distant recesses of the Caribbean sea and encountered some most primitive Indian tribes, in particular the Chucunaque Indians of Panama, a degenerate tribe hitherto unvisited by white men.

She describes the adventures of the expedition and the customs and characteristics of the Indians.

"Her ladyship has given the public a readable book but not one which will live and wax greater. It is unfortunate that Lady Brown did not consult some of the more accurate sources of published information on the tribes of this and neighboring regions while preparing her book." F. G. Speck

— Ann Am Acad 123:231 Ja '26 700w

Booklist 21:376 Jl '25

Bookm 61:470 Je '25 40w

"A rather amateurish and excited account."

— Ind 114:190 F 14 '25 100w

"Lady Brown makes no attempt to pose as a superwoman intrepidly braving the wilds. She admits she has come in for a good deal of criticism, but is too big to let that annoy her very much. She has added her quota to the knowledge of the world, relieved its sufferings and written an interesting authentic book of her experiences." H. C. Burr

+ Lit R p6 Mr 21 '25 750w

"A very simple book of adventure written colloquially and vivaciously. The ethnologist is chiefly moved to jealousy that he was not given the opportunities in part wasted by these happy explorers, but the ordinary reader will find a successful attempt to give him a share of the enjoyment, which the escapade gave in abundance to the protagonists."

+ New Statesman 24:114 N 1 '24 850w

N Y Times p15 Ja 25 '25 1450w

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 15 '25 460w

"The spirit portrayed in Lady Brown's book is something very fine and, we may be glad to think, typically English. The book is one which repays careful and thorough reading. And the pleasant and light-hearted charm of its style—Lady Brown writes as if her chief interest in life was fishing—does not succeed in obscuring its serious scientific purpose."

+ Sat R 138:449 N 1 '24 480w

"She writes in a straightforward unimaginative style, with unfortunately no gift for the dramatic picturing of the interesting and unusual region which she visited. The chief charm [of the book] lies in the author's entirely genuine enthusiasm and her refreshing unconventionality." Blair Niles

+ Sat R of Lit 2:239 O 24 '25 680w

Spec 133:566 O 18 '24 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p644 O 16 '24 1000w

BROWN, ROLLO WALTER. Creative spirit; an inquiry into American life. 233p $2.50 Harper
814 United States—Civilization. United States—Intellectual life. Idealism 25-9455

Mr Brown shows that the power to create is inherent, in widely varying degrees, in almost all normal human beings and that under fostering conditions it can be greatly strengthened and enriched. He considers the influence of the creative spirit on conduct and the ways in which our American institutions—the church, higher education, industry, science, and art—affect the normal expression of this spirit. Mr Brown believes that the creative spirit is being stifled by standardizing influences in these directions and he pleads for a new attitude toward the creators in our midst.

Booklist 22:25 O '25

"An extraordinarily sensible and solid inquiry into the conditions of American life which make for and against that spontaneous and self-disciplined adventure we call creative activity. Mr Brown has simply and successfully tried to define where our Kultur falls short of being alive, in order that we may turn to seek life more abundant. He has done an excellent and necessary job." Irwin Edman

+ Bookm 61:588 Jl '25 1050w

"A book such as this should prove at least a step in the right direction. Less brilliant and less ill-tempered than the protests against Babbitty of The American Mercury school of critics, for instance, it is sound in its reasoning, constructive in its suggestions, and above all it is readable." E. B. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 1050w

Chem & Met Eng 32:943 D '25 30w

"Sane and penetrating."

+ Dial 79:261 S '25 220w

Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 70w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 43:105 Je 17 '25 1150w

"His criticisms, although by no means notable for their novelty, are for the most part cogent and convincing. The tone of his book is eminently fair, and perhaps we cannot be reminded too often of the particulars in which the organization of our national life has failed to be propitious to the creative impulse." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p24 My 10 '25 260w

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p1 My 10 '25 1650w

"The book is a spirited challenge to American indifference and complacency. Among its readers will be those who think it extreme in its criticism of the churches and the schools, and others who think it over-optimistic in its predictions of a turn for the better. There will be those also who doubt the wide distribution among the people of a latent endowment of creative-mindedness. But none of these will fail to be impressed with the lofty tone of the work, its clear sincerity and its fine expression."

+ N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 300w

"It is a thoughtful and constructive book."

+ Outlook 141:100 S 16 '25 160w

"Mr. Brown himself writes with the creative spirit and sees many signs of hope on the American horizon." R. M. Eaton

+ Sat R of Lit 1:854 Je 27 '25 1000w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 60w

"A gently corrective spirit of ethical and esthetic idealism is diffused over a considerable section of American affairs in 'The Creative Spirit.' Unfortunately, the language is also somewhat diffused, or at least diffuse, and the criticism, while helpful, reveals little fresh social and psychological penetration."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 29 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 7 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

BROWNE, KENNETH ROBERT GORDON. Cheerful fraud (Eng title Following Ann). 344p. $2 Putnam

25-16603

Sir Michael is a man of action, a go-getter. Having seen the fair-haired lady in the park, he is hers. To win her to his way of thinking necessitates a masquerade. The masquerade brings on a misunderstanding, and the misunderstanding nearly lands Sir Michael in jail. But his uncle, Mr. Moon, and his aunt, Lady Fairlie, arrive in time to establish their nephew's identity beyond question, thereby exposing a very arch villain. Thru all these exposures and disclosures Sir Michael is not diverted from his original purpose.

Booklist 22:116 D '25

"Probably the author of this spirited and entertaining humorous romance would be the last to claim for it any great degree of originality or literary distinction. It turns on a somewhat overworked situation of mistaken identity; its style is strained; its characters are the merest types. It never quite lives up to the allurements of its title. But as narrative it is by no means to be scorned. It is well planned, breezily told, and interesting to the last word on the last page; and to while away an idle hour it may be heartily recommended to almost any reader." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 400w

"The book is smoothly written and keeps up a smart pace. It would probably make a better farce than it does a novel. Joseph Moon, the portrait painter and uncle to the hero, is well drawn, and so is George Cherry, the affable confidence man. The main characters, however, appear to be so busy chasing thieves or being chased that the reader's conception of them must depend on brief snapshots." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p7 O 31 '25 280w

N Y Times p9 Ja 10 '26 450w

"The idea is not too original but the story is convincingly told and there is life and humor in the telling."

+ N Y Tribune p13 O 11 '25 150w

"The reader is glad to throw probability aside and follow breathlessly the real and the false Sir Michael through exciting happenings told with gusto and fun aplenty."

+ Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 60w

Sat R of Lit 2:180 O 3 '25 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 20 '25 180w

"A jolly tale, with no inconvenient profundity of plot."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 7 '25 80w

BROWNE, LEWIS. Stranger than fiction. 377p $2.50 Macmillan

296 Jews—History

25-11034

The title is used to describe the story of the Jew, from earliest times to the present day—the saga of his centuries of wandering, his persistent following of his own life in his own way.

Booklist 22:5 O '25

"It is a most fascinating story, written in excellent style, and carrying historic information in enlightening and refreshing manner." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:xxxv O '25 80w

"The writer presents a complete and coherent narrative. If dates and details are sparingly used, the swift flow of the story atones for these omissions. Throughout, every effort has apparently been made to place emphasis upon those basic factors of heredity and environment best calculated to explain the unique career, and in that way the present psychology, of the Jewish people." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 800w

Cleveland p99 S '25

"I do not envy Lewis Browne. This book will make a cannibalistic holiday for the man-eating Gelehrten who devote their time to the records of this ancient and illustrious race and who cannot see the alphabet for the iota. But as a mere layman I am deeply grateful that Browne has taken the trouble to hack a clear and direct path through the tangle of three thousand years of accumulated Talmudic underbrush." H. W. van Loon

Nation 120:524 My 6 '25 350w

"The value of the work is enhanced by fifty charts or 'animated maps,' ingeniously constructed by the author, giving a pictorial history of the centuries of wandering. There is also a compact glossary of Hebrew words used in the text. The style of the book is clear and smooth, reducing complicated topics to a rare simplicity." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p6 Je 21 '25 1850w

+ N Y Tribune p9 S 20 '25 220w

"Told with irresistible charm and grace."

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 10w

R of Rs 71:672 Je '25 150w

"The book abounds in charts that are childish. The glossary has a real value. The style is vigorous but the accent is censorious. The author lays more stress on the faulty side of the post-Christian development of Judaism rather than the noble side. In its narrative parts this book is a deserved tribute to a heroic people who have endured much."

BROWNE, LEWIS—Continued

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 J1 29 '25 400w
 "To treat the history of a people through thirty-five hundred years as a great adventure may scandalize some of the serious-minded, but it makes the story a living, throbbing thing."

+ World Tomorrow 8:354 N '25 100w

BROWNELL, WILLIAM CRARY. Genius of style. 226p $2 (10s) Scribner

701 Style, Literary. Esthetics 24-24365

Mr Brownell discusses style as an aesthetic factor entering not only into art and letters but into thought and even life itself. He attempts to define style, the elements of which it is made up and its uses. He maintains that literature is entitled to some measure of beauty, that something more is required from prose than that it should be purely communicative and that the element of beauty has a right to count as a force in letters as also in other fields of expression. Contents: Order and movement; Manner and personality; The art of prose; English prose tradition; Present-day uses—social and personal; Present-day uses—art and letters; Index.

Booklist 21:267 Ap '25

Reviewed by S. P. Sherman

Bookm 60:632 Ja '25 360w

"A work displaying none of the gauntness caused by the lean and hungry pursuit of concatenated thought; and while filled with much sharp detail, the book has a clarity from line to line which it does not possess as a whole, so that it will, I believe, be more easily understood at a first reading than a third." Kenneth Burke

+ — Dial 78:228 Mr '25 1500w

"No American critic is so well entitled to speak as one having authority as Mr. Brownell, but it is a part of the charm of his essays that he is never pontifical. There is nothing of academic aloofness about them. . . . The volume throughout exhibits to the full Mr. Brownell's wealth of learning, his delicate precision of analysis, and clean, sharp-edged thinking." H. L. Pangborn

+ Lit R p12 Ja 17 '25 400w

"Deliberate, alliterative, witty, and wise, Mr. Brownell moves through at least half of his book with a pace no less admirable than sure, and makes point after point which it would be folly to controvert. Unfortunately, Mr. Brownell reads only the older authors. Members of the generation will perhaps share with him his desire to see prose today grow into a richer, more beautiful instrument. As censor and counselor, however, they will feel that he has laid a hand upon them quite as dead as it is shapely." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 120:152 F 11 '25 850w

"Mr. Brownell, earnest and concerned, fastidious and finely-equipped, continues his labor of offering standards for a world in heedless flux. His thought is less difficult than his presentation of it. Style, as a wrapping for didacticism, merely produces complications. The few will hear, heed and rightfully praise, but perhaps only some popularizer—not too fine-grained—could give these worthy ideas the currency they deserve." H. B. Fuller

+ — New Repub 42:162 Ap 1 '25 820w

"He writes as he always does, surely with 'style' in the abstract sense, and in his own highly alembicated manner, a manner which makes for fine, if certainly not always 'easy,' reading. His pages are gay, all of them, with matter for the exquisite laughter of the mind." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 15 '25 2750w

"Excellent teachings excellently applied and interpreted. One hopes that there is enough discipline left in the anarchic contemporary world of art and criticism which Mr. Brownell deprecates to cope with the pregnancy of his own subtle but perhaps a little too sophisticated style." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 1:508 F 7 '25 2150w

Springf'd Republican p7a F 8 '25 1600w

"Though Mr. Brownell has a number of sound and original generalizations to make, the book is seriously hampered by his failure to maintain his own style on a level of decent and economical statement."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 5 '25 380w

BRUCE, HAROLD LAWTON. William Blake in this world. 234p $2.75 Harcourt

B or 92 Blake, William 25-8656

"Mr. Harold Bruce, disgruntled not only with Blake's biographers since the time of Gilchrist, but with the vapors of such interpretative commentators as Ellis, has endeavored in a new book on Blake 'to try to sift fact from romance, to try to erase the details of Blake's life not backed by competent material and relevant evidence.' Mr. Bruce expresses his fear that this ruthless procedure will mar the highly finished portrait of Blake which we now possess and substitute a flawed and imperfect one; but in the interest of truth he invites us to bear with him during a cautious and common sense examination of the best obtainable first-hand evidence relating to Blake the man."—N Y Tribune

"The author of this brief but able study of the life and works of the mystical poet and artist approaches his subject with a genuine desire to disentangle fact from fiction, taking issue with his earlier biographers on occasion and presenting ample evidence in support of his diverging views. Written with spirit and a forceful style that make it good reading."

+ Booklist 21:378 J1 '25

"Exasperating, confused, repetitious, self-conscious. Yet in spite of it, he has produced a singularly vivid picture of Blake and his genius. It arouses all one's sympathies and interest." N. H. Dole

+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 16 '25 1850w
Cleveland p105 N '25

"The value of this concise and sturdy book lies in the fact of its scrupulous avoidance of vague idealism and the careful manner in which it has followed Blake's own pronounced preference for 'minute particulars' as over against rhetorical generalizations."

+ Dial 79:353 O '25 100w

Nation 121:363 S 30 '25 180w

Reviewed by S. F. Damon

New Repub 44:sup2 S 30 '25 580w

New Statesman 26:184 N 21 '25 480w

"A brief but stimulating study." C: de Kay
 + N Y Times p12 My 10 '25 1250w

"A very clear and readable book on Blake. Mr. Bruce's fear that the casting out of doubtful legend will blur the outlines of his picture turns out to be groundless. Blake's image is firmly and suggestively blocked out. He is presented vividly and intimately through carefully chosen anecdote and quotation, so that the reader really feels the impact of a consistent human being intense with exuberance and energy. Blake's imaginative life is interpreted with genuine sympathy and understanding." Glen Mullin

+ N Y Tribune p3 My 10 '25 700w

"There is a great deal that can be said in favor of Mr. Bruce's biography. It has some valuable new material, and an excellent summing up of the evidence that Blake could not have been in a madhouse. It arranges old material with praiseworthy skill and interprets it with excellent common sense. It has a style which occasionally degenerates into jazz—to win the American public—but which usually keeps its literary dignity and is always lively and readable. The book is accurate and scholarly in its methods of dissipating old myths and confirming old truths, which is more than can be said of Blake's earlier biographies." F: E. Pierce

+ Sat R of Lit 1:742 My 9 '25 700w

"While the compilation obviously has interest, it makes difficult reading and renders a confused impression of the subject. One sees Blake in limbo, in the material world, in bedlam and in paradise with all his aberrations and idiosyncrasies carefully described. . . . So little is revealed that the reader may ask: 'Why not leave William Blake in his own world with "the spectators of the sky," instead of dragging him forth into this world with "the spectators of the earth"?'"

+ Spring'd Republican p10 My 29 '25 260w

"The kind of book about Blake which is chiefly needed at the present time is such a one as Mr. Harold Bruce has just attempted, unfortunately with a very limited success."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p646 O 8 '25 1700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 J1 '25

BRYAN, WILLIAM JENNINGS, and BRYAN, MARY ELIZABETH (BAIRD) (MRS WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN). Memoirs of William Jennings Bryan. 560p il $3.75 Winston

B or 92

25-25222

Mr Bryan's unfinished memoirs, which close with an account of the Baltimore convention of 1912, make up less than half the volume. Mrs Bryan then takes up the tale. She retraces some of the steps in his career, going back to his student days, and fills out the unfinished record with an account of his life in Washington and of the later years.

Reviewed by Josephus Daniels

Lit R p6 Ja 2 '26 2150w

"How much of the book was written by Mr. Bryan and how much by Mrs. Bryan it is impossible to tell, for she says that as written the first half was a rough draft and she 'polished' it. Where it does lose is from occasions where one of the authors—probably Mr. Bryan—suppresses a fact or laboriously embroiders it, without actually falsifying the details. Unconsciously, Mr. Bryan takes away something from the knightliness of the Sir Galahad who has been worshiped by so many millions for so many years as the hero whose strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure." C: W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p3 D 27 '25 1650w

"Not the place in which to search for the cool analysis of history or biography."

+ N Y World p7m D 13 '25 60w

Reviewed by D. C. Seitz

N Y World p6m D 20 '25 650w

R of Rs 73:110 Ja '26 180w

BRYANT, LORINDA (MUNSON) (MRS CHARLES W. BRYANT). Children's book of celebrated bridges. 105p il $2.50 Century

624 Bridges

25-18113

The book contains fifty full-page photographs of famous bridges and a page of descriptive text for each picture. The bridges chosen are celebrated in history and legend or for their beauty and engineering skill.

"Makes an interesting connection with historic events, places, and people."

+ Booklist 22:121 D '25

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p48 D '25 30w

"Here is a worthy successor to this author's like books about pictures, sculpture, and buildings. A child who owns this book will certainly come awake to the fascination of bridges past, present, and future."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:281 N 7 '25 70w

"Designed for children, but equally interesting to older people who have any responsiveness to the lure of travel."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 220w

BRYANT, MARGUERITE (MRS PHILIP W. MUNN). Mrs Fuller. 284p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Hurst & B.]

25-9490

Hurrying home late in the evening to her lodging in London from an overtime job of typing Marjorie Derring realized with alarm that she was being followed and turned in at the first house that showed a friendly light from its windows. The distraught young man who opened the door told her that she might come in but that there was a dead man in the house, apparently murdered. From that moment Marjorie Deering became involved in a strange adventure which bound her fortunes closely with those of the young man, whom circumstantial evidence pointed to as the murderer.

"Marguerite Bryant is too good a novelist to leave us without personal interest in her characters. We find ourselves vitally concerned in whether or not the story ends successfully." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Je 13 '25 720w

Cleveland p87 S '25

Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 30w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 80w

"It's a good story." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p9 My 29 '25 180w

N Y Times p9 My 24 '25 360w

Reviewed by Ruth Von Phul

N Y Tribune p12 J1 26 '25 220w

"Its people are not dummies (in the average detective tale murder is about as emotional an affair as gum chewing), its love story is engaging, its incidents are well told, and in Judd, the butler, we have a capital character." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 140:264 Je 17 '25 250w

"A good afternoon's entertainment. Its various skeins are really skilfully tangled, and one reads on with genuine curiosity as to how they will be smoothed out again."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:828 Je 13 '25 220w

BUCHAN, JOHN. John Macnab. 298p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-17114

Sir Edward Leithen, Mr Palliser-Yeates and Lord Lamancha are very much bored with life. The doctor advises each of them to go after a little excitement and danger, some kind of a sporting crime, perhaps. They hit on the very thing. Three letters are sent to the owners of three closely guarded Scottish estates stating that at such and such a time the undersigned, John Macnab, will poach on their property, despite all efforts to stop him. For the sake of his position no one of the three men can afford to be caught as a poacher, so there is plenty of the spice of danger in the plan. The owners take up the challenge and double their watch. But with the help of Benjie Bogle, the indispensable small boy who repeatedly saves the day, the three-in-one John Macnab more or less wins the wager and certainly sheds dull care.

"The reader shares the troubles and the efforts and the excitements of the hero, the triple-headed John Macnab. That is true romance, and what if it be merry and light? It is none the less romance." C. P. Curtis, jr.

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 500w

Booklist 22:72 N '25

"Mr. Buchan is a remarkable story teller and one who knows what good writing will do for a good story." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 29 '25 900w

Cleveland p108 N '25

BUCHAN, JOHN—Continued

"A good straightforward story of adventure."
+ Ind 115:363 S 26 '25 120w

"Mr. Buchan has given his story a very original plot, with a splendid Scottish background for the adventures of his gallant trio, all amateur poachers of salmon and deer in the sacred preserves of great Highland landlords. John Buchan is a true Scot and also a true sport, with the ability to interpret the varied aspects of nature with vivid touches of light and color. Is it too much to say that in this novel he reveals himself as one in direct succession to the long line of bright literary spirits that have followed the great and good Sir Walter?" J. S. MacNab

+ Int Bk R p821 N '25 450w

"It is a good yarn, full of humor and the out-of-doors." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p3 O 10 '25 650w

"Despite Mr. Buchan's skill in conveying the atmosphere of moor and Highland forest, a practical joke can hardly be sustained beyond the limits of a short story."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:740 S 19 '25 220w

N Y Tribune p8 O 4 '25 150w

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 130w

"The book is uniformly pleasant in tone, and the writing is as competent as ever; but one needs to be a sportsman in the technical as well as in the sentimental sense of the term to take much interest in the involved ingenuities of the plot; and not even a reader with that high qualification could suffer gladly so much and so tedious dialogue. The fact is that, the adventure being elaborately faked, the danger trivial, the whole thing is no more than an undergraduate rag on a somewhat cumbersome scale." Gerald Bullett

— + Sat R 140:164 Ag 8 '25 520w

"John Macnab is not so satisfying a book of adventure as the unforgettable Greenmantle, though it is full of good sportsmen, upstanding and attractive girls, with crusty landowners, an archaeologist, hordes of journalists hot-foot after copy about the poacher, and a delightful urchin called Fish Benjie thrown in. Some of the thrill is spoilt because the reader knows the secret of John Macnab's identity from the beginning. . . The tale is so well and so vigorously told that the flaw is only apparent on reflection."

+ — Spec 135:241 Ag 8 '25 320w

Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 J1 23 '25 600w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Lord Minto; a memoir. 347p $7.50 Houghton [21s Nelson]

B or 92 Minto, Gilbert John Murry Kynynmond Elliot, 4th earl of

"The life of a public servant who occupied successively the position of governor-general of Canada and viceroy of India cannot but throw light on contemporary history; though Gilbert John, fourth earl of Minto, was not of those who cared for the limelight, so that there will be many who will first learn from Mr. Buchan's memoir the important part that he played in both hemispheres."—Eng Hist R

"The author of this volume had already established his reputation as a novelist and historian. He has now proved himself equally adept in the field of biography. The varied career of Lord Minto naturally lent itself to colorful treatment, to which Mr. Buchan's facile and vivid narrative has added a distinctive charm of its own." C. D. Allin

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:634 Ag '25 750w

"Mr. Buchan is one of those novelists who can bring a very fine and inspired touch to historical and biographical writing. He proved it in his history of the Great War, and now he again establishes his right to admiration by this vivid and understanding life." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 21 '25 1900w

"Lord Minto has been fortunate in his biographer. Mr. Buchan has brought to his task an intimate knowledge of the countryside and family background, a sympathetic appreciation of the type to which Lord Minto belonged, and a terse, fresh, swinging style." O. D. Skelton

+ Canadian Hist R 6:64 Mr '25 2050w

"Mr. Buchan has succeeded within a single volume of less than 350 pages in giving a most living portrait of a most attractive personality and of a most eventful life. No praise can be higher than that the memoir is worthy of its subject, the man whom Lord Kitchener esteemed 'the best, most gallant, and able administrator that England ever produced.'" H. E. Egerton

+ Eng Hist R 40:140 Ja '25 1600w

"Mr. Buchan's memoir is a most successful piece of work—bright in narrative, and in its use of letters and official documents a model."

+ Nation and Ath 36:336 N 29 '24 500w

"Mr. Buchan's book is a capital example of political biography. It is accurate, animated, and of the right length. Its quotations clearly imply the existence of a reserve of excellent material—not the Viceroy's correspondence alone, but also Lady Minto's letters and journals. There is stuff here for a further delightful volume, as Mr. Buchan has doubtless noted."

+ New Statesman 24:242 N 29 '24 1000w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 80w

Sat R 138:472 N 8 '24 850w

"In this age so many men have fought battles or directed events which have affected the world that it is difficult to focus attention on any biography, but Mr. Buchan has added a charming and forceful personality to our gallery of Empire."

+ Spec 133:sup556 O 18 '24 2150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p639 O 16 '24 2400w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Two ordeals of democracy. 56p $2 Houghton

973.7 United States—History—Civil war.

European war, 1914-1918 25-5465

In an inspiring address at Milton academy on the Alumni war memorial foundation, Colonel Buchan, the historian of the Great war, draws a parallel between that war and the American Civil war. He looks at the Civil war as a great struggle of ideals and of heroic men and he sees in it not only a fore-shadowing of the strategy and tactics of the Great war but similarities in its larger aspects as a great spiritual conflict and an ordeal of democracy.

"The suggestive thought in this book is out of all proportion to its size. His faculty for clothing his ideas in a style of limpid clarity is familiar to readers. The perception of things American which he shows in the present work, whether or not one agrees with all his deductions, conveys a vivid reminder of De Tocqueville and Bryce." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p3 My 3 '25 1400w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 20w

BUCHAN, JOHN. comp. Northern muse. 547p $3 Houghton [10s 6d Nelson]

821.08 Scottish poetry—Collections

[24-28728]

This anthology of Scottish vernacular poetry expresses the compiler's personal tastes and contains the things which, as a lover of Scots poetry, he turns to most often. Ballads have been sparingly used because they are accessible in many editions. The spelling of the older pieces is in some cases modified and there is a glossary at the foot of each page to vernacular words and idioms. Where a single verse or a group of verses from a poem is printed, notes show where the complete text may be found.

Booklist 21:333 Je '25

Bookm 62:90 S '25 250w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 1 '25 500w

"An admirable anthology. Everything is in it that ought to be in it—and naturally some that ought not to be."

+ — Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 30w

Living Age 324:226 Ja 24 '25 350w

Nation 121:150 Jl 15 '25 10w

"Colonel John Buchan has achieved the distinction of being the first man to make a comprehensive Anthology of Scottish and Northern English poetry which Southerners can read with real pleasure. It is not that Colonel Buchan has taken liberties with the originals in the way of softening or rewriting, but that there is little included that is at all self-conscious, and therefore the difficulties of dialect and spelling attract rather than exasperate the reader." Robert Graves

+ Nation and Ath 35:751 S 20 '24 650w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman

Outlook 140:113 My 20 '25 150w

"This is a book worth having and worth sending to a friend if he or she is a writer of verse. It is for one thing a very good anthology, and for another it covers a field which we have been neglecting."

+ Sat R 139:366 O 11 '24 360w

"I know of no collection of Scottish verse with so high a percentage of cream. The glossarial footnotes give what is necessary for understanding, and the commentary supplies clues for further reading and contains much pleasant philosophizing and acute criticism. Altogether a delightful volume." W: A. Neilson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:431 D 19 '25 450w

"With Mr. Buchan I have no quarrel, except that, given his narrow plot, he does not include more Burns; for I go the whole way with the patriotic Scot in Burns idolatry. Mr. Buchan's introduction is a masterly piece of criticism. He says exactly the right thing about Scottish vernacular verse, its merits and defects." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 133:390 S 20 '24 1050w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p683 O 30 '24 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 21:110 Ap '25

BUCK, CHARLES NEVILLE. Portuguese sil-ver. 309p $2 Century

25-4340

The enormous reward offered by the Italian government for the capture of a criminal of international fame brings several American detectives to a summer resort at Cape Cod where they believe the man to be hiding. They watch with suspicion the strange maneuvers of Defuniac, a solitary yachtsman, and his love affair with Ella Shaw a beautiful Cape Cod girl. There are perilous escapades and desperate fighting before the criminal is captured.

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 4 '25 220w

"The story moves quickly as the various threads are spun together, and never for a moment does the reader suspect the denouement, which is skillfully kept to the very end. Mr. Buck has written a clever tale and has not had to swerve from his true course in order to spring a surprise." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p10 F 28 '25 400w

"Mr. Buck is a capable practitioner in this division of the art of fiction."

+ Outlook 139:382 Mr 11 '25 60w

Sat R of Lit 1:602 Mr 14 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 70w

BUDGE, SIR ERNEST ALFRED THOMPSON WALLIS. Egypt. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p il $1 Holt

932 Egypt—History, Ancient 25-9406

"Contains the principal facts concerning the history and civilization of the Ancient Egyptians, which are, in the author's opinion, to be deduced from their monuments and other remains. Maps and bibliography."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Am Pol Sci R 19:866 N '25 30w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 1 '25 220w

"A distinguished addition to the Home University Library, which is one of the most valuable of contemporary series."

+ Nation 121:100 Jl 15 '25 20w

"A great amount of information has been compressed into a small book. Like most of the volumes in the excellently edited Home University Library it comfortably fills the pocket and the mind."

N Y Tribune p10 Jl 5 '25 200w

Pratt p33 autumn '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 19 '25 40w

BULLARD, ROBERT LEE. Personalities and reminiscences of the war. 347p $5 Doubleday

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 25-23014

General Bullard was among the first of our army officers sent to France. He commanded the first American division to go into the line and was pushing on toward Metz when the Armistice came. His reminiscences are offered frankly as personal memories, based not on records but on impressions. He is outspoken in his opinions of the men who had important parts in the war—General Pershing, General Bliss, Secretary of War Baker, and others.

"Without an ax to grind, with no wrongs to right, but merely as a narrator of the personalities, the events, and the national difficulties encountered, General Bullard recounts his experiences in the war. This volume is not a history of the American troops in the war. Nor is it the usual attempt at self justification. It gives to all the opportunity to listen to General Bullard as he tells of the personalities and problems he met in the war." Shipley Thomas

+ Bookm 62:492 D '25 550w

Boston Transcript p5 N 25 '25 900w

Reviewed by H: E. Armstrong

N Y Times p7 D 27 '25 2150w

"This is literature. It may not, to be sure, be literature in that sense of the word illustrated by the diary of General Harbord, for Bullard writes as he fights, in the unadorned manner of Grant or Caesar. As a fighting soldier of such a sort, Bullard requires neither style nor structure in his writing, because the wealth of his material is no less arresting than its uniqueness." Alexander Harvey

+ N Y Tribune p12 D 20 '25 800w

"This book is probably the best one from any of the generals of the A. E. F."

+ Outlook 141:642 D 23 '25 130w

"Bullard's book is the book of a soldier, of a soldier who feels rather than sees, who is at his best setting forth a state of mind, or better illuminating a state of fact by revealing a state of mind. It has an engaging simplicity and an almost devastating honesty. The author can tell you that he was nervous, downright scared, and ridiculously wrong. He is full of magnificent reserves but also of gorgeous indiscretions. He tries to prove nothing, to justify nothing, to exalt or diminish no one. But for anyone who hereafter would understand or describe the American Expeditionary Army in France this is a necessary book." F. H. Simonds

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:337 N 28 '25 1250w

BULLETT, GERALD WILLIAM. Mr Godly beside himself. 255p $2.50 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Lane]

25-21416

"The romance of escape from middle-age has been expressed by means of a clever fantasy. Mr. Godly, who has been 'something in the City' for well over twenty years, is introduced to us in an early morning mood of dissatisfaction with his placid existence, due to a recrudescence of his youthful sense of beauty. Lured by the promise of the impossible, he leaves the office that evening with the mysteriously beautiful girl to whom he dictates his business letters, and accompanies her to her home in Wimbledon. At this point the grotesque invades the real and soon brings us through the looking-glass into a moon-lit fairy land. Maia, the typist, is translated into a symbol of beauty which beckons Mr. Godly on a fantastic pursuit. In the meantime, whilst he is wandering in the fairy noon, his own other self, the fairy Godelik, visits his real-world wife, and she is beautified and made young again by the strange contact just as Godly is transfigured by Maia's first—and last—kiss."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

BULLETT, G. W.:—Continued

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 25 '25 470w

"This is a most amusing book, as smooth as old port and as glowing warm and as full-flavored as rye; and we write in America as of 1925, conscious of the contemporary significance of the characterization. Here are poetry and satire, realism and fantasy, tenderness and terror, tragedy and humor, irresistible and stimulating." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Ap 4 '25 420w

Nation 121:194 Ag 12 '25 100w

"An amusing affair, in a clever vein of forced fantasy, yet showing how easy and natural it is nowadays to exploit the assumption that there is another world unknown to commonsense and that to reach it is to escape from death to life." J: Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:508 F 7 '25 200w

"Mr. Bullett has written a book half real, half fairy. It bubbles with happy caprice and kindly wit that merrily realizes his puckish conception of a great universal desire. His limpid and lucid style has the relish and sparkle of Moselle."

+ N Y Times p16 Ja 4 '25 900w

"The book is static and because of its external perfection rather brittle—brittle, too, because of the facility of expression which appears to employ the exact word or phrase, so that all is said directly and nothing implied. All of his words are clear, exact, definite, giving an effect as brilliant, as flashing as dew on a cobweb." Margaret Evans

+ N Y Tribune p14 Je 14 '25 520w

"This is an imaginative and amusing variation on a theme often handled in recent novels."

+ Outlook 140:302 Je 24 '25 220w

Reviewed by E: T. Booth

Sat R of Lit 1:804 Jl 6 '25 720w

"The string of fantastical incidents that happen equally to Mr. Godly and to his substitute is beautifully varied and surprising." Andrew Carey

+ Spec 133:954 D 13 '24 260w

"Mr. Bullett writes with lucidity, and even when he gives his fancy the rein his prose retains the ease and balance which are among the pleasantest features of the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p846 D 11 '24 370w

BURBANK, EMILY. Smartly dressed woman. 264p il $3 Dodd

391 Clothing and dress. Costume 25-17562

This book maintains that the laws underlying successful dressing today are "classic" laws agreed upon by the best artist-designers. The author states these rules, which are few in number, and applies them to the various departments of dress. She also shows how much depends upon understanding one's own type and making the clothes express the personality of the wearer.

Booklist 22:104 D '25

"For the achievement of 'style,' this author's formula is a simple one. Follow the fashions, she says, but do not follow them too closely.

And that is all she has to say, and she says it over again in each chapter in practically the same words." R. W. T.

— Lit R p4 O 3 '25 100w

"The strangest thing about Miss Burbank is that she is wholly undaunted by any period of history which flatly contradicts her. Will it be believed that with her law of conformity to rigid, unbending laws of fashion, she cheerfully looks the Roman Empire in the eye and claims it as a disciple? Believe it or not, she does. She even gives the rules for every article of dress, and this in the freest social community that ever existed." C: W. Thompson

— N Y Times p7 S 20 '25 1800w

N Y Tribune p17 D 6 '25 30w

St Louis p405 N '25

BURDETT, OSBERT. Beardsley period. 302p $2.50 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d J. Lane]

820.9 Authors, British. Artists, British. English literature—History and criticism. Beardsley, Aubrey Vincent [25-10101]

"In England the years between 1890 and 1900 were the period of Oscar Wilde, Pinero, Swinburne, George Moore. And it was the period of Aubrey Beardsley and 'The Yellow Book.' In what he calls 'An Essay in Perspective,' Osbert Burdett makes an intensive and extensive study of these 'Fin de Siècle' years. Mr. Burdett takes Aubrey Beardsley for the central figure around which his study revolves; and 'The Beardsley Period' is the title he gives his book."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:63 N '25

Reviewed by E. B. Thompson

Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 1400w

"Sensible and well-written book."

+ Dial 79:175 Ag '25 160w

"Mr. Burdett's rigorous method of selection, together with his obvious belief in his heroes, make his book a significant commentary, but not in the sense intended by the author. What emerges clearly from 'The Beardsley Period' is the poverty and unimportance of this chapter in the literary history of England. The only evidence that is produced to show the vitality of the writers mentioned is the statement of a bibliographer that their books are rare, expensive, and collected by many bibliophiles." Ernest Boyd

Ind 114:589 My 23 '25 1100w

"Mr. Burdett has written something more than a final history of a literary group, and his indictment of the apparently invincible machine of society which 'made every imaginative desire or uncommercial aim seem eccentric' is indeed, an indictment of our whole society. I would especially recommend it for perusal by Mr. Summer to his own profit—and ours." J: Cournos

Lit R p7 Ap 18 '25 1350w

"Let it be said that Mr. Burdett's book is well worth reading. It is probably not the final estimate of the period, but of its kind it is the most sympathetic interpretation yet made."

+ New Statesman 25:234 Je 6 '25 1200w

"Mr. Burdett, in his 'essay' of some three hundred pages, has produced a piece of criticism which seems as sound as it is interesting. He places the sadly gay and the gayly sad writers and artists of the time not merely in perspective; he also places them under the pitiless glare of a calcium light. And more than this—Mr. Burdett has a sense of humor that makes his book a pleasure to read, even for those whose intellectual preoccupations have chiefly been with periods before, or with the years that succeeded."

+ N Y Times p5 My 3 '25 2900w

"In the main its criticism is sound and throughout it is delightful reading. Mr. Burdett treats his subject sympathetically, but without sentimentality. Yet 'The Beardsley Period' is clearly an uneven volume, being far more satisfactory in its opening and closing chapters, wherein a spirit is discussed, than in its middle portions, wherein the critic seeks to interpret and evaluate individual accomplishments." B. R. Redman

+ — N Y Tribune p4 Ag 2 '25 1000w

"Mr. J. C. Squire writes that it is 'most amusing,' and that 'at last' the nineties have been satisfactorily defined. It was therefore disappointing to find the book tasteless and lacking in that attractive novelty which suggests hard thinking. There is also a suggestion that the separate chapters appeared as essays and have not been collated; the repetitions are numerous and are always of negligible facts." Gilbert Seldes

— N Y World p6m My 3 '25 880w

"With so many qualifications for his task, Mr. Burdett, by concentrating on the writers of the period, has produced only another, though the best, book about it, whereas he might have given us the final history of what was most significant in it: the deliberate and learned perversion of spiritual energy in Beardsley, the deliberate and exquisite cultivation of ambiguity in Conder."

+ — Sat R 139:192 F 21 '25 550w

"An ingenious theory is worked out through the first half of the book, with able and pleasant insinuation. It breaks down rather lamentably, however, at the crucial point, when the actual work of the 'decadents' comes to be considered. In his early chapters, Mr. Burdett, with a charm and vigour which carry all before them, leads us breathlessly on as to some approaching grand climax. But not even his skill can invest the drawings of Beardsley or the poems of Dowson with enough vitality to bring the climax off." Gilbert Thomas

+ — Spec 134:sup456 Mr 21 '25 1100w

"Marred by excess of subtlety and by too tortuous pursuit of a general theory, 'The Beardsley Period' is a book which repays through its substance the effort it demands of the reader. It even entertains and delights by its incidental wit, insight and grace. But it has defects of selection and proportion."

+ — Spring'd Republican p12 My 8 '25 580w

"Our first thought in reading Mr. Burdett's introductory chapters, which survey 'the historic background' since the Renaissance, was that the preface is oddly disproportionate to the theme. Our second thought was that it was necessary that Mr. Burdett should have what seems to us an exaggerated opinion of his period in order to write about it so well. For he does write well about it. He is in touch with it to an extent to which very few living critics can be; he believes in its ideals, and has absorbed its technique."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p116 F 19 '25 1100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

BURIAN VON RAJECZ, STEPHAN, graf.
Austria in dissolution; tr. by Brian Lunn.
455p $6 Doran [25s Benn]

943.6 Austria-Hungary—Foreign relations.
European war, 1914-1918—Austria-Hungary
[25-5638]

"Count Burian was Minister for Foreign Affairs for Austria and Hungary from January, 1915, with one short break till October, 1918, and his book is a history of his country's diplomacy during the time when he was in office. The fact that it just fails to cover the whole period of the Great War makes it seem strangely incomplete. We are introduced to an Austria already involved in hostilities, and we leave it just before its final dissolution."—Nation and Ath

Bookm 61:713 Ag '25 150w

Boston Transcript p7 Ja 9 '26 460w

Cleveland p99 S '25

"The personal element in Count Burian's book is slight. Apart from the two or three unexpected epigrams in which he hits off a personality or a nation, this part of the book might have been written equally well by any student of documents. The treatment of the nationality problem is much more interesting."

+ — Nation and Ath 36:654 F 7 '25 720w

"His new book on Austria in Dissolution is an inside history of events, which will have permanent value in spite of some trivial passages, and in spite also of the fact that His Excellency has obviously written more state documents than books." J. Bakeless

+ New Repub 44:23 Ag 26 '24 680w

New Statesman 24:482 Ja 31 '25 300w

"His book is readable from beginning to end, which virtue is enhanced by the translation. It exposes no rancor, and the frank admission of failures in Austro-Hungarian policies, even while those policies are defended, redeems it from the category of a special plea." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 5 '25 2300w

Reviewed by Emil Lengyel

N Y Tribune p8 Ag 2 '25 900w

"Fairly candid and interestingly written volume. Unfortunately, his narrative is not quite as explicit as it might be." Allan Nevins

+ — N Y World p10s My 31 '25 520w

"These considered reflections on Austro-Hungarian policy during the Great War are of importance. Count Burian approves himself the fine flower of the older diplomacy. In office and out, he is entirely 'correct' and convinced that his principles are sound. Nothing can be more plausible than his statement, or more delicate than his politeness to foes and friends. He admires and disapproves; makes allowance for other points of view, and maintains his own."

Sat R 139:139 F 7 '25 500w

"His book will be of a certain value to the historian. It does not appear to descend at all to the level of the wantonly mendacious propaganda which has been jetting like a fountain from Central Europe during the last few years. He seems to be honestly trying to tell the truth—and often reveals it quite unconsciously."

+ Spec 134:sup452 Mr 21 '25 750w

BURNE-JONES, SIR EDWARD COLEY. Letters to Katie; with an introductory note by W. Graham Robertson. 30p il $3 (10s 6d) Macmillan

B or 92

Katie Lewis, to whom Burne-Jones wrote these jolly little letters illustrated with his drawings, was at the time of writing, a child of four, the youngest daughter of dear friends. Both letters and drawings show a most lovable and playful side of the artist.

"Whether it is intended for children or for older people, the book has great charm. One scarcely knows which could the better enjoy it. The artist's stories of his lessons with Mrs. Art, of the models she brings for him to copy—delightfully drawn these models are—and then of the easy way in which he copies them quite in the manner in which the veriest child would copy the same pictures, are inimitable."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 9 '25 250w

"To possess this book is to come again, in a new and a very delightful way, into the atmosphere of the whimsical-serious artist whom we know through the pages of Lady Burne-Jones's 'Memorials of Edward Burne-Jones.' Morris must have loved these letters and drawings, if Burne-Jones or 'Katie' ever showed them to him."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p731 N 5 '25 550w

BURNET, DANA. It is a strange house. 188p $2 Little 25-6532

812

In a play of three acts the author presents, in impressionistic style, a satire on life. The

BURNET, DANA—Continued

"house" is symbolical of the structure of life, and thru its various rooms, from banquet room to basement, goes Laura, the chief character of the play, in pursuit of Reality. In every room thru which she passes she tears down the conventional barriers which society has so painstakingly built up until she emerges at last into the Garden, finding in its freedom and beauty Reality.

"It is with a peculiar regret that the average reader will lay this book down. Mr. Burnet has discovered such a very effective idea and shaped the general outline of it so well that one wishes the detail were better."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 200w
Cleveland p88 S '25

"The conception is poetic. Its treatment is savagely realistic, and, like most drama that is based on a serious thought, it is one-sided and extreme. For all that, it stands upon a foundation of reality, and if it is better suited to be read than acted, and is likely to be read by the few rather than the multitude, that may be only a proof of its real value as a criticism upon the morals, the religion and the social and economic standards of our times." E. H. Wyman

+ Int Bk R p553 Jl '25 400w

"Its style is altogether new, its lines so altogether clever and rich in satire, beauty and strength, that we find ourselves reading them again and again, and repeating certain phrases from them at odd moments of the day." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p14 Ap 25 '25 550w

"Highly significant as straws in the wind, and profoundly unimportant as reading matter." Betsy Greenebaum

— New Repub 43:106 Je 17 '25 250w

"Where an author has attempted so much as has Mr. Burnet it is, of course, inevitable that he should not succeed in every respect. Thus we find that his dialogue is not in every place marked by that subtlety and finesse which one might desire; that, although much is symbolic and a vast amount is left to implication, he is occasionally a little more obvious than is strictly necessary, and in one or two instances might even be accused of a breach of good taste. One may admit all this and yet also admit that Mr. Burnet has produced an exceptional piece of work." S. A. Coblenz

+ N Y Times p7 Ap 5 '25 800w

"What is it these authors seem driven to say? What is it that is torturing them to torture the drama into strange shapes? If you will read Mr. Burnet's 'It is a Strange House' I think you may be able to find an answer as well as in any of the expressionistic experiments. Save for 'The Hairy Ape' it seems to me the best of the American crop, the most thoughtful and best thought out." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ap 19 '25 600w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 350w

"This drama leaves the reader at its end wondering more than a little if, instead of squaring the circle, the author has no more than merely rounded it."

Sat R of Lit 1:673 Ap 11 '25 200w

BURNS, CECIL DELISLE. Industry and civilization. 278p $3.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Allen & U.]

330.1 Economics. Industry 25-13666

A philosophic analysis of the moral standards which govern economic and industrial life. Treating industry as public service the author considers the position of the different classes in economic life—workers, organizers, owners of capital, and consumers, and the moral responsibility of each.

Reviewed by F. N. House

Am J Soc 31:260 S '25 200w

"The value of Mr Burns's work lies in its suggestiveness rather than in its concrete proposals. It represents, in a word, an effort to bring producers and consumers together in a form of social co-operation. The author's frequent vagueness does not destroy his fundamental argument that economic organization is subject to ethical considerations and that industry is a form of public service."

+ Springfield Republican p8 My 26 '25 480w

"The value and importance of this book become apparent as soon as we take up a newspaper and note the arguments employed both in defence and in criticism of our economic system. In this illuminating analysis Mr. Delisle Burns brings his readers from the dangerous realm of phrase into the dispassionate world of realities. Different minds will draw different practical conclusions from the study of his book; but those whose business is controversy will be more careful after reading it, and those whose concern is to understand the world in which they live will certainly be wiser."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p213 Mr 26 '25 1200w

BURR, MRS ANNA ROBESON (BROWN). St Helios. 373p $2 Duffield

25-17620

When Traquair first met him Lord Heriot was still vigorously handsome in spite of his years, and still exerting the irresistible attraction which had won him the nickname St Helios. There were unpleasant stories about his relations with his secretary, a pale quiet young woman whose manner seemed to Traquair to give the lie to gossip. He discovered that she was the little Nicole whom he had known and pitied long ago. She told him her grievance against Lord Heriot, her consuming ambition and the difficulties in the way of it, and as the cruelty of her position became apparent Traquair's sympathies were once more definitely enlisted. Impelled by his loyal affection for Lord Heriot and his growing love for Nicole, the American stays on in England to seek the happy solution of their problem.

"There is a touch of genius in the character drawing of 'St. Helios.' What a book! The author has a sensitive creative imagination, and an unusual sense of values along with true story-telling ability. St. Helios is a figure, no denying that, and the book is one that deserves a place among the best novels of the year." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 26 '25 900w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"A singularly effective novel, one hardly knows why. It is almost entirely without action or adventure; its characters are not always wholly convincing; nor is it noticeably well written. Yet, one experiences the same reluctance to put it down that one does with Trollope's better novels."

+ — Ind 115:396 O 3 '25 160w

"I could not help feeling that St. Helios was entitled to the girl's gratitude for what he had done for her, which was much more than the average nobleman of real life does under like circumstances; but she is depicted as the possessor of such a malevolent spirit that one can not feel an acute sympathy with her. Moreover, she is unconvincing, for she does not avail herself of her many opportunities for swindling her father, 'St. Helios,' despite the faults I have named, is a thoroughly interesting novel. The closing scenes are so well done that they impart an unforgettable glamour to the book." J. L. Ford

+ — Int Bk R p819 N '25 700w

"Mrs. Burr's novel goes back to the days when plots were still fashionable; in other words, when villains were villains and heroes heroes. But she handles her plot skillfully; her people are alive and interesting, and she writes with an extraordinary understanding of England and Scotland considering that she is American. She is as much at home there as Anne Douglas Sedgwick, for example." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 S 26 '25 420w

"The plot proceeds intricately to fashion, with perhaps a bit of specious logic, a dramatically constructed story. It is in the best tradition of Victorian plot usage. The villain is as obvious as a billboard."

N Y Times p9 Ja 3 '26 650w

"A pleasing novel and well written."

+ N Y Tribune p11 N 22 '25 250w

"It has in good measure both charm and sophistication."

+ N Y World p4m O 4 '25 100w

"A full-bodied novel, not skimmed in characters or incident. It holds its own from start to finish. The situation between St. Helios and the young lady is a singular one and is well handled."

+ Outlook 141:609 D 16 '25 230w

BURR, JANE, pseud. Married men. 274p $2 Maurice

The years are slipping by with Janet Silver-ton, bringing her no nearer to the realization of her ambitions as an actress. In a moment of unusual weariness and depression she meets Stephen Morse, a music critic. His homage is balm to her despondency, renewing her confidence and her zest in life. Their affair has developed into a passion before she discovers that he is a married man. For a while Janet drifts along, fully alive to the hopelessness of the situation but unable to give Stephen up. As time goes on she realizes more and more clearly that Stephen places his obligations to his wife and home above his love for her. That this is the way of "married men," no matter how ardent may be their feeling for another woman, that home means the place where the lawful wife lives—this is the underlying idea of the story and to it Janet eventually bows.

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 5 '25 250w

"A readable novel. As a picture of the life behind the footlights and of the buffeting endured by those who aspire to such a career, it is hardly inspiring." E. B. Smith

Lit R p6 Ag 1 '25 420w

"Commonplace as the situation is, it is depicted with a certain vigor and vehemence that lends it reality, as though the author herself had intimately experienced the emotions and sufferings of her heroine."

+ — N Y Times p13 J1 5 '25 400w

"The characters are unreal and the story unconvincing."

— N Y World p5m O 11 '25 100w

"The emotions of the two women are made fairly human, the extravagance of the histrionic temperament being almost suspiciously missing. But the episodes are mostly incredible, and the talk of the sophisticated woman who undertakes to moralize about the disadvantages of a man's mistress, in comparison with the wife's position, is tediously smart. The book is evidently written for the sentimental consolation of chorus girls."

— + Springfield Republican p7a J1 26 '25 100w

BURRELL, GEORGE ARTHUR. Recovery of gasoline from natural gas. (American chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 600p il $7 Chemical catalog co.

665.5 Gas, Natural. Gasoline 25-3739

"In addition to a complete discussion of the three methods used commercially for the extraction of gasoline from natural gas, and the equipment employed in each method, many allied topics are given consideration, among which are the history of the industry, origin of petroleum and natural gas; chemistry, analysis, and measurement of natural gas; methods of testing natural gas for gasoline; fractionating columns; removal of sulfur compounds from natural gas and natural gas gasoline; shipping regulations; and methods of testing natural gas gasoline."—

"The industry has had previously almost nothing in the way of a literature. For this reason, this book is especially welcome and more so because the author brought to his task the rare combination of sound theory and actual practice in commercial operation as well as a knowledge of the development of the industry gained by personal contact."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:450 Ap '25 1200w

"The author is exceptionally well qualified to write a book of this sort by virtue of his long association with various phases of the natural gas and natural gas gasoline industries, and this product of his pen will have, without doubt, a well-deserved and wide circulation in plant, laboratory, and technical school." R. P. Anderson

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:325 Mr '25 750w

BURROUGHS, JOHN, and PECK, LUDELLA L. John Burroughs and Ludella Peck. 81p $2 Vinal

B or 32

25-15899

Ludella Peck was a professor in Smith college. The letters which she and John Burroughs wrote to each other at rather long intervals over a period of twenty years commemorate the warm and sympathetic friendship of two nature lovers. Many of them are birthday letters, for Burrough's birthday never failed to bring a message from his friend.

"Delightful—often moving—as Professor Peck's letters are in themselves, they add a new, or at least a seldom emphasized detail to the portrait of the man."

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 26 '25 500w

N Y Times p6 O 11 '25 350w

BURT, CYRIL LODOWIC. Young delinquent. 2 (Sub-normal school-child) 619p il $5 Appleton [17s 6d Univ. of London press]

136.76 Juvenile delinquency. Psychology, Pathological 25-24857

The psychology of juvenile crime is the problem of this book. The conditions—hereditary, environmental, physical, mental and temperamental—which cause juvenile delinquency are classified and carefully studied, with illustrations from two hundred actual cases. A brief summary of the treatment recommended for each type is given.

"We are indebted to Dr. Burt for the first really scientific handling of the question of the young delinquent in this country." S. M. F.

+ Nation and Ath 38:48 O 10 '25 1750w

"The real value of the book lies first in its masterly treatment of individual cases, and its relation of the delinquency to the delinquent's physique, environment and mentality; and secondly to its valuable conclusions, with regard to the origin, cure and prevention of juvenile naughtiness."

+ New Statesman 25:supxvi O 10 '25 420w

Spec 135:466 S 19 '25 550w

"His discussions of temperamental conditions, of general instability, and of complexes, are admirable, though the reader may not always give them quite the same importance as the author does. Of their importance there is, of course, no doubt; and no one whose business or interest it is to understand the mind of the criminal can afford to miss Dr. Burt's book. His suggestions for treatment deserve careful consideration. Some are at present counsels of perfection; but it is certainly along some such lines that any advance in this difficult practical question must be made."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p539 Ag 20 '25 850w

BURT, EMILY ROSE. Make your bazar pay. 157p il $1.50 Harper

791 Fairs

25-9997

For the church, school, society, club or community in need of funds, this little book suggests the bazar. The author tells concisely and directly how to plan and manage it successfully

BURT, EMILY ROSE—Continued
from the forming of advance committees to the final settling of accounts.

Booklist 22:18 O '25

Boston Transcript p2 J1 3 '25 300w

"Miss Burt writes vigorously and directly, with no waste of words. Her book should be very helpful for organizations anywhere, in city, town or country, planning to raise money by the bazaar method."

+ N Y Times p28 My 24 '25 260w

"The diagrams for building various kinds of booths and the suggestions for entertainments are especially valuable."

+ N Y Tribune p7 Ag 2 '25 60w

Wis Lib Bul 21:167 Je '25

BURT, KATHARINE (NEWLIN) (MRS MAX-WELL STRUTHERS BURT). Quest. 376p $2
Houghton

25-21257

The theme of the book is man's conscious search after God. It is the story of three cousins—Nicholas, the central figure, Little John and Stephen, each in his own way seeking his own ideal. All his life Nicholas is one apart, a mystic, wrapped about and illumined by his dreams; the sum of Little John's life is in loving and being loved, yet it is not the love but the fear of God that binds him; Stephen is the agnostic, accepting nothing, searching always for the truth beyond. The lives of the three cousins—individually very different in spite of a common heritage—are closely knit together, the search of one involving the others.

"When there is humor in it we welcome it.
It is no fault of ours that we lack enthusiasm for 'The Quest,' although there is plenty of good and even brilliant writing in it. Religion to most of us is a far less hysterical thing than Mrs. Burt tries to demonstrate. It might tend to turn readers into agnostics, which is certainly not her desire." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 24 '25 950w

"Here is a rich story—rich in characters, in the texture of its backgrounds, filled with life.
It is not at all mawkish or sentimental; the religious element is far too honest for that and Mrs. Burt has an antiseptic sense of humor.
If the end is not wholly satisfying, neither is the end of any honest quest—the best we can hope for is a sort of compromise." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 N 7 '25 520w

"The book is well written and well constructed, but keyed to an emotional pitch that exhausts interest long before the Quest ends in the hero's discovery that God is Love." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 45:171 D 30 '25 100w

"Mrs. Burt, up to the present, has written adventure stories rather than philosophic fiction, but she brings to the fashioning of 'Quest' the assurance of a practiced hand. The result is a well-written and consistently interesting story."

+ N Y Times p8 N 1 '25 750w

"No one can fail to call it an excellent, workmanlike and vastly amusing volume. It contributes no new values to fiction; it even revives some—such as the multiple plot—which are slipping into disuse, but it does everything so deliciously that you would not have it changed."
Zona Gale

+ N Y Tribune p4 D 6 '25 1100w

"The book is bountifully human and never ceases to be a clear, full expression of that life-force, the fountainhead of which it seeks."
Eva Goldbeck

+ N Y World p7m N 15 '25 520w

Sat R of Lit 2:335 N 28 '25 600w

World Tomorrow 8:384 D '25 70w

BURT, MAXWELL STRUTHERS. When I grew up to middle age. 94p $2 Scribner 811

25-20738

In his rather long introduction to his poems
Struthers Burt writes: "The first test of all good poetry is that it be clear; the second, that it touch the intelligent heart (you notice I say intelligent, not necessarily educated); and the third, that, working within the medium of the art of poetry, but so dexterously that rules are his servant, not his master, the poet has achieved clearness and humanity in terms of beauty." In the poems that follow Mr Burt passes his own tests.

"Contains no heresies of form or emotion, nor does it reveal anything fresh in feeling or particular in expression. Struthers Burt responds to the usual thing in the usual way." L. Untermeyer

+ Bookm 62:496 D '25 180w

"Mr. Struthers Burt has given his readers some excellent, sensitive, but not distinguished, verse, which shows taste, feeling and that love of Nature which sometimes results in a lack of warm sympathy with human nature." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 400w

"Middle age is a dangerous time for poets—but Mr. Struthers Burt seems to have passed his Rubicon with forces intact. In fact, not only are his forces intact but quite in fine fettle."

+ N Y Times p6 O 11 '25 280w

"A volume of surprising power and beauty. It is a book one would like to keep both for what it presents and what it augurs." J. W. Gassner

+ N Y Tribune p12 O 11 '25 420w

"Undeniably there is poetry here. It has well-wrought passages of clear, calm felicity." W: R.
Benét

+ Outlook 141:674 D 30 '25 500w

"Mr Burt's diction is carefully chosen, clear and effective; his poems give the impression of simplicity and sincerity and they are never trite or forced. Few rise to greatness; but none fall below the high standard of thought and workmanship which Mr Burt has set for himself."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 700w

BURTON, NATHANIEL JUDSON. In pulpit and parish; ed. by Richard E. Burton. 376p
$1.75 Macmillan

251 Preaching

25-7595

These lectures on preaching were delivered at Yale university on the Lyman Beecher foundation, forty years ago. They proved so helpful to the young preachers of that generation that they have been found worthy of reprinting.

"These lectures are not out-of-date; they are classics, fresh and vigorous and robust in their treatment of abiding truths. Dr. Jefferson calls them 'juicy.' Certainly there is nothing dry-as-dust about them or their author. As counteracting certain flippancy, slang and catering to the crowd which characterizes some of the preaching of today these lectures are a wholesome tonic."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 2 '25 300w

"These lectures seem as fresh and as full of fire and wisdom for today as they did for a former generation. Seventy-six of the foremost preachers and teachers of all Protestant denominations, North and South, indorsed republication. This, in itself, is a tribute to their virility."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 My 26 '25 150w

BURTON, ROBERT. Burton the anatomist; being extracts from the Anatomy of melancholy chosen to interest the psychologist in every man; ed. by G. C. F. Mead and Rupert
C. Clift; with a preface by W. H. D. Rouse.
251p $2.50 Doran [5s Methuen]

828 Melancholy

[25-11960]

The editors have selected passages from Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy" which together amount to about one-sixth of the original. They have chosen passages of psychological and general interest and they have endeavored to preserve continuity, but they have omitted much of the classical quotation and reference.

"Their work is commendable and welcome. It brings to many who have neither the time nor the patience to examine the original an essay in record and speculation that bears the vigor of life. Our old Divine was a downright man, examining an old human weakness with all the verbose grace of thought and humor that colors antiquity for us." W. Y.

+ Lit R p9 Je 27 '25 150w

"The pious Burtonian will decry, exclaim against, vilipend, utterly abhor, reprove, dislike this compendium, mine author split up for his marrow, an abominable parricide, his reverend bones exposed, docked, sheared of his learning, pithy examples, far-fetched citations, odd fancies, saws, proverbs, memorabilia, sacred and profane learning. . . nobody who has the wit to enjoy Burton as he is will want this selection; and it seems a pity that a book which has delighted several generations of English scholars and inspired more than one great English writer should be mutilated, even with the piety of these editors and with the best of intentions. Much of interest is inevitably omitted." R: Aldington

— + Nation and Ath 36:860 Mr 21 '25 800w

"The debt of gratitude we owe to the two editors of this little book, and to Dr. Rouse, who has furnished it with an excellent introduction, we can best pay by simply saying that into two hundred and fifty pages they have contrived to distil a large measure of the charm of Burton." E. E. Kellett

+ New Statesman 25:16 Ap 13 '25 2300w

"The editors have made an amusing selection from the work, representative of its good points, and in a few cases, quite properly, of its longueurs. Dr. Rouse has contributed a preface which shows that he, too, is a student of Burton's style."

+ Sat R 139:334 Mr 28 '25 120w

"Its best gift is the simple, instinctive pleasure of contact with the spirit of a great humanist and lively servant of his own tongue. It is for preserving this pleasure above all that the editors are to be thanked." J: Freeman

+ Spec 135:451 S 19 '25 1300w

BURTT, EDWIN ARTHUR. Metaphysical foundations of modern physical science; a historical and critical essay. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 349p $5 Harcourt [14s K. Paul]

110 Physics. Science—Philosophy. Metaphysics [25-9771]

"The problems centring about the relation of man's mind to the universe are still very obscure. The new outlook made possible by recent developments in physics is so radically new that we run considerable danger of failing to grasp it through the persistence in us of old assumptions—assumptions so familiar as to be unconscious. To drag these assumptions into full consciousness, therefore, to make us aware of their origin, development, and precise status, would be to perform a considerable service. This is what Professor Burtt has quite admirably done in the present volume. He has given us a history of the origin and development of what was, until recently, the metaphysics generally associated with the scientific outlook."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The plan of the work does not involve a positive metaphysics, although a few pages are given to it. The book is an able presentation of a very much neglected subject." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 22 '25 750w

Reviewed by Bertrand Russell

Dial 79:255 S '25 1100w (Same as Nation and Ath)

"The critical portion of the book is admirable; the constructive part, by comparison, is somewhat disappointing." Bertrand Russell

+ — Nation and Ath 37:326 Je 13 '25 950w

"Most instructive historical and critical review." H. W. Carr

+ Nature 116:235 Ag 15 '25 850w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:32 Jl '25

"Professor Burtt has throughout maintained a clearness of presentation, an accuracy for historic detail, and an acuteness of criticism which are commendable. In spite of the mathematical and metaphysical nature of the subject matter, the book is completely intelligible both to the non-mathematically minded and to the philosophical layman." A. C. Benjamin

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 29 '25 750w

"Let no 'plain man' be scared away from this admirable volume by the word metaphysical in its title. For here is a most illuminating treatise, written in a simple and forthright style that implies the clear (if not startlingly original) thinking of the author. And—one of the rarest and most utterly-to-be-desired elements in a philosophical work—the text is shot through with a carefree humor which is excellent warrant that the author while obviously in earnest, yet does not take himself or his subject with too owlsh a seriousness."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:276 N 7 '25 380w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p376 Je 4 '25 1900w

BUSTAMANTE Y SIRVEN, ANTONIO SAN-
CHEZ DE. World court; tr. by Elizabeth F. Read. 379p $3 Macmillan

341.1 Hague. Permanent court of international justice 25-23705

"The first of its kind to appear, this volume strikes a note of unquestionable authority through the fact that the author is not only a highly respected specialist in international law but also one of the eleven judges sitting upon the tribunal itself. He unearths the nethermost roots of his subject in the beginnings of international law among the Greeks and Romans; with increasing detail he traces the growth of the idea for a tribunal of nations until it became a fact in the establishment of the World Court. Then, in his penultimate chapter, he follows the Court in its actual functioning, with a succinct analysis of each case and opinion, including that of August 25, 1925. This is the most valuable portion of the work. The concluding chapter sets forth the formal reaction in the United States to the question of American adhesion."—Lit R

"Dr. de Bustamante writes with the background of a thorough scholar and the latest knowledge of a practicing jurist. Despite the broadness of the field covered, the book avoids both cumbersomeness and prolixity through an admirable balance and a simple conciseness of treatment only too rare in works of such scholarlyness and authority." G. E. Porter

+ Lit R p4 D 19 '25 750w

Reviewed by J: Corbin

N Y Times p3 D 6 '25 1100w

"The man in the street will enjoy the succinct and readable chronicle of the court which Judge Bustamante has written."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Ja 7 '26 550w

BUTLER, ELLIS PARKER. Many happy returns of the day! 50p 75c Houghton

817

25-6087

"The singularly bright optimism of Mr. Butler is gathered in this small volume to cheer the lowly mortal through a sequence of birthdays. We must not look at them as milestones on the road to the grave, but as indices to an extended life. . . Every birthday means a better chance of reaching ninety; the author cannot say it too often."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 25 '25 160w

"Humorous and philosophical little book."

+ N Y Times p21 Mr 22 '25 320w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

BUTLER, JAMES RAMSAY MONTAGU. Henry Montagu Butler: master of Trinity college, Cambridge, 1886-1918; with some poems and three addresses. 305p il $4.50 (12s 6d) Longmans

B or 92 Butler, Henry Montagu 25-19414

The author, Dr Butler's son, begins this memoir where an earlier biography ("The Harrow Life of Henry Montagu Butler," by Edward Graham) left off, with Dr Butler's installation in 1886 as Master of Trinity college, Cambridge. He completes the picture of a gracious and beloved personality in the story of the last mellow years of his father's life.

Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '25 1500w

"In 'Henry Montagu Butler' the vision which I got was not sudden, but accumulative. At first sight the book is slightly dull, but really it is not so, certainly not to anyone who remembers the Master of Trinity. There was a fascinating mystery about his character. This memoir of him by his son does not clear it up, but it gives one a much clearer vision of his character as a whole. And it gives one the pleasant picture of a man who lived to be very old and seems to have been the happiest of men." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 38:117 O 17 '25 200w

"The book is a portrait of a very amiable, courteous gentleman whose mind had the gracefulness of the true scholar's, who had a very happy life because he overflowed with kindly feelings, and was almost exaggeratedly modest and considerate, very loyal in his office and very devoted to those dear to him. Considered as a portrait it is too shadowless—too much of an affectionate family eulogy from beginning to end."

— New Statesman 25:728 O 10 '25 300w

"Quite apart from its high merits as a biography this book may be read for its very entertaining pictures of university life and politics in Cambridge, England, from 1886 to 1918."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:344 N 28 '25 200w

Spec 135:936 N 21 '25 850w

"The book escapes the obvious danger of dullness as the record of a placid life by the contrast, that runs all through its pages, between the Master and the Fellows. On the one side is the humanist, embodying to perfection the old-fashioned ideal of large and leisurely scholarship. On the other side is the society over which he was sent back from Harrow to preside."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p665 O 15 '25 1200w

BUTLER, NICHOLAS MURRAY. Faith of a liberal; essays and addresses on political principles and public policies. 369p $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner

320.4 United States—Politics and government. Political science 24-30512

These addresses, which apply President Butler's conception of the liberal creed to current political and social questions, have been delivered mostly during the last three years. Contents: The faith of a liberal; Public opinion in the United States; The discontent with democracy; Law and lawlessness; To new made Americans; The development of the international mind; Socialism versus capitalism; A national budget and efficient administration; The relation of government to private business enterprise; Truth and illusion as to education; Prohibition is now a moral issue; Character building; Can men learn? Index.

Booklist 21:289 My '25

Bookm 61:360 My '25 200w

"So far as Dr. Butler's experience or ideological philosophy is concerned, scientific investigation of social and political phenomena simply does not exist. Consequently 'The Faith of a Liberal' makes no contribution to the inductive study of politics or society. It is simply part of the literature of propaganda. It continues without striking modification the well-known lines of Dr. Butler's political and social thought in some of his earlier books." W: S. Knickerbocker

— Nation 120:603 My 27 '25 1050w

"This is a courageous and clear-headed survey of American social and political conditions. Clear-headedness we expect from one of Dr. Butler's scholastic eminence, but courage is a rare quality in a university President." Silas Bent

+ N Y Times p5 D 28 '24 2450w

"Dr. Butler is the champion of the reserved rights and liberties of the individual citizen as defined in our Bill of Rights. Many will detest him as such, but none will deny his prowess. The book is a valuable contribution to current political discussion."

Outlook 139:275 F 18 '25 100w

"This is a very able and also very readable book." J. St L. Strachey

+ Spec 134:365 Mr 7 '25 1950w

"Though this book has been written by a University President, it brings with it no atmosphere of the academic cloister. Dr. Butler cannot be accused of absorption in scholastic interests or aloofness from the workaday world. One must confess, however, to some surprise at finding him describe it as 'The Faith of a Liberal.' It would not have seemed strange if he had called it 'The Faith of a Conservative,' or even 'The Faith of a Die-Hard.'"

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p80 F 5 '25 1050w

BUTTERBAUGH, WAYNE EDGAR. Principles of importing. 473p il $5 (21s) Appleton

382 Foreign trade 24-27823

"The book is arranged so as to carry the reader through each of the steps connected with the organization of an import business, as well as the operation of a going concern. After the firm has been organized, each of the transactions are followed, covering the purchase of goods overseas, the inspection, packing, marketing, and shipping to the United States, the procedure gone through in passing merchandise through the customs, and, finally, the distribution and consumption in the home market. Attention has been directed primarily to details uncommon to exportation or to domestic merchandising. The greater portion of the material was collected from the actual business field."—Preface

Am Econ R 15:109 Mr '25 60w

"The author has performed a service in putting into convenient form a mass of detailed information gained by his experience in import work, and the book should find a useful place as a reference source for matters of import technique." C. E. Griffin

+ Ann Am Acad 119:157 My '25 450w

"Probably the most valuable feature of the book are the appendices, of which there are thirteen in number and comprise a complete reference manual. The writer is deserving of the thanks of every student of foreign trade and it is certain that his work will enjoy a widespread success." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 24 '25 570w

"Its material, collected in large part from the actual business field, is presented in a very practical fashion."

+ Harvard Business R 3:252 Ja '25 130w

"The book should be valuable to all business concerns that make purchases overseas."

Management and Adm 9:184 F '25 120w

"A book that should be in the library of every business man who has any foreign trade connection."

+ N Y World p8e N 9 '24 40w

BUXTON, LEONARD HALFORD DUDLEY.
Eastern road. 268p il $5 Dutton [12s 6d K. Paul]

915.1 China—Description and travel, Japan
—Description and travel 24-28460

The author traveled around the world as Albert Kahn travelling fellow, but his book relates chiefly to Japan and China. There is a general description of Japan and a study of its subject peoples, the Ainu and Koreans. The larger part of the book is given to China—especially Peking and its neighborhood and inner Mongolia. The author's interest in ethnology is apparent thruout the book. The last chapter is a discussion of the Chinese in the Dutch Indies.

"Few books of travel attain to anything like the amount of information and interesting information which is to be found in this book. . . He is admirably fair."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 21 '25 350w

"Mr. Buxton writes simply and pleasantly. Not a great book, but a pleasant one."

+ Ind 114:135 Ja 31 '25 50w

"While some of the book is entertaining it loses much of its force from having as its background that portion of the world that has been so much better described by other writers." A. C. B.

+ — Lit R p11 F 21 '25 350w

Reviewed by Edmund Candler

Nation and Ath 36:118 O 18 '24 500w

"His book is that of a student of alert and inquiring mind bent on learning all he can of the manners and customs, the characteristics, the daily life of the people. His survey of peoples and conditions is so varied and impartial that his picture of them rouses the reader's wonder, so many-sided is it, so minute, so carefully and conscientiously drawn and so graphic."

+ N Y Times p21 D 21 '24 780w

"A most interesting as well as informative volume." W. E. Garrett-Fisher

+ Sat R 138:289 S 20 '24 400w

"His paragraphs dealing with the physical characteristics of the racial types under observation and their probable origin are of considerable interest. His descriptions of scenery are rather tedious and have been much better done by earlier travellers. The conclusions reached on economic and political questions, though sound, are quite obvious, and are opinions accepted generally by the intelligent reading public."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:534 F 14 '25 220w

"Mr. Buxton's careful and scholarly preparations for his journey enable him to put customs and institutions before us in their historical perspective and at the same time he retains the fresh and delighted eye of the traveller who is seeing strange people and impressive scenery for the first time."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p603 O 2 '24 900w

BYNNER, WITTER (EMANUEL MORGAN, pseud.). Caravan. 77p $1.50 Knopf 811

25-20049

The first volume of original verse by Mr Bynner to be published in five years contains fifty poems—some about China, some about the Indians of the Southwest, and a few about the world after war. One is a "portrait" of D. H. Lawrence.

"His work is definite in its values, straightforward in speech, clean cut in technique, undeviatingly sincere in the expression of his convictions. What is it, then, that prevents Bynner from being ranked among the leaders? For one thing, Bynner's Muse is too loquacious a lady; she seems to lack any talent for suppression; every bright thing, every æsthetic departure, every good or bad cause, evokes not only her interest but a running and, too frequently, superficial commentary." L. Untermeyer

+ — Bookm 62:495 D '25 450w

Cleveland p121 D '25

"The poems are not so long as those in his first book, fewer than those in the last. But there is hardly a superfluous one, nor, for that matter, scarcely an imperfect line. He has attained an admirable compactness, a nice subtlety. Nor has the emotional and thought content, though it shows no deepening at all, worn any thinner in the process. . . Mr. Bynner possesses that talent, merely, that weeds and waters an already cultivated plot, rather than the genius by which new seeds are sown, new acres plowed." Marcia Nardi

+ — Lit R p4 Ja 2 '26 500w

"His disastrous facility is a commonplace. It betrays an intelligent person like Mr. Bynner into an unreadable dullness of repetition, and often into false intensities—Theology, for instance, in this volume—that are bathos. 'Caravan' will not obscure Mr. Bynner's reputation, but it offers little to sustain it." Allen Tate

+ — Nation 121:680 D 9 '25 70w

"Perhaps grace in saying minor things is about the most that is to be expected of poetry from now on. There is grace—extreme grace—in Bynner."

N Y Times p6 O 11 '25 450w

"The wisdom that Mr. Bynner has brought back in his caravan is weary; occasionally it flowers into beautiful song; more often in this new volume of verses it leaves the reader also weary." J. W. Gassner

+ — N Y Tribune p14 D 20 '25 550w

"This volume will not add anything considerable to the author's reputation. On the whole the new poems are slight and disappointing."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:500 Ja 16 '26 250w

BYRNE, DONN. O'Malley of Shanganagh. 207p $1.25 Century

25-6619

A tall, erect, impressive looking man of sixty or more might be seen any day on the streets of Dublin. He went by the name of Mr. Moore. and when anyone came up and asked him, as people often did, if he were De Bourke O'Malley, "Never heard of him!" he would say. But he was O'Malley of Shanganagh and his story, as related by Donn Byrne, tells why he concealed his identity and kept to places where he would not meet his old world, why he lived within himself and drank more than was good for him. It is the story of a love which began in beauty and ended in tragedy, a love for an ethereally beautiful woman who in seeking her own ascetic peace brought a blight upon his life.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

"Perhaps there is not so much beauty of phrase and of conception as in other stories of Mr. Byrne's, but he has given us two characters of power and clarity. He is always interesting, and, in this case, unusually tender."

J. F.

+ — Bookm 61:343 My '25 250w

"There is no writer on either side of the Atlantic who can write more beautifully of Irish life than can Donn Byrne. Indeed few writers have achieved the brilliant success which has been his within the last few years. And nowhere has Donn Byrne written more beautifully or with more tenderness and imagination than in this latest story of his, 'O'Malley of Shanganagh.'" D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 1050w

"Mr. Byrne had some provoking literary mannerisms, but captures the emotions through his magic."

+ — Cleveland p66 Je '25

"One fears at times from the throaty quality in his voice that he is going to burst out into a Chauncey Olcott Irish tenor solo. It is fair to say that he gets by without falling into the abyss, having a genuine talent for putting his pathos across; but that is a rather faint and negative achievement for an artist of such abilities as the author of 'Messer Marco Polo.'"

+ — Ind 114:535 My 9 '25 100w

BYRNE, DONN—Continued

Reviewed by Warner Olivier
+ Lit R p4 Mr 28 '25 400w

Reviewed by D. B. Woolsey
New Repub 42:349 My 20 '25 150w

"Here, in some two hundred sparsely printed pages, one finds a story that one is likely to remember long after most of the 400-page novels of the day have slipped into forgetfulness. Mr. Byrne has produced that rare and elusive thing—a work of genuine literature."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 22 '25 550w

"There are only a few extravagant descriptions, like water jetting from Joan's eyes as if from a fountain. The emotional coherence carries one along, the beauty, and the impressive characterization which is done with ease. Unlike 'Blind Raftery' this is a good story, with all the elements so well combined that it has no fragmentary aspect and leaves an impression so clear and vivid that it seems permanent." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 22 '25 800w

"If it has not the captivating exotic quality of 'Messer Marco Polo' nor the sheer beauty of 'Blind Raftery,' it has yet its own sufficient charm, and is worthy of a place beside them on the shelf."

+ Outlook 140:223 Je 10 '25 140w

"The story of 'O'Malley of Shanganagh' is trite, unnecessary and conventional."

— Sat R of Lit 1:796 My 30 '25 350w

Springf'd Republican p7a J1 12 '25 260w
Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

BYWATER, HECTOR C. Great Pacific war; a history of the American-Japanese campaign of 1931-33. 317p $2.50 Houghton [10s 6d Constable]

359 Imaginary wars and battles. United States—Navy. Japan—Navy 25-22047

"The author's previous book, 'Sea Power in the Pacific,' will be remembered as a thoughtful work which discussed with considerable frankness the strategic problems confronting the United States in the Pacific. The present volume is the story of an imaginary naval war, between that country and Japan in the years 1931-33, and besides accounts of the fighting it gives a forecast of the strategic moves and counter-moves of the belligerents. The book, as the author points out, has not been written to support the view that such a conflict is either likely or inevitable, but because it remains a contingency that cannot be dismissed as wholly impossible."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:143 Ja '26

"An amazingly graphic and exciting description of an imaginary war. To anyone interested in the Pacific and naval problems or in any one of the many efforts being made to prevent future wars, this book should have tremendous appeal."

+ Ind 115:451 O 17 '25 120w

"It is a vivid account which never loses the illusion of reality. It should rank as one of the strongest books of the year." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p3 Ja 2 '26 520w

Nation and Ath 37:653 Ag 29 '25 760w

"The Great Pacific War is a book for jingoes to ponder long and deeply." J. Bakeless
New Repub 44:234 O 21 '25 700w

"The book's merit rests exclusively on the thorough knowledge which he shows of the possible strategical developments in a great Pacific war. Many naval officers will dispute details. Political authorities will quarrel with his premise that the British Empire will remain neutral in such a conflict. But if there is going to be a war between Japan and the United States this volume may prove to have foretold accurately many of the most important incidents in it." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p1 S 13 '25 950w

Outlook 141:243 O 14 '25 180w

"Mr. Bywater has evidently taken an immense amount of trouble with his subject and he might have produced a valuable treatise on Pacific strategy. Unfortunately he has merely written a highly entertaining account of an imaginary conflict between two interesting opponents."

Sat R 140:136 Ag 1 '25 680w

"To the lay reader it should be a gripping piece of fiction; to military and naval readers, professional or by avocation, it should be of absorbing interest, since it has a personal application."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:385 D 5 '25 400w

"It is a difficult matter to produce a narrative of this sort which is convincing and free from artificiality; but Mr. Bywater has been at pains to write a book whose technical accuracy leaves little to be desired, and in which reality has not been sacrificed to dramatic effect."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p502 J1 30 '25 580w

C

CADY, FRANCIS ELMORE, and DATES, HENRY BALDWIN, eds. Illuminating engineering; prepared by a staff of specialists for students and engineers. 486p il $5 Wiley [25s Chapman & H.]

628.9 Lighting 25-3741

The book is the result of six years' experimenting by the staff of the Electrical engineering department at Case school of applied science in conjunction with the Research department of the National lampworks of the General electric company, Nela Park.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:416 J1 '25

CALDWELL, OTIS WILLIAM, and MEIER, WILLIAM HERMAN DIETRICH. Open doors to science. 333p il $1 Ginn

500 Science 25-10103

From the infinite field of science, the authors of this textbook have selected topics related to the pupils' own environment, in home, school and community. These topics include heat, light, water, food, clothing, hygiene, transportation and recreation.

"A textbook that endeavors to help pupils to understand their environment, to take a keen interest in it, and to use it intelligently."

+ Booklist 22:75 N '25

"A clear and comprehensive introduction to the study of science, which may be used with profit in either the upper elementary or the lower high school grades." K. M.

+ Cath World 121:860 S '25 40w

CALLENDER, GEOFFREY ARTHUR RO-MAINE. Naval side of British history. 305p $3.50 Little [8s 6d Christophers]

942 Great Britain—History, Naval

[24-25660]

"Professor Callender has the courage of the enthusiast. Into some three hundred pages he has undertaken to compress the whole story of British sea-power from the fifteenth century to the close of the late war. . . The book presents no mere string of unrelated episodes, but a serious attempt to trace the development of material and technique, the relations between commerce and sea-power, and the reactions of sea-power and policy. It devotes attention to the pay and status of the seaman, the growth of naval administration, and the improvement of signalling, as well as to the battles and cruises."—Nation and Ath

"This book is an excellent one for getting a background to history," but of course it does not tell the whole tale."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 Mr 4 '25 200w
Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 50w

"In many respects Professor Callender is excellently qualified for his task. He has knowledge, enthusiasm, and scholarship. His style may at times be too picturesque for some tastes; but it is often really vivid, and it makes his book very good reading. . . . As a general picture of the development of British sea-power, of how that power has been used, and what it has meant to Great Britain and the world at large, the book attains a high level of interest and value." C. E. Fayle

+ — Nation and Ath 36:530 Ja 10 '25 450w

"Mr. Callender is one of the small band of experts who write as if they enjoy it. He takes one through four hundred years of history at the sort of brisk alternation of canter and trot which is every bit as good for a middle-aged liver as for the hot blood of youth. He has such strong opinions and is so doughty a champion of his favourites, so outspoken in contempt of their detractors and so full of zest and enthusiasm, he gives such a wide berth to technicalities and so obviously knows what he is talking about, that the most inveterate landsman will be carried away in spite of himself, and those whose curiosity and interest in sea-power is strong and keen in inverse proportion to their knowledge will find it difficult to estimate their debt to him."

+ — New Statesman 24:114 N 1 '24 1150w

Reviewed by H. E. Armstrong

N Y Times p6 My 3 '25 1800w

"Professor Callender's volume adds another to the long list of tributes to the naval genius of England and Englishmen. It is attractively written and, intended for laymen, mercifully subordinates the technicalities of naval construction and strategy to the personal achievements of the honored roll of British seamen. One becomes uncomfortable, however, under the glare of the haloes with which the author consecrates the most disreputable of his heroes. It may be reasonably asked whether mere naval genius entitles one to apotheosis." A. L. Sachar

+ — N Y Tribune p9 O 11 '25 900w

"This is a well-written and very readable book. It is rather the picturesque element in our naval history than the strategical importance of sea-power which Mr. Callender has taken for his province. He has a keen eye for a stirring anecdote, and has dug up a lot of material which will be new to most readers."

+ — Sat R 138:611 D 13 '24 100w

"The most striking feature of Professor Callender's volume is the clarity with which the successive steps of the rise of British sea power are linked not only with the policies of Kings and nations, but with the character of administrators ashore and commanders afloat." G. B. Vroom

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:860 Je 27 '25 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p640 O 16 '24 2000w

CALVERTON, V. F. Newer spirit; introd. by Ernest Boyd. 284p $2.50 Boni & Liveright
814 Literary criticism 25-8016

Mr Calverton calls these essays in literary criticism a sociological criticism of literature. His first chapter is a summary of the evolution of literature and the influences which determine literary form. He shows how creative composition is an expression of the social system from which it springs and he traces its changes from the domination of aristocratic ideas to the rise of the middle class and, finally, the proletariat. He devotes a chapter to Sherwood Anderson and another to a critique of American criticism.

Reviewed by Kenneth Burke
Dial 79:165 Ag '25 950w

"Mr. Calverton claims in his subtitle to be offering 'A Sociological Criticism of Literature.' I prefer to say that he has offered a sociological interpretation of literary history. For in so far as he is scientific at all—and he is undoubtedly that in spirit—he manages to throw light only upon the evolution of literary subject matter and upon changes in the literary audience. He does not, I think, convince in the matter of values." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 120:662 Je 10 '25 560w

"A critic who builds his thesis exclusively on borrowed terms of nineteenth century Europe, like bourgeois, anti-bourgeois, proletarian without suspecting that they mean nothing in America until they have been defined; who dares to ignore the influences of Emerson and the Bible on Whitman in order to measure Whitman wholly by his sociological inch-rule; who places Donne with the Puritans because he had a conscience; who after pages of arrogant palaver to prove the non-existence of absolute aesthetic values sets down dogmatically seven points which 'a story must possess to be significant,' can scarcely be said to deserve answer at all." Waldo Frank

— New Repub 43:131 Je 24 '25 1150w

Reviewed by Lloyd Morris

N Y Times p16 My 10 '25 1000w

"Although there is a vast range of material available for the proof of such 'impermanency,' Mr. Calverton's array of evidence is rather impoverished. Mr. Calverton confines himself to reiterating a few scanty facts about civilization in Europe and the United States. As a result he weakened an argument which could be much stronger." Kenneth Burke

— N Y Tribune p4 My 10 '25 1300w

Outlook 140:225 Je 10 '25 50w

"The initial essay has some merit in tracing the emergence of the proletarian spirit in the drama and poetry of the world. But when Mr Calverton comes to consider modern American writers of the naturalistic school, such as Dreiser and Anderson, as embodiments of a democratizing tendency, he interprets evidence peculiarly."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 29 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

Reviewed by M. H. Hedges

World Tomorrow 8:218 Jl '25 350w

CAMERON, MRS CHARLOTTE (WALES-ALMY). Mexico in revolution. 278p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel. Mexico—History [25-11116]

"An account of the author's experiences in Mexico during the recent revolution, a narrative in diary form interwoven with familiar tales culled from Bernal de Diaz and Prescott. When Mrs. Cameron left England it was her intention to travel all over the country, but the uprising of De la Huerta made this plan impossible and she was obliged to confine her attention mainly to the capital and its purlieus. The most entertaining paragraphs are those in which she vivaciously describes the effect of the revolution on the people of Mexico City, a situation as might be supposed not without its opéra bouffe features."—Lit R

"She tells us in graphic phrasing the early history of this strange land, in which Cortes played so wonderful a part, and presents many illustrations of more than ordinary importance. The book is written largely in the form of a journal for English friends."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Ap 4 '25 430w

Ind 114:563 My 16 '25 80w

Reviewed by Sherrill Schell

Lit R p13 My 9 '25 230w

"Her narrative is disjointed, and for that reason conveys the impression suggested by her title; it reads as if it had been written up at the end of each day's experiences. Her comments on sights and events are conventional both in thought and in expression, but she may be accepted as a conscientious guide."

CAMERON, CHARLOTTE—Continued
 — + The Times [London] Lit Sup p99 F 12
 '25 600w

CAMP, WADSWORTH. Barbarian. 362p $2
 Doubleday

25-7075

"In this world a man can't get more than he aims for." This creed marks Jefferson Harmon in his college days. Later it brings him the things he wants—but not easily. As an ambitious young lawyer in the small town of Martinsburg, Harmon distinguishes himself by winning the Annie Almond case for the people—and bringing to dust the Millsdales, rich patricians of Martinsburg. Gradually he works his way to Congress and at this point his politics become hopelessly entangled with his love affairs—for he secretly marries the daughter of a Millsdale. The marriage is discovered and Harmon is given his choice—a senatorship and release from his marriage, or utter defeat. He chooses as only a man of his calibre would choose.

"The Barbarian' is powerful in that it presents a graphic and at times compelling study of an exceedingly ambitious character, and popular in that the author has combined with this character analysis a very pretty romance which the average reader will find attractive."
 + N Y Times p19 Je 7 '25 280w

"Mr. Camp gains notably in stature as a novelist with this which is much better work than anything he has done before: surer in the handling of its construction and more understanding in its character drawing."
 + Sat R of Lit 1:674 Ap 11 '25 300w

CAMPBELL, CLARENCE GORDON. Common wealth; a study in social philosophy. 472p $3
 Century

330 Economics. Wealth 25-17124

A philosophic study of the principles underlying wealth and the economic relation. "In the first book we shall endeavor to outline the compelling conditions in the Nature of Things to which men must conform in order to create and attain wealth; and we shall term this the Natural Economy. In the second book we shall examine the additions which Man has made to this Natural Economy, the aggregate of which we shall term the Artificial Economy. In the third book, which we have termed the Broad Aspects of the Dual Economy, we shall attempt to deduce the true utility of wealth and the means by which this can best be attained." (Preface)

"A notable effort is made in this book to establish the thesis that the maximum amount of benefit to individual and society will result if wealth is brought under the control of the intelligent minority. The author envisages socioeconomic problems from new points of view and with an outlook on them and their terminology which is often decidedly original." E. N.
 + Boston Transcript p6 O 31 '25 950w

"At considerable length, Mr. Campbell attempts to think through from the beginning some of the principles of capitalistic economics. New terms are suggested which are not self-evident improvements on the old definitions, and occasionally the reasoning wanders into by-paths of fallacy which challenge a reader's critical judgment even when they do not impair the progress of the argument." Lyman Bryson
 New Repub 45:62 D 2 '25 420w

"Mr. Campbell is at least a past master in polysyllables. And the only question is whether such 'a study in social philosophy' does not tend somewhat to inflate the paper currency of language beyond the gold standard of meaning." P. W. Wilson

— N Y Times p10 S 20 '25 1250w
 R of Rs 72:445 O '25 170w

"The first and second parts rather unnecessarily set out at length the laws of natural economy, then the laws of artificial economy, so that two-thirds of the book is devoted to presenting familiar principles in unfamiliar and at times ponderous language. No citations or references to authority are made in this formidable volume. In the third part, our author brings us to Dual Economy. It solves the problem by distinguishing carefully between the ownership and the control of wealth. It is this that gives importance to the book. His thesis is simply that while ownership is immaterial, control of both industry and government must be in the hands of an intellectual aristocracy of merit. It is an unusual book in many ways and is significant for its attention to pure theory, now almost a neglected branch of knowledge." H. McD. C.

— + Survev 55:264 N 15 '25 200w

CAMPBELL, CHARLES MACFIE. Present-day conception of mental disorders. (Harvard health talks) 53p $1 Harvard univ. press

132 Psychology, Pathological. Mental hygiene 24-23040

"Urges the adoption of the same attitude toward mental as toward physical ills, showing how so-called mental disorders are only exaggerated cases of the many common irritabilities, eccentricities and enthusiasms with which we all are familiar."—Booklist

Booklist 22:6 O '25

Reviewed by Woodbridge Riley
 New Repub 44:sup10 S 30 '25 520w

CAMPBELL, MRS HARRIETTE (RUSSELL).
Little Great Lady. 264p il $1.75 Harper

25-19729

Renée was a little French girl eight and three-quarters years old. She lived in a great château. Because of her fine clothes, her white ponies with their silver trappings and her dignified way with the servants, who adored her, she was known as the little Great Lady. Renée had no brothers or sisters, but she had a handsome young captain father, who spoiled her, and a pretty Scotch governess, who tried to unspoil her and make her sturdy and self-reliant. The war came and ended the happy life at the château. Renée was sent to England where many strange things happened to her. Best of all she was able to help her country and when her father came for her, he was proud of the story his little daughter told.

"A pleasant, fluently told story. The book is full of interest, has a sufficient plot, and scenes that will be remembered because of the liveliness with which they are presented."
 + Sat R of Lit 2:283 N 7 '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 180w

CANDLER, EDMUND. Youth and the East; an unconventional autobiography. 331p $6 Dutton [15s Blackwood]

B or 92 East [25-5205]

The author of this "unconventional autobiography" is a young Cambridge graduate who on leaving the university went to the East. For three years he was master in a boy's school in Darjeeling, but this was only the threshold of his wanderings. He travelled among the Himalayas, hunted in the hinterland of Burma, explored Baghdad, became a war correspondent in Tibet. His book is the record of a rich experience, of the explorations of a sensitive mind, responsive to the beauty and mystery of the East.

"Certainly unconventional in form and material, this book is the work of an original personality."
 + Ind 116:50 Ja 9 '26 80w

"Youth and the East" is the sort of book one reads with keen pleasure and puts aside with the comfortable feeling that it may be picked up again and again with the sure reward of contact with an admirable personality amid exotic and alluring surroundings." Carey Jeffreys

+ Lit R p2 N 7 '25 350w

Reviewed by E. Vincent
New Repub 45:65 D 2 '25 700w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson
N Y Times p3 N 15 '25 460w

"The author brings to the writing of these chapters a highly developed individuality and the turn of mind of a philosopher, yet the whole is little more than a series of deeply etched travel pictures in which the subjective element predominates."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:299 N 14 '25 300w

"The reviewer, who may claim to have read the book with attention and delight, would be puzzled to say how Mr. Candler is occupied at present or to mention the name of a single one of his aunts; he keeps to himself those strictly personal matters on which most writers of autobiographies dwell at length. It is as if a chance-met neighbour at table had kept one entertained all the evening with the range and raciness of his talk on any subject that was tossed to him, and that one had had to ask afterwards what his name was and how he had come by all that miscellaneous information."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p695 N 6 '24 950w

CANNAN, JOANNA. Wild berry wine. 312p
$2 Stokes [7s 6d Unwin]

25-13306

"Wild berry wine" is a story of country life and love in England. Undoubtedly Rosalind, the daughter of Colonel Delaune, should not have danced at the Oxford ball with Richard, the publican's son, but undoubtedly she did, not once, but many times. Once would have been enough to render inevitable all that followed. Her father's reaction was immediate and vigorous; she was never to see the fellow again. With an Oxford training and the backing of Lord Perrot, a lesser man than Richard might have aspired to the fair lady's hand, tho a lesser man would not have won it. Lord Perrot represents the new spirit of democracy in high places; Colonel Delaune is his opposite, the fierce old aristocratic standpatter. In them is exemplified the conflict between the old order and the new.

"'Wild Berry Wine' is a novel sound and interesting that makes no attempt at being bizarre. The quality of Miss Cannan's prose is excellent. The book is a trifle overcrowded with people of many humors. It allows itself to ramble occasionally into unnecessary and sometimes uninteresting detail. But the realism of it is undeniable, and its basis is sincerity. Its themes are psychological rather than plotted. Sound craftsmanship is evidenced throughout." L. W.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 Je 6 '25 560w

"The conflict between the young people and their elders, does not alter a jot its old-fashioned fairy-tale quality. If the reader attempts to accept it as anything else he is likely to put it aside as being entirely out of tune with the times and his own credulity. And this would be rather a shame." H. W.

Lit R p10 Ap 25 '25 360w

"'Wild Berry Wine' is refreshing in that it upholds the finer standards of life, condemns the feverishness of modern existence and pictures clean living and clean thinking as forming the only true bases of happiness."

+ N Y Times p14 Ap 5 '25 650w

"Just what Joanna Cannan means by starting out to write a nice, calm, countrified sort of novel and ending up with an overstuffed, apocalyptic and operatic attitude is probably her own secret. The middle stretches of the novel are loaded with amusing people, and there are many incidental triumphs, all canceled by the troublesome theme."

+ N.Y. Tribune p11 My 24 '25 180w

"This novel is an anachronism. It belongs to the age of 'John Halifax, Gentleman.' A well written anachronism, in this allegedly sophisticated day, would be not unwelcome, but 'Wild Berry Wine' is not well written."

— Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 130w

"'Wild Berry Wine' does not explore the mysteries or the tragedies of life or the inner depths of character, but it is a thoroughly pleasant and varied story."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Ap 16 '25 280w

CAPEK, KAREL. Krakatit; tr. by Lawrence Hyde. 408p $2.50 Macmillan

25-21916

Krakatit is an explosive. So terrific is its power that a small snuff-boxful is enough to destroy a town. Prokop, the inventor, is carried off and kept virtually a prisoner by a group of royalists who wish to wrest from him the secret of the explosive. One of the group is a princess for whom Prokop conceives a desperate passion. Loathing himself for his surrender, he agrees to sell the secret of Krakatit to her, but the princess, really loving him, sets him free. The staccato style of the book is well suited to its theme and effectively reproduces the violent force of the passions which disrupt the inventor's mind.

"In spite of the fact that the concoction is not perfectly organized it has a strange appeal, and if you like H. G. Wells at his worst, and want something quite different from the ordinary run of fiction, you might see what you can make of this adventure in science, politics, and an anything but quiet love romance." J. F.

+ — Bookm 62:603 Ja '26 220w

"The structure of the narrative is weak. Each episode is dropped as soon as Prokop leaves the scene, and loose ends are left which a more meticulous craftsman would have knitted together. The reader is liable to be somewhat befogged by Prokop's delirium through the first hundred pages, but once the action is definitely under way, there is sufficient material here to make up for technical lapses." W. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 D 5 '25 550w

"It is original throughout, nowhere more so than in its strange, poignant ending. Altogether, a book which reinforces and bears out the brilliant promise of one of the most vigorous writers in Europe today."

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 180w

"Capek, the dramatist, appears not only in his plausible situations, but even more strikingly in his sharply individualized characters. Yet more than anything else this book contains narrative of a high order. Lawrence Hyde's translation falls only the least bit short of excellence." H. H. Balos

+ Int Bk R p131 Ja '26 500w

"Since Eugene Zamiatin's 'We' we have read no book so ingeniously devised and so violently stirring as 'Kakatit'. Impetuous, tender, rough sometimes as a longshoreman, heart-full with vision—Prokop holds the pitch of genius, a credit to his creator." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p5 N 23 '25 350w

"The passages of straightforward narrative, containing nothing more remarkable than explosions, abductions, deaths—the ordinary business of the day—are well written. But for the rest it is clear that Mr. Capek has written a scientific romance without having any sound knowledge of science, or any but the crudest conception of romance." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 38:440 D 19 '25 450w

New Repub 45:144 D 23 '25 180w

"Krakatit is a book which could not have been written save by a man with a very rich and active mind; but if it were simpler, it would be bigger, and if it were bigger, it would be subtler." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 26:240 D 5 '25 300w

CAPEK, KAREL—Continued

"Unlike so many authors who use extravagances of plot and treatment to conceal poor craftsmanship, Capek shows us in one interlude after another that he is quite as much master of the traditional forms as he is heedless of the limitations that writers of past schools used to conceive they imposed. . . . The result is a hybrid and colorful affair that falls into no particular category and that it will save time to regard quite simply as one more experiment in a process that is transforming the novel, very much as the graphic arts have been transformed." H. L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p6 N 15 '25 800w

"There is a compelling realism in the description of Prokop's fever dreams. There is pure lyricism in the interlude concerning Prokop's short love affair with the sister of his treacherous acquaintance, the country virgin, Annie. There is common melodrama in the chapters on Prokop's adventures in the munitions works and his seduction by the princess. And there is symbolic fantasy in the tender passages with which his remarkable history concludes. If the book could undergo an operation and have [its] inflamed passages removed, it would be a pretty sound organism." Babette Deutsch

+ — N Y Tribune p5 D 13 '25 680w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y World p7m N 29 '25 600w

"The translation of 'Krakatit' is always excellent. The story is an elaborate joke, a fantasy, an allegory, a love-story with moments of great passion: but so Protean in its manifestations that, though one is ready with the salt, the tail is never there." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 140:629 N 28 '25 180w

"Karel Capek has many of the qualities of a best-seller, but he is far from really belonging in that category. His extravagance is a genuine attribute of modern life, which, particularly in its phantasmagoric quality, he depicts with inner truth. A more philosophic temper would doubtless lend a firmer structure and greater lucidity to his work. But it would make him less expressive of the time in which he lives." E. S. Bates

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:311 N 21 '25 650w

"Krakatit is a good story; the intrigues and the events are always unexpected; and by skillful touches characters of a convincing sort and economical description of places give just the necessary stimuli to imagination. All the villains are very human, and there is an innocent wisdom in the book which gives it real value. Not the least remarkable parts of the novel are Prokop's many strange, anxious dreams, vivid illuminations of the hero's state of mind."

+ Spec 135:890 N 14 '25 500w

"As a story of adventure 'Krakatit' excites intense interest. The reader is held in sharp and continuous suspense by the sheer ingenuity of the narrative. The intellectual extravagance of the theme is balanced by the variety and dramatic force of the actual events. Capek's dramatic instinct is unerring; he extracts from every situation an essence of terror, pity, or comedy which gives emotional significance to the smallest episode."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p754 N 12 '25 500w

CAPEK, KAREL. Letters from England; tr. by ² Paul Selver. 191p il $2 Doubleday [7s 6d G. Bles]

914.2 Eng'land—Description and travel. Eng'land—Social life and customs. [25-18238]

"The author of 'R. U. R.', during a recent visit to England wrote a series of impressions, which appeared originally in The Manchester Guardian. Under the title 'Letters from England,' they have now been published in this country, with illustrations by the author."—Lit R

"These letters are full of a delightful whimsicality which has been admirably preserved in translation."

+ Booklist 22:112 D '25

"He writes lightly, but sometimes he packs a deal of thought into his words. The book is admirably translated." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 28 '25 450w

"Ironically clever impressions of the British Isles."

+ Cleveland p114 D '25

"The letters are written in a most agreeable vein, even when he pokes fun at things peculiarly British. At all times, however, does he write charmingly, and never more so than when he is speaking of something, particularly British that arouses his admiration." H. H. Horwitz

+ Lit R p9 D 19 '25 100w

"The little book is quaintly amusing, ironical at times, but never ill-natured. Mr. Capek seems to have enjoyed his short sojourn among us, and his letters home make up an enjoyable souvenir."

+ Living Age 325:387 My 16 '25 200w

(Reprinted from Sunday Times)

"Dr. Karel Capek shows us all the familiar landmarks of the country—and his impish humor suddenly makes them live again. He has a great comic gift; and if the spirit that breathes in these letters would blow over the surface of his plays, it would sweep away the claptrap or the sentimentalism that now dogs them." L. M.

+ New Repub 45:196 Ja 6 '26 250w

"Mr. Capek is witty and ironical and sensorily alive to the tips of his eyelashes." Sylvia Thompson

N Y Tribune p15 N 15 '25 350w

"These observations are not profound, nor amazing, nor, let it be added, very important. The best things in the book, however, are the pages on the Scotch Highlands and his drawings."

+ — N Y World 7m N 8 '25 220w

"There is more of England, as the outlander sees England, in this unpretentious little book than in a dozen guidebooks, more cogent observations upon England than in any recent book except perhaps Santayana's 'Soliloquies in England.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:212 O 17 '25 350w

"His letters from England make excellent reading."

+ Spec 134:466 Mr 21 '25 160w

"While Capek's description of London is the work of a creative writer who happens also to be a good journalist, his description of Scottish landscapes is not journalism but prose-poetry. . . . It cannot be concealed that in comparison with Mr. Capek's delightful observations and vivid descriptions of scenery, the rest of the book is weak." Egon Wertheimer

+ — Spec 134:sup659 Ap 25 '25 1500w

"Slight as is the recorded substance of Mr. Capek's impressions of England, it is witty and whimsical enough to suggest a more varied experience and a more critical attitude than he actually offers. It is something of an achievement to have proved as instructive as he is by the most persuasively amusing methods. A more entertaining account of such trifles as our habits, institutions, affections and temperament it would be difficult to imagine."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p219 Mr 26 '25 900w

CAPEK, KAREL. Makropoulos secret, adapted by Randal C. Burrell; introd. by H. T. Parker. 165p $1.50 Luce, J.W.

891.86

25-4226

"Deserting the industrialism of the future of R. U. R. and human life satirized in the fable fashion of The Insect Comedy, Capek concerns himself with the question of longevity. He is on the ground of Shaw's Back to Methuselah, but both his answer and his form are radically different. His central figure is Emilia Marty, an opera singer, who has lived by the secret for some three hundred years. Although she has kept her youth by taking the Makropoulos draught at regular intervals, she has not found life worth perpetuating because she has come to know it too well. Her true identity and the secret itself are only discovered at the middle of the last act. And the curtain falls after a fifteen minute discussion which is even more exciting than the plot, with the secret destroyed, and Emilia Marty raising 'her arms in a welcoming gesture as though to embrace death.'"—Theatre Arts Mo

"The play is cleverly constructed, with a virtuosa rôle for an imaginative actress, and with something to say. It says it too, in three acts, instead of the three days which Shaw requires. Only Shaw said something quite the opposite of Capek's sad belief that men would learn nothing in 300 years. Shaw preached the gospel of creative evolution and was not to be bothered by amorous intrigue. He passed out of and above it into a world of pure intellect, and his play does give a sense of creative power which puts Capek's drama rather in the shade." W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p16 Je 14 '25 400w

Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 300w

"The Makropoulos Secret" is an exciting and well-written drama whose virtue lies in its action rather than its idea. It probably plays better than it reads." H. S.

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Jl 10 '25 600w

"Of the plays of Karel Capek to be translated into English none contains better writing than The Makropoulos Secret." J: M. Brown

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:348 My '25 250w

CARCO, FRANCIS. Hounded man (Eng title Noose of sin). 234p $2 Seltzer

25-1545

Translation of a French novel which was awarded the Prix du roman. It is a realistic study of fear. A man who has committed a murder and a woman who shares his secret are united by a bond of intense fear. The drama, which drives steadily and relentlessly to its tragic culmination, has for its setting the squalid section of Paris that borders the great markets.

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 14 '25 670w

"The book is a psychological tour de force, far more intellectual than spontaneous. It does not charm or move the reader, but it convinces him, and it leaves him with a new insight into the mysterious, uncontrollable forces that make human destinies and bind them together." Harvey Fergusonson

+ Int Bk R p487 Je '25 460w

"The little book is a panorama of poignant shadows, dramatic sidling shadows, abject, terrified shadows. But one never fails for a moment to feel the life that casts them. It is a unique and an absorbing book; not a gray book, but a book of—may I say it?—lurid dark-nesses." Walter Yust

Lit R p3 Ja 10 '25 350w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:243 Ap 22 '25 100w

"As a realistic, psychological study of fear expressed in terms of human drama it is a vivid, compelling, convincing story, but it is not the kind of story that is enjoyed by people who like pleasant novels with happy endings."

N Y Times p9 Ja 11 '25 360w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p10 Ja 18 '25 200w

Reviewed by P. F. Sifton

N Y World p8e Ja 25 '25 650w

"As a study in cowardly and irrepressible fear, upsetting the nervous system, destroying the reason, inflaming the imagination, the novel has the bareness and yet completeness of a scientific analysis. The book, which won the Prix du Roman, is a trip into the darkness of a disordered brain."

Sat R of Lit 1:514 F 7 '25 350w

CARDINAL, JANE, pseud. Swift adventure. 320p $2 Doran [7s 6d Allen & U.]

25-21268

"Stung by the complaints of a justifiably disgruntled employee, Hood Thoresby, a mighty merchant prince who has inherited his millions, quixotically offers to change places with his subordinate in order to experience the discomforts of his 'black-coat' staff. The offer is accepted and Hood becomes the toad beneath the harrow. His eyes are opened to many things, and he finds it necessary to burgle the safe of a dishonest manager who is swindling him on the one hand and oppressing the staff on the other. All manner of difficulties arise. The pretty villainess tries to blackmail Hood and kidnaps her rival, and adventures follow fast until a happy ending is reached."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"'Swift Adventure' crowds many scenes and much action within its covers. It is not an ambitious story, but it should make an hour or so pass as swiftly as the adventures it chronicles."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '25 300w

Lit R p8 Ja 9 '26 150w

"The lightest of light fiction."

— Sat R of Lit 2:384 D 5 '25 100w

"It is very good melodrama, though the author's views on the ethics of the employers' attitude towards strikes are distinctly crude."

+ — Spec 135:171 Jl 25 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 Jl 9 '25 150w

CARMAN, MRS DOROTHY (WALWORTH).

Faith of our fathers. 311p $2 Harper

25-5771

Does the minister who conscientiously tries to build a life and church on "the faith of our fathers" reap the just reward of his labors? This is the problem around which the author weaves the story of Hugh Wesley Bloom, a young minister whose ideals clash with the social and political forces which govern the churches of his ministry. Hugh, with his brave little wife, struggles thru years of alternate hope and disappointment, suffers thru the treachery of parishioners, and the authority of bishops and elders, only to be sent at last to the humble little parish which had been his father's before him.

Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '25 300w

"Faith of Our Fathers' is a book that needed to be written. It is courageous and truthful. It is an inside story, with a touch of malice, a gift of neat and moving phrase and a boiling of righteous wrath."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 15 '25 760w

"First authentic, unvarnished, yet unembittered, account of the actual affairs and interests of a minister and his family in the small towns and country communities. It has a ring of sincerity and the pulse of high indignation." J: W. Crawford

N Y World p4m My 10 '25 80w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

World Tomorrow 8:384 D '25 60w

CARPENTER, EDWARD, and BARNEFIELD, GEORGE. Psychology of the poet Shelley. 127p $2 Dutton [4s 6d Allen & U.]

B or 92 Shelley, Percy Bysshe 25-7026

A discussion of Shelley's psychology, especially of what was abnormal in it. The long introduction by Edward Carpenter emphasizes the points made by the author—that Shelley combined in himself both the masculine and the feminine temperament, that romantic attachments for men were as strong an influence in his life as his friendships for women and that the fusing of two natures in him developed unusual psychic powers and mystical experiences.

Booklist 22:158 Ja '26

CARPENTER, E.; and Barnefield, G:—Cont.

"The analysis here belongs to the type commonly classed in the fever charts as 'superficial.'"

Bookm 62:510 D '25 220w

"This book is sad and sorry reading except for those who like to put a brutal, scientific tag on a combination of elements which—as in this instance—may produce a glory and a dream. There is nothing base or low about such analysis but it is, one feels, unnecessary. Besides, it rubs the bloom off the peach and the dew off the rose to no very constructive purpose."

— Ind 115:364 S 26 '25 150w

"The danger of such studies in the hands of readers unfamiliar with modern psychology is that they may cause leaps to wholly unjustified conclusions." H. B.

— Lit R p9 S 26 '25 100w

"The book does for a moment appear suggestive. But, on reflection, we think that there are few poets whom he could not have examined with at least equally good results." Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 36:615 Ja 31 '25 720w

"Admirers of Mr. Carpenter's book, 'The Intermediate Sex' will meet no difficulty or obstruction here; others, to whom the view there exploited is unknown, are likely to receive this essay with diverse feelings, may be with praise and gratitude, may be with disappointment or bewilderment, even dismay."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p100 F 12 '25 1000w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. Along the Paraná and the Amazon; Paraguay, Uruguay, Brazil. (Carpenter's world travels) 314p il $4 Doubleday

918.9 Paraguay—Description and travel. Uruguay—Description and travel. Brazil—Description and travel 25-10888

This is the sixteenth volume in Carpenter's World Travels series. The author takes the reader across Paraguay and Uruguay to Brazil describing informally the scenes and peoples along the way. One especially interesting chapter tells of the snake farm at Butantan where serum is made from the blood of young horses inoculated with the venom of reptiles bred on the "farm."

Booklist 22:67 N '25

"The virtues of simplicity and readability which belong so noticeably to Mr. Carpenter are as evident in the volumes that have appeared since he passed on as in his earlier books."

+ Lit R p8 N 7 '25 180w

"Mr Carpenter's book has, at any rate, the merit of kindness. Unlike so many volumes in that no man's land of travel books which are neither reference works nor interpretative literature, it has no taint of the tawdry, and, if prosy, it does ring true. And that is much." Blair Niles

+ — N Y Tribune p3 S 6 '25 480w

"The book is fresh with immediate contacts rather than remembered experiences written later at leisure."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 300w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. China. (Carpenter's world travels) 310p il $4 Doubleday

915.1 China—Description and travel. China—Social life and customs 25-19730

In this the seventeenth volume in his series of world travels, Mr Carpenter enters China at Hongkong and journeys northward thru Shanghai to Peking, emerging at Port Arthur. He describes Chinese life and its conventions ancient and modern, and by writing on the spot as he goes from place to place he gives to his descriptions immediacy and movement.

Booklist 22:67 N '25

Cleveland p114 D '25

"At the moment China is more than ever in the news, and his book is rich in information to be gleaned without effort on the part of the reader. As usual, the photographs are equally as interesting and informative as the text." H. B.

+ Lit R p9 S 26 '25 100w

"Incontestably his is a prosaic style. Yet . . . the Carpenter travel series has its place." Blair Niles

— + N Y Tribune p15 O 18 '25 460w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 5 '25 150w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. From Bangkok to Bombay: Siam, French Indo-China, Burma, Hindustan. (Carpenter's world travels) 311p il $4 Doubleday

915.4 India—Description and travel. Burma—Description and travel. Siam—Description and travel 25-22

This volume in the Carpenter's world travels series is an account of a journey from Bangkok, the capital of Siam, thru Burma and British India to Bombay. There are 102 illustrations from photographs.

Booklist 21:272 Ap '25

Cleveland p56 Je '25

"If Carpenter falls short in any respect it is on the aesthetic side. He is a methodical observer; not an artist. His passages extolling the grandeur of the Himalayas and the perfection of the Taj Mahal weave no spell of enchantment. But one must not expect everything. If Carpenter has not painted India, he has photographed it astonishingly well." Lawton Mackall

— + N Y Tribune p10 F 15 '25 380w

"This is the newest volume in the late Mr. Carpenter's world travel series and in many respects the most interesting of all thus far issued. More than 100 photographs add to its charm."

+ N Y World p8e D 28 '24 220w

Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 150w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 70w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. Japan and Korea. (Carpenter's world travels) 310p il $4 Doubleday

915.2 Japan—Description and travel. Korea—Description and travel 25-26895

This book was written on the author's fourth visit to Japan. During one of his earlier visits Mr Carpenter lived in a Japanese house very much as the Japanese live. This volume records his observations on many phases of life in Japan—commercial, political, social and religious.

Booklist 22:67 N '25

"[The book is] made doubly interesting because that indefatigable traveler no doubt knew both countries many years before they had become familiar to the tourist hordes and is therefore able to draw comparisons between them in their earlier and untouched condition and in their present state." H. B.

+ Lit R p13 D 12 '25 100w

"It possesses the solid merits—chiefly of an informative nature—of the other seventeen [books in this series]. One feels a peculiar confidence in this account by one who has visited Japan repeatedly and whose ideas on the subject have been simmering since his first view of the country in 1888."

+ N Y Tribune p7 N 15 '25 180w

"Without prejudice to preceding volumes it may be said that this proves among the most interesting of the series. And there is a rather remarkable chapter at the end on the missionary conquest of Korea by western Christians, remarkable both for the story it tells and for the fact of its being told in a book of general tourist interest."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 O 5 '25 150w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. Through the Philippines and Hawaii. (Carpenter's world travels) 314p il $4 Doubleday

919.14 Philippine Islands—Description and travel. Hawaiian Islands—Description and travel 25-9410

In this volume, uniform with his other travel books, Mr Carpenter covers the Philippines, setting out to the north and to the south from Manila. He devotes several chapters to the capital, touches on the problems of American business in the Philippines and discusses briefly the question of independence.

Booklist 22:27 O '25

Cleveland p100 S '25

Reviewed by Lawton Mackall

N Y Tribune p10 Ag 16 '25 420w

"What makes Mr. Carpenter's Philippine observations especially trenchant and valuable is the fact that the author is able to draw first-hand comparisons between the Philippines as they were left to us by Spain and the Philippines of today."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:144 S 19 '25 200w

"Although the Philippines have been in the public eye for nearly 30 years, there is yet a vast amount of things the average citizen doesn't know concerning the 7000 islands. A popular remedy for such ignorance is to travel with Mr Carpenter through some 300 pages of travel talk illustrated by more than 700 original photographs."

+ Spring'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 350w

CARPENTER, FRANK GEORGE. Uganda to the Cape. (Carpenter's world travels) 263p il $4 Doubleday

916 Africa—Description and travel. South Africa—Description and travel 24-26946

From Lake Victoria in central Africa to the Cape of Good Hope Mr Carpenter travelled, thru Uganda and Tanganyika Territory to the coral island of Zanzibar, then down the coast of the Indian ocean to Mozambique and on thru Rhodesia and South Africa.

Booklist 21:106 D '24

Cleveland p56 Je '25

"In this African narrative there are no betrayals of age or waning powers. The man's gusto is amazing. His zeal for first-hand information leads him into native huts and temples and down to the depths of the gold mines." Lawton Mackall

+ N Y Tribune p10 F 15 '25 550w

"The wonder of it is that by setting down scenes and cities in such a workaday fashion he can make his readers see eye to eye with him. Africa springs out of his pages as something stirring and splendid; a huge canvas daubed with strong colors."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:586 F 28 '25 360w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 100w

CARPENTER, LEONARD. Mechanical mixing machinery. (Chemical engineering lib; 2d ser.) 138p il $2 Van Nostrand [6s Benn] 660 Mixers [25-10392]

"The first two chapters describe the principles of homogeneous and heterogeneous mixing, involving systems comprising solids, liquids or both. Next comes a description of the general types of mixing machines commonly used in the industries. Continuous and batch mixers for handling solids receive the most emphasis. Of especial interest is a chapter on 'colloid' mills such as the Plauson, Premier and Hurrell, with notes on specific applications to the rubber, lubricants, fuel and food products industries. The latter half of the book describes the application of mixing machinery to specific industries such as the manufacture of lime, cement, ceramics, fertilizer, rubber, soap, paint and varnish and fine organic chemicals."—Chem & Met Eng

"Young chemical engineers beginning their careers in practical plant operation will find much in this little book. Admittedly it is elementary and descriptive in character, and yet it fills a gap in present day chemical engineering literature."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:514 My '25 160w

"Treating his subject in a scholarly manner, with definitions at once simple and lucid, the author admits the obstacles to approaching mixing problems in any but the empirical manner, and proceeds to lay down three fundamental principles favoring a close approximation to perfect mixing." H. B. Vollrath

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:544 My '25 250w

"Although this book deals with dry mixing, it overlaps in parts the volume on the same subject by Mr. Seymour in the same series. It is not altogether clear why the publishers should have thought it necessary to have had two volumes dealing with the same subject in the same series, but the two books will no doubt appeal to different classes of readers. The treatment is practical, and the book is well illustrated."

+ Nature 116:355 S 5 '25 80w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:19 Ap '25

CARR-SAUNDERS, ALEXANDER MORRIS. Population. (World's manuals) 112p $1 Oxford [2s 6d Milford]

312 Population [25-26886]

"Mr. Carr-Saunders, in the light of his anthropological knowledge, puts the population question in a right historical perspective. He points out that, whereas most people now appear to accept rapidly increasing population as normal, and stationary or slowly rising population as abnormal, this is by no means borne out by our knowledge of history, in which rapid increase appears rather as an abnormal phenomenon of the last hundred and fifty years. In his view, the rapid increase of modern times is due chiefly to the breakdown or disuse—half conscious, half-unconscious—of checks which had been operating for many centuries before. He does not think the increase wholly harmful; but he believes that for the future conscious control is both necessary and inevitable."—New Statesman

"Most persons who read this little work of Carr-Saunders, even though they were acquainted with his more exhaustive and scholarly work on the same topic, would realize the human interest of this study, and the importance which statistics of population have come to have in human affairs in recent years." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 31:273 S '25 160w

Booklist 22:53 N '25

"Mr. Harold Wright's little book on Population, published two or three years ago, was excellent; and this little book, which tackles the subject in a different way, is a useful complement to it."

+ New Statesman 25:208 My 30 '25 250w

"Admirable little book, which covers an astonishing amount of ground and is full of concrete information, much of which will surprise those who have not followed the statistics uncommonly closely."

+ Sat R 139:682 Je 20 '25 200w

"Mr. Carr-Saunders has treated a rather difficult subject in a highly comprehensible manner, and has succeeded in giving the general reader a clear statement of a problem whose principles are little understood."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:246 O 24 '25 200w

"This is a most interesting addition to an excellent series."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p271 Ap 16 '25 180w

World Tomorrow 8:285 S '25 100w

CARSE, ADAM VON AHN. History of orchestration. 348p il $5 Dutton [12s 6d K. Paul] 785 Instrumentation and orchestration
25-18164

Beginning with a description of seventeenth century orchestral instruments Mr Carse follows in detail the progress of orchestration from its earliest efforts to the complexities of Strauss and Debussy. The book is a scholarly study of the various elements which go to make up the technique of writing and presenting music, with many illustrations from scores not easily accessible.

"A sturdy volume of comprehensive information, carefully and painstakingly collected."
+ N Y Times p26 S 6 '25 320w

"A very scholarly treatise, valuable both theoretically and practically, on an important subject not hitherto (so far as we are aware) discussed with adequate fullness, at any rate in the English language."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p431 Je 25 '25 400w

CARTER, THOMAS FRANCIS. Invention of printing in China and its spread westward. 282p il $7.50 Columbia univ. press

655.1 Printing—History. China—History
25-14301

The author, assistant professor of Chinese in Columbia university, writes in his introduction "The facts concerning China's part in the invention of printing have been almost unknown to European scholarship. . . The gathering together and correlating of this source material from different ages and different parts of the world has been largely a virgin field. It is this which has made the work at the same time difficult and inspiring." The volume is divided into four parts: The background of printing in China; Block printing in China; The course of block printing westward; Printing with movable type. The book is amply illustrated from photographs of museum pieces, and is furnished with copious notes and a bibliography.

"We concur in Professor Dewey's opinion that the book should prove of value not only to the specialist in the field of Chinese history but to all who are concerned with the cultural relations of the West and East." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 10 '25 350w

"A clear, comprehensive study. As a book of reference or textbook it is ideal, but it is more than that: it is a sympathetic and well-written exposition of the eminence of Eastern civilization as compared with the bickerings and futility of the Europe of those days."

+ Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 150w

"Aside from the outstanding importance of this handsome volume as the first comprehensive history of early Chinese printing, one is at once impressed with Dr. Carter's scholarly treatment of all disputed points. A less careful writer would surely have been led to leap the gaps between printing in China and in Europe, for, after all, they are not so wide. Dr. Carter is content to present the known evidence and leave speculation to the reader." Carey Jeffrys

+ Lit R p3 O 10 '25 230w

Reviewed by N. A Crawford
Nation 121:387 O 7 '25 680w

"For the general reader the book should prove a delight. The style is clear, enough of the salient facts of China's history are given to form an intelligible background for those who have little or no knowledge of China's history, there are excellent illustrations and charts, and the references to authorities that are so essential to the scholar but are often so annoying to the general reader are banished to the rear of the book." K. S. Latourette

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 15 '25 650w

Pratt p17 autumn '25

"Dr Carter modestly claims for this study of Chinese printing, no higher merit than that of a compendium of the researches of scholars and the discoveries of archæologists. In this case he does himself far from justice. While it is true that he has collected the facts of these researches and discoveries, it is also true that he has not left them as mere collections. He has so related them in his story that out of the relation is precipitated an original and enlightening contribution to the subject. He has gathered together with an accomplished academic sanity, but he has correlated his ingatherings with a far finer sanity—the sanity of the imagination." Temple Scott

+ Sat R of Lit 2:101 S 5 '25 1850w

"Owing to the excellent arrangement of notes, bibliography, index and tables, the book makes very easy reading, while in accuracy and cautiousness of statement it might well serve as a model to other American writers on Oriental subjects."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p556 Ag 27 '25 750w

CARTHILL, AL. Lost dominion. 351p $3.50 Putnam [15s Blackwood]

915.4 India—Politics and government

[24-19211]

"With fire and imagination, in a rhythmic prose that is a constant pleasure, with historical and biblical allusions to barb his shafts. Mr. 'Carthill' writes the epitaph of British India. The epitaph, because to him it is all over, the death agony passed, dissolution here. He avoids rash detail in prediction, but thinks that the British element in Indian administration must be withdrawn, British responsibility for order disavowed, and that India will probably break up into three or four Oriental States, European civilization vanishing as completely as did Roman culture in Britain. Such a destiny Mr. 'Carthill' thinks was inevitable sooner or later, but he argues that current political morality, timidity, the divorce of what may be called 'staff' administration from the life of the people and from the collector who knew that life, have brought it sooner than might be."—Spec

"There is no doubt as to Mr. Carthill's position. He does not attempt the dispassionate attitude of the historian. An imperialistic die-hard, his book is a frank attack on liberal sentimentalism. Writing with a first-hand knowledge, out of bitter experience and profound conviction, he makes his case for the imperial ideal. The opposition is analyzed and separately condemned. He has dipped his pen in caustic acid and his commentary is as merciless as it is brilliant. And brilliant it certainly is." D. R.

+ Ind 114:330 Mr 21 '25 1250w

"He has written that which will tickle the intellectual palates that are jaded with the venerable verbiages of Shaw and yearn for the sensation of a new flavor to their mental diet. As a lesson in exquisitely adjusted syntax, this book has, of course, a value beyond what it says." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p22 Ap 12 '25 1250w

"'Al. Carthill' is first-class political philosopher, nor a first-class wit or ironist, nor a first-class narrator, but he is almost each and all of those; wherefore he has produced a book which, though probably destined only to brief life, is for the present both amusing and illuminating. Part of the concluding chapter is, indeed, masterly."

+ Outlook 140:303 Je 24 '25 150w

"The ignorant or disingenuous optimism which finds the growth of Indian self-government in the decay of the British Raj can hardly survive perusal of [this book]. Not that the author of 'The Lost Dominion' shows any special originality in criticism, but that he is exceptionally patient in the relation of a vast number of more or less familiar facts, and for the most part allows the evidence to tell without rhetorical assistance."

+ — Sat R 137:639 Je 21 '24 450w

"The literary qualities of the book are undeniable; it is its political views that will stir controversy. . . This book does suggest a policy, but one impossible to-day and politically almost impossible at any time. That policy is 'constructive repression'. . . Is it unfair to say that to sketch a politically impossible policy twenty years after its time is to be chiefly negative?" E. M. Wrong

Spec 132:716 My 3 '24 650w

"This apocalyptic book, written with great vigour and pungency of style and a wealth of imagery, biblical, classical and Oriental, commands the interest of all who know or care about India. . . It is a powerful indictment and contains much that it brutally true, but also much that is paradox rather than truth."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p198 Ap 3 '24 1150w

CARTLEDGE, GROVES HOWARD. Inorganic² physical chemistry. 463p $4.80 Ginn
541 Chemistry, Physical and theoretical.
Chemistry, Inorganic 24-22935

"Text-book for undergraduate college students. The purpose is to present material which may find definite application in subsequent advanced work. Limited to material having a bearing on reactions and processes of inorganic chemistry."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:551 N '25

CARTWRIGHT, CHARLES E. Boys' book of ships. (Boys' book ser.) 327p il $2 Dutton
623.8 Ships 25-17164

This book about ships begins at the beginning of maritime history and does not stop even with the present, but in the last chapter takes its (presumably) boy readers for a look at the ships and sailors of the future. There are numerous drawings and diagrams, and one chapter that goes further than description, and tells how steamships are built.

Booklist 22:146 Ja '26

"Any boy from thirteen years of age and upward who is interested in boats or the sea would find this volume a priceless possession, for there are no gaps. Questions are answered at one's reading approach, and all details are concisely filled in. Every kind of ship is included, its workings explained as well as the essential qualifications needed in taking up the sea as a career." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p746 O '25 180w

"A highly technical book that would drive almost any adult out of his mind and would prove completely fascinating to the boy—or girl—who was in process of making himself an expert on an esoteric subject."

Nation 121:603 N 25 '25 40w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:33 Jl '25

"A practical and readable book for the boy who has in his blood a love for the sea and the ships that have sailed it. The author has been technical enough to satisfy the most mechanical-minded and yet his accounts of the construction, manipulation, and history of the various types of ship, particularly of the rise of the sailing ship which reached its zenith in the American clipper makes fascinating reading."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:280 N 7 '25 120w

CARVER, THOMAS NIXON. Economy of human energy. (Citizen's lib. of economics, politics, and sociology, new ser.) 287p $2.50 Macmillan

330.1 Economics 24-30608

The thesis of the book is that the principal resource of any country is its fund of human energy and the conservation of this energy the greatest of all economic problems. The prosperity of a nation is determined by its economy of human energy and by the use which its people make of their working power. Professor Carver considers the various means of economizing and utilizing energy, emphasizing the value of developing a people's moral qualities and the economic waste of immorality.

"Professor Carver's clear and emphatic style will give the book a wide appeal." G. A. Kleene
+ Am Econ R 15:480 S '25 750w

Reviewed by A. J. Todd

Am J Soc 31:119 Jl '25 300w

"Professor Carver finds it easier than many of us to arrive at general conclusions and he is not afraid to express himself unequivocally and even dogmatically. Hence the book bristles with thought-provoking assertions. . . Although the analysis is at times faulty and although the book has some serious omissions, it is stimulating and more than ordinarily worth reading." S. H. Slichter

+ Ann Am Acad 119:156 My '25 380w

Booklist 21:218 Mr '25

"Certainly the writer has been able to exalt the value of humanity and the worth of human life. He has proposed an economic method and estimate which is not materialistic, but full of idealism. He has included among the producers the man who helps to grow character as well as the man who grows beans with the assistance of nature. It is a fresh and stimulating study of human endeavor and human nature."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ja 17 '25 320w

Int J Ethics 35:447 Jl '25 100w

"The reviewer cannot but express the hope that Professor Carver will add to this indispensable volume another equally indispensable which will further elaborate the relation of economic consumption to human welfare." B. R. Andrews

+ J Home Econ 17:167 Mr '25 700w

"He has written this book to show the tests of righteousness and wickedness in economic life, to show, that is, how we may so arrange our economic institutions and guide our economic conduct as to grow into 'a Kingdom of God in which many can live and live abundantly.' It is a typical exhibit of the Carver mind, curiously compounded of solid sense and equally solid nonsense."

+ Nation 121:493 O 28 '25 250w

Springf'd Republican p14 Mr 20 '25 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p125 Mr 12 '25 60w

CARVER, THOMAS NIXON. Present economic revolution in the United States. 270p $2.50 Little 331 United States—Economic conditions.

Labor and capital 25-17373

Professor Carver maintains "that it is not only possible to have a wide diffusion of prosperity among all classes, but that we are actually beginning to realize that possibility here and now," that labor here is far in advance of the labor movement in other countries and that the economic revolution now under way here will one day wipe out the distinction between laborers and capitalists.

"A clear, original, optimistic analysis of the labor problem in the United States."

+ Booklist 22:101 D '25

"The book reveals, as might be expected from Dr. Carver, a mastery of the economic and social history of the United States as well as the principles of political economy. His keen analyses of present conditions are most satisfying, and his forecast of the future is not only hopeful, but inspiring." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 2 '25 1250w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Ind 115:422 O 10 '25 950w

"Professor Carver seems to have overlooked several flies in his ointment of national bliss. One is that the inhabitants of this prosperous continent are consuming natural resources at a simply terrific rate. Similarly, the Carver prognosis takes small heed of population as a factor in the wage equation. Despite these reservations of ours, 'The Present Economic Revolution in the United States' can be recommended as a heartening and worldly-wise contribution to current economic discussion. It will impress the man in the street more than it will the scholar; that is perhaps its great virtue and mission." Arthur Pound

CARVER, T. N.—Continued

+ — Ind 115:423 O 10 '25 950w

Reviewed by R. W. Thompson

Lit R p5 O 24 '25 150w

"This is a Utopian essay. It is far more fascinating than the visions of romantic commonwealths depicted by the more artistic imaginations of William Morris, Samuel Butler, Edward Bellamy and H. G. Wells. For it is not a Nowhere or an Erewhon: one is not looking backward, and men are not like gods. One is looking forward—perhaps not very far forward either." Harold Callender

+ N Y Times p5 S 13 '25 1500w

"Professor Carver has delivered vigorous blows. He will receive the same in return. But even his most hostile critic will have to admit that his book is a sturdy bit of advocacy and that he has made skillful use of a body of facts whose importance has commonly been but partly appreciated. America, after all, is not Europe." H. R. Mussey

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 25 '25 960w

Reviewed by J. D. Magee

No Am 222:370 D '25 820w

"The facts are simple and well-known and it is perhaps sufficient to say that scarcely any one else who has studied their significance attaches the importance to them that Professor Carver does."

— Sat R of Lit 2:383 D 5 '25 400w

Survey 55:264 N 15 '25 260w

CARY, HENRY FRANCIS. Early French poets. 219p $2 A. & C. Boni [5s A. M. Philpot]

841 French poetry

"Henry Francis Cary is remembered chiefly for his translation of Dante's 'Divine Comedy.' But there is still another work by Cary, this time as much comment as translation, which appeared in book form in 1846, two years after his death. This is the series of essays composing 'The Early French Poets.' Cary wrote these short pieces for periodicals between 1821 and 1825 and any one reading them must bear this in mind and also take into consideration the fact that much less was known about those early French versifiers from Thibout, King of Navarre (1201-1253), to Jean Bertaut (1552-1611) than is known today, when various scholars have explored those times and accumulated a deal of new knowledge."—N Y Times

"Cary worked partially in the dark and credit must be given him for what he did do. Much of his factual matter is still authentic, and, while his translations were distinctly far from successful in many cases, there can be no doubt that in other instances he gave a rather vivid idea of those ancient poets and their genius. . . . The style, it will be admitted, is agreeable, and if it is often archaic, that, too, is not without its agreeable side in an era when so many things are futuristic. The general reader, not too anxious for exactitude, should find a deal of pleasure in this little book and it will assuredly give him or her an introduction to some quaint old figures who live only through the pages of Cary's work today." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y Times p7 Ap 19 '25 1500w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 80w

CASANOVA DE SEINGALT, GIOVANNI JACOPO. Casanova in England; ed. by Horace Bleackley. 284p il $5 Knopf [15s Lane]

B or 92

[24-1963]

"Being an account of the visit to London in 1763-4 of Giacomo Casanova, Chevalier de Seingalt, his schemes, enterprises and amorous adventures, with a description of the nobility, gentry and fashionable courtesans whom he encountered as told by himself." (Subtitle) "Mr. Bleackley has in this volume followed the 'Mémoires' closely, but has turned the story of the English visit into his own words, giving them all the advantage so far as historic truth is concerned, of careful research and study in the light of other contemporary evidence. It has not been his intention merely to paraphrase the record of the English visit, but to document it, for sake of its greater historical value and for sake of the greater vividness of its characterization of this dean of romantics." (Lit R)

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 21 '25 320w

"The present volume has all the verve of entertaining fiction. It reveals, most effectively, much of English society, both rich and poor, in that far and now fascinating day, and many of the period's fashionable courtesans. Casanova's peccadilloes are enumerated with pleasing tolerance and unaffected directness." W. Y.

+ Lit R p9 Ja 24 '25 160w

"Mr. Bleackley's very creditable narrative is superior to his criticism."

+ Nation and Ath 34:614 Ja 26 '24 150w

N Y Times p10 F 8 '25 1150w

Reviewed by G. F. Whicher

N Y Tribune p3 Mr 29 '25 270w

CASE, CLARENCE MARSH. Outlines of introductory sociology. 980p il $5; school ed $3.75 Harcourt

308 Sociology

24-25809

"A collection of readings in social science from authoritative sources designed either as a text or a source book in an introductory college course in sociology. The selections are arranged under four headings—Social evolution, Social origins, Social progress and Social problems. Sources are quoted in footnotes and additional list of references is appended. General index and index of persons."—Booklist

"The volume suffers from the disadvantage which any book of readings must suffer, that of some degree of discreteness, despite careful editing. But Professor Case has done much to overcome this difficulty and has presented a decidedly usable textbook." L. L. Bernard

+ — Am J Soc 31:255 S '25 550w

Am Pol Sci R 19:220 F '25 50w

"A useful collection."

Booklist 21:289 My '25

"This ample volume will be found of high value both for school use and for general reading."

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 21 '25 300w

"The present book is fully up to the standard set by the best of its class. It is well-edited, and provided with chapter introductions which will help orientate the student with regard to the material." A. B. Wolfe

+ Int J Ethics 35:443 Jl '25 1000w

"In the hands of a skillful teacher, and used for its collateral reference material, it should prove very valuable. In the judgment of the present reviewer the standard sociological text-book of the future will have to be in the form of a compilation, and probably by several authorities working together." Jerome Davis

New Repub 43:106 Je 17 '25 520w

"Here is the most considerable effort yet attempted to include the whole range of introductory sociology within the limits of a single volume of selected 'readings.' A good many valid arguments can be marshalled against such books of readings; but all such arguments apply with less force against this book than most. The selections have been made with great care; they illustrate actual situations and tendencies; each is, essentially, a unit in itself and worth reading and study on its own account; and each is adequately supported by numerous bibliographical references." J. K. H.

Survey 53:609 F 15 '25 160w

"Useful in large libraries."

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

CASKODEN, EDWIN, pseud. See Major, C:

CATHER, WILLA SIBERT. Professor's house.
233p $2 Knopf

25-17276

"The novel presents Godfrey St. Peter—a man of mixed French and American ancestry—professor of European history in a state university near Lake Michigan; his wife Lillian; the two married daughters and their husbands; the seamstress, Augusta; the professor's favorite pupil, Tom Outland, explorer of cliff-dwellings and inventor, killed in the war, and a colleague or two. The professor has completed his life work, an eight-volume history of the Spanish Adventurers in North America. He has received a big money prize from Oxford. And the family is moving into the new house. . . . When money comes to the family from the professor's prize and from the marriage of a daughter to a Jewish engineer, who grows wealthy by exploiting a patent of Tom Outland's, all sorts of comforts and luxuries become available. The professor's wife and his children take with alacrity to the new standard of living. But the professor is a tree of which the trunk has been hollowed out by fire. He is nearly burned out. He haunts the old home. He clings whimsically to the fleshless companions of his scholarly solitude."
—N Y Tribune

"A thoughtful and penetrating study. Louie Marcellus is drawn with particular skill and with a grave, implicit humor." E. W. Hawkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 480w

Booklist 22:72 N '25

"It is easy to say that here again we have a translucent style, splendid character presentation, and deeply thoughtful criticism of life, embodied in the work of a novelist who has added several first rate books to American literature, but none more provocative and more genuinely interesting than this." Herschel Brickell

+ Bookm 62:339 N '25 280w

Boston Transcript p6 S 16 '25 1300w

"The study is richly wrought but impresses the reader as a fragment of some larger work."
Cleveland p107 N '25

"As a scholarly contribution to literature 'The Professor's House' is by far the best of Miss Cather's novels, nor do I recall any other recent novel of American life that equals it in interest, purpose and philosophy." J. L. Ford

+ Int Bk R p775 N '25 900w

"It is hardly too much to say that the secondary story—Tom Outland's—is a great deal better done than the primary story of the Professor. It is so much more simple and dramatic, so much more real. The reason of this is that while Tom Outland's story flows right along, Miss Cather leaves it to her readers to fit together the various clues in the Professor's. For while at first her main point in his degeneration is the cessation of interest in work, in life, at the conclusion of his history, the materialistic debasement is only inferred, and is, fundamentally, quite extraneous to his devotion."
A. H. Gibbs

Lit R p1 S 5 '25 1400w

"In 'The Professor's House' there is much that is very beautiful—passages which only Miss Cather could have written. Taken as a whole, however, the book is a disappointment to those who know how good her best work can be." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 121:336 S 23 '25 820w

"It is not inevitably excellent; but it approximates continuously to excellence, and the thought, method, and style are such as to keep us, while reading, safely above the cheap and the fashionable, and to make us admire or disagree on intelligent and reasonable grounds."

Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:440 D 19 '25 290w

"Here, as in all her work, is a fine ringing clarity, a serene breadth and sureness, a slow solid sanity. She is one of the sanest of our writers, in a good sense. She does not strain, or hurry, or attempt anything which cannot clearly be carried out, and one feels constantly the steadiness of her own eye as she looks across the broad land of her work. But does one want her to be always so sane, so conscious? What do these solid things, these believable people, these confident words need? Surely a dash of something, a suspicion of madness, the small seed of irresponsibility, a sense that she may allow her creatures to run away with her a little now and then." Moses Harper

+ New Repub 44:105 S 16 '25 650w

"The story is told with an odd episodic brusqueness. There is no formal shape to the whole; and yet it has the very accent of truth. It would be difficult to convey, without seeming to exaggerate, the ease and precision with which fine inexpressible shades of mood and emotion are rendered." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:306 D 19 '25 200w

"Miss Cather has not contemptible powers of characterization and gifts of projection based upon a real flair for personality and feeling for human values—as her earlier work has proved. These powers and gifts have not deserted her here, though she has let the gentle art of story telling so utterly escape her in snatching for something else out of her range and reach."

+ N Y Times p8 S 6 '25 1200w

"Decidedly inferior to the best of her previous work, and, although it contains much that is excellently accomplished, it is defective in structure, inadequate in design and uncertain in effect." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 130w

"'The Professor's House' is a disturbingly beautiful book, full of meanings, full of intentions—I am sure that I have not caught them all. . . . Professor St. Peter is rather a spirit than a man. He is a spirit saying goodbye to something much larger than the ugly old square domicile in which his life work was accomplished. He is a spirit reluctantly bidding farewell to a generation of American life, to a vanishing order of civilization." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 S 13 '25 4550w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"It is not necessary to be metaphysical in order to enjoy Miss Cather's novel, for it is an engrossing story in spite of its seeming lack of plot. The personalities are as firm and convincing as always in her transcripts of life, and if there is no such poignancy as in 'The Lost Lady,' there is more subtlety and sophistication. Miss Cather's new hero is not greater or better or more tragic, but there is more of him. His life has more possibilities of depth as well as intensity." H. S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 2:151 S 26 '25 1300w

"'The Professor's House' is inscribed to Jan 'because he likes narrative.' Either Miss Cather is ironical or Jan will be disappointed. 'The Professor's House' not only lacks narrative (apart from an irrelevant story inserted in the book), but it deals with individuals in a manner that makes even their group relations seem lacking in significance. In structure the book is highly deficient."

—Springf'd Republican p5a S 13 '25 460w

"These are all very vivid human beings, involved in all of humanity's minor doubts and difficulties, but there are no heroes or heroines, no particular beginnings and no conclusions." Walter Mills

Survey 55:310 D 1 '25 390w

"The book is as a whole unsatisfactory; there are far too many loose ends: but as the presentation of a quiet group of university people, with their secret ambitions and weaknesses laid bare, it is admirably alive. It has its value, of course, in illuminating the Professor's mind and explaining the apathetic condition into which he fell, with nearly fatal results; but it might have been managed more artfully. The book is so interesting and so fresh in its way that one resents a suggestion of haste in the workmanship."

CATHER, W. S.—Continued

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p770 N 19 '25 520w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

CAUFFMAN, STANLEY HART. At the sign of the Silver ship. 333p $2 Penn

25-9691

"Romance, intrigue and adventure center about 'The Silver Ship,' a famous inn near Philadelphia where Basil Tremaine is apprenticed to his great-uncle Dickon. Mysterious ladies, gallant gentlemen, British soldiers, spies, pirates and high-born rogues are the characters in this brisk tale of Colonial times Older boys will enjoy."—Cleveland

"This particular novel will be valuable, important, interesting to whatever degree various people cherish its title. That is to say, some readers are bound to lay it down with a cry of 'isn't that good,' while others will just as insistently decry the obviousness of it."

Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '25 230w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"The true color of romance flashes through the book—colors flying in the wind. All who like a good tale with an inevitably happy ending and two very happy marriages should read Mr. Cauffman, who writes in the trail of the very successful and very popular Mr. Sabatini." Madelin Leaf

+ Lit R p10 Ja 31 '25 200w

"There are plot and action a-plenty; but the story does not, regarded as a colonial romance, succeed in conveying the atmosphere and spirit of its period, nor are the relations of its characters to one another, nor their behavior in given situations, natural or convincing." Ethel Parton

— + Outlook 139:228 F 11 '25 160w

CAUTELA, GIUSEPPE. Moon harvest. 253p $2 Dial press

25-9511

"The central character is Romualdo Sinisi, who has struggled through many hardships and difficulties in his little home town in Italy and has become the school teacher, a student and lover of poetry, of eloquence, of beauty of every sort. He decides to come to the United States, and the first chapters picture vividly the scenes and the emotions through which the young man and his wife move through the weeks preceding their departure. When they reach New York the husband takes a job in a tin factory and works feverishly at the task of learning the English language, which presently he knows well enough to become a teacher of Italian for young Italians who know little of the language of their parents. And then it is not long until that ever-recurring problem in human life, the problem of the love triangle, develops with its three-sided demands."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '25 300w

"The author writes with an artless ardour which is a grace in itself; the thought flows quietly and the climax comes as though it were unavoidable rather than something sought after and contrived. The simple tragedy of two Italian immigrants, separated by the tide of American life which catches one up while it leaves the other behind, is set down imaginatively, and—what is even more important—understandingly."

+ Dial 79:431 N '25 100w

"The contrast between the old home and the new is described with a genuineness that shows that the writer himself was once a stranger in a strange land. This book will interest all who think about immigrants' problems; however, it is not Americanization propaganda masquerading as a novel, but a love story told with imagination and charm."

+ Ind 114:647 Je 6 '25 80w

"Mr. Cautela writes an English prose of much beauty and feeling, significant of the soul of his own country. His words flow melodiously, with great simplicity, although at times they form phrases slightly unnatural to an American ear. . . . We are inclined to believe that if Mr. Cautela were to employ his evident ability for expression and poetic feeling toward a theme more convincing, more true to life, the result would be entirely pleasing."

B. Bryan

+ — Lit R p9 My 2 '25 400w

"It is an excursion in sentiment, but not the canned sentiment of the popular magazine."

Nation 121:241 Ag 26 '25 70w

"Giuseppe Cautela's 'Moon Harvest' has the special interest of being the work of an Italian who came to the United States from the same district of Southern Italy from which he brings the young husband and wife of his story. He has been here long enough to have learned how to express himself in English of no little poetic beauty and also to have won sufficient economic success to command leisure for writing."

+ N Y Times p22 My 17 '25 500w

"It is simply a nice story, quite charmingly told; interesting, convincing and engaging for its sincerity and for the freshness with which its author has handled its hackneyed plot. But after having said this, and having added that one may well expect from Mr. Cautela equally nice and charming work in the future, anything else one might say about it would be verbiage."

+ — N Y Tribune p7 My 24 '25 130w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 20w

CECIL, RUSSELL LAFAYETTE. Colds; cause, treatment and prevention. 111p $1 Appleton

616.2 Cold (disease) 25-9882

A simple account of the different kinds of colds and their causes, the complications that arise from them and methods of treatment and prevention.

Booklist 22:57 N '25

"This little book is likely to have an almost universal appeal. Dr. Cecil writes modestly, without cocksureness of any sort and with up-to-date knowledge."

+ N Y Times p28 My 24 '25 460w

"Doctor Cecil, like a true modern, believes that in prevention lies the cure of colds, and he has given the important essentials of their causes, treatment and prevention, without being too exhaustive or exhausting." L: C. Johnson, M.D.

N Y Tribune p12 D 20 '25 550w

Outlook 140:371 J1 8 '25 40w

St Louis p404 N '25

Sat R of Lit 2:74 Ag 22 '25 150w

"Dependable information concerning the cause, treatment and prevention of this troublesome affliction is given in simple language so that even the most indifferent reader may be helped."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:195 J1 '25

CHADWICK, CHARLES. Cactus. 314p $2 Crowell

25-5851

The trail of the murder mystery leads from a side street in Greenwich Village to the Mexican deserts. Domingo Roderiguez is found murdered in the bedroom of Vincent Allender, a wealthy young philanthropist living in the Village. The disappearance of Allender at the time of the murder baffles the police, but an enterprising young attorney, Robert Ellis, discovers a clue—one the police had overlooked—which sends him to Mexico on the trail of Al-lender and perhaps, the criminal. In his party is Flores Wayne, fiancée of Allender, a beautiful girl of Mexican descent whose fortunes are dependent upon the return of Allender. The finding of hidden treasure, the exposure of the assassin and his tragic end bring the story to a dramatic close.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 250w
Cleveland p84 J1 '25

"It is a cleverly worked out story with a fair amount of mystery and much color and action."
Milton Propper

+ Lit R p9 Ap 11 '25 150w

"Intricate, involuted, developing at every turn new, freshly tangled and unexpected involvements and fairly bristling with sensational incidents, this story of a mysterious crime and how it was finally traced to its perpetrator can be warranted to keep awake until any hour of the night a reader who enjoys that kind of a novel."

+ N Y Times p25 Ap 5 '25 480w

N Y Tribune p9 Mr 22 '25 130w

"It is all quite impossible and quite entertaining."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 330w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

CHAFFEE, ALLEN. Tony and the big top.
235p il $1.75 Century

25-8783

"'Tony and the Big Top' is a circus story depicting life in the background as well as the foreground among circus people. Tony is a girl, and her fear of a trapeze because of the horrible accident she had seen when a child, and yet her bravery with Imp, the tiger, is naturally and normally presented."—Int Bk R

"The book is noteworthy among recent fiction of the circus."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 150w

"I cordially like this story." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p559 J1 '25 80w

"Tells many interesting things about the methods of wild animal training and the life of the circus people."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:232 O '25

CHALMERS, HELENA. Art of make-up, for the stage, the screen, and social use. 159p il $2 Appleton

646.7 Make-up, Theatrical 25-6343

This handbook by the instructor in make-up at the American academy of dramatic art and at Columbia university describes make-up for the stage, the screen, and the street, for the blonde and the brunette, and for the man as well as the woman in the representation of several of the more familiar stage types from the English butler to the Japanese lady, and the haughty society dame to the American Indian and the hobo.

Booklist 21:364 J1 '25

"Miss Chalmers treats her material in the simplest and most useful, if not always the most creative, way, and her book should be at the right hand of every little theatre worker, as well as the beginner in the professional theatre."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:637 S '25 250w

CHAMBERLAIN, ALLEN. Beacon Hill: its ancient pastures and early mansions. 310p il $4 Houghton

917.44 Beacon Hill, Boston. Boston—Description 25-18269

These studies of early real estate ownerships on Beacon Hill, Boston, deal in considerable detail with the social transitions of a century and more in this famous section of Boston. Street by street and block by block Mr Chamberlain follows his antiquarian quest, defining the house lots and tracing their successive owners. Frequently the prices paid for the properties are given. The book is fully illustrated with maps and photographs of houses.

"It is difficult to think of any phase of his subject that Mr. Chamberlain has omitted and his nice sense of balance in differentiating between fact and legend makes his work of great value." C: M. Stow

+ Boston Transcript p1 D 12 '25 1260w

Reviewed by G: W. Douglas

Lit R p4 O 24 '25 180w

"A book crammed full of facts is this handsome volume, but, notwithstanding all its statistics, its names and figures and measurements, its loot from old deeds and its pickings from ancient archives, it exhales not a little of that fragrance that breathes from the activities, the romances, the lives of dead centuries."

+ N Y Times p12 N 1 '25 350w

"The more a reader knows about the scenes and persons that pass in review the more—quite obviously—he will find in the book. But Americans of all sorts will respond to proddings of the imagination at many points." M. A. De W. Howe

N Y Tribune p10 D 13 '25 750w

"Mr. Chamberlain's pleasant and careful antiquarian quest will perhaps carry a larger appeal for Bostonians and for the antiquarian-minded elsewhere than for the historian or the general reader. But there are general aspects of Beacon Hill's history which are properly of concern to every one acquainted with Boston."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 900w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. Great Van Suttart mystery. 315p $2 Putnam

25-15634

What was the curious bond between Cornelia Van Suttart, child of New York's old family, and Miad Blake whose home was a musty shop on Cobbled court? What was the evil purpose so long guarded by Prosper Frete's green eyes? What became of the Van Suttarts? And where did their fortune go? In this unusual story of lower New York when Brooklyn Bridge was building, most of the facts are known to the reader from the start. To those most closely concerned the mystery is slowly unveiled after the passage of many years.

"It is not a detective story, nor a ghost story, but a very clever and entertaining tale."

+ Boston Transcript p1 S 26 '25 300w

"New York in the period immediately following the close of the Civil War is interestingly depicted, and the determined Miad Blake proves a likable and efficient hero." L: Moore

+ Int Bk R p61 D '25 360w

"A fine tale well told." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p7 S 12 '25 160w

"It is as exciting a story as the lover of mystery could wish, but its real charm lies in the fact that it is unlike any other story, that it is in a class by itself."

+ New Statesman 26:supxiv N 14 '25 300w

N Y Times p24 Ag 30 '25 520w

"The author goes skidding down the years to Miad's grandfatherhood, love story and all, in a genial, chatty, carefree style which owes little to conscious literary art but much to a native and rambunctious spirit of rough fun. Wilder in some spots than in others, this nonesuch is worth the attention of all lovers of the extraordinary. It is that."

N Y Tribune p10 S 13 '25 160w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 20 '25 160w

"The author writes in a curious language, but it has a certain vigour of its own."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p676 O 15 '25. 120w

CHANCELLOR, EDWIN BERESFORD. Pleasure haunts of London during four centuries. 466p il $6 Houghton [21s Constable]

914.21 London—Description. London—Amusements

"For no less than four centuries, Mr. Chancellor asks us to view with him the kaleidoscopic London vista and the people that throng it, placing especial stress upon the many divergent phases of their entertainments by day and by night, through all the twenty-four hours, in streets and parks, in palaces, in hovels, in theaters and gardens. He gives accounts of the days of bear-baiting and bull-baiting in the reign of the Tudors, of the beginnings of the theater back in the pre-Shakespearean time, of Ranelagh, Vauxhall and other famous gardens, of the notorious gambling-houses of the eighteenth century, of dance-halls, out-of-door sports, fairs, panoramas, coffee-houses and taverns, music halls, the prize ring, down to the night clubs of the present day."—Boston Transcript

CHANCELLOR, E. B.—Continued

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p4 D 19 '25 1500w

"It is so well written, and so skillfully enriched by quotation, that to read it straight ahead is a delight and an education; yet its mass of orderly arranged facts makes it an exhaustive and manageable reference book. Finally, Mr. Chancellor's classification and history of pleasure haunts through four centuries is a valuable contribution to the psychology of pleasure and pleasure-seekers."

+ Nation and Ath 38:266 N 14 '25 450w

"What Mr. Chancellor does not know about the Londoner's life in every age cannot amount to very much. He is the most learned historian of the city now writing, a worthy successor to Besant and Wheatley. He is not exactly a lively writer, but he is easily readable, and if he is inclined to overpack his pages, they are so full of interesting fact that one can hardly wish them sparser."

+ New Statesman 26:supx N 14 '25 750w

"It is impossible for Mr. Chancellor to avoid telling a deal of minor history as he travels through his mass of material concerning London's pleasure resorts, and the reader will be glad of this; for his book, because of it, is an actual contribution to the history of a city whose history can never be written wholly."

N Y Times p18 D 27 '25 1750w

CHANNING, EDWARD. History of the United States; v 6, The war for southern independence. 645p $4.75 Macmillan

973 United States—History. United States—History—Civil war

"This sixth volume of Channing's work brings his history down from 1800 A. D. to 1865. The present volume covers the slavery troubles and the war that ended with the surrender at Appomattox."—Lit R

"It may be said in general—and it is high praise indeed—that Professor Channing's sixth volume justifies the hopes of his readers, that every page is marked by the trace of an original mind, functioning rather obviously in New England but severely resolved to be fair, and that his story is told with a perfect clarity of statement leaving no one at any time in doubt as to exactly what he means." D. R. Fox

+ Am Hist R 31:151 O '25 1400w

"Able presents both sides of the controversy with the detached impartiality and painstaking research characteristic of the other volumes of this scholarly work."

+ Booklist 22:111 D '25

"The author displays in this volume the same high order of painstaking scholarship and literary excellence as characterizes the preceding five. The selection of topics for elucidation, the style, the spirit of detachment and impartiality in this Civil War period, where sentimental attachments and opposing points of view still run strong, are just as happy as in the other periods covered in the volumes heretofore published." B. B. Kendrick

+ Hist Outlook 16:283 O '25 620w

"The dramatic story of this crucial period is treated with a sureness and confidence which reflect both Mr. Channing's grasp of his subject and his sense of historical values." W. M.

+ Ind 116:79 J1 18 '25 560w

"On the financial, manufacturing, racial and economic sides it gives a splendid picture of the America that was. On the personal and military sides of the period, and these were markedly important, there is much left unsaid that needed to be said." C. M. Morrison

+ — Lit R p4 S 5 '25 500w

Reviewed by W. MacDonald

Nation 121:334 S 23 '25 1050w

"Professor Channing's style is well fitted to his story, though there are many strange sentences scattered through his pages. It is not probable that any right thinkers will approve this book, the Daughters of the Confederacy least of all. Doubtless that tribute will be paid to its excellence." C. A. Beard

New Repub 44:310 N 11 '25 750w

"Channing, unlike some other historians of national reputation, does not grow weary and make a poor job of his last volumes. But Channing is unlike other historians in other ways. He is highly original: he treats his sub-topics in his own way; he renders judgments and writes in a style quite unique. One is sometimes surprised at his boldness; at other times piqued that he says so little." W. E. Dodd

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ag 9 '25 1300w

"He has a fine faculty of summarizing, so as often to put into a single paragraph an array of facts which many writers would expand into a chapter, and to do so without seeming crowded or dry. The result is a narrative style which if not luminous is always lucid, and if not often picturesque or dramatic is at least interesting and convincing." W. F. Johnson

+ — No Am 222:181 S '25 300w

"To a Northern reader this book seems to be written without bitterness; to grant many of the Southern contentions; and to be the work of a genuine historian who seeks only the truth."

+ Outlook 141:641 D 23 '25 100w

"A work of scrupulously careful scholarship, mature judgment, and concise presentation, based on an astonishingly comprehensive range of research . . . There are times when the reader feels a bit impatient with Professor Channing's reluctance to commit himself to a judgment . . . There are a few faults of proof-reading. But these after all are only venial faults in a work of such sustained excellence as Professor Channing's." D. S. Muzzey

+ — Poi Sci Q 40:621 D '25 1350w

"A large honest work, full of the fruits of independent research. Many of Professor Channing's discussions as to causes and contributory influences, ethnic and economical, in the memorable war between our states are of new and high value." E. P. Oberholtzer

+ Sat R of Lit 2:61 Ag 22 '25 550w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

CHAPMAN, HARRY JAMES. Lords of Acadia. 356p $2 Small

25-8317

"The wild region between the Kennebec and the St. Croix rivers was called in the seventeenth century by the British, the province of Sagadahock, but by the French it was called Acadia. Here lies the scene of this tale of early American history in the time of the second French and Indian war. Buck Wade, captured by the Indians when a boy and learning all their lore and language and afterward escaping, is the chief scout for the British forces and hero extraordinary. Lieutenant Shirley of Boston, Harvard graduate, is no mean second figure. Marie, the French girl, and Doris, American, 'Pearl of Pemaquid,' are the leading ladies."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 260w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p587 Ag '25 120w

"'Dastardly conduct,' 'Die like a dog' and other petrified phrases do their share in making the novel a third-rate performance. However, no redskins bite the dust, and there are passages indicating that the author can write with feeling and freshness of the wilderness." J: McLaughlin

— + Lit R p9 J1 3 '25 260w

"Mr. Chapman's hero is a certain reminder of Cooper's Deerslayer. For one thing, he talks in the same ponderous manner. Nor do the faults of 'Lords of Acadia,' end with the conversation. Granted its fidelity to historical fact, not another thing remains to recommend the book. Its literary style is worse than amateurish."

— + N Y Times p9 Je 14 '25 220w

"The story is a compound of supernaturally noble and supernaturally villainous men and women, of ridiculously improbable situations that do not deserve the respectable characterization of 'romantic' and of the most pompously funny dialogue conceivable."

— Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 100w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 180w

CHAPMAN, JAMES CROSBY, and COUNTS, GEORGE SYLVESTER. Principles of education. (Riverside textbooks in education) 645p $2.75 Houghton

370.1 Education

24-22370

The authors present their discussion of the philosophy of education in its four chief aspects. I, What is the place of education in individual and social life? II, What are the psychological foundations of education? III, What are the sociological foundations of education? IV, What principles govern the conduct of the school? "In the form as presented it is believed that this book on the principles of Education offers a thoroughly modern philosophy of the educative process, and that this, coupled with its readable style and good teaching organization, serves to make it an important textbook for use in colleges and universities giving courses in the Principles of Education." (Introd.)

"The schools' preparation for the duties of a democratic society, are treated with a freshness and direct application which make the book particularly readable." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:151 O '25 480w

"This is one of the most enlightening, readable, and comprehensive analyses of the general principles of education that the reviewer has read. It leaves one with a renewed respect for the scientific worker in biology, psychology, sociology, and education. It forces one to recognize the great need for an increasingly large amount of scientific research. It should be brought to the attention of all who are vitally concerned with the modern school as a social institution in the Great Society." F. D. McCluskey

+ El School J 25:627 Ap '25 1000w

CHAPPELL, GEORGE SHEPARD (WALTER E. TRAPROCK, pseud.). Restaurants of New York. 169p $1.50 Greenberg

917.471 New York (city)—Hotels, taverns, etc. 25-22871

Mr Chappell begins with a retrospect of some eating-places that have passed away and then systematically tours the city from Frances Tavern northward, including the restaurants just beyond the city and within motoring distance. A chapter is included on foreign eating-places.

"We welcome Mr. Chappell's guide, which has gathered together and arranged so nicely such a variety of restaurants that no one, not even the epicure, may be disappointed or displeased." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 9 '26 460w

"Not only has Mr. Chappell produced an excellent and comprehensive guide for New York restaurants but he has also made of it a readable book, always interesting, sometimes thoughtful, often entertaining."

+ N Y Times p14 N 29 '25 460w

"His paragraphs are all spirited and genial; but there is truer fervor in the account of places where really good things to eat may be procured in a wholesome dearth of atmosphere and excitement. The chapters which promote digestion by describing food enticingly are the ones in which the author's joy is most fluently communicated to the reader. Yet, gourmet though Mr Chappell evidently is, he exhibits tolerant catholicity in making the rounds of places where food is purveyed."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 N 20 '25 400w

CHARNWOOD, GODFREY RATHBONE BEN-SON, 1st baron. According to Saint John. 323p $3.50 Little

226.5 Bible. New Testament—Gospels—St John 25-22275

A distinguished secular historian and biographer turns to New Testament criticism in a book thus described in the sub-title: "An essay in historical criticism, sifting the evidence regarding the disputed authorship of the Gospel according to Saint John, and showing the place of all the Gospels in the development of the Christian Church and its beliefs."

"Apart from his obvious talent as a biographer, Lord Charnwood has the advantage of approaching the subject with a reasonably fresh and unbiased mind. Few persons can be wholly untouched by the mass of conjectures on the theme, but his is distinctly the approach of the lay student. He lets in a refreshing breeze of commonsense where for too long it seems that scholars have accepted anything rather than the simple and natural conclusion." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 1350w

"The epilogue is perhaps, in some ways, the most charming part of the book."

+ Ind 115:656 D 5 '25 230w

"The scholar who is led to expect a fair and adequate statement of the disputed subject in its present development, may find it difficult to avoid a feeling of irritation, if not resentment. For there is serious lack of all these. For an informing survey of the field we are given somewhat supercilious criticism of a single selected opponent. But if impatience with surface faults does not overcome the scholar's judgment he will come to realize as he proceeds that Lord Charnwood's book has a deeper value." B. W. Bacon

— + N Y Tribune p10 D 20 '25 950w

"In the lowering tide of Fundamentalism this book will come to refresh those who think that religion can be sanely believed in."

+ N Y World p6m D 6 '25 220w

"One of the outstanding things about this book is the indication it gives that the evidences appealed as reasonable to the author himself. The epilog deserves to take its place among the great utterances on the subject. Here one sees the most baffling yet the most recurrent problem of thought attacked by a mind in which honesty and courage are supported by culture and breadth of interest." J. S. B.

+ Spring'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 1150w

CHASE, GEORGE HENRY, and POST, CHANDLER RATHFON. History of sculpture. (Harper's fine art ser.) 582p il $4.75 Harper

730 Sculpture

25-3621

A concise account of the development of the art of sculpture from its beginnings in ancient Egypt to the present day, with reference especially to recent discoveries and discussions. The book is fully illustrated and each chapter has its bibliography. There is an index of sculptors and one of monuments and places.

Booklist 21:294 My '25

Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '25 220w

CHASE, G. H. and POST, C. R.—Continued

"There is not a breath, not a hint of the animating creative spirit behind the chiselled marble—all facts—professional diligence to no purpose. The authors have no prejudices and no preferences; nor have they literary skill or capacity for emotional experience. The illustrations do somewhat relieve the monotony."

— + Dial 79:353 O '25 120w

"In the section [on Oriental art] alone does the book fall, even a little, below the highest standards of scholarship." Hamilton Bell

+ — Lit R p6 Mr 14 '25 900w

"The 'History of Sculpture' is a lucid and exceedingly well-planned survey, largely concerned with the art of the Occident, although Oriental sculpture in various countries is briefly treated. The book, is unquestionably authoritative and the best handbook of its kind to date."

+ Nation 121:240 Ag 26 '25 180w

"An interesting and valuable feature of the work is the way in which the art of a country or of a period is linked with the history and conditions of the time, these being shown briefly as a sort of source and directing power out of which it flowed. The reader will find valuable the concluding paragraphs of many of the chapters or sections which summarize the chief characteristics of the sculpture that has just been dealt with."

+ N Y Times p23 F 8 '25 470w

"A sense of orderliness, which is yet unmechanical and entirely alive, is what a good reader will chiefly carry away from this book. It is this quality which so bridges over the parts written by two authors that one passes without a jolt." F. J. Mather, jr.

+ N Y Tribune p8 Ap 26 '25 320w

St Louis p110 Ap '25

"The discriminating condensation of the material makes it an admirable text-book, interesting to read and clarifying to follow."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:747 My 9 '25 270w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p72 Ja 29 '25 80w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 Jl '25

CHASE, STUART. Tragedy of waste. 296p $2.50 Macmillan

338 United States—Economic conditions. Waste (economics) 25-21512

In his thought-provoking analysis of economic waste in American life the author specifies four main channels of leakage, the first three entailing loss of man-power thru the production of non-essentials, thru idleness and faulty methods of production and distribution, the fourth, thru colossal waste of natural resources. From the phenomenal industrial achievement during the war when, in spite of a materially decreased manpower, the rate of production shot up, he draws the logical conclusion that waste may be controlled, given the determined scientific effort to prevent it.

"The sober-minded reader will probably declare at first that the picture must be exaggerated; as he examines Mr. Chase's calculations and estimates, he is not unlikely to conclude that the case is even worse than it is stated or, to put it more hopefully, that the possibilities of increased production through waste elimination are even greater than this." H. R. Mussey

Nation 121:601 N 25 '25 1200w

Reviewed by G. Soule

New Repub 45:68 D 2 '25 40w

"Stuart Chase combines Sidney Webb's encyclopedic passion for the facts with H. L. Mencken's scornful fervor. The result is a book which neither Mencken nor Webb could have written—a book that is at once exciting and informing. Mr. Chase is a rare breed of personality: a certified public accountant, who is also something of a poet and very much of a Utopian reformer." Evans Clark

+ N Y Times p5 N 15 '25 2000w

"Most of it is uncertain, much of it is controversial, a good bit is spicily amusing, all of it is impressive." G. Soule

+ — N Y Tribune p1 N 1 '25 1450w

"Mr. Chase has conducted the discussion with masterly skill, with humor, and with elegance."

+ Outlook 142:33 Ja 6 '26 200w

"You will like Mr. Chase's graceful and compact style, his clarity, and the ease with which he wields a large number of prickly and angular facts. 'The Tragedy of Waste' is, in my opinion, one of the most important books that has appeared in America in this generation."

W. E. Woodward

+ Sat R of Lit 2:429 D 19 '25 1550w

"A vivid and absorbing story of our economic system. His severest critics cannot but be charmed by the vigor and the clarity of his conceptions." P. B.

+ Springfield Republican p6 Ja 4 '26 1050w

CHATFIELD-TAYLOR, HOBART CHATFIELD. Cities of many men; a wanderer's memories of London, Paris, New York, and Chicago during half a century. 313p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 London. Paris. New York (city). Chicago 25-20311

A Chicagoan by birth Mr Chatfield-Taylor has lived as much in Europe as in America. He records here his impressions of life and of men in London, Paris, New York and Chicago as he has visited and revisited these four cities during a period of nearly fifty years.

"The book is written easily and quietly. There is a wistfulness in the retrospective attitude of the author who does not altogether approve of modern life. A certain urbanity and graciousness has departed, he feels. Society is not quite what it was. One does not dispute his argument, content to waive the point and enjoy the many amusing and interesting anecdotes with which the book is filled."

+ Ind 115:534 N 7 '25 80w

R of Rs 72:556 N '25 80w

"A flickering of personal enthusiasm is reserved for the latter pages of the last essay. . . And his narrative gains significance that its earlier chapters notably lack."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:438 D 19 '25 250w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Battles by sea. 271p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Sidgwick & J.]

904 Naval battles

Three of the twelve sea battles of history which the author has selected to describe belong to the oar-propelled galley age, six to the sailing-ship age, and three to the steamship age. The battles are chosen not alone for their decisiveness but as showing the basic principles which have guided the sea fighting of all ages and the modifications which time has wrought in naval tactics. Contents: Battle of Salamis; Battle of Actium; Battle of Lepanto; The Armada operations; Battle of the saints; Battle of the glorious first of June; Battle of St Vincent; Battle of the Nile; Battle of Trafalgar; Battle of Lissa; Battle of Tsushima; Battle of the Falklands; Index.

Boston Transcript p5 D 26 '25 920w

Outlook 141:641 D 23 '25 20w

"We will not quarrel with the method and arrangement, but the book breaks no fresh ground and adduces no new theories of naval war. Indeed, it is a little difficult to grasp for what type of mind it is primarily intended, for, while too jejune for the student of naval history, it is not always sufficiently explanatory for the average reader. This is not to say, however, that Mr. Chatterton has altogether failed. On the contrary, his chapters provide brief though stirring accounts of the battles he selects, that of the Battle of the Nile being, in our opinion, the best."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p702 O 22 '25 280w

CHATTERTON, FREDERICK. English architecture at a glance. 52p il $1.75 Putnam
720.9 Architecture—England [25-16724]

The book is designed to attract the eye of the busy man or woman with little time for exhaustive reading. There is a picture of a building in each style of architecture described, a one page description of its salient characteristics, and a page illustrating its details. The three periods covered, from 1050 to 1800 are Gothic architecture; The change to renaissance architecture; Renaissance architecture.

"A useful little manual."

+ Booklist 22:60 N '25

"This modest book is of course intended 'for the man in the street.' It will certainly help him to understand architecture and animate his curiosity to pursue the study further."

+ New Statesman 21:576 Ag 25 '23 150w

"The idea is excellent, as the instruction is suggestive and the pictures show both details and typical buildings. But one has a feeling that photographs, or drawings of firmer draftsmanship, would have accomplished better the illustrative purpose."

+ — Spring'd Republican p10 Je 10 '25 80w

CHEESMAN, LUCY EVELYN. Everyday doings of insects. 245p il $2.50 McBride [7s 6d Harrap]

595.7 Insects [25-11140]

The curator of insects to the Zoological society of London writes this simple and readable account of the habits and behavior of insects. She explains how they grow, why they show such an immense variety of form and size and color, how they protect themselves, how they breathe, their stings and bites and their light and musical organs. There are chapters also on social insects, on their associations with flowers and on insects that produce commercial products.

Booklist 22:13 O '25

"The author never makes an assertion without proof, and I found myself marking many interesting bits, as I so often do with a good book on insects and their ways." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p623 Ag '25 80w

"The habits and structures of many insects are described in simple language that will appeal to the immature reader and arouse his further interest in the subject. The illustrations, largely photographs of living insects, form an important part of the work."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:53 Ag 15 '25 80w

"Delicate illustration allied with clear, simple description is the basis of Everyday Doings of Insects." Mary Webb

+ Spec 133:942 D 13 '24 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p763 N 20 '24 230w

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Letters to Olga Leonardovna Knipper; tr. from the Russian by Constance Garnett. 387p $6 Doran
B or 92

Chekhov first met Olga Knipper in 1898 during the rehearsal of his "Sea-Gull" by the Moscow art theater company. He married the actress in 1901, only three years before his death. During this period they were obliged to be separated much of the time, meeting only at intervals. His letters to her are an intimate, almost daily record of his life—cheerful and even gay, tho he was dying of a wasting disease.

"The letters are full of high spirits, gay, humorous, playful, bantering. Their substance is nothing but by the things which they do not say (seeing that it is a husband writing to his wife) fully as much as by what they do, they reveal a thoughtful, selfless, warm hearted, and lovable character." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Bookm 62:608 Ja '26 200w

"His playful epithets are amusing. So is much of his incessant banter amusing. But all this sustained to the very end and involved, these caresses, with the distressing medical details of the progress of his disease becomes a little ghastly." Stuart Sherman

+ — N Y Tribune p3 N 15 '25 1000w

CHEKHOV, ANTON PAVLOVICH. Life and letters; tr. and ed. by S. S. Kotliansky and Philip Tomlinson. 315p il $6 Doran [16s Cas-sell]

B or 92

From the six-volume Russian edition of Tchekhov's letters about three hundred have been selected for translation. They are accompanied by a biographical note and two chapters by his brother on Tchekhov's choice of subjects for his stories and plays and on his relation to the theater.

"Turn to his letters and you will find revealed a man of magnetic vitality, fascinating by virtue of his zest for life, his interest in things—things of all kinds—as well as in human beings." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Bookm 62:607 Ja '26 350w

"A most interesting book. This is about double the number which are included in Mrs. Garnett's volume. It is a pity, but probably unavoidable, that there should be a good deal of overlapping between the two, and it is overlapping of a rather annoying kind, for in some cases in a single letter there will be a portion which is translated by Mrs. Garnett but not by Messrs. Kotliansky and Tomlinson, a portion which is translated by Messrs. Kotliansky and Tomlinson but not by Mrs. Garnett, and a third portion which is translated in both volumes." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 36:717 F 21 '25 1200w

"Tchekhov wrote letters with the same fecundity as he wrote stories, and with the same immediate sense of reality. Six volumes of his correspondence have been published in Russia. The present volume contains some of the important letters included in Mrs Garnett's selection, and others chosen apparently to give a connected story of his life." R. M. Lovett

New Repub 44:286 N 4 '25 1200w

"I defy any intelligent reader to resist the fascination of his high spirits, his delicious humor, his artistic alertness, his critical penetration, his steady good sense and his sensitiveness to the ideas of his time." Stuart Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 N 15 '25 3100w

"Throughout these 300 pages the magic of the man is inescapable, and as there are at least 1,500 more letters available in Russian, it is likely that these fine translators have an abundance of further material. But in any future publications they would be wise to translate the story titles just as they appear in Mrs. Garnett's standard edition; the philological sacrifice is a small one for them to make and it would save the reader a deal of confusion."

+ Sat R 139:274 Mr 14 '25 860w

"Mr. Kotliansky and Mr. Philip Tomlinson have made an excellent selection from his most important letters."

+ Spec 134:241 F 14 '25 280w

"We really regret that from this selection all the letters written on the journey across Siberia have been omitted, and also those which Tchekhov wrote from his country place, which are amongst the most enchantingly gay and descriptive he ever penned. On the other hand, there is much that is new in the present volume." Iris Barry

+ — Spec 134:sup460 Mr 21 '25 1200w

"The present translators have done their work extremely well, and possibly with an eye to supplementing what has hitherto been available to the English reader. There is not a page of the book which does not reveal some aspect of Tchekhov's searching compassionate genius."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p169 Mr 12 '25 800w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Everlasting man. 344p $3 Dodd [12s 6d Hodder & S.]
270 Man. Religion. Christianity 25-23426

Mr Chesterton has divided his book into two parts: "the former being a sketch of the main adventure of the human race in so far as it remained heathen; and the second a summary of the real difference that was made by it becoming Christian." Here is one man's attempt to explain the inexplicable—the appearance of man and the appearance of Christ.

"It is a top-heavy book, in many ways over-written. Almost wearily tedious sometimes is his proof of arguments which most readers would be willing to accept upon his telling of them. Yet in the mood of clarity which the author creates for us, the sense of wonder and awe at the universe, at God and man, Mr. Chesterton performs a miracle which comes well in this sophisticated age of scorn." W: E. Harris

— + Boston Transcript p5 D 12 '25 1950w
"A Christian apologetic that is more thrilling than any novel." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 122:562 Ja '26 200w

"It is a powerful and a beautiful book. For both the poet and the soldier in Mr. Chesterton have helped to fashion it; and together they have given it all the colour and fury and romantic faith of a crusade." C. H. Warren

+ Nation and Ath 38:328 N 28 '25 1050w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 N 22 '25 2150w

"Mr. Chesterton's new book appears to possess in the highest degree his characteristic virtues and vices. To turn a few pages is to be rewarded by brilliant rediscoveries of the most obvious and the most neglected truths. It is also to be irritated by rather frequent mechanical capers."

+ — Sat R 140:445 O 17 '25 120w

"If 'Orthodoxy' was a firework display, this new book is merely a colourless slow motion film of a firework display. And that is the trouble. We have no right to grumble if Mr. Chesterton has merely emerged from a brilliant and rather noisy youth into a more sedate middle-age, if he has merely mellowed and grown quieter. But unfortunately Mr. Chesterton has not changed his manner. The firework display manner, as we may call it, is still there, only now the fireworks, or at least most of them, refuse to go off."

— + Sat R 140:480 O 24 '25 1250w

"We offer a cordial welcome to Mr. G. K. Chesterton's new book. The braveness fails in one respect—Mr. Chesterton's wit is prolific, and when he is dealing with profound subjects it often seems incongruous."

+ — Spec 135:602 O 10 '25 250w

"Mr. Chesterton's new book is probably the best he has written. It is so rich in good sense, in wit, and in plain, profound and cheerful truth that almost every page deserves a review to itself." Alan Porter

+ Spec 135:658 O 17 '25; 135:716 O 24 '25 2600w

"For Mr. Chesterton's perceptions we have admiration and gratitude. He has certainly helped to make vivid to us the facts that man's history on the earth is very wonderful and that some 'Professors' are very silly. This is an important service to render, for, at the present time particularly, these are important facts to remember. But his theories so much more than cover his facts that we are left with the suspicion that they would cover an entirely different collection of facts equally well."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p667 O 15 '25 1300w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Tales of the long bow. 278p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Cassell] 25-20706

A series of eight humorous stories concerning the impossible doings of Owen Hood, the lawyer who set the Thames on fire, Colonel Crane, the man who performed a gastronomic feat, Parson White who owned a most extraordinary steed, and others. Contents: The unrepresentable appearance of Colonel Crane; The improbable success of Mr Owen Hood; The unobtrusive traffic of Captain Pierce; The elusive companion of Parson White; The exclusive luxury of Enoch Oates; The unthinkable theory of Professor Green; The unprecedented architecture of Commander Blair; The ultimate ultimatum of the league of the long bow.

"A sequence of eight stories in Chesterton's most paradoxical vein—a mixture of witty absurdities and brilliant satire."

+ Booklist 22:116 D '25

Boston Transcript p7 N 18 '25 280w

"The author has contrived to give his readers a collection of characters, all remarkably life-like, some of them very lovable, a few of them almost boisterously hateful." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 122:562 Ja '26 230w

"Chesterton's inventiveness has not flagged, even if his imagination fails to carry him to the heights of another Man Who Was Thursday."

+ — Dial 80:67 Ja '26 100w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

— + Lit R p5 D 19 '25 800w

Living Age 326:431 Ag 22 '25 140w

"Mr. Chesterton may legitimately laugh as he contemplates these pages and must have laughed while he was writing them. The book, which no other man living or dead could have thought of, is descended on one side from The Club of Queer Trades and on the other from The Napoleon of Notting Hill." J. C. Squire
+ Living Age 326:431 Ag 22 '25 550w
(Reprinted from Observer)

"Agreeable bits of fanciful froth spiced with all the wit we anticipate in any utterance of Chesterton's." D. B. W.

+ New Repub 45:198 Ja 6 '26 60w

"Mr. Chesterton did once upon a time invent a sort of book in which politics and poetry were madly, merrily mixed; but that sort of book needs to be written with more gusto than he has found for it here. Not only are the stories mechanical in conception and in working out, they have not even the central unity of a philosophy. But it remains true that Mr. Chesterton at his very worst is more readable and entertaining than most writers at their best." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 25:504 Ag 15 '25 560w

"All of this is amusing folly, and like most folly possesses a flash of the unearthly wisdom of sheer lunacy."

+ N Y Times p8 O 11 '25 720w

Sat R of Lit 2:415 D 12 '25 160w

"These are fantastic and ingenious tales in which Mr. Chesterton gives his readers the added pleasure of a guessing competition."

+ Spec 135:78 Jl 11 '25 60w

"Though the machinery, both of plot and of style, can sometimes be heard to creak a little, these have enough of the old exuberance, enough of the old breathless impetus, to carry the reader joyfully along. Time and again Mr. Chesterton achieves that fusion of satire with lyrical nonsense which is his distinctive contribution to current journalism."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p414 Je 18 '25 450w

CHEVALLEY, ABEL. Modern English novel; tr from the French by Ben Ray Redman. 259p $2.50 Knopf

823 English fiction—History and criticism 25-17567

"Originally intended as an introduction to modern English fiction for French students, M. Chevalley's brief volume now appears in an English version by Ben Ray Redman. The book offers a slight sketch of the development of the English novel before 1800, a concise account of the tendencies exemplified in the work of certain Victorian novelists, chapters on Butler and James, and five chapters devoted to the development of the novel during the thirty years preceding 1920."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"The Modern English Novel" serves again to show how greatly the French excel in the field of criticism; how uncluttered the French critical mind is from the prepossessions that usually hamper the American and English critics; and how swift and penetrating is their gift for grasping and summarizing a writer's whole achievement." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 62:210 O '25 480w

"In his appraisals of one English story-teller after another, M. Chevalley is clear and concise. We have no doubt for a moment of his meaning, and that is evidence that his translator has done good work." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 12 '25 700w

Reviewed by C: Trueblood

New Repub 44:310 N 11 '25 200w

"Here is a remarkable book upon the English novel." H: J. Forman

N Y Times p18 Ja 3 '26 1150w

"The author covers an extensive territory in exceedingly brief space. The treatment is necessarily suggestive and impressionistic rather than analytic and critical; there are obvious lacunae some of which the author acknowledges apologetically; there are peculiar distortions of perspective accountable only by the fact that the book was intended for French, not English or American, readers. Yet, on the whole, his book is provocative and eminently readable. It is chiefly interesting, not for its informative or critical values, but for its candid expression of a French response to modern English fiction."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:221 O 17 '25 220w

CHEYNE, SIR WILLIAM WATSON. Lister and his achievement; being the first Lister memorial lecture delivered at the Royal college of surgeons of England on May 14, 1925. 136p $2.75 (7s 6d) Longmans

B or 92 Lister, Sir Joseph. Surgery, Aseptic and antiseptic 25-11054

An account of the life of Sir Joseph Lister, of the steps by which he came to his discovery of the antiseptic treatment of wounds and the technique which he employed to prevent infection.

Booklist 22:158 Ja '26

"Sir W. W. Cheyne contributes at the same time much that is new to our knowledge of the great surgeon's life and personal characteristics. It is to this side of Lister that the lecture now published is given almost in its entirety, and it is to a lengthy appendix that the author commits his description of how Lister utilized his theory for successful practice." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p8 J1 11 '25 750w

"Sir William became Lister's house-surgeon, and the tale he has to unfold reads like romance. This lecture, with an appendix to amplify it, was probably chiefly intended for professional men; but there is little that cannot be understood by the intelligent layman, and much to make him think."

+ New Statesman 25:674 S 26 '25 300w

"The latter half of the book will necessarily appeal chiefly to medical men. But the story told by the author in the first half is one of which every Englishman must rightly be proud and which should be among the most treasured possessions of every student of the present generation."

+ Sat R 140:103 J1 25 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p498 J1 23 '25 100w

CHICHESTER, JOHN JAY. The bigamist. 320p $2 Chelsea house

"'You cad!' shouts Channing Searles to himself when he faces the fact that he has just sold himself in marriage to the rich Elizabeth Borland without so much as sending an announcement to Dora Oakes, his sweetheart back in New Hampshire. Dora has waited for him eleven years. A telegram stating that she is dying takes Searles to her sickbed, and when he finds that she is determined to marry him he humors her to that extent. Blackmail follows this bigamous proceeding, with murder close behind."—N Y Tribune

Boston Transcript p4 J1 25 '25 360w

"Mr. Chichester has told a complicated story well. The sequence of events is a natural one and leads logically up toward a carefully planned climax. The tale is told in a pleasant and interesting manner."

+ N Y Times p13 J1 12 '25 480w

"Mr. Chichester is to be congratulated upon maneuvering a somewhat happy ending where all seemed marked for gloom."

+ N Y Tribune p12 S 6 '25 150w

"It is a relief to the confirmed reader of mystery-detective fiction to find a story that forsakes the beaten path of construction without any sacrifice of the mystery element. Such a tale is 'The Bigamist.' The murder does not occur until well toward the middle of the book, and its solution accounts for most of the closing chapters. But not much more in praise of the story can truthfully be written. It is rather crude and very illogical in places." J. S. Griffith

+ — N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 120w

CHILD, RICHARD WASHBURN. Diplomat looks at Europe. 301p il $4 Duffield

940 5 Europe—Politics. United States—Foreign relations. Italy—Politics and government 25-21143

An ex-ambassador to Italy records the impressions and experiences of his diplomatic career. The book contains articles that have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and extracts from the author's diary at the Genoa and Lausanne conferences.

"Interesting but rather superficial reminiscences."

Booklist 22:154 Ja '26

"The volume's concluding chapters are noteworthy for the sweeping unreserved and soundness of their author's opinions on international problems and relationships."

+ Bookm 62:621 Ja '26 150w

"The eleven chapters in this book are clearly written and have already been read by many thousands of our countrymen. We are proud to feel that Mr. Child has been in some cases of considerable influence. We do wish he would not take himself quite so seriously. For he is still young and has years to forget that for a short space of time he was an ambassador." D. F. G.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 N 14 '25 500w
Cleveland p113 D '25

"An informal, highly intelligent comment on Europe, American diplomacy, 'conferences,' and all sorts and conditions of men and women. Mr. Child is a journalist of talent."

+ Ind 115:590 N 21 '25 200w

Reviewed by Arthur Draper

N Y Tribune p17 O 25 '25 680w

"Whether or no one agrees with Mr. Child, his sharply-drawn pictures of the personalities with whom he was in contact are well worth while." E. J. Young

+ N Y World p7m N 29 '25 850w

CHILD, the clinic and the court; a group of papers by Jane Addams, C. Judson Herrick, A. L. Jacoby, and others; published in co-operation with the Wieboldt foundation. 344p pa $1 New Republic, inc., 421 W 21st st., N.Y. 364 Juvenile delinquency. Juvenile courts 25-10951

"Contains papers presented at a conference held in Chicago in January, 1925, to com-

CHILD, the clinic and the court—Continued memorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the First Juvenile Court, and the fifteenth anniversary of the First Psychopathic Institute. It consists of three parts. Part I comprises 6 contributions dealing with the personality of the child; Part II, of 10 papers, is a symposium on fundamental behavior and the role of the mental hygiene clinic in applying scientific methods to the understanding and guidance of behavior; and Part III discusses, in 11 papers, the nature, history, and methods used by juvenile courts in meeting the needs of juvenile delinquents."—World Tomorrow

Booklist 22:53 N '25

"A brilliant and penetrating symposium of delinquency and its causes." Stuart Chase
+ N Y Tribune p3 Ag 16 '25 300w

Sat R of Lit 1:900 J1 11 '25 150w

"In Part II several papers might more logically have been used as an introduction to the book itself." T. W. Galloway
World Tomorrow 8:313 O '25 380w

CHILD health library; ed. by John C. Gebhart. 10v with book-ends $3 Haas

649.1 Children—Care and hygiene

Contents: v 1, Pre-natal care and the baby's birth, by Harbeck Halstead. 11-116p; v 2, Babies, their feeding and care, by Louis C. Schroeder. 9-94p; v 3, Neglected age, the child from two to six, by Bernard S. Denzer. 9-96p; v 4, Dangers of the school age, by M. Alice Asserson. 9-118p; v 5, Communicable diseases of childhood, by Stafford McLean. 9-94p; v 6, Hygiene of the mouth and teeth, by Thaddeus P. Hyatt. 9-96p; v 7, What children of various ages should eat, by Lucy H. Gillett. 9-115p; v 8, How children ought to grow, by John C. Gebhart. 9-110p; v 9, Psychology of the child, by David Mitchell. 9-96p; v 10, Educational problems, by David Mitchell. 9-117p.

"They are not books for the public health worker alone, but are written primarily for the layman. The sanitarian engaged in popular health instruction will find them valuable aids."

+ Am J Pub Health 15:256 Mr '25 150w

N Y Times p26 Ja 4 '25 400w

Reviewed by Lettie Gay

N Y Tribune p8 F 8 '25 830w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 50w

"Dr. Haven Emerson, formerly Commissioner of health of New York City, characterizes this series as the children's Magna Charta."

+ R of Rs 71:223 F '25 80w

"The untechnical nature of the exposition, and authoritativeness of the material presented, should make this little set of widest usefulness."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:650 Ap 4 '25 200w

CHILDE, CHARLES PLUMLEY. Cancer and the public. 267p $4.25 Dutton [10s 6d Methuen]

616.994 Cancer 25-18253

This book sets forth the educational aspect of the cancer problem. Dr Childe discusses the various theories of the origin of cancer, the commonly accepted fallacies and the known facts regarding the disease. He shows that where it is treated in time there is a large chance of cure but that owing to the painlessness of its early stages it is too often neglected till too late for a cure. He describes simply the symptoms and danger signals, urging prompt attention to them and outlining preventive measures.

"It is written in plain, understandable language, and deals with the facts and fallacies, the theories and truths about this disease." G: A. Soper

+ Am J Pub Health 15:721 Ag '25 700w

"It is not perhaps always pleasant reading, but it is simple, eminently correct and no better has been written." F. C. Wood
+ Lit R p4 O 3 '25 920w

"It is a book which should be in the hands of every person over forty; a book to be carefully read and its information acted upon." F. C. Wood

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 2 '25 1850w

"By far the best lay treatise on cancer in the English language. This book should be read by every intelligent person who wishes to protect himself against the greatest of all the natural hazards of living." James Ewing

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ag 9 '25 820w

Spec 134:504 Mr 28 '25 120w

Reviewed by G: A. Soper

Survey 54:533 Ag 15 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p225 Mr 26 '25 150w

CHILDE-PEMBERTON, WILLIAM SHAKESPEAR. The Earl bishop; the life of Frederick Hervey, bishop of Derry, earl of Bristol. 2v 330;333-664p il $12 Dutton [42s Hurst & B.]

B or 92 Bristol, Frederick Augustus Hervey, 4th earl of [25-7387]

The first two pages of this biography sum up the violently contradictory opinions expressed concerning the Bishop of Derry. The end of his brilliantly erratic career finds even those who were in most bitter disagreement among themselves united to pay common tribute to his memory. The life story of this extraordinary man is given thru his letters, supplemented by material from other sources.

"An excellent book for leisurely reading by a mind interested in humanity, letters and the eighteenth century." Ralph Bergengren

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 28 '25 1950w

"The earl bishop is a splendid subject for this entertaining and well-written biography. The author has devoted a great deal of time to the study of contemporary sources and his book is well authenticated. The illustrations are chosen with great taste."

+ Ind 115:654 D 5 '25 120w

"Like a good biographer, Mr. Childe-Pemberton makes a stiff fight for his view, but the evidence is altogether too strong, and the letters in these volumes are in themselves a proof of the truth of the remark of an enemy, 'to the end of his days he will be taken up with Lucinda.'"

New Statesman 24:601 F 28 '25 1500w

"The merits of this two-volume memoir, though marked, do not balance its deficiencies. The record, complete though it is, holds no living key to the man. The oddity, the irreligious levity, the gigantic scattered energy, the meanness and magnificence, of the secularist bishop still await the fusing touch of some creative hand." Mary Kolars

+ N Y Tribune p9 D 27 '25 860w

"Mr. Childe-Pemberton has discharged his task with a commendable thoroughness; but one cannot resist the conclusion that a less bulky memorial would have served the purpose equally well."

+ Sat R 139:248 Mr 7 '25 800w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 120w

CHIPPERFIELD, ROBERT ORR, pseud. See Ostrander I. E.

CHIROI, SIR VALENTINE. Occident and the Orient. (Norman Wait Harris foundation lectures. 1924) 228p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]

950 Civilization, Oriental. Eastern question 25-220

"The Harris Foundation Lectures at Chicago University, endowed only two years ago, provided Sir Valentine Chiroi with the opportunity for the six discourses that make up this volume. He treats the Ottoman Empire and the Caliphate, the 'peculiar case' of Egypt, British India, and the mandated territories. He has been the advocate of an independent Egypt since the days of the Milner Commission, and of a self-governing India since, if not before, the British declaration of 1917. Both problems are clearly stated here."—New Statesman

"One need not be surprised to find that Sir Valentine's description and interpretation of current conditions is more accurate and reliable than his statements and opinions as regards past events. Mistakes are few, however, and the book is one of genuine excellence for its calm, thorough, and satisfying explanation of a considerable number of important world movements through which old profound forces reveal themselves in active current phases." A. H. Lybier

+ — Am Hist R 30:631 Ap '25 500w

Booklist 21:334 Je '25

Reviewed by H. K. Norton
Int Bk R p514 Jl '25 80w

Reviewed by P. M. Brown
Int J Ethics 35:308 Ap '25 150w
Lit R p11 Mr '25 '25 180w

Reviewed by A. E. Zucker
Nation 121:172 Ag 5 '25 220w

"Sir Valentine Chirol is, of course, thoroughly informed upon the subjects he treats but we are disposed to think that his American auditors may have felt that, in regard to India especially, Sir Valentine might have confronted more squarely the difficulties of British authority in the midst of the unprecedented conditions of to-day."

+ — New Statesman 24:430 Ja 17 '25 230w

"The authority of Sir Valentine Chirol on all matters that touch the Orient is not to be questioned, even by those who disagree with him. But he has the orthodox imperialist point of view of a British Liberal." Nathaniel Peffer

+ — N Y Tribune p3 Mr 22 '25 680w

"In the case of Sir Valentine's book, the student of the Orient meets with disappointment at the very outset. Mr. Chirol has the charm of the disinterested old gentleman, who has lived in the East as fully as in the West, and who from the proud pinnacles of British paternalism, looks not only through the oriental, but over his head." Sydney Greenbie

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:195 O 10 '25 450w

"Sir Valentine is properly impartial, and with the detachment of a true historian gives praise and blame where they are due."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p15 Ja 8 '25 1100w

CHITTICK, VICTOR LOVITT OAKES. Thomas Chandler Haliburton ("Sam Slick"); a study in provincial Toryism. (Studies in English and comparative literature) 695p $4 Columbia univ. press

B or 92 Haliburton, Thomas Chandler (Sam Slick, pseud.) 24-29336

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"In his treatment of Haliburton as a man and as a politician, Professor Chittick has handled his material with unquestionable skill. In his treatment of Haliburton as an author, he has been less successful." R. P. Baker

+ — Am Hist R 30:869 Jl '25 350w

"Professor Chittick evidently started in with the intention of taking Haliburton down a peg or two, of dispelling the Haliburton myth; but in doing so he has been led into the error of forgetting that Haliburton produced a work of genius. Once this criticism of Professor Chittick's book has been made, there is little left to do save to praise it in all other respects. In all his judgments, save in the one fundamental one, he holds the scales fair. His book will irritate every student of Canadian literature, and win the gratitude of every student of colonial history." W. L. Grant

+ — Canadian Hist R 6:79 Mr '25 500w

"Mr. Chittick has gone to every conceivable source of information concerning the character of the creator and he has produced a book which for the thoroughness of its research and the excellence of its literary style deserves to rank high." G. M. Wrong

+ Nation 121:72 Jl 8 '25 1200w

"Hitherto both information about Haliburton and a critical estimate of his achievement have been lacking. Vague and erroneous ideas have prevailed about the man and his work. Now, thanks to a Nova Scotian scholar, this darkness has been dispelled in one of the most thorough and satisfying studies of a literary figure in existence." Archibald MacMechan

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 22 '25 720w

"Professor Chittick's study of the public life of Haliburton is all that could be desired. He has made a valuable contribution to the political history of the British Empire and to the literary history of Canada and the United States."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:491 Ja 31 '25 1150w

Spring'd Republican p8 Ag 20 '25 580w

"The patience and labour involved have been enormous; but he has not fallen in love with his subject, and behind some downright vituperation and unwilling praise there seems to be an undercurrent of oddly personal resentment and dislike."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p262 Ap 16 '25 750w

CHIVAS-BARON, CL. Three women of Annam; auth. tr. from the French, by Faith Chipperfield. 267p $2.50 Maurice

25-17058

"The beautiful Thi-Vinh, in the first of these stories, falls in love with her father's steward, but is married to the Emperor of Annam, a very good-hearted emperor, oppressed by his conscience and his governmental duties. When he finds her secret diary, he sends her away to marry her first love. The second story deals with a common oriental custom: a beloved but childless wife is forced to choose her own successor. The last is the tale of Madame Hoa, who was purchased by three French officials in succession."—Sat R of Lit

"All three stories are well told with a fine sympathy and understanding of an ancient people."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 21 '25 320w

"Chivas-Baron, member of the French Academy, has written, in simple, limpid prose, the stories of three women. Very rarely does he slip from his role of story-teller to speak as a social observer. He has succeeded marvelously in putting himself inside the Annamite mind and heart and writing from that position." Paul Sifton

+ N Y World p4m S 20 '25 520w

"Undistinguished, so the judgment runs, because the book follows the traditions of Pierre Loti without adding to those traditions. The descriptive passages are good, but the master could more than equal them. The plots, if stripped of their foreign trappings, would be unspeakably dull."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:384 D 5 '25 200w

CHRISMAN, ARTHUR BOWIE. Shen of the sea. 252p il $2.50 Dutton

25-15384

"Old tales from the Chinese for boys and girls. It is a book to read slowly, one story at a time, beginning with little Ah Mee—Ah Mee who plays elephant in his Uncle Cha's cabbage patch; Ah Mee, a destroyer of beautiful toys, who hurls his toy dragon through the paper window of his house; Ah Mee, 'who doted on jam and dabbled in all the hundred and one varieties of mischief'; Ah Mee, whose innocent dabbling in the jam pots led straight to the invention of printing."—N Y Tribune

"Some have a folklore quality and all are told delightfully with humor and sprightliness."

+ Booklist 22:167 Ja '26

CHRISMAN, A. B.—Continued

"The stories are fresh, unhackneyed, full of humor, and distinction is lent to the book by the unusually clever silhouettes drawn for it by Elsie Hasselriis, the Danish artist." Marcia Daphin

+ Bookm 62:460 D '25 80w

"These stories reflect Chinese life and thought, but they do it in such a way that the reader has no feeling that he is being instructed. He merely absorbs along with these entertaining tales the practical philosophy which has governed Chinese life for centuries. The illustrations in silhouette which accompany these stories give added appeal to the book."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 300w

"Their charm lies in the brisk directness of the telling and in the very serious face with which Mr. Chrisman conceals his bubbling glee over the utterly subversive conduct of his characters." W. K. Rugg

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '25 220w

"These are quite delightful; the odd Chinese atmosphere is attractive, and the stories are short and not overloaded with the supernatural." H: Beston

+ Ind 115:351 S 26 '25 60w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

Int Bk R p136 Ja '26 80w

"The attractive little book is both original and convincing—two qualities which have been conspicuously lacking in children's books dealing with Chinese life and custom." A. C. Moore

+ N Y Tribune p6 O 18 '25 400w

"These Chinese stories are hung upon short, picturesque plots told in an odd blend of American nonsense and Chinese seriousness, which is whimsical and delightful." M. C. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 2:275 N 7 '25 100w

CHRISTIANSEN, WALTER GUSTAVE OTTO.

Organic derivations of antimony. 230p il $3
Chemical catalog co.

546.86 Antimony

25-11016

"This volume has for its object the correlation of widely scattered data presented in numerous papers dealing with organic antimonials in such a way that the information may be available both for those desiring a general knowledge of the organic derivatives of antimony and for those embarking on research in this field." Even an organic chemist familiar in a general way with the chemistry of these compounds cannot fail to be surprised at the diversity of methods which have been developed, especially within the past few years, for the preparation and interconversion of various types of antimonials. The present monograph was published in connection with the study of antimonials now being made by the Departments of Pharmacology and of Tropical Medicine at the Harvard Medical School."—Ind & Eng Chem

"From beginning to end the book is attractive reading for anybody interested in the subject, either as a physiologist eager to know the therapeutic properties of antimony, or as a research chemist curious of the versatile behavior of metals in their organic compounds." G: Calingaert

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:814 O '25 450w

"The author is to be congratulated on the very satisfactory presentation of his subject matter." L. W. Jones

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:1096 O '25 350w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 29:1198 S '25 1300w

"The book is a valuable addition to the literature of organic chemistry in its practical aspects." H: Leffmann

+ J Franklin Institute 200:268 Ag '25 720w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:33 Jl '25

CHRISTIE, AGATHA. Poirot investigates.
282p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

25-9194

Fourteen mysteries, each one of which Poirot, the clever French detective, solves with the valuable assistance of the dapper Hastings. Contents: The adventure of "The western star"; The tragedy at Marsdon manor; The adventure of the cheap flat; The mystery of Hunter's lodge; A million dollar bond robbery; The adventure of the Egyptian tomb; The jewel robbery at the Grand Metropolitan; The kidnapped prime minister; The disappearance of Mr Davenheim; The adventure of the Italian nobleman; The case of the missing will; The veiled lady; The lost mine; The chocolate box.

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 25 '25 200w

Reviewed by L: Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 20w

"Poirot's gorgeous self conceit gives a dash of humor to this capital collection of mystery stories. They are ingeniously constructed, and told with an engaging lightness of style." J: J. McLaughlin

+ Lit R p9 Je 13 '25 250w

"Mrs. Christie's book is for the lightest of reading. But its appeal is disarmingly modest, and it will please the large public which relishes stories of crime, but likes its crime served decorously."

+ N Y Times p25 Ap 20 '24 300w

"In all good faith I cannot say that Agatha Christie's stories are good. Certainly they are badly written. And one finds it hard to forgive an author a hero who reminds the reader of nothing so much as the individual portrayed in the advertising of a certain well known perfume company."

— N Y Tribune p7 Je 7 '25 200w

Spec 132:566 Ap 5 '24 20w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p209 Ap 3 '24 150w

CHRISTIE, AGATHA. Secret of Chimneys.
310p $2 Dodd [7s 6d J. Lane]

25-17145

"Years ago before the war the pretty little Parisian actress who had long been a member of a gang of international jewel thieves met an amorous Balkan monarch and exchanged her liberty for a few years of uneasy Queenship in a stormy capital. During the brief period before her husband's living subjects hurried him to a blood-stained grave she corresponded with her former associates using a code in which the whereabouts of certain jewels which have been hidden is described. Her letters are stolen; and the author cleverly sets a number of people to work at trying to recover them."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"A rapidly moving mystery story with a complicated plot of increasing interest."

+ Booklist 22:116 D '25

"The usual ingredients of a mystery yarn are herein cleverly handled in the usual way."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 23 '25 320w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"Here's another capital detective story by Miss Christie, which will keep the reader guessing until the very end, not only as to the identity of the arch-villain—the murderer—but also that of the hero, Anthony Cade." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p6 O 31 '25 200w

"It really is just another of those international intrigue affairs, but extremely well written and very baffling." Ruth Von Phul

+ N Y Tribune p11 S 27 '25 220w

"The Secret of Chimneys' is one of her best." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:15 Jl 4 '25 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 Jl 9 '25 180w

CHRISTIE, MAY. Gilded rose. 379p $2 Putnam
25-16656

The gilded rose is an innkeeper's pure young daughter. Her father's first kind act is to die and leave her a million. She marries the refined if penniless hero of her dreams who, alas, is in love with a tiger lily, a lady ungilded but not without guilt. The tiger lily villainess and a rum smuggling villain enter into an unholy alliance to separate the pair; the former is to absorb the hero's attention while the latter plucks his rose. But the innkeeper's daughter is pure and her husband, tho erring, refined. The rest may be imagined.

"It is the struggle on the wife's part, with its effect on her character, that lifts Miss Christie's book out of the class of the merely trivial. For there is no sudden transformation from the unschooled to the brilliant, but rather a gradual development leading naturally from the outward events, molding and shaping the heroine's mind anew until she is actually transformed into another being, infinitely more alluring than the other woman was ever capable of being." E. M. Corby

+ — Int Bk R p820 N '25 180w
Lit R p17 D 5 '25 80w

CHRISTIE, O. F., ed. Johnson the essayist; his opinions on men, morals and manners. 285p $4 Doran [12s 6d G. Richards]

824 Johnson, Samuel 25-11070

Johnson's reputation as a conversationalist has led sometimes to neglect of the study of his essays, which he himself considered the "pure wine" of all his writing. Johnson's essays in the Rambler, the Idler, and the Adventurer contain the fruit of his observation on all sorts of subjects, his thoughts on religion, on morals, on education, and the manners of his age. Mr Christie's study consists largely of quotations from these essays.

"As a whole, Mr. Christie's book is a rather ill-assorted collection of Johnsoniana, with a liberal sprinkling of Boswell. It contains much that is old and little that is new." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p5 Ap 25 '25 600w

"In the Lives of the Poets he was the moralist and critic of life sans le savoir. The professional moralist could not be so easy to read, but Johnson's journalism has its touches of happy fancy and imagery. It is not to be tackled in bulk, but it retains its appeal to those who have had experience of life, with its changes and chances, its difficulties and regrets. We hope Mr. Christie's capital book may increase its admirers."

+ New Statesman 24:512 F 7 '25 600w

"In the various excerpts which Mr. Christie has gathered together there is such interesting and edifying material, and material which on the whole is presented in a style so well adapted to its purpose, that one feels that the compiler has succeeded excellently in his defense of Johnson."

+ N Y Times p13 Je 7 '25 650w

"A selection of complete papers from the 'Rambler' along with some in a lighter strain from the 'Idler' might, with the help of a persuasive introduction, quite conceivably create an audience for his prose, but it is very doubtful if a digest of opinions such as Mr. Christie has compiled will in any way revive his reputation as a writer." Jacob Zeitlin

— N Y Tribune p12 J1 12 '25 750w

Sat R 138:609 D 13 '24 500w

Sat R of Lit 2:109 S 5 '25 260w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p116 F 19 '25 320w

CHUPP, CHARLES. Manual of vegetable-garden diseases. (Rural manuals) 647p il $4 Macmillan

632 Vegetables—Diseases and pests 25-7837

"Includes the more important truck-garden crops, including under each its diseases and their control. Has separate chapters on soil sterilization and fungicides."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Brings together in compact, usable form a vast amount of information."

+ Booklist 21:364 J1 '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:421 J1 '25

"The information included in the volume is ample, the illustrations are good and have been lavishly provided and the letterpress is excellent. The book is a credit to all concerned."

+ Springf'd Republican p16 O 9 '25 180w

CHURCHWARD, ALBERT. Origin and evolution of religion. 422p $15 Dutton [42s Allen & U.]

290 Religion—History. Religions [25-1746]

An elaborate treatise which traces the persistence of religious ideas and beliefs thru successive civilizations by deciphering religious signs and symbols found in the records of the past all over the world. The author goes back to the Pygmies for the origin and dawn of religious ideas and follows their evolution thru the different cults up to the Christian era. Most space is given to the religion of the Egyptians.

Boston Transcript p2 My 16 '25 980w

J Religion 5:330 My '25 100w

"This volume is a beautifully published and fully illustrated book of unintentional nonsense. It no more sets forth the origin and evolution of religion, as sound science understands the subject, than 'Gulliver's Travels' depicts events as they actually happened." G. A. Barton

— Lit R p6 Mr 21 '25 650w

"Dr. Churchward offers us the results of his inquiries, elaborate and, at times, bewildering, into 'the origin and evolution of religion.' It is the gesture of an enthusiast who is not content to state the facts, but must add an interpretation thereof, a creed based on the facts, to which he calls upon us to subscribe. Like a genuine evangelist, Dr. Churchward appeals, not to the pundits merely, but to all of us. It is the verdict of the average man that he seeks. . . . There are many assertions in these pages on which the highest authorities differ." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 Mr 1 '25 2900w

"There is a strange fascination in meeting a mind like that of Dr. Churchward, who, in a field where scientists are groping and stumbling in the dark, claims to see the whole truth without a shadow of doubt. Convictions 'come natural' to him; the patient weighing of evidence is beneath him, and his imagination 'discovers' so much that he has a great advantage over mental pedestrians." H. W. Schneider

N Y Tribune p5 My 31 '25 800w

Outlook 140:225 Je 10 '25 30w

"Mr. Churchward, in his quest of unity, overruns all differences. He finds exactly what he wants to find in anything, everything. He is at the goal before he has fairly started."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p838 D 11 '24 1100w

CLAIRE, MABEL. Busy woman's cook book; or, Cooking by the clock. 88p $1.50 Greenberg
641 Cookery 25-9267

"Furnishes well planned menus and the necessary recipes for dinners that may be prepared in from fifteen to thirty minutes. Because the dinners are well planned and to be evolved neither from the corner delicatessen nor from tin cans, the family will not suffer the usual consequences of hasty preparations. The book is so arranged that each menu with its full directions appears on two facing pages, which the cook may keep before her while preparing the meals."—N Y Tribune

"A practical, inexpensive small book."

+ Booklist 22:14 O '25

CLAIRE, MABEL—Continued

"The author reveals her expertness as a cook, by her explicitness as a writer. She realizes that directions are worthless unless they tell exactly the things to be done. Some other notable features of the book are the inexpensiveness of the dishes."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 6 '25 100w

Cleveland p119 D '25

N Y Tribune p11 My 31 '25 100w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER. Study of the modern drama. 527p $3.50 (15s) Appleton

809.2 Drama—History and criticism 25-3337

A handbook for the study and appreciation of the best plays, European, English and American, of the last half century. Selecting the most important dramatists of the principal European countries and the United States from the time of Ibsen to the present, Mr Clark gives a brief biographical sketch of each, a complete list of his plays in chronological order, a list of references, and critical comment on one or more of his most notable plays, with outlines of their plots.

Booklist 21:268 Ap '25

"The author's selections are judicious and representative; his treatment impartial. His work, on the whole is to be recommended without reservation." C. P.

+ Cath World 121:427 Je '25 160w

"There can be no question but this will prove an exceedingly useful handbook of reference for all persons interested in contemporaneous drama or who may have to write about it." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p9 F 23 '25 450w

"The student of playwriting, while he will not find in Mr. Clark's book a systematic study of technique, should obtain from it many helpful suggestions regarding the qualities that make a play effective. The development of character, the uses of dialogue and of stage directions, the unfolding of plot—all these matters are treated from many different angles and exemplified in the work of craftsmen of widely varying technique."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 1 '25 630w

"In the first place, he knows his subject. Second, he recognizes that guide books of this kind are successful only when they confine themselves to technical matters. Third, his analyses, questions and suggestions are usually interesting and often stimulating." H. N. Hillebrand

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 22 '25 140w

Pratt p27 autumn '25

St Louis p350 S '25

Sat R of Lit 2:51 Ag 15 '25 200w

"In spite of easily remediable limitations, the book takes its place at once as the best existing survey of recent European and American dramatic movements."

+ Spec 134:640 Ap 18 '25 150w

"A student of modern drama would go far to find a more careful and detailed guide book or primer than Mr. Barrett H. Clark's volume."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:489 Jl '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p202 Mr 19 '25 70w

Wis Lib Bul 21:87 Mr '25

CLARK, GLENN. Soul's sincere desire. 114p

$2 Atlantic monthly

248 Prayer

25-7038

The writer who has been blest "for the past three years with an almost continuous stream of answered prayers" here tries to share his experience with others, explaining in the simplest way the spiritual exercise of prayer and how it may be practiced.

Booklist 22:6 O '25

"The chief charm of the book is its naturalness. It was born of a man's experience and practice. It is a chapter out of life." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 23 '25 150w

Cleveland p92 S '25

"The editors of the Atlantic say that the interest in Glenn Clark's essay on 'The Soul's Sincere Desire' was so great that the entire edition of the magazine was sold out at once and they received hundreds of requests to reprint it. Dr. Clark has prepared this little book in response to this immediate and growing interest in the article, which forms the first chapter and gives its title to the volume."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 12 '25 380w

"The author is not content to be sincere; he succeeds in being thought-provoking as well."

+ N Y Tribune p13 S 27 '25 180w

"Prof Clark shows himself a master of both the psychology and philosophy of prayer, and to an enviable degree, he has ability to manifest to others the reasons for his success in prayer. His summary of what he calls the right attitude and conditions for prevailing prayer must seem plain and sensible to the average man, and not too mystical to appeal to him."

+ Spring'd Republican p8 Ag 11 '25 650w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

CLARK, HORACE FRISBY, and CHASE, FRANK A. Elements of the modern building and loan associations; a text-book prepared as a part of the educational program of the American savings, building and loan institute. (Land economics ser.) 540p $4 Macmillan

332.32 Building and loan associations

25-9999

The rapid growth in recent years of building and loan associations has made necessary an adequate textbook on the subject for officers and clerks of these associations, for students of finance generally and for real estate dealers and brokers. The book contains all the necessary information about the use of this form of real estate credit.

Booklist 22:54 N '25

"The detail work involved in the process has been enormous, and many authorities have been consulted on the complexities presented to the authors in the course of their labors so that the 'Elements of the Modern Building and Loan Associations' may be regarded as the last as it is the first thesis on the subject. No other is needed."

+ N Y Times p5 D 6 '25 550w

CLARK, JANET HOWELL. Lighting in relation to public health. 185p $4 Williams & Wilkins

628.9 Lighting. Eye—Diseases and defects 24-28127

"Described as 'a simple and condensed text, treating of illumination from the point of view of public health. A non-technical but scientific discussion of an important factor in the school, hospital, factory, office, store, and on the public highway'; includes discussions and diagrams of interest in connection with household illumination and visual hygiene."—J Home Econ

"We have long needed an adequate book on illumination as a public health problem, and Dr. Clark has met this need most efficiently." C.-E. A. Winslow

+ Am J Pub Health 15:350 Ap '25 120w

"Not too technical for reference use by college classes in household equipment and hygiene."

+ J Home Econ 17:462 Ag '25 80w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:20 Ap '25

Pratt Technical Books p11 '24

Reviewed by C.-E. A. Winslow

Survey 53:774 Mr 15 '25 100w

CLARKE, MRS IDA CLYDE (GALLAGHER).

Uncle Sam needs a wife. 279p $2 Winston
 396 Women in politics. United States—
 Politics and government 25-6506

A frank discussion of the need of woman's viewpoint in the housekeeping of the nation and of a better understanding and cooperation between men and women in public affairs. The writer shows up some of the most wasteful spots in the management of the nation's business and the many places, as well, in which women are wasting their energies and emotion thru ineffectual organization and division of interests. She also points out some of the failings which have kept women from making their influence effective.

Boston Transcript p2 J1 3 '25 180w

"Hers is a noble cause, but she weakens the force of her argument by indulging in absurd generalities of a pseudo-scientific, pseudo-philosophic nature." H. S.

+ Lit R p11 Ap 25 '25 160w

"It is no difficult matter to prove that Uncle Sam needs a wife. Mrs. Clarke does this with a thoroughness that is calculated to make a mere man hide his diminished head in shame. Not that she tells us anything new—she doesn't pretend to do that. Indeed, she rather makes a point of the fact that although the wastefulness and general inefficiency of our legislators has been a matter of common knowledge for years and years nothing has ever been done about it."

N Y Times p12 Ap 19 '25 1050w

"In this enthusiastic book crammed with information Mrs. Clarke is more successful in putting her finger on the various sore points of our national life than she is in showing us how to heal them, though her failure in the latter respect is not a little due to an amiable sympathy with the microbes whose depredations she deplores." A. B. Parsons

+ N Y Tribune p5 Je 7 '25 950w

Outlook 140:434 J1 22 '25 100w

"The occasional parading of statistics is as entertaining as any other parade, and the whole book sparkles with wit and wisdom."

+ Springfield Republican p6 J1 13 '25 550w

CLARKE, ISABEL CONSTANCE. It happened in Rome. 400p $2 Benziger [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-22990

To the astonishment of her friends, the beautiful Lady Jane Imlay became a Catholic. Tho separated from her husband, she had not tried to divorce him and had put the idea of an annulment resolutely from her in spite of Don Amerigo's persistent pleadings. Then suddenly she discovered herself in love with her young sister's fiancé, Fergus Challinor. In him she found the complement of her religious ideals; there was a sympathy of thought between them which her sister Armored could never share. In a Rome of conflicting contrasts, of solemn religious pageantry and the gay trappings of social life, their destinies merged into one.

"Out of good ingredients Miss Clarke has made a curiously uninteresting story."

+ Nation and Ath 38:268 N 14 '25 120w

"The city of Rome, crowded during the present year of pilgrimage, makes not only a picturesque, but a highly topical setting to this novel, in which Miss Clarke, with her accustomed skill, combines romance with simple edification, and introduces us to a pleasant group of fashionable English visitors and a few aristocratic Italians."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p773 N 19 '25 250w

CLARKE, JOHN HESSIN. America and world peace. (Brown univ. Colver lectures, 1925) 145p $1.50 Holt

341.1 League of nations. United States—
 Foreign relations 25-17440

In these three lectures a former justice of the Supreme court and one of the foremost advocates of the League of nations argues for the entry of the United States into the League. He explains America's interest—moral, economic and political—in world peace and in the League of nations and the significance of the Protocol for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

Am Pol Sci R 19:862 N '25 100w

"Justice Clarke's panegyric on the League of Nations is greatly like other panegyrics on the League of Nations, except that it has less argumentative power and more bad grammar than most." Vincent Sheean

+ New Repub 44:25 Ag 26 '25 200w

"Quite aside from its opinions, the book will serve those in need of first aid on the organization and purposes of the league."

N Y Tribune p12 O 25 '25 160w

Outlook 141:168 S 30 '25 20w

"No one, I think, can read the book through without being impressed with the purity and elevation of the character of the man who wrote it, his fairness and fervor, and the patriotism which inspires him." Hamilton Holt

+ Sat R of Lit 2:195 O 10 '25 850w

CLARKE, JOSEPH IGNATIUS CONSTANTINE. My life and memories. 404p il $3.50 Dodd

B or 92

25-21673

Early in his career, Mr Clarke held a position in the government service in London, and was at the same time a member of a secret Fenian society. Police discovery of his activities in the latter necessitated a quick change to America, where he entered almost at once into newspaper work. During his long journalistic career, in the course of which he launched a number of remarkable enterprises, Mr Clarke came into close and friendly association with many renowned men. From the interesting record of these friendships there is reflected something of the writer's own genial, forceful personality. Rupert Hughes, who was associated with Mr Clarke while he was editor of the Criterion, has written the introduction.

"This book, in matter as well as style, is a monument to the journalism of an elder day." J. L. Ford

+ Int Bk R p107 Ja '26 1450w

"An engaging quality marks the recollections of Mr. Clarke. His was the companionable spirit of his Irish stock and he could not but delight in the men with whom he came in contact, nor, delighting in them, be able to keep them to himself. Shrewdness too gives substance to his estimates, and no one has yet written more truly of James Gordon Bennett, for example, than has he." W. P. Beazell

+ N Y World p6m D 13 '25 130w

R of Rs 72:662 D '25 100w

"Those, to whom America means neither a flag nor a geographical expression, but one of the contemporary world's most interesting dynamic forces, will find this biography a valuable document. This is Americanization at its best."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:381 D 5 '25 400w

CLARKE, MOMA E. Regarding the French: cameos of French life. 229p il $2.50 McBride [8s 6d A. M. Philpot]

914.4 France—Social life and customs. National characteristics, French 25-12275

Sketches of French life in Paris and the provinces, of French social customs and the traits of French women.

Booklist 22:68 N '25

CLARKE, MONA E.—Continued

"Her style is free and spirited, and one only discovers the extent of the instruction when the entertainment is over. Without any air of writing down to ignorance, Miss. Clarke has presumed no knowledge on the part of her readers, hence the clarity of her explanations."

+ New Statesman 24:516 F 7 '25 450w

"A fetching little volume. The book is not at all a guidebook to France in the accepted sense of the term; but it is rather a keen analytic study of that somewhat uncharted territory—the French character, psychologically viewed."

+ N Y Times p13 My 10 '25 680w

"Sprightly and discerning sketches of the French people and French living."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:884 J1 4 '25 120w

CLEMENTS, COLIN CAMPBELL, ed. Sea plays. 241p il pa $2.50 Small

812 American drama—Collections. Drama—Collections 25-12060

"A series of one-act plays theoretically dealing with the sea, ranging in age from Henry B. Fuller's 'The Ship Comes In,' written in 1896, to the latest efforts of the smallest theatres." (Ind) Contents: The ship comes in, by H. B. Fuller; The brink of silence, by E. E. Galbraith; Just two men, by E. Pilot; The magic sea shell, by J. Farrar; The outside, by Susan Glaspell; The rusty door, by H. Southgate; "Second best," by W. Gaston; Sintram of Skaggerak, by Sada Cowan; Will-o-the-wisp, by Doris F. Halman; The wondership, by L. Cunningham.

"The real purpose behind a collection of short plays such as this excellent one which Mr. Clements now gives us, is to provide suitable material for the little theatres. It is surprising to realize what great variety is to be found in this collection. As plays they require a small amount of scenery and few characters. They fulfill this requirement and at the same time offer a wide range of subject matter."

+ Boston Transcript p5 J1 25 '25 300w

"The volume contains a few plays worth preserving. The others already are as though they had not been."

+ Ind 115:80 J1 18 '25 180w

"The craftsmanship of this collection does not stop with technical dexterity—it has substance. These plays are shot through with the spell of the sea, which broodingly hangs over them all. In the high concentration of the form, character drawing is deftly delineated and expressed in sharply handled dialogue, in which dialect is employed with fine craft." Edwin Clark

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 9 '25 1450w

"Mr. Clements has made a collection of ten one-act American plays about the sea, but as none of O'Neill's sea plays is contained therein it is considerably less impressive than it might be. Henry B. Fuller's ironic and mildly Maeterlinckian, 'The Ship Comes In' and Susan Glaspell's subtle and almost but not quite psychological drama, 'The Outside,' are the most interesting plays in the volume." W. P. Eaton

+ N Y Tribune p8 S 27 '25 150w

"Here are gathered ten short sea plays, selected with admirable understanding by Mr. Clements."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 160w

"The book is pleasing to the eye, both in binding and typography and is further embellished by ten wood blocks by Peter Tiegen. As the sea is infinitely various so these ten plays by as many authors strike a variety of chords, all with an undercurrent of mystery and romance if not all equally imbued with the tang and vigor of the salt sea spray."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:774 N '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

CLEMENTS, REX. Gipsy of the Horn; with a foreword by Basil Lubbock. [2d ed] 259p il $4 Houghton

910.4 Voyages and travels. Seamen. Arethusa (barque) 25-5754

The narrative of a voyage around the world in a windjammer. It is not difficult to follow this voyage of twenty years ago, made on the small barque "Arethusa" sailing one January afternoon out of London into all the adventure and romance of the seas. There are word pictures on every page—battling sharks, precipitous seas, sunrise in the tropics, terror by night—and besides these, the book is amply illustrated with photographs made during the voyage.

Booklist 22:68 N '25

"It is a spirited, valuable tale."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 220w

Cleveland p56 Je '25

"Rex Clements, now a captain in steam, writes with the restraint of rank and obligation, and the easy gesture of the man who has climbed the ladder and looks back with delight for his manly standing the gaff. Yet he presents suggestive delineations of master, mate and sailor, which, of their kind, are unsurpassed in literature." F: O'Brien

+ Int Bk R p771 N '25 2050w

"It is one of the best sea stories ever written, to give a landsman a close and realistic view of life on a sailing ship twenty years ago. With little imagination but with fluency, intense enthusiasm, a rare care for facts and a loving fellowship with the sea, the author makes a volume of the sort that Dana wrote in 'Two Years Before the Mast.'" F: O'Brien

+ Lit R p3 Ag 8 '25 820w

"The freshness of Captain Clements's boyish enthusiasms, whether in fishing for strange fish or for the even stranger sights of foreign ports, is remarkably preserved. The book captures the reader with the title; and it does not release him when the last page is turned." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 Ag 9 '25 2600w

"About as fascinating reading as one might recommend for general attention."

+ N Y Tribune p8 S 20 '25 300w

"A fairly interesting sea yarn Mr. Clements has told, but it is not likely to replace Dana's 'Two Years Before the Mast' as a classic of the ocean"

+ Outlook 141:201 O 7 '25 300w

"The record is of historic importance because all that now remains to us of a great period of voyaging is such narratives as this. He goes into great and valuable detail, and his are pages filled with sea lore, all but forgotten by most men who now steam over the world."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:452 D 26 '25 260w

"An extraordinarily well written book. There are not many sailors so articulate as Mr. Clements. Altogether it is quite one of the most interesting books of the sea I have read." R: Hughes

+ Spec 133:696 N 8 '24 350w

"Not only those who enjoy a stirring tale of adventure will welcome the book; for besides that it is a valuable account of a life that is rapidly passing away told in its proper speech by one who has lived it, and who feels kinship with his forerunners in it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p698 N 6 '24 700w

CLEUGH, SOPHIA (MRS DENNIS CLEUGH). Ernestine Sophie. 451p $2 Macmillan

25-21211

A Graustark romance in which a fourteen-year-old English girl brought up in a quiet rectory under the tutelage of the strictest of maiden aunts is suddenly translated to the throne of Nicomedia. She finds a plot-ridden court and conspirators expecting to make her their easy prey, but her resolute will and clear-eyed independence carry her triumphantly through her trials and into the hearts of her people.

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
Lit R p9 D 12 '25 100w
N Y Times p19 N 8 '25 500w

"It is a fairy tale told by a graceful and humorous writer, full of fun and romance and good sense. 'Ernestine Sophie' beams with gay, thrilling episodes and lacks entirely the false heroics and sentimentalism that disfigure so many stories about mythical kingdoms that would be read if geography and authors were what they should be." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p15 N 8 '25 620w

"Romantic and thrilling subject matter this, but unfortunately the story is strewn with brass tacks and romance is elbowed into a corner of the picture by lengthy conversations and lengthier explanations."

+ — N Y World p7m N 8 '25 180w

"A cheerful, amusing, and lively story is this, with plenty of incident to keep the interest alive." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:485 N 25 '25 150w

"The tale itself is of the slightest—incredible and romantic to the point of foolishness—yet it moves with a swiftness and charm that cannot be denied,—and its romanticism is constantly brought to earth by a kindly and satirical humor." K. S. Angell

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:403 D 12 '25 280w

"Half romance and half novel, 'Ernestine Sophie' is at least a well-written novel."

Springf'd Republican p5a Ja 10 '26 320w

CLEVELAND, ELIZABETH. Training the toddler 172p il $2 Lippincott

136.7 Children—Management and training
25-14066

The book summarizes the results of the educational experiments of the Merrill Palmer school for training girls for motherhood. Observations are recorded on the development of the preschool child from the physical, mental, emotional and social points of view and are presented in a form suitable for use in the home, in study courses for adults or as a high-school text in home economics.

"Miss Cleveland sets forth clearly the need for and the value of directing the physical, mental, emotional, and social development of the child during the pre-school period. She offers this book not as a final source of information but as a stimulus to the seeking of information." C. R. Schmidt

J Home Econ 17:664 N '25 250w

N Y Times p5 Ag 23 '25 320w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p676 O
15 '25 40w

"Her comprehension of the need to help the average parent, together with her lively sense of humor and her simple style, have helped her also to produce a book which should be of almost popular interest and worth." Devere Allen

+ World Tomorrow 8:315 O '25 300w

CLEVERDON, WALTER SHERMAN LYLE. Water supply of buildings and rural communities, for engineers, architects, plumbers and property owners. 186p il $2.50 Van Nostrand

628.7 Water supply. Plumbing 25-7999

"Practical procedure for installation, renewal, and maintenance of systems for delivery of water on a small scale. Tabulated results are substituted for all computations requiring more than a knowledge of arithmetic."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:416 Jl '25

CLINE, LEONARD LANSON. God head. 221p
$2 Viking press

25-20833

"'God Head' is the tale of an episode in the life of Paulus Kempf, onetime surgeon, sculptor, poet and, at the opening of this story, a most introspective labor agitator. While addressing a meeting of miners, the meeting is raided by the police and the protesting citizenry. Kempf makes his escape from the brawl that follows, thereby saving himself from lynching. He sets out over hill and through forest, but his flight is brought to a halt by sickness and he collapses. He is found by one of a small colony of Finns, settled on the shores of Lake Michigan. Kempf, by a certain mental agility and trickery, is able to convince the dull peasantry of his wizardry. He steals the wife of his rescuer, takes life and death into his own hands, and as a last achievement creates a singing god, which takes form in a great stone head that has been naturally formed in the granite of the overhanging hills. The superstitious Finns accept both the great idol and his agent on earth. So Kempf is left unmolested."—N Y Tribune

"In the telling of this story Leonard Cline has made free use of his imagination and his great range of poetic powers. The result is an unusual novel of unusual people, written with more than customary passion. Mr. Cline's pen plays with words with uncommon grace, producing in its flights across the page a most interesting first novel. After reading the story we do not know whether to expect another good novel from Mr. Cline or a volume of poetry that will surely live. In 'God Head' we are given both in good measure." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 14 '25 720w

"The book contains a good deal of folklore and some excellent description, but it is such a stark picture of empty souls, of barren pagan selfishness, that the effect is depressing and repulsive."

+ — Ind 115:590 N 21 '25 120w

"What fun Mr. Cline must have had writing those doings! What an exuberance he has put on his pages! In brief, here is another American novelist. He has earned his title with a novel that is strong singing." Bryon Darnton

+ Lit R p12 N 28 '25 420w

"More than anything else it is Mr. Cline's prose holding light like a steel net which transmutes a wild melodrama into an ordered and thrilling rhythm of word and scene and folklore." Donald Douglas

+ Nation 122:15 Ja 6 '26 170w

"This autobiography of Paulus Kempf, who intended not to die, is a fable of rich elements: the genesis of a superman; a wild poetic setting on the shores of Lake Superior; for accessories a group of robust Finns, simpleminded, but of marked character; and not least, certain fine tones of Finnish history and folklore, which run through the narrative like a prose Finlandia. But at the end one wonders at the defects in total impression." C. T.

+ — New Repub 45:93 D 9 '25 220w

"Mr. Cline has a very real talent for folklore. But his love is libidino: his philosophy the current cant of adolescence regurgitating its biological textbooks and he has a crotchet for registering emancipation by the obvious device of blasphemy."

+ — N Y Times p16 D 20 '25 720w

"This first novel by Mr. Cline is regrettably self-conscious. The too-curious smiles that lead him into unlovely sentences, the obsolescent wording and the difficult punctuation that are to be found in the first third of his book—all of these are symptoms. When Mr. Cline ceases his verbal exhibitionism, he writes well and often ingratiatingly. The book has its high moments." Ruth Goodman

+ — N Y Tribune p11 N 1 '25 500w

"This is a provoking first novel. It is an obvious attempt on the part of Mr. Cline to write with a difference. His theme, adultery, is commonplace enough, but he has invested it with the glamour of an exotic atmosphere. The result is a story of crude power, of unusual but uneven merit."

CLINE, L. L.—Continued

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 360w

CLOUD, DOROTHY MALLET-PREVOST.
Culture of perennials. 271p il $2.50 Dodd

716 Gardening. Perennials 25-7262

A book dealing with the practical steps necessary for a successful perennial garden, with the propagation and care of the plants, the making and planting of rock gardens and the use of hot-beds and cold-frames. Complete cultural directions are given for all the perennials mentioned which are mostly restricted to the hardy plants.

Booklist 21:368 JI '25

"The book is not bound too handsomely to be made a garden companion, and we are sure that most of its readers will wish to use it in just this familiar, companionable way. Its only drawback, which we trust will be corrected in subsequent editions, lies in occasional obscurity resulting from the author's too free use of the comma, which here and there necessitates careful reading to make comprehension certain." A. L. Hill

+ — Lit R p16 My 9 '25 330w

"The book is wholly practical in purpose and method, the aim of the author being to offer the garden lover who desires to grow perennials, whether many or few, the essential information which will help him to success."

+ N Y Times p16 My 24 '25 280w

N Y Tribune p7 My 31 '25 170w

Outlook 140:406 JI 15 '25 60w

Pratt p23 autumn '25

"There is much information on the culture of many varieties plainly and simply given. The writing, however, is somewhat matter of fact. Perhaps it is too much to ask that a writer be inspired while chronicling the wars of the bugs and the roses, but a garden should prove to be some inspiration to provide pleasurable reading."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:812 Je 6 '25 150w

COALFLEET, PIERRE. Hare and tortoise.
255p $2 Duffield

25-20971

The Eveleys, Keble and Louise, own and manage a fine estate in the Canadian Northwest. Husband and wife are outwardly happy and are devoted to the work they are doing together. He is an Englishman, son of Lord Eveley, she is a Canadian of French-Irish extraction, a girl who has a good deal of character and marked ideas of her own. Keble's patrician family have not been altogether cordial to Louise. In anticipation of their visit, a young woman arrives, ostensibly as Louise's friend, but really to give her some necessary tutoring in the social graces. Dare, a friend of Keble's is also a guest. A quadrangular situation arises which threatens to upset the household, but after a tentative excursion down a romantic bypath with Dare, Louise, the hare, returns to her place beside Keble to continue the sometimes uneven progress with him.

"A very readable story of that fertile land of novels and dramas—the Canadian northwest. But don't expect the usual formula, for the author has omitted the essential ingredient—mounted policeman!"

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 100w

"There is much thoughtful discussion of life-problems, and if the characters sometimes speak too much 'by the book' their opinions are at least intellectually sound. The technique of the story leaves something to be desired. But the character of the heroine is what makes the book worth reading and is a credit to the author's powers of penetration." Katherine Buxbaum

+ — Int Bk R p133 Ja. '26 520w

"The book is intelligent. Its phraseology is more dignified and formal than is usual in fiction. Pierre Coalfleet seeks exactness of accent and emphasis, the absolute conveyance and tenuous differentiations and shades of meaning. Mr. Coalfleet is clear-headedly aware of the problems of personality that pervade modern life and fiction. He is sure of his purpose, his people and his treatment." W: R. Langfeld

+ N Y Tribune p11 Ja 10 '26 380w

"Mr. Coalfleet has lavished an infinite admiration and a great deal of skill upon Louise, and therefore he has made her a very real woman, with everything that word implies." Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m N 15 '25 620w

"While Mr. Coalfleet can create situations and tell a story with apparently effortless charm, his real power lies in probing for the essence of life to be found in the spirit and the mind of man. He will go far in his quest." A. M. MacLean

Sat R of Lit 2:479 Ja 9 '26 420w

COBB, ELIJAH. Elijah Cobb, 1768-1848; a Cape Cod skipper; with a foreword by Ralph D. Paine. (Philip Hamilton McMillan memorial publication fund) 111p $1.50 Yale univ. press

B or 92 25-23063

"Such memoirs as were left to posterity by Captain Elijah Cobb are fragmentary, a few letters and a narrative of certain voyages, yet they serve to portray with singular fidelity the figure of a New England shipmaster of a century and more ago against the backgrounds of his time."—Foreword

"This little volume is well worth reading. It presents to us a character which makes intelligible the modern Puritan type. The respected rum-runner, smuggler and giver of bribes has his followers in the business world today. To know Elijah Cobb is to come to a better understanding of certain New England traits than could be gathered from volumes of psychological exposition." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 7 '25 1000w

Cleveland p112 D '25

"I have seldom read anything more genuine, more moving, than this little memoir, with its simplicity and honesty of spirit and its hand-made Cape Cod spelling. A brave and honest salt and a stir of romantic times dwell in the book." H: Beston

+ N Y Tribune p16 Ja 3 '26 580w

"Elijah Cobb, in a delightful spelling all his own, tells of his adventurous life as a merchant and smuggler. The worthy skipper was a man of few words; but he quite unconsciously reveals himself as a man among men, of superb assurance, resourcefulness and courage. A skipper well worth knowing."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:320 N 21 '25 160w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Alias Ben Alibi. 332p $2 Doran

25-8789

A character sketch of Ben Ali Crisp, reporter and newspaper editor, from the day when as a lad of twenty he got out a famous fight extra in nineteen minutes, to the day of his dramatic death. The book has no plot, but is composed of episodes in the life of Ben Alibi, as he was known to his friends.

"Mr. Cobb knows what he is talking about, and Mr. Cobb is rather good at pathos when he sets his mind to it. Not only will you not set it down when you start it, but you will not soon forget it, having finished it." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Mr 28 '25 1000w

Cleveland p88 S '25

Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 50w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

Int Bk R p553 JI '25 350w

"Boss Crisp, a mosaic pieced together from many lives, as most good fictional characters are, leaves a vivid impression after most of his remarkable adventures are forgotten." Wallace Irwin

+ Lit R p3 Mr 14 '25 1000w

"Alias Ben Alibi" is what the magazine editors like to call 'human interest stuff,' and more than this it is hardly necessary to say. For the reader who is even remotely interested in newspaper men and newspaper making the book will have historical values; and for the man who likes a good, straightforward, even if a trifle apocryphal, slam-bang narrative of character and incident, this is his story."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 1 '25 800w

"The book is entertaining rather than convincing. Much of his dialogue smacks more of popular fiction than of popular parlance; and he is wont to pause in mid-story and discuss the tricks of the yarn-spinning trade 'out loud.'"

— + N Y Tribune p7 My 24 '25 360w

"Mr. Cobb knows his medium. He knows his people and the words they talk. He has created an unsympathetic character and made you like him. And he has put a good deal of the philosophy of news between the covers of his book. Chiefly important is the fact that he has written entertaining stories."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 1 '25 650w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '25 30w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. "Here comes the bride—" and so forth. 340p $2 Doran

817 25-10507

Contents: "Here comes the bride—"; Some crying needs; A handy pocket guide to bores; The funniest thing that ever happened to me; But I kept my teeth; The open season on ancestors; That piker Hercules; Who's who at our zoo; Trade; Travel; Our national holidays; A noble industry declines; The modern Tommy Tuckers; The advantage of being homely; Our German garden; The gold brick twins; Christmas gifts.

Booklist 22:21 O '25

Bookm 62:95 S '25 120w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 13 '25 1300w

Cleveland p122 D '25

"Is it good? I am sorry to say it isn't so good as it ought to be. One catches too audibly the grinding of the wheels. Written in the style of the personal essay, it shows small response to those recurring atmospheres which we tag with the title 'up to the minute.'" T: L. Masson

— Int Bk R p508 Jl '25 500w

"Most of the stories are readable. Some of them are funny. Little takes place on the American scene without some shrewd comment from this writer, and his observations are invariably sound." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p2 Ag 22 '25 380w

"This commentary of good-natured but obvious humor has a certain dash of slapstick satire that not infrequently sounds a note of serious criticism."

— + N Y Times p13 Je 14 '25 680w

"A collection of short stories, all of them humorous in intent, most of them in effect, although there is chaff enough mixed with the grain. Still, they are funny enough. Here and there there is a turn of phrase, an expression, a description, a simile, that is, in the popular parlance, a riot." Cameron Rogers

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Jl 5 '25 600w

Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 60w

"Recruits in the wake of his pen will become acquainted with essays done in a loose, monotonous manner with a sometimes remarkable humor, rarely wit, and only revealing in part the true evidences of a really genial personality."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:162 S 26 '25 360w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 23 '25 150w

COBB, WILLIAM BRUCE, ed. Inferior criminal courts act of the city of New York; annotated. 529p $4 Macmillan

343 Courts—New York (city). Criminal procedure. New York (city) Court of special sessions. New York (city) Magistrates' courts. Court rules 25-8691

"Judge Cobb has been a City Magistrate in New York for many years. This book is designed primarily for lawyers, being an annotation of the statute in question with its various amendments. It will be of interest as well to the social workers in the city because of the close relation the minor courts of the city bear to their work. Hundreds of thousands of New York's many millions of people annually come in contact with these courts."—Hist Outlook

"While social workers and sociologists elsewhere may regret that the book is not written directly from their viewpoint, it does not wholly follow the stereotyped legal pattern. It is sprinkled with keen comments on the operation of the statutes and its style is distinctly more readable than the ordinary case book." J. D. M. + — Hist Outlook 16:342 N '25 130w

"This excellent book though written for lawyers covers a much wider field than its name implies. . . . This is the most complete work yet compiled for the guidance of lawyer and layman through the mazes of the inferior courts." L: Fabricant

+ Survey 54:639 S 15 '25 250w

COBLENTZ, STANTON A. Decline of man. 263p $2.75 Minton, Balch & co.

901 Civilization. Man 25-8701

In the swift process of birth, development and decay, species after species has flourished, and then has vanished forever from the face of the earth. Is man doomed to like extinction? Is the human race already old and facing death? Is civilization self-destructive? In the light of incontrovertible fact the author considers these questions, answers them in the affirmative, and offers as solution a program whereby man, by taking thought, may yet save his species from extinction.

"It is a pleasure to read writing so lucid, and criticism of our civilization so intelligent. But, since his book is a reworking of ideas absorbed from others into a pattern of his own its value is the value of the original writings and therefore varies almost from page to page."

— + Bookm 61:487 Je '25 250w

"The book is arresting and provocative. It is popular in presentation, so much so that the layman may question its scientific accuracy. It will have little or no effect, as the last thing that egotistical man worries about is the human race in general."

Ind 114:563 My 16 '25 200w

"Mr. Coblentz has written, in vivid literary style, a thoroughly interesting and largely important book of popular science. He has a real concern for human welfare and thus has fired his argument with prophetic passion. It is at once an able and a noble performance." J: H. Holmes

+ Lit R p4 My 23 '25 580w

Reviewed by C: W. Thompson

N Y Times p7 Mr 15 '25 1800w

"It is all very baffling, and perhaps one man's theory is as good as another's. Mr. Coblentz has offered his to the world, and if man is going to decline in spite of it, the least he can do is to decline with thanks."

N Y Tribune p9 Ap 5 '25 320w

COBLENTZ, STANTON A., comp. Modern British lyrics; an anthology. 218p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

821.08 English poetry—Collections 25-18854

The principles of selection are the same as in his "Modern American lyrics." The verse chosen is written in the traditional forms and meters and is selected above all for the quality of music it possesses. Also, it has been the compiler's aim to choose the less well known poets and poems that have not previously found their way into the anthologies.

"Not a collection to make Americans envious. Though it contains, of course, some fine poems, it is not, technically or artistically, a stimulating volume. There is a sameness, a sameness that runs dangerously near the trite."

— + Bookm 62:510 D '25 160w

"It seems that the old standbys are really the best poets in this book. I must say that I enjoyed Thomas Hardy, Robert Bridges, Laurence Binyon, James Elroy Flecker, and Ralph Hodgson more than those writers whom Mr. Coblentz has so venturesomely—and so far praiseworthy—found in English magazines, and in books hardly known in America at all."

Eli Siegel

+ — Lit R p2 N 28 '25 550w

"The defects of his book, its omissions and mistaken selections, even when such are not matters of mere opinion, could be discussed to the length of several columns. But it would be ungracious and ungrateful to go into detail over the body of Mr. Coblentz who has at least printed an unusually large number of poems by unknown people (many of whom are equally unknown in England) who, in more than one instance, have never even published their verse in volume form."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:229 O 17 '25 250w

COCTEAU, JEAN. Grand écart; tr. from the French by Lewis Galantière. 153p $2 Putnam 25-18770

The story describes the frivolous adventures—chiefly amorous—of a modern Parisian young man. "Its theme is not an unusual theme, and Jacques Forestier is not an uncommon possessor of a third latch-key, Mademoiselle Germaine is not an uncommon cocotte, and Nestor Osiris is not uncommon among elderly, affluent and deceived lovers. The despair of Jacques when he was supplanted by a certain Peter Stopwell is not unique, and Peter Stopwell is not distinguished from the usual healthy, well-washed young Englishman of French fiction. Neither is Jacques's draft of anonymous poison unusual in such novels—nor his rescue, nor his convalescence on the family estates, nor his return to Paris in the safe custody of his mother."—N Y Tribune

"Cocteau shows a keen wit in this novel, a suave irony and a very complete sophistication. He plainly has no great respect for that civilization of which he is a part, for he does not hesitate to turn it to ridicule when the mood strikes him."

Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 300w

"Jean Cocteau skirts the proprieties and tumbles over into all the improprieties. But he does so with such casualness and with such modest immodesty and with such ellipsis and with such reticence that we can't imagine anyone objecting too vigorously to his unconventionality. Those who will enjoy it will enjoy it for what its obscurities imply; and those who do not enjoy it will not understand it at all. And there are those who will enjoy it because they do not understand it." W. Y.

Lit R p5 S 26 '25 200w

"One of the pleasantest things about such smart young Frenchmen as Morand, Giraudoux, and Cocteau is the ease with which their writings are rendered into English. They have completely shaken off the tiresome cadences of Anatole France and have adopted a staccato bizarre style abounding in colloquialisms. The Grand Ecart is thoroughly characteristic of this type of writing at its best. It is capital entertainment throughout."

+ Living Age 327:339 N 7 '25 100w

"The technique is one not wholly unfamiliar to readers of much modern poetry, and in prose we have something not wholly unrelated in the novels of our own Maxwell Bodenheim. Yet it must be confessed that Cocteau uses this style in a manner which proves that it is by no means wholly an affectation, and unlike most he even succeeds in achieving a cumulative effect."

J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 122:38 Ja 13 '26 1100w

"'The Grand Ecart' is very amusing, but it gives one the feeling that to the amusing M. Cocteau would be willing to sacrifice anything, even his reputation as an artist. Some of his jokes are as obvious as Mr. Leacock's, and no more amusing; and many of them are very bad indeed. Still, the book does not attempt very much; it is a trifle, designed to be enjoyed and forgotten."

Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 38:44 D 19 '25 100w

"M. Cocteau's laughter is as false as the characters which excite it. The precision with which the pattern is drawn, the completeness with which the artistic result is consummated, is part of the inheritance which M. Cocteau has received from Prevost and Mérimée and Maupassant."

+ — New Repub 45:144 D 23 '25 160w

New Statesman 26:supxxiv D 12 '25 120w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 26:359 Ja 2 '26 600w

"'Le Grand Ecart' has lost a good deal in translation—so much more than it could afford to lose, that it is not very far from literary bankruptcy."

Frances Newman

— N Y Tribune p8 O 4 '25 560w

"Concerning the quality of these translations, there has been much discussion. People have pointed out, quite justly, that to speak of Saint-Eugene as 'the Back Bay of Algiers' is hardly an exact rendering of Cocteau's phrase. Still, there is life in Mr. Galantière's expressions, and his work in general is so far above the average that, until the day when other translators are forced to acknowledge their more grievous blunders, he should receive nothing but praise. As for the novel itself, 'The Grand Ecart' is far superior to 'Thomas the Impostor.'"

Malcolm Cowley

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:335 N 28 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p864 D 10 '25 200w

COCTEAU, JEAN. Thomas the impostor; tr. from the French with an introd. by Lewis Galantière. 154p $1.75 Appleton

25-2660

A Peter Pan sort of person is Thomas of Fontenoy who lives in a Never-Never land of his own creation, peopling it to suit his whim with divers figures of himself in taking roles. So convincing is his posing that he cheats everyone, but always charmingly, and besides no one knows it is cheating, least of all perhaps, Thomas himself. The war provides the perfect setting for his play. He lies—no, one must say pretends—his way into the life, the affections and the ambulance corps of the good Princess de Bormes. Established there Thomas continues his gay impostures to the dramatic close of his career.

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd

Bookm 61:353 My '25 160w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 7 '25 320w

"'For my part,' Mr. Galantière declares, 'I believe that "Thomas the Impostor," in which I find poetry and intelligence, wit and measure, grace and freshness and dignity, as well as a superior technical competence, is in the "direct line" of classic French fiction.' One may not altogether share Mr. Galantière's enthusiasm for the book. Yet it is impossible to deny that it is a charming and graceful extravaganza, suave and finished in style, and thoroughly workmanlike in execution. And it is eminently readable." J: W. Crawford

+ — Int Bk R p487 Je '25 350w

"We can't praise the book for we see too clearly the mixture of good and bad. But we can record that we found it fairly amusing, and interesting as illustrating one trend in modern French literature." G. E. H.

— + Lit R p10 F '28 '25 350w

"If M. Cocteau is, quite as much as anything else, merely amusing himself, he is amusing the most conscious part of himself. The nonsense does not ring true. It sounds fabricated." J: Eversharp

New Repub 43:352 Ag 19 '25 250w

N Y Times p9 F 8 '25 600w

"M. Cocteau's performance is as unerring, as full of virtue as a skilled tight-rope dancer's, and as irrelevant." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p6m F 8 '25 620w

"It seems to me a slight and amusing fantasy about a young French rascal in war time whose successful effronteries were terminated only by a casual bullet. Perhaps the excellence, the aroma, of the tale are of a kind not to be carried over alive from one tongue to another." H. W. Boynton

— Outlook 139:346 Mr 4 '25 250w

"Thomas the Impostor" is neither a great book nor a little book: it is a readable, excellent novel of the second rank."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:32 Ag 8 '25 220w

"There is a sufficiency of wit in the book but it is strained and inconsequent. The translation adds difficulties to the reader."

— + Spec 134:603 Ap 11 '25 200w

"A slight and rather trivial story, brilliant in spots, individualistic throughout, but leaving one with a feeling of superficiality and lack of conviction."

— + Springf'd Republican p7a My 17 '25 200w

"The American translator has worked with a careful literalness which sometimes has ludicrous results. The translation is stiff, awkward and follows Gallic idioms."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p239 Ap 2 '25 470w

CODY, HIRAM ALFRED. Master revenge. 298p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

24-24810

"The story of Nathan Strong, an ex-convict, who has been wronged and who revenges the 'villain' by forgiving him. Nathan feels himself akin to Dante and to David Grayson. He loves justice and Helen, who has been married by the villain during Nathan's stay in prison. And then when Nathan has a chance to control the villain, when he has him in his power he forgives him. That is the master revenge; forgiveness."—Sat R of Lit

Boston Transcript p2 N 15 '24 100w

Reviewed by Stuart Henry

Int Bk R p182 F '25 70w

"It is all deliciously absurd with its hackneyed characters and with the weather so absolutely at Nathan's command, expressing all his moods."

— Sat R of Lit 1:330 N 29 '24 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 15 '25 130w

COE, GEORGE ALBERT. What ails our youth? 97p $1.25 Scribner

173 Youth. Education. Social problems 24-30001

"The question of the relation of the habits and attitudes of modern young people to general social conditions, to new knowledge, and to the present state of education, is taken up in this monograph. Certain characteristic faults are found in modern youth, due to their particular environment and to the present state of civilization. Education and religion are not doing all they should for the improvement of youth. However, the outlook is hopeful, and forces of progress are at work."—School Life

Booklist 21:180 F '25 70w

"The book is decidedly worthwhile in itself, but also it will serve the further purpose of stimulating thought in a field where sanity, sympathy, and helpfulness are needed. You may differ with Dr. Coe, but you are likely to be grateful to him." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 60:adv F '25 200w

"A sympathetic and yet searching diagnosis of a much discussed question."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 260w

Cleveland p26 Mr '25

"The chapters are short, there is no wandering, no cynicism; the questions are honestly put, they are vital. The answers are honest, too, and not oracular, but reasoned out with a sober intent to realize the things that matter." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:158 O '25 750w

"The book presents, in a stimulating manner, one of the major problems of education at all levels." G. T. Buswell

+ El School J 26:72 S '25 450w

J Religion 5:109 Ja '25 100w

"Professor Coe's book is a splendid example of the fact that youth is a spirit rather than an age. It is the rare individual who, though himself living in his second half-century, can interpret the faults of youth in such a way as to win the assent of even the most critical among them. And yet Professor Coe has done just this. The person set in his ways, who is pained by new ideas, should pass this book by for it will cause him to think; the open-minded will give it a hearty welcome." Clifford Manshardt

+ J Religion 5:214 Mr '25 520w

Nation 121:287 S 9 '25 160w

"The book is not intended for casual reading. On the other hand, it is not a long-winded trial of patience. It is a credit to the author and is worth the reading if it no more than brings an issue into the reader's mind."

N Y Times p28 Ja 4 '25 500w

School Life 10:120 F '25 80w

"The author analyzes adolescence with keen insight. The volume should prove profitable reading for all who work with young people and are interested in them. Its style should make a rather popular appeal." C. V. Good

+ School R 33:235 Mr '25 550w

"A clear and forceful critique of present-day education." J. S. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 27 '25 800w

"His diagnosis is remarkable for its clarity and for the courage with which it goes to the roots of the trouble." B. L.

+ Survey 53:491 Ja 15 '25 120w

COFFIN, ROBERT PETER TRISTRAM. Book of crowns and cottages. 186p il $2.50 Yale univ. press

914.2 Oxford university. Oxford—Description. England—Description and travel 25-19514

A Rhodes scholar at Oxford writes of student life in an historic setting, of a rose-embowered cottage at Iffley, of Christmas in North Wales and of wanderings over the Devonshire downs. The quiet charm of the essays is reproduced in the drawings which illustrate the book.

"Written in an entertaining and sympathetic manner."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '25 150w

"The atmosphere of the lovely city of spires and bells and lawns is, perhaps, better suggested by the author's words than by the somewhat amateurish drawings from his pencil which il-illustrate it. Text and illustrations are alike an act of piety, a tribute, to happy days which still endure in memory."

COFFIN, R. P: T.—Continued

+ — N Y Tribune p10 N 8 '25 250w

"He conveys his enthusiasm very well, on the whole, and tells us many intimate details about his friends and his family. Perhaps a longer stay at Oxford would have cleared his style of some alternate patches of muddiness and lushness." Earle Walbridge

+ — Outlook 141:449 N 18 '25 150w

COFFMAN, RAMON. Child's story of the human race. 462p il $3.50 Dodd

909 History, Universal 24-25761

The wealth of material in this good-sized volume has been well arranged and interestingly handled. The sections are short, the text attractively spaced on the page and so profusely illustrated as to make the child's reading a pleasure. The illustrations are from sources contemporaneous with the period described.

"It is simply and sympathetically written from the point of view of a somewhat too rational American, it is not too scrappy, and shows some effort to avoid vulgarity both in the writing and the illustrations."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup374 D 5 '25 100w

"A criticism of style may be superfluous in connection with a book of this kind, but all good influences are of value in a fine book, so it seems a pity that the English here is monotonous in its succession of short, choppy sentences. The intention is clear and its motive correct—that is, a child's mind grasps a short sentence and discards a long one, relaxing its effort halfway. So the adjustment is merely a matter of degree. Mr. Coffman's English could well be a little more flowing and possess more character and dignity, but we should not want to relinquish any of its admirable directness and simplicity." M. C. Dodd

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:511 F 7 '25 600w

"A book through which a child would browse with eagerness."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:91 Mr '25

"This book will be read with delight by children of ten to twelve years and older; they will find all the facts they need about the wars of history in order to be informed and yet, at the same time, they will learn vastly more about the constructive achievements of mankind through the ages."

+ World Tomorrow 8:318 O '25 160w

COHAN, GEORGE MICHAEL. Twenty years on Broadway. 264p il $3 Harper

B or 92 Theater. Actors and actresses 25-8244

George M. Cohan tells in an easy colloquial way of the years it took him to get to Broadway and the success he made there. It is a cheerful story of the ups and downs of a career which he began as a youngster, as the bad boy of the Four Cohans family troupe, and followed with zest even when the road was hard going. Since 1904 when he first reached Broadway, he has written and produced many plays and controlled or had an active interest in numerous theatrical attractions.

Booklist 21:378 JI '25

Cleveland p80 JI '25

"Not only can he see a joke on himself, but he can enjoy it and make us enjoy it. He communicates his interest in himself to his readers. He is immitigably attractive because of his kindness, his gentleness of spirit, his innate generosity, and above all his unquenchable vivacity and vitality. He laughs at himself, and we like him for it." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p452 Je '25 900w

Reviewed by C: P. Sawyer

Lit R p6 My 16 '25 1250w

"Speed is perhaps the only quality which this autobiography can boast. It is frank, of course. For the future historian of our manners it will be a document of some importance bearing upon the show business during a certain quarter-century. For us now it is chiefly interesting as the story of an attractive, brash American who, discovering very early what he wanted to do and never in the least dreaming that there was anything else to do, did it with a furious and comical energy which in itself is characteristic of the age." Mark Van Doren

Nation 120:374 My 20 '25 330w

"No one will be deceived by the puny book which George M. Cohan has written about himself. It is a bright book, full of verve and cheapness, and it tells a few facts about the progress of Cohan from the honkytonks to Broadway. There are a few amusing episodes. And it is all chaff." Gilbert Seldes

— New Repub 42:291 My 6 '25 1250w

"It is unqualifiably a disappointment. Mr. Cohan has written a book that could easily have been written by any of ten thousand hack writers equipped with a memorandum of the important dates in Cohan's acting and producing life. Save for one or two inconsequential anecdotes, there is nothing in the book that could not be had from a reading of newspaper files and the exercise of a not necessarily lively imagination." H. J. Mankiewicz

+ — N Y Times p11 Ap 19 '25 1500w

"This autobiographical stunt, crude and screaming, is small recompense for the better plays he might still do, as age mellows him." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p5 My 10 '25 1000w

"If he tried hard enough he could write a brilliant book. He knows so much of life and the laughter of it that he couldn't write a bad book if he tried. With 'Twenty Years on Broadway' he didn't try." Wells Root

— N Y World p6m Ap 5 '25 550w

"Much that he has to say about his early struggles and the conditions under which young variety actors of the Tony Pastor period rose to fame is well worth reading. The chief trouble with Mr. Cohan's book is his habit of talking about himself and, in a lesser degree, about his kin. He might have made a really valuable contribution to theatrical history had he considered the large and not unimportant world that lies outside of the Four Cohans."

+ — Outlook 141:57 S 9 '25 550w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

St Louis p358 S '25

Reviewed by Gilbert Seldes

Sat R of Lit 1:741 My 9 '25 500w

Springfd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 90w

Springfd Republican p12 Ap 15 '25 500w

"The book gives a picture of a troupier's life, of vaudeville ideals and loyalties, of the development of an individual talent, but avoids any real study of the writer's relation to the making of a peculiarly American type of theatre or of his attitude towards its present day problems and interests."

Theatre Arts Mo 9:490 JI '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:140 My '25

COHEN, ISRAEL. Journal of a Jewish traveler. 288p il $4 Dodd [6s Lane]

296 Zionism [25-25213]

The author, an ardent Zionist, tells of his pilgrimage from country to country in the endeavor to awaken in his co-religionists enthusiasm and a sense of responsibility for the Back to Palestine project. He describes the varying success of his mission to the Jewish communities of Australasia, India and the Far East.

"Somebody was needed to tell us how it goes with Jewry, not only in the Holy Land, but the world over, and nobody could be better qualified for such a task than Mr. Cohen." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 900w

New Statesman 24:640 Mr 7 '25 260w

"This is a book which will doubtless appeal to the enthusiastic Zionists. The author's zeal for the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine is ardent enough to command the admiration even of the Philistine, and his knowledge of the subject, is evidently extensive. The mere outsider, however, would like something more substantial than the pious optimism of the last chapter to convince him of the security of the New Jewish settlements from Arab hostility."

+ — Sat R 140:48 Jl 11 '25 160w

"Mr. Cohen writes unusually well. He knows he has something worthy to say, and he says it in a style that is careful, clear and calm. The bare facts and information he has to present become in his book an intimate record of travel flavored with personal anecdotes and tinted with a dry crackling humor."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:247 O 24 '25 350w

"The life of the small communities held together by racial and religious feeling, sometimes found in out of the way places, sometimes in the midst of great towns, are here described with a simplicity which is fascinating."

+ Spec 134:728 My 2 '25 580w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p131 F 26 '25 920w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Bigger and blacker. 313p $2 Little

25-9513

In his latest collection of Negro stories Mr Cohen pictures the fortunes and misfortunes of the famous moving picture company—The midnight pictures corporation, inc.—and its various members. Contents: Every little movie; Double double; The bathing booty; A little child shall feed them; Inside inflammation; Miss Directed; The lion and the uniform; Write and wrong.

Booklist 22:32 O '25

"As usual, Mr. Cohen invents clever titles, still depending on the use of verbal perversions. Here are broad humored ephemeral stories over which a reader must be indeed stern and literal if he does not chuckle with—appropriately we use a 'picture' term—continuity." S. L. C.

Boston Transcript p5 My 23 '25 380w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 50w

"To Cohen (as fully as to the man who found the white Eskimos and to the finder of the pygmies) belongs the high credit of discovering a brand new race. But neither Eskimo nor pygmy has added largely to the laughter of the world. The super-niche in that special hall of explorer fame belongs unchallengedly to Cohen." A. P. Terhune

+ Lit R p3 Je 13 '25 520w

"His stories, cleverly enough constructed, are never more than farce dyed by an obvious sort of humor; his characters are never more than flashy burlesques of city types. The fact that the stories are funny is at once an excuse for their existence and the reason for their unusual popularity."

+ — N Y Times p24 My 17 '25 320w

"The only difference between Mr. Cohen's Negroes and the vaudeville variety is that Mr. Cohen's are funny. He has given them a fantastic merriment that is always lacking in the burlesque show or in vaudeville." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 21 '25 420w

Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 80w

Sat R of Lit 2:89 Ag 29 '25 160w

COHEN, OCTAVUS ROY. Iron chalice. 290p $2 Little

25-16898

"Alan Beckwith, young, healthy, but jobless and in debt, contracts with a notorious leader of the underworld for thirteen months of life with $20,000, to spend. In return he is to take out a life insurance policy for $100,000, and to marry a certain young woman whom he does not know. He is to live with her for the whole thirteen months, and at the end of the period, when he has committed suicide (or been killed should he fail) the insurance money will go to his wife and thence to his so-called beneficiary." (Sat R of Lit) The outcome is the conventional happy ending.

"Mr. Cohen has spun a tale that is readable, and that is about the best that we can say of it. He is a master craftsman so his plot is worked out to the finest degree of perfection, and he holds the reader in suspense until the last line of the story."

— + Boston Transcript p6 S 23 '25 320w

"What a shame and a pity! Octavus Roy Cohen, the genial chronicler of the darker side of life in Bummin'ham, can't write very good adventure stories. Not if this is a sample." R W. Thompson

— Lit R p6 S 26 '25 380w

"It is all amusing and diverting, and while you know from the beginning that the hero will come out victorious, you are interested in Mr. Cohen's persistent cleverness with plot and suspense." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p17 O 11 '25 700w

"Mr. Cohen is happier when he is chronicling the adventures of Florian Slappey, and the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise."

— N Y World p4m S 6 '25 160w

"An original invention, but more—much more—is needed to make a good novel."

— Outlook 141:289 O 21 '25 60w

"An ingenious plot that peters out at the end, that is all. Surely Mr. Cohen must have written this in the earlier days when he was glad to appear in any magazine, and when the Saturday Evening Post seemed remote and unattainable; or else with an eye on the screen rights. For it is no more than a cheap thriller. The style is labored."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:300 N 14 '25 300w

COLCORD, JOANNA CARVER, comp. Roll and go; songs of American sailormen; with an introd. by Lincoln Colcord. 118p il $5 Bobbs

811.08 Chanties. Sea songs 24-29424

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:189 F '25

"A classic of the days of sailormen that could have been written only by a real sailor, so full is it of the very spirit of the days of sailing ships" Arthur Mason

+ Bookm 60:774 F '25 180w

"In her compilation of sea-chanties Joanna C. Colcord has performed two, if not three, valuable services: the first is to those students and collectors of folk-songs, and particularly of occupational sea-songs, who until now have had no really complete American collection; the second is to the general public seeking somewhere the glamour of American sailing days. The third service, tho incidental, consists of illustrations, pictures of sailing ships reproduced from rare prints and paintings." Kenneth Fuesse

Int Bk R p594 Ag '25 450w

"Descended from five generations of blue-water sailors and born and brought up at sea, Miss Colcord is able to record the versions of sailors' songs actually used in the nineties on American ships, and to accompany her texts by full notes on the origins and various uses of the chanteys. Her work is invaluable to the student of folksong, and it will be more than a misfortune if it does not become known to the public at large." G. F. Whicher

+ Lit R p4 Ja 10 '25 750w

"Miss Colcord began with the priceless heritage of a girlhood almost wholly passed at sea aboard the sailing ship of which her father was the master. She has supplemented her own memory with talks with old sailors and thus has brought together a mass of new material. There have previously been some good collections of sea chanties made in England, but Miss Colcord's is the first of any consequence in this country, to whose contributions she has fortunately paid special attention. In most cases she supplies the music as well as the words, a difficult feat since parts of many chanties are more of a shout than a song and sometimes more of a wail than either." Arthur Warner

COLCORD, J. C., comp—Continued

+ Nation 120:428 Ap 15 '25 300w

"The unusual result is a book of sea songs signed with a woman's name which is as wise in sea lore and as genuinely sailor-like as the 'saltiest' ancient mariner could ask." H. Beston

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 8 '25 650w

"Really fine and loving work." W. P. Beazell

+ N Y World p9e D 28 '24 1300w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 28 '25 300w

Survey 54:307 Je 1 '25 750w

"This collection of American sailors' chanties and ballads is of considerable interest and appears to have been compiled with care."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 29 '25 150w

COLE, CHARLES BUCKINGHAM. Elements of commercial law; under the editorship of Thomas Conyngham. 384p $1.48 Houghton

347 Commercial law 25-6317

"This work has been prepared for those who seek a clear understanding of the elements of commercial law with the least expenditure of time and effort. The essentials of the laws of business have been selected and stated plainly in good English. Technical language has been used only where the reader must know the technical expression to get the substance of the law itself. . . . The purpose of this work is to give its readers such general knowledge of the principles of law as will enable them to avoid law-suits."—Preface

St Louis p403 N '25

"The author has selected the essentials of the law of business and has presented them plainly and clearly and, it may be added, briefly. Anyone who wishes to familiarize himself with the elements of the law governing business relationships would profit by reading the book. It should, moreover, meet the needs of those instructors of commercial law who are looking for a clear and lucid text." I. N. Edwards

+ School R 33:792 D '25 350w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD. Life of William Cobbett; with a chapter on Rural rides by F. E. Green. 468p $4.50 Harcourt [13s Collins]

B or 92 Cobbett, William [25-26566]

"Mr. Cole guides his readers through the mazes of this extraordinary career, keeping their minds on the motives and aims that provide the clue. . . . The immense power Cobbett wielded was shown in his influence on the agitation for Parliamentary reform, for his intervention changed the whole scale and temper of the struggle. 'The Political Register' was a weapon of incomparable power, and he used it systematically to make the common people of England self-conscious, self-respecting and articulate. . . . This was his mission—to spread the spirit of independence wherever he could among the English people. How he tried to do this, where he succeeded, where he failed, the bent of his genius, the qualities of his character, the romantic story of his life—these are adequately set out for the first time."—New Statesman

"The book, in its trustworthy treatment of an entire literature, is indispensable to anyone bothering to acquaint himself with the departure Englishmen now make from those priggish Whig historians with whom we have all grown up to be familiar. The author makes several far-fetched comparisons of Cobbett to Whitman, but this is a little thing. The precision and fidelity of his achievement cannot be overestimated." J. B. Wheelwright

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '25 320w

Booklist 21:378 J1 '25

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 7 '24 2950w

Dial 79:79 J1 '25 120w

"Mr. Cole has criticized the biographical materials with admirable care and judgment, and has illuminated them with historical background. His book is a valuable addition to the rapidly increasing number of studies in the Napoleonic War and post-war period." Emery Neff

+ Nation 121:308 S 16 '25 750w

"Mr. Cole's book on Cobbett is one of those biographies that illuminate the life of a period as well as the life of a man, for it is a contribution of striking importance to the history of the eventful years that separate the outbreak of the French revolution from the passing of the first Reform Bill. The period cannot be understood without Cobbett or Cobbett without the period."

+ New Statesman 24:477 Ja 31 '25 1900w

"Admirable 'Life' of the great publicist." J. St L. Strachey

+ N Y Times p10 F 22 '25 2900w

"Mr. Cole's new biography is very well done and will take its place as the best in the field. It corrects many misconceptions about disputed points in Cobbett's career answering particularly the charge of cowardice which Cobbett had to meet when he fled from England to get out of the reach of the angry Tory government." A. L. Sachar

+ N Y Tribune p11 My 31 '25 580w

Pratt p35 autumn '25

"To say that Mr. Cole has written the best life of Cobbett yet published is faint praise for his achievement. What he has done is to write the first really adequate life of a great Englishman, which is valuable not only for its contribution to historical research, but for the sheer delight with which it can be read." H. J. Laski

+ Sat R of Lit 1:725 My 2 '25 1100w

Reviewed by J. St L. Strachey

Spec 134:241 F 14 '25 1950w

"A biography not to be overlooked by the student of social history. The bibliographies at the end are valuable." W. E. Brooks

+ Survey 55:260 N 15 '25 320w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p36 Ja 15 '25 1950w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD. Robert Owen. 267p $4 Little

B or 92 Owen, Robert

[L25-94]

In his life of Robert Owen, 1771-1858, English social reformer and pioneer in many movements, Mr. Cole dwells chiefly on his work at the New Lanark mills where his schemes for the education and amelioration of the working people came to have a national and even European significance. The later years of Owen's life are lightly passed over, as well as his communistic experiment at New Harmony, Indiana.

Booklist 22:70 N '25

"It is an able, sympathetic, but restrained life of modern British Socialism's father, the pioneer of Trade Unionism, founder of the first cooperative communities, humanitarian idealist and Utopian, the greatest living force of his time in educational and labor reforms."

+ Bookm 62:222 O '25 100w

"Vivid as a narrative and amply supplied with personal detail, the volume excels as an all-round judgment of Owen." Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 22 '25 2250w

"This short, well-balanced study of Mr. Cole, though it adds little that is new to our sum of knowledge of Owen, is valuable from his special knowledge of the intricate history of the early years of the labor movement in England, and is thus more illuminating than the life of Podmore." M. I.

+ Int J Ethics 36:99 O '25 700w

"Mr. Cole's 'Owen' makes no claim to be as important a book as his 'Cobbett.' If it is a little disappointing, it is because we have learnt to expect a great deal from Mr. Cole, and because, unlike his 'Cobbett,' it contains little that is new. For this indeed there is good reason, since Podmore's 'Life' contained most of the important facts of Owen's career, while no full biography of Cobbett existed until Mr. Cole supplied one. He has, therefore, rightly decided on a much shorter biography of Owen, and his book is more easy to read and better balanced than Podmore's."

+ Nation and Ath 37:298 Je 6 '25 1450w

"For fifteen years Podmore's monumental Life was out of print and almost unprocurable. In 1923 it was republished, and now we have a second biography, not pretending to the fullness of its predecessor, but adequate for all ordinary readers, and far in advance of any of the shorter books."

+ New Statesman 25:232 Je 6 '25 850w

"I find Mr. Cole's sketch a lamentable failure as a portrait, and though I have little more than a bowing acquaintance with Owen literature, I have found in the book remarkably little that was new in either fact or interpretation." H: R. Mussey

+ N Y Tribune p16 O 11 '25 150w

"Mr. Cole has succeeded admirably. He is sympathetic but always able to see the humorous aspects of the failings of Owen." J. D. Magee

+ No Am 222:366 D '25 1350w

R of Rs 72:334 S '25 180w

"Mr. Cole has achieved the ideal of making his subject live and his biography interesting without calling in a wearisome array of documents at every turn."

+ Sat R 139:530 My 16 '25 280w

"To Mr. Cole we are indebted for a keen, lucid, and sympathetic account of his life. His book is never dull. However, he does not fully stress the place of Owen in the history of socialism." L: Rockow

+ Sat R of Lit 2:493 Ja 16 '26 1300w

"If we cannot see Owen through the eyes of his contemporaries we cannot help feeling that we might be allowed to see him more frequently through Mr. Cole's. As his general editor puts it: 'Since (biographies) are pictures it is, I fear, impossible to paint them without a touch of art.' Mr. Cole is unfortunately too conscientious to fill up the gaps by being an artist in this sense. None the less, he makes one or two shrewd remarks upon Owen, the man, if Owen remains nebulous. Owenism and its relation to the tragic England of those years is treated, as we should expect Mr. Cole to treat it, luminously and suggestively."

+ Spec 134:1014 Je 20 '25 900w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 17 '25 1250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p311 My 7 '25 1750w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD, and COLE, MRS MARGARET ISABEL (POST-GATE) (MRS G. D. H. COLE). Death of a millionaire. 383p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Collins]

25-12984

A big business deal in which an English nobleman plays a crooked part, a murder in which the victim comes back from the dead to live for a moment, only to die and vanish again, and a man who is himself if he is not one of two other men, these are the warp and woof of this mystery yarn. Superintendent Wilson of Scotland Yard has a difficult time picking out the pattern, but even the arch criminal pays tribute to his ability.

Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 280w

"A clever story is presented deftly, interesting to the very end, although there isn't a 'shocker' in it. Trails are covered and uncovered in a most workmanlike manner and the culprit and his pursuers use the most modern methods of flight. It is a capital yarn." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p4 O 17 '25 120w

"Very skillfully have Mr. and Mrs. Cole entangled their threads, and very skillfully do they unravel them, in a story swiftly carried along by action and dialogue. Perhaps the most brilliant thing they do is to throw a little light from the angle of the left on Big Business and other matters of interest to us—and this without impairing in the least the narrative charms of a most entertaining story."

+ Living Age 325:649 Je 20 '25 350w

Nation 121:738 D 23 '25 20w

"It is a very good detective story. But it would have been still better if fresh ingredients had not been thrown in half way through." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 36:892 Mr 28 '25 50w

"The Death of a Millionaire is one of the best detective stories we have read for years."

+ New Statesman 24:668 Mr 14 '25 420w

"No detective story could wish for more loving care and consideration than G. D. H. and Margaret Cole have expended upon their brain-child. The humorous attitude maintained by the Coles toward the agitations they have summoned up adds still another charm to their really entertaining yarn."

+ N Y Tribune p16 O 11 '25 180w

"A tale no more improbable than the conventions permit, and well told."

+ Outlook 141:451 N 18 '25 250w

"Mr. and Mrs. Cole write, not merely well, but with distinction and humor. 'The Death of a Millionaire' is elaborate and ingenious, and, though there is small attempt at characterization except in one instance, I suppose the book could scarcely be very much better of its kind." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 139:273 Mr 14 '25 450w

"Mr. Cole must have enjoyed himself very much in writing this clever story, with its delicate savour of satire."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Mr 19 '25 250w

COLLINGWOOD, ROBIN GEORGE. Outlines of a philosophy of art. (World's manuals) 104p $1 Oxford

701 Art 25-26891

"The greater part of this essay is an attempt to give us a general conception of art, the forms of beauty, the beauty of nature, the work of art, the life of art, and art and the life of the spirit. Within the general conception of art are contained certain sub-topics: e.g., art in its generic nature, art in its specific nature, the monadism of art; the sublime, the comic, beauty in general; genius and taste, formal art, imaginative art, and the like."—Boston Transcript

"This philosophy is by no means unique or original, for there is a distinct similarity between this and the works of Coleridge and Croce. It is a book which cannot be passed over lightly, but requires intense studying. Much is to be found in it which will be of use to the beginner in the study of the philosophy of art. The author has attempted and succeeded to a great extent in revealing his subject matter in an easy and understandable form."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 350w

"If this manual has a fault, it is not that it is ill-done but that it is done too well. The author has instilled into his account of art a complete philosophy of life. Perhaps it was impossible to separate the two, but it demands of the reader a more than usual concentration of his attention. On the other hand, any one who wants a clear and concise account of Croce's æsthetic doctrine will find it admirably presented in the first chapter."

COLLINGWOOD, R. G.—Continued

+ Nature 116:94 J1 18 '25 80w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 24 '25 60w

"Those interested in the unchanging fashion of propounding a philosophy of art will find it intelligibly critical and often stimulating."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Ap 16 '25 250w

COLLINGWOOD, ROBIN GEORGE. Speculum mentis; or, The map of knowledge. 328p $4.20 Oxford [12s 6d Milford]

192 Philosophy 25-4224

"This is a version of the neo-Hegelian philosophy. Mr. Collingwood begins with a very cogent argument as to the character of philosophy; he perceives and very well states the defect of our contemporary civilization in its lack of spiritual or emotional unity. For him, as for the Greeks and the scholastics, philosophy should not be a mere body of scientific truths, but a living and unifying attitude or spiritual expression. He discusses art, religion, and science as three stages or aspects of the full life of the mind; and he then, in the manner of Croce, passes to history in the peculiar neo-Hegelian sense of the word and to philosophy. He ends, as in duty bound, with the Absolute."—Int J Ethics

"This is a pleasantly written book, though the 'superior' air of Oxford blows through it. It contains a good deal that is interesting and stimulating to thought, but as a contribution to philosophy it cannot be said to get us much further on our journey towards truth." B. C. A. W.

+ — Cath World 122:128 O '25 550w

"His work is valuable for its hints and criticisms and his 'asides,' but his main thesis has the weakness of Croce's airy imaginings." C. D. B.

+ — Int J Ethics 35:323 Ap '25 250w

"As its title indicates, this volume aims in a sense to be 'The Mirror of the Mind,' and no other book of recent years has so clearly explored the territory of thought. With a persuasiveness that carries the reader inevitably on, with illustrations that clarify complex problems, anticipating objections with reasoned refutation, the author moves with startling certainty among the so-called provinces of the mind, analyzing the various forms of expression developed in man." J. T. Shipley

+ Lit R p5 My 9 '25 850w

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Amateur photographer's handbook. 362p il $2.50 Crowell

770 Photography 25-9265

This practical and comprehensive handbook covers a wide scope. Beginning with a simple explanation of light, it passes on to lenses—their action and how they are made—the kind of camera to buy, the whole technique of amateur photography, photographic stunts and tricks, motion pictures, color photographs, etc. Many diagrams are given and formulas for developing and printing.

Booklist 22:19 O '25

"This very practical book seems to cover even a wider subject than its name implies. Mr. Collins' style is readable and pictures amplify his generous explanations."

+ Boston Transcript p8 J1 25 '25 80w

"Illustrations and diagrams lend their aid to this useful volume."

+ N Y Tribune p7 Je 14 '25 60w

Pratt p24 autumn '25

"A good book for the amateur. Very elementary, not intended for the expert, and would tell him little that he does not know. Should be very useful in a library. Good index increases its value for reference."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:196 J1 '25

COLLINS, ARCHIE FREDERICK. Boy scientist. 447p il $2.50 Lothrop

500 Science

25-18126

Addressing his young readers the author says in the foreword: "In the present state of knowledge, science covers a multitude of arts and processes, and for this reason I have selected the chief ones, such as astronomy, microscopy, chemistry, surveying, photography, radio-teleg-raphy, telephony, etc., and made separate chapters of them so that each chapter is really a little book in itself, and after you have read them all you can easily tell which subject you like the best and then take it up as a hobby." Each chapter is copiously illustrated with drawings and diagrams, and the volume is well indexed.

Booklist 22:121 D '25

"A comprehensive scientific library for the amateur is included in the compass of one volume in 'The Boy Scientist.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 160w

COLLINS, CHARLES WILLIAM. Sins of Saint Anthony; with an introd. by Henry Kitchell Webster. 265p $2.50 Covici, P.

25-12245

"In this collection of short stories—six out of the seven being tales of the theatre—are told some amusing and ironical histories of the histrionics that happen away from the footlights." (N Y Times) Contents: The pride of Iris: a tragic story; One of our daughters: a cynical story; When Marcia fell: a roman-tic story; Up stage and down: a back stage story; The marvelous Marco: a vaudeville story; That girl on the end: a dancer's story; The sins of Saint Anthony: a dancer's story.

Lit R p7 O 3 '25 100w

"It would seem that Mr. Collins is on the way to becoming the American Leonard Merrick. Still, he had better beware of the maga-zine formula; its rounding influence has not escaped him, to dull his fine, light touch and humor in the deadliness of its fixed technique would be a considerable loss. For merriment and bubbling laughter is his gift."

+ N Y Times p9 My 17 '25 700w

"The author has made his tales invariably interesting, sometimes illuminating, and occasionally amusing; and whether one be reading 'The Pride of Iris,' or 'When Marcia Fell,' one is certain to find material for whiling away an hour or two in pleasant and amiable company."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:841 Je 20 '25 150w

"Tales dealing with theatrical life are too often themselves theatrical, in the derogatory sense, and Mr. Collins is not wholly exempt from this defect in 'The Pride of Iris' and 'The Marvelous Marco.' He has, however, a light touch and an ironic sense of humour, and though these gifts are somewhat thrown away on such poor material as 'When Marcia Fell' and the story from which his book derives its title, he makes delightful use of them in a couple of clever studies of the stage-struck 'small-town girl.'"

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p366 My 28 '25 180w

COLLINS, DALE. The haven. 255p $2.50 Knopf

25-16605

"Mark Antoine, the handsomest man in the world, a young film star gorged with adulation and on the point of a physical collapse, flees to an uninhabited Pacific island. The sea-captain who is Antoine's only link with civilization, is so treacherous as to accept bribes from successive women and convey them to the island, and so careless as to allow his boat to explode. Antoine, marooned with five heterogeneous sirens, is angrily defiant; later a new relationship develops; the tinsel of ironic urbanity drops off; the prisoners become as humorless, as sensitive, as inarticulate, and as prudent as savages. Personal desires are sacrificed to the community's welfare; sex is suppressed to avoid a fatal jealousy."—Sat R of Lit

"He has written what may be crudely termed a literary rather than real tale. He has told it effectively and never once allowed ridicule to enter it. Mr. Collins handles his very ridiculous situation, one that few have ever attempted to treat seriously, effectively." + Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '25 300w

"The Haven' has a freshness, a vigor and an originality of treatment and characterization which set it apart." L. M. Field + Int Bk R p820 N '25 500w

"There is nothing quite like 'The Haven'; no story of the South Seas so good—unless it be the life of Gauguin."

+ N Y Times p22 S 6 '25 880w

"Mr. Collins has imagination, a flair for beauty, and—where satirical intent is momentarily buried, writes with a realistic gusto that compels admiration. In reporting the speech of the American girl, Anita Shaw, Mr. Collins betrays his nationality. It is one of the most cherished fallacies of your Britisher that Americans interlard their conversation with such locutions as 'I calculate.'" F. H. Herbert + N Y Tribune p9 N 22 '25 800w

"It is not so much that Mr. Collins succeeds in writing away the patent absurdities of his romantic hypothesis. But, thanks to the terse eloquence of a rather breathless style, he generates an atmosphere in which anything is possible."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:163 S 26 '25 320w

Springf'd Republican p7a O 4 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p694 O 22 '25 500w

COLLINS, GILBERT. Starkenden quest. 316p $2 McBride [7s 6d Duckworth]

25-18705

At the Hotel of Four Winds, Yokohama, John Crayton, gentleman adventurer, for the first time encounters the repulsive looking figure of Abel Starkenden. Crayton, in a sudden riot, befriends the ape-like stranger and consequently becomes associated with him in an enterprise which takes him to the depths of darkest Asia. A friend of Crayton's joins them in this extraordinary quest which Starkenden explains is a search for a gem-laden river believed to be located in a jungle inhabited by strange yellow demons. With an ancient compass for a guide and a specimen of the "eye-stones" the three men start their perilous trip. Later the devilish purpose of Starkenden's quest is revealed to his two companions, but in the hope of saving a beautiful girl, the men brave the horrors of a living death, and after many terrifying experiences, return triumphantly to Yokohama.

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 8 '25 180w

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 10w

"Readers who have an appetite for the marvelous in strenuous adventure will find this an entertaining yarn; especially as it is not too marvelous, keeping itself just safely inside the line."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:833 Jl 4 '25 150w

Spec 134:419 Mr 14 '25 70w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p72 Ja 29 '25 160w

COLLINS, GILBERT. Valley of eyes unseen. 327p $2 McBride [7s 6d Duckworth]

[23-17119]

A thrilling adventure packed with the mystery, magic and romance of the hinterland of Tibet. It has its origin in an opium den in China where Ran Mirlees, the narrator, befriends a mysterious stranger whose life is threatened by a Chinese secret society. Mirlees and the stranger are compelled to flee to the interior of Asia, a third companion joining them on the way, and they continue their perilous expedition thru the Tibetan wilderness, until they come upon a hidden city. The startling events which follow are brought to a tense climax by the miraculous escape of Mirlees from this valley of beauty and horror.

Cleveland p85 N '24

"As a fantasy it belongs to the juvenile reading shelf, but the mature style in which it is written defeats that aim. The grown-up reader, on the other hand, must dismiss it because of its unprobabilities and sophistries, and condemn it as an imposition. Although the characters are substantial, the adventures imputed to them are not plausible."

— N Y World p8e N 30 '24 100w

"The story is written smoothly and with zest; and three bold explorers hold our sympathy; and a pleasant semblance of plausibility is skilfully drawn across even the most Sinbad-like features of the adventure. It makes good reading for a winter evening."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:498 Ja 31 '25 120w

COLLINS, H. P. Modern poetry. 224p $2 Houghton [6s J. Cape]

821 Poetry. English poetry

A philosophic discussion of modern English poetry—its message, its technique, its language. the differences of spiritual outlook that distinguish it from the poetry of an older day.

"I did not read it with avidity. I could detect two influences in it, that of Mr. Middleton Murry and Mr. Eliot; the influence of the latter supplying a veneer of cautious and slightly treacherous respect for tradition. This is well, but a sense of proportion is even more important. To my amazement a book which dealt with such large subjects led up to the glorification of a single poet, a lady who writes under the initials of H. D."

— + New Statesman 26:48 O 24 '25 650w

"A courageous and clear-headed attempt to put contemporary poetry as a whole in perspective."

+ Sat R 140:479 O 24 '25 100w

COLLINS, JOSEPH. Doctor looks at biography; psychological studies of life and letters. 344p $3 Doran

920 Biography. Autobiography 25-23486

Still occupied with taking the literary pulse "the doctor looks at some of the recent biographies and autobiographies," studying them as revelations not only of personality but of the life of the times that produced them. A hundred or more biographies and autobiographies are treated in these psychological studies, which are analyses of the writers as well as of the subjects of the books considered.

"His prose is not always studied but it is often filled with daring and provocative figures. To anyone vitally interested in the conduct of human life, I can think of no book in the current season that is likely to prove more constantly interesting." J. F.

+ — Bookm 62:604 Ja '26 260w

Boston Transcript p6 D 16 '25 1200w

"These rather silly discussions of recent biographies and autobiographies are undeniably readable and interesting; they are shallow, perhaps, but they go rippling on."

— + Ind 116:23 Ja 2 '26 120w

"Without any conviction that his reviews are either startling in their revelations or indeed very important, we confess they gripped our attention." Walter Yust

— + Lit R p1 D 26 '25 1250w

"Dr. Collins gets at something in literature which others cannot get at; his winnowing is different from all other winnowing. The result has therapeutic value; it sets people right in respect to their authors. As is usual with Dr. Collins, there is nothing niggardly about the book. . . . What really astonishes in the book and moves to admiration is the scope of reading which it reveals."

COLLINS, JOSEPH—Continued

N Y Times p5 N 22 '25 1900w

"Dr. Collins, whose criticism in the past has dealt principally with fiction, has in biography a subject especially suited to his tastes and equipment. His long experience as a neurologist and medical psychologist gives him an unusual insight into the secrets of personality. Particularly when he is examining an abnormal individual—a Hearn, Poe, a Rimbaud—are his conclusions illuminating." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 820w

"Naturally, in such a mass of work there is much inequality. Occasionally he is superficial, as in dealing with Anatole France, more rarely he seems prejudiced, as in treating Steuart's book on Stevenson, but usually he is discriminating and just. The essays on Sherwin Cody's Poe, Edward Bok, Frank Crane, and James J. Corbett may be mentioned among many as particularly illuminating in regard to all the characters considered."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:483 Ja 9 '26 450w

"Mr Collins is seldom happy in his distinctly literary judgments. Nor does he show any wide acquaintance with objective biography—which is much more illuminating than biographical faddists of today suppose."

— Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 6 '26 760w

COLLINS, MARY Colour blindness; with a comparison of different methods of testing colour-blindness; with an introd. by James Drever. (International lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 237p il $4.50 Harcourt [12s 6d K. Paul]

617.75 Color blindness [25-12762]

"There are three ways of being colour blind. Some people have difficulties with red and green, others with blue and yellow, and some have no colour vision at all. Dr. Collins has been working on red-green colour blindness in Edinburgh, and approached the subject with no theoretical predilections whatever. She has written a useful book of reference, giving short accounts of the theories of colour vision, and detailed accounts of various well-known tests, and other tests which she and Dr. Drever have invented on their own."—New Statesman

"A valuable exposition of the theory and science of color-blindness will be found in this book. One of her main objects was to institute a comparison between the various methods of testing for color-blindness, and the conclusions she has reached in this part of the field will be a decided help to future investigators."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 420w

"All will admit that the material is of great value, but that alone it is unlikely to afford an explanation of the complex problem under investigation. Its ultimate value will depend upon the deductions drawn from it, and these must necessarily involve theoretical considerations which may support or be adverse to previous theories. In this respect it is essential that the investigator should be fully cognisant of the facts which have been elicited by previous observers, whether they support any such theory or not."

+ — Nature 116:492 O 3 '25 720w

"Dr. Collins has succeeded in showing that colour-blindness is a very complicated problem, but not much more. She has not manipulated her results very satisfactorily; as they stand they merely show that subjects A to G had odd vision, while H to J were worse. What is wanted is a study of why under some circumstances processes were set going in a subject involving the perception of red, while under other circumstances red would be observed by normal persons but would be imperceptible to the subject."

+ — New Statesman 26:214 N 28 '25 680w

"Her book is worthy of high praise as a painstaking, honest, well-written endeavor, based upon extensive reading and close original investigation, to deal with colour vision, mainly from the point of view of the psychologist. We believe that the book will commend itself to every one interested in the subject. Moreover, the style is such as is likely to appeal especially to the non-technical reader, from the easily assimilable form in which her facts and conclusions are portrayed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p463 J1 9 '25 1000w

COLLIS, JOHN STUART. Shaw. 192p $2
2 Knopf [5s J. Cape]

B or 92 Shaw, George Bernard [25-17655]

"This clever monograph is written by an avowed disciple who has learned from his master a good technique as a writer, and also the power to criticize from a detached point of view." (Spec) "The originality of Mr. Collis's study lies not in his arguments, but in his instinctive attitude; unlike so many writers who have devoted the greater part of their criticism of Mr. Shaw to discussion of the relative sincerity and seriousness with which he writes, Mr. Collis is wise enough to offer an unquestioning acceptance of Mr. Shaw's integrity." (The Times [London] Lit Sup)

"It is perhaps the chief merit of Mr. Collis that he insists upon directing our attention to those qualities of his hero which are least commonly appreciated—his sensitiveness, his humanity, his pity, his mysticism, his burning zeal for righteousness, his wide knowledge and constant industry—no less than his more obvious gifts of wit, reason, and eloquence."

+ — Living Age 327:260 O 31 '25 350w (Reprinted from Irish Statesman)

"Were it not marred by an extravagant sentence in which Mr. Shaw is compared to one particular with Jesus Christ, to the advantage of the former, there would be no finer passage in Mr. Collis's book than that in which he contrasts Mr. Shaw's serenity, founded upon an impregnable rock of definite religious faith, with the torment of doubt and questioning suffered by more popularly esteemed spiritual teachers, like Ruskin and Carlyle. When Mr. Collis asserts that, next to his religion, Mr. Shaw's strongest points are his 'poetry and characterization,' he is on more debatable ground. But he goes far towards establishing his claims, and his careful examination of the Shavian technique is an original, lucid, and constructive piece of criticism."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:434 J1 4 '25 550w

"This is the best study of Bernard Shaw which has appeared in many a moon. It also introduces us to a new critic who will certainly be heard from again. Mr. Collis speaks with his own voice; he eschews the commonplaces that form a particularly dense hedge about his particular subject; he is enthusiastic in unexpected places and challenging where one least anticipated challenge."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:299 N 14 '25 220w

"Never for one moment is it pretentious and dull. The writing has a rich Irish tang, and sparkles with wit and irony." R: Church
+ Spec 135:sup828 N 7 '25 1350w

"His honesty and insight are writ large on every page of his book. But so, too, is an unenviable or perhaps enviable boldness. . . . Mr. Collis has not been unconcerned with the practical value of his little book. His proselytizing zeal is maintained on an admirably unobtrusive note. Perhaps he has been a shade too practical in hiding his reverence; it can do no ill service to give expression to the deep and intimate respect he feels."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p413 Je 18 '25 900w

COLLISON-MORLEY, LACY. Naples through the centuries. 227p il $4 Stokes [10s 6d Methuen]

945.7 Naples—History [25-13779]

Written by an authority on Italian letters this book tells the history of Naples from the time of the Greeks. He shows what the city has stood for at different periods during its long life, describes its monuments and works of art and recalls the famous names connected with its history.

Boston Transcript p4 S 26 '25 380w

"It is much to be regretted that Mr. Collison-Morley, whose patient researches are worthy of high praise, should not have exercised more ingenuity in the selection of his material, and that he has not indulged more freely the descriptive gifts which, as in some of his impressions of the Naples of to-day he shows himself to possess. It is only fair to add that the illustrations, some of them chosen from old prints, and others reproducing masterpieces of Neapolitan art, do something towards atoning for the limitations of the narrative."

— + Nation and Ath 37:300 Je 6 '25 450w

"A full and judicious book on Naples. He has so much history, art and literature to consider that he has not much room for sentiment. But he relieves his solid matter with lighter touches."

+ New Statesman 25:supviii My 23 '25 200w

"It is to be hoped that one day some writer, who knows Naples as well as Mr. Collison-Morley, will give his attention to the early travel diaries. The present work will, we think, be read chiefly for its chapters on eighteenth-century and modern Naples. Here the author is on sure ground. He gives us a lively picture of the city when it was visited and described by travellers as diverse as Casanova and Mrs. Piozzi, neither of whom would now recognize the place."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p363 My 28 '25 800w

COLMAN, MRS EDNA MARY (HERCHER). Seventy-five years of White House gossip. 334p il $5 Doubleday

923.2 Presidents—United States. Washington, D.C.—Social life and customs

25-4334

From old newspaper files, letters and diaries, and reminiscences of old residents the author has gathered many personal notes, anecdotes, and bits of gossip about the presidents and their wives, White House social events and leading political figures of each administration from Washington to Lincoln. They are mostly little personal matters which would not find their way into the sober histories of the period.

Booklist 21:299 My '25

"The book is fairly well written, but it seems to bear too much the traces of museum and dusty file. We doubt if it will add much to the knowledge of the customs of the time of which it is about, but it will afford many a delightful evening for people who like to pry just a bit beneath the lid of secrecy that covers the famous man or woman." K. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 F 7 '25 1100w

Cleveland p99 S '25

"The author builds her charming tale on eight years of slow and careful research, so truth speaks from every line; yet she has given us light intimate glimpses which charm and which make real people of those who were to most of us but vague names in a school book." J. C. Speraky

+ Int Bk R p580 Ag '25 520w

"A happy idea. It goes without saying that it does not result in something 'new or never said before,' but Mrs. Colman has collected a great mass of information that is none the less interesting because, uncollected, it has nearly all been printed at different times in various places." C. W. Thompson

+ Lit R p4 F 28 '25 1750w

"To make history alive' has been Mrs. Colman's laudable purpose in ransacking the Executive Mansion for human interest, and her results go far toward fulfilling her intention."

+ N Y Tribune p9 F 8 '25 230w

"This is a singularly pleasant sort of gossip. It is not her aim to reveal dark and direful secrets, but to retail pleasant yarns and intimate descriptions of national figures."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:529 F 14 '25 320w

"A gossip book is generally rather trivial and discursive, and this series of sixteen historical sketches of the presidential administrations from Washington to Lincoln is carefully done, and contains a good deal of interest besides the domestic and social details of the lives of the White House occupants. It is a reference book of some usefulness, and to each of the studies is appended a table of the executive officers of that administration."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p629 O 1 '25 950w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Bright islands. 233p il $2.50 Yale univ. press

398.2 Folklore—Hawaiian islands 25-21804

The second volume of tales and legends of Hawaii contains stories from mythological, historical and traditional sources, captivatingly retold. The tales in the first section have their origin in early Hawaiian history, those in the second are from New Zealand, and others are based on Hawaiian folklore and legend.

"The author needs no word of praise for he has been thoroughly tested through a long list of books of this quality which appeal both to children and to adults. This is a no-age book or perhaps better an every-age book. As a piece of most excellent book-making, the volume deserves especial mention."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 26 '25 250w

"There is often a pronounced dramatic note in these tales, and Mr. Colum never loses sight of it. The result is a series of charming and strange tales that never flag in interest and that are colored by the 'feel' of the South Sea islands." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p18 D 20 '25 600w

"Mr. Colum has rewritten the tales in his simple, flowing, fairy-story style that will make it a delight to children who have finished Grimm and Andersen and are looking for new worlds to conquer. From the ethnological standpoint 'The Bright Islands' is of less value than 'At the Gateway of the Day,' as Mr. Colum has here reworked much material that had already reached print."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:451 D 26 '25 130w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Forge in the forest. 148p il $2.25 Macmillan

25-19861

"Four story-tellers come to get shoes for the wild horse they have caught and tamed; the King himself will make the horseshoes for them, but only on condition that they tell stories of Fire, Water, Earth and Air—two stories of each for each horseshoe he puts on the wild horse. The legends are old and new: Solomon and the Servitor of the Lord of the Earth; The Seven Sleepers; Phaeton; Old King Fork-Beard; King Fergus and the Water-Horse; Saint Martin and the Honest Man; Bellerophon. Each is told in a brief, dramatic, forceful way, as these brothers would have spoken, to the beat of the King's hammer."—Publisher's note

Booklist 22:168 Ja '26

"We are the richer for spirited and poetic renderings of the stories of Phaeton, the Seven Sleepers, Bellerophon, and others less familiar. Boris Artzybasheff has made striking full page drawings, decorative initials, and end papers for the book, and the cover is unusually rich in color and design." Marcia Dalphin

+ Bookm 62:460 D '25 350w

"The entrancing Irish way of telling gives a distinctive flavor to the ancient legends, and the spirited drawings and decorations by Ar-

COLUM, PADRAIC—Continued

tzymbasheff, introducing a half-barbaric quality, heighten the enchantment." A. M. Jordan

+ Ind 115:560 N 14 '25 180w

"The stories are prose, but with all the rhythm of poetry, while words and sentences have something of the same beauty and meaning as notes and phrases have when produced in symphony." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p813 N '25 150w

"Under the fluent pen of Mr. Colum these narratives take on a new simplicity and directness, a lucent charm that should mesmerize any intelligent child into the most absorbed attention." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p13 D 20 '25 820w

"Tales are here of the burning sun, the foaming sea, monsters, sinners and saints. They are the breath of romance, swift and brief as the wind, and as full of beauty as the rose-wreathed cavern where the Seven Sleepers lay." Laura Benét

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 15 '25 480w

"The touch of the poet is on these tales as on everything that Mr. Colum does. They should prove a delight in the nursery, where their gay illustrations will divert the children too young to read to themselves while they await the hour of reading aloud." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 2:272 N 7 '25 100w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Voyagers; being legends and romances of Atlantic discovery. 188p $2.25 Macmillan

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration. Geographical myths 25-19751

Prince Henry, the son of the king of Portugal, dreamed of a land across the seas, and longed for a way to reach that land. He built a high tower that looked out over the waters, and called to himself there, learned men from all over the world. They told him, in turn, stories of the great Atlantic explorers from earliest legendary times. These stories are the first part of the book. The rest of the discoveries are those of history, Columbus, Ponce de Leon and the early settlers of Virginia.

Booklist 22:168 Ja '26

"In 'The Voyagers' we have two extended tales that are sheer joys from beginning to end. Even the Norse stories which, perhaps, were based on actual voyages, retain their happy dreamlike felicity and fairy charm." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p18 D 20 '25 450w

"Mr. Colum's conception of the book as a whole was a fine thing, but the presentation has not been what it might be. The tales seem lifeless. They are not set down with the fresh and vivid air that animates his creative work, and his gift of simple, spontaneous expression has not been exercised in re-writing these tales, which seem to have been done as a task rather than a sharing of his sense of the romance of these adventurous times. They are written beautifully, but monotonously." H. C. Forbes

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 15 '25 400w

"Drawing upon various sources for his material Mr. Colum has everywhere so presented it as to lend glamour to his narrative while preserving its faithfulness to early record and actual happening. His book will enchant the youthful reader and hold the interest of their parents." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 2:272 N 7 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 220w

COLVILLE, KATHLEEN. Mr Marionette. 65p il $1.50 Houghton

Tho Mr Marionette was justly popular by virtue of his excellent little doll show, he had one enemy, and that was his rival Mr Finney, the proprietor of Punch and Judy. One day the wicked Mr Finney stole all of his rival's wooden dolls and ran away with them. After a long hard chase and a great deal of trouble Mr Marionette and Willo his helper recovered the dolls and properly punished the thief.

N Y World p7m O 18 '25 100w

"This is a slim book with delicately fantastic illustrations and a slight but charming story. It is written with distinction."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:302 N 14 '25 20w

"Alas! that Miss Colville's pretty story is not, so to say, a more practical child's book. The story is for children from four to six. But the style is for children much older."

+ Spec 135:sup1036 D 5 '25 130w

"She writes with ease, but without that certainty of a simple conviction which is essential to gain belief in a child's mind. Her invention is fanciful and often clothed in words too hard for small minds."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p809 N 26 '25 280w

COMFORT, WILL LEVINGTON. Somewhere south in Sonora. 236p $2 Houghton

25-17115

"Young Elbert Sartwell, only son of wealthy Mid-Westerners, had always yearned for the oldtime Wild West of romance, a West which, if it ever existed, died long before he was born. But the urge finally draws him to the regions of his naive imaginings where, though at first everything seems drably disillusioning in its near likeness to the civilization he had hoped to leave behind, adventure such as he had dreamed soon falls in his way. He is entrusted with a mission by a dying pioneer to find the latter's missing son, who years earlier had fled over the border into Mexico. Elbert by now is ripe for his tests by fire, and he meets and bests them all."—Sat R of Lit

Boston Transcript p5 S 26 '25 320w

Cleveland p124 D '25

"Mr. Comfort has written a book that captures the spirit of the great Southwest—a book that exhilarates and ventilates minds grown stuffy from too many sophisticated novels." Dawn Powell

+ Lit R p3 D 5 '25 520w

"The flashes of Mexican life are colorful, if not too penetrating; but penetration is, after all, unnecessary in a book which satisfactorily serves its purpose of light, conventional entertainment."

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 4 '25 260w

"A capital story of Mexico and Arizona. It has action and peril, but it has also imagination and it renders character truly."

+ Outlook 141:288 O 21 '25 60w

Sat R of Lit 2:181 O 3 '25 160w

COMMISSION ON SURVEY OF FOREIGN STUDENTS IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. Foreign student in America; ed. by W. Reginald Wheeler, Henry H. King, and Alexander B. Davidson, with a foreword by Robert E. Speer. 329p $1.75 Assn. press

378.7 Foreign students in the United States. United States—Foreign population 25-9560

"A first survey of the subject by a commission representing the Friendly Relations Committees of the Y.M.C.A. and of the Y.W.C.A., this compilation presents not only the major problems in the adjustment of the foreign student to American college and community conditions but also points to many unrealized opportunities for enabling these eight or nine thousand young men and women to become ambassadors of mutual understanding between their countries and ours."—Survey

Booklist 22:143 Ja '26

"The chief value of the book lies in the statistical data which it presents. The chapter treatment of the different topics is hardly more than cursory." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 15 '25 400w

Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 30w

Survey 55:263 N 15 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p587 S
10 '25 120w

COMSTOCK, HARRIET THERESA (SMITH)
* (MRS PHILIP COMSTOCK). Joline. 381p $2
Doubleday

25-23222

Joline has lived all her nineteen years in an island garden on the Nova Scotia coast. Her life has been made secure and serenely beautiful by the jealous devotion of her father, a mildly mad English artist who since her mother's death has given himself to the care and training of his beautiful daughter. Richard Norcross finds his way to their island paradise just before the father dies, and falling precipitately in love with the helpless lonely child, begs her to marry him and return with him to his Massachusetts home. Joline consents, but not without misgiving. The misgivings grow when she finds that she is expected to conform entirely to the family idea of what Richard's wife ought to be. With her purely individualistic training, compromise is difficult; to conform is impossible. The story is of their marriage, its growing complications and its outcome.

"The value in Mrs. Comstock's books lies in the fact that she clings so closely to normal human relations. She is interested in human problems of how people can get along with each other. They are the problems which everyday people have to meet and because Mrs. Comstock considers them so honestly and with so evident a desire to throw some light upon them, her books are never without interest."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 250w

"Another interesting and more than unusually wholesome tale of modern marriage."

+ Cleveland p123 D '25

CONCERNING HIM; with an introd. by the * author of To M. L. G. 300p $2 Doran

25-23723

"Concerning him" is an anonymous book purporting to have been written by a man for the woman he loves, to explain and extenuate the affairs more or less of the heart, which had occupied him before he met her. With one exception his experiences with women had not been very fortunate. He ceased to believe himself in love with his wife even before he married her. The war delayed the inevitable divorce and furnished the inevitable entanglements in France. These were followed by a period of near bliss with the one unselfish woman he had known, a period which ended just prior to his meeting with the famous singer to whom the confession is addressed.

Boston Transcript p5 N 21 '25 700w

"Here and there the anonymous writer regains something of the strength evidenced in the first chapter—once when he paints his military life and again when he writes of his realization of Gypsy's selfless love—but on the whole the episodes following 'Fanny' lack fire and depth." E. S. Alexander

— + Lit R p10 N 28 '25 260w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 230w

CONDE, BERTHA. Way to peace, health, and power. 233p $1.50 Scribner

242 Spiritual life 25-10931

A weekly program of meditation and worship written with the hope that God may "help us all to discover the methods by which mind, body and spirit may disclose Him as a reality, and as the only power for transcendent living."

"In these days of tremendous activities such a book is doubly welcome." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:xxix Jl '25 80w

N Y Tribune p9 S 13 '25 180w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 10w

"A splendid example of the new type of devotional literature."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Ag 3 '25
450w

CONKLING, GRACE WALCOTT (HAZARD)
(MRS ROSCOE PLATT CONKLING). Ship's log and other poems. 143p $2 Knopf

811

24-23480

The first group of poems, which gives the book its title, is a diary of ocean moods and aspects during a voyage from England—rough seas and smooth, varying breezes, mist and fog. Another group of poems follows a voyage south, and still another is a Mexican notebook in verse.

"The lyrics are delicate, penetrative, lovely—and they sing. The price so often paid for rich sensuousness, Mrs. Conkling pays. There is too frequently inordinate profusion of imagery; there is want of lean economy and discernible design. The individual images are brilliant and colorful, and where sparingly and happily distributed produce an effect of richness. Where they are otherwise distributed, the result is confusion." D; Morton

+ — Bookm 60:638 Ja '25 350w

"Mrs. Conkling manages her vers libre with skill. It is rhythmical and graceful; she does not make desperate attempts to twist words out of their meaning. She does not scorn the 'classic' forms either, writing sonnets or lyrics with equal facility, and one is tempted to make liberal citations to illustrate how full of poetic fancy and sometimes, though not so often, of dramatic fire she is. Her work is interesting enough to justify the prediction that it will survive the vast mass of present-day verse." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 28 '25 700w

"Mrs. Conkling's verses, taken as a body of poetic work, leave the reader with the feeling his time has been well spent. The most striking feature is the vivid color which the poet spreads with lavish brush." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p5 N 30 '24 1650w

Reviewed by Joseph Auslander

N Y World p8e Ja 18 '25 350w

"This volume cannot but prove a disappointment to one who has followed Mrs. Conkling's previous work with appreciative pleasure. The author's lyric gift seems somehow to have deserted her."

— Sat R of Lit 1:486 Ja 24 '25 200w

CONNELL, RICHARD. Variety. 322p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

25-8050

There is wide variety in this volume of thirteen short stories reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines. Contents: Big Lord Fauntleroy; Sssssssshhhh; Spring flow'rets or, Womanhood eternal; The most dangerous game; And the night shall be filled with music; Neighbors; All wrong; The second egg; Pieces of silver; The hero of the devil's kitchen; The great American game; Isles of romance; Six reasons why.

"Variety" seeks the O. Henry manner, but attains only to the novel idea and atmosphere. Most of his methods are about as obvious and sentimental in their attempt at contrast as for example the differentiation between those who travel on the '8:04' and the '8:41.' Mr. Connell has good ideas in almost every case, but he does not develop them."

— + Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 200w

Reviewed by D. B. Woolsey

New Repub 42:348 My 20 '25 110w

"It ranks, though high, in the great army of the second-rate, and leaves its author still in the category of the 'may-be.'"

— + N Y Times p8 Mr 29 '25 960w

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

N Y Tribune p12 My 17 '25 700w

CONNELL, RICHARD—Continued

"Thirteen stories all easy to read, all displaying facility and versatility." W: R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 2:23 Ag 8 '25 250w

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDON. Steel decks.
26ap $2 Scribner

25-21216

When Werner became president and part owner of the Maritime transportation company he decided to go as passenger aboard one of the company ships to discover for himself why good men were so hard to get and keep in the company's employ. Accordingly he took his daughter and his secretary with him on board the Rapidan, sailing from Bayonne to Tampico. The captain was a surly brute, a grafter and worse. It was soon evident that the only decent men among the crew were the objects of his special spite, and that his malice centered on the first mate and the pumpman. The voyage was a lively one. Before Tampico was reached Werner had found out all he wanted to know about the captain and his crew, and the two girls had discovered much that pleased them in the pumpman and the mate.

"A lively, entertaining sea romance."

+ Booklist 22:161 Ja '26

"Mr. Connolly has written a very ordinary story. It is his first attempt at a novel, and scarcely worthy the pen of the man who wrote 'Out of Gloucester,' those other classics of the Atlantic coast."

— Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 300w

"His characters are true to life, imbued with all the vices and good qualities which go to make up the human animal, and he paints their frailties and strong points in a deft manner." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p5 D 12 '25 350w

"Steel Decks" is more than an adventurous tale. Mr. Connolly has had something to say that is of import. His story has thrill, glamour and substance."

+ N Y Times p10 N 29 '25 600w

"The storm, the reef, and the final exposure of the crooks when Superintendent Werner unmasks and we know him for what he is, provide the ingredients of a tale of the sea as unreal as any story we have ever read. Now for a word of comment in all fairness to the author. It is smoothly written, keeps you interested, and in the end right triumphs over wrong."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:415 D 12 '25 350w

"Mr Connolly's characters are rational men and women who will amuse the reader and endear themselves to him. The style is strong and virile, but simple to the point of being sketchy. The reader gets the impression again and again that the author has lived through the experiences of which he writes. Capt Megling, however, leaves the reader with the uncomfortable feeling that Mr Connolly had not drawn on his imagination when he created him."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 220w

CONNOR, RALPH, pseud. (CHARLES WILLIAM GORDON.) Treading the winepress.
394p $2 Doran

25-23220

A rather complicated story of love and the war. Tony Mackinroy is a young Nova Scotian of Scotch ancestry who does a number of things with superlative skill. The lovely blonde Diana is one of a party of Americans touring Canada. Tony saves Diana's life and gradually falls in love with her, but as the war breaks out just then, he enlists and goes to England to chase submarines. Some time later Tony is reported killed. Diana, feeling that it does not matter what she does, marries a man she does not love. With Tony's return, the story tends toward melodrama. He will not let Diana leave her husband and her husband will not divorce her. Impasse, until a tragedy clears the way for a not unexpected ending.

"The name of Ralph Connor is guarantee of a good wholesome story well told, but 'Treading the Winepress' is something more. It presents an ideal picture of desired friendly relations between Canadians and a number of young people from the United States and gives besides a remarkable picture of the loyal spirit and heroic courage with which Canada entered the war. It showed how it gave distinguished service to the end, while underlying all is the deep religious feeling which is always an important element in this author's novels."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 5 '25 250w

"For those who enjoy characterization without subtlety, plan without much freshness, honest enough generalization, 'Treading the Winepress' will prove entertaining." W. Y.

+ — Lit R p17 D 5 '25 150w

"To say that the book is interesting even despite shortcomings is to say that the author has given us many vigorous passages which go far to atone for the defective workmanship of the whole. He evidently knows his Nova Scotia coast and the characters that inhabit it; at his best he can write with insight and vividness and even with beauty; and it is much to be regretted that he has not chosen a plot that is more direct and less involved, and has not seen fit to discard the old tricks and artifices of the stereotyped story-teller."

+ — N Y Times p11 N 29 '25 450w

"This broadly conceived novel of Canadian youth and Imperial promise partakes of open spaces and, in keeping with its optimism, its fine movement between cloud and sea, has a strong religious bearing."

The Times (London) Lit Sup p898 D
24 '25 220w

CONOVER, MILTON. Working manual of original sources in American government.
135p $1.50 Johns Hopkins

353 United States—Politics and government
24-24060

"This volume is for classroom use as a supplement to collegiate textbooks on American government. It is divided into seventeen chapters each of which states a problem in the general field of original sources in the American Federal System: One chapter is devoted to the Constitution, one to the State Government, one to the City Government, one to Local Government; three chapters are devoted to the electorate, and ten to the national government. In addition to the given problem in each chapter there are fifty assignments in primary sources on the topic being investigated."—Ann Am Acad

"A judicious use of his book will surely add a certain desirable freshness to the average course in government."

+ Ann Am Acad 117:299 Ja '25 180w

"The author has put an enormous amount of work into this clearly arranged and compact volume. It is valuable, not only as a working manual, but also as a reference index to works on all phases of government in the United States. As a new method of bringing the student of the American government into immediate and vital contact with the original sources and guiding him in the use of those sources it is invaluable." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 3 '25 900w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Il conte; with other stories by famous American authors; ed. by Charles Donald Fox. (Renard's famous authors ser.) 312p $2 Renard

Short stories—Collections 25-8735

"A collection of twenty short stories by as many authors has been brought together by Mr. Fox from the pages of Hampton's Magazine, where they were first published in 1908 and 1909. In those days Joseph Conrad and most of the Americans who bear him company were finding their respective audiences, and so a special interest is inherent in these short stories, since so many of them represent the earlier work of men and women who have since become famous." (N Y Times) Contents: Il conte, by J. Conrad; The snow man, by O. Henry; Salvatore Schneider, by E. Poole; The Argonauts, by M. Robertson; The Holy City quartette, by E. Hough; The things they saw, by Zona Gale; Holding hands, by G. Morris; The Breeze Kid's big tear-off, by D. Runyon; "The will of the gods," by S. T. E. Bourke; Commander Jim Wickson's "Habit," by H. F. Day; The thing in the hall, by E. F. Benson; The apron of genius, by E. D. Biggers; The new earth, by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow; Who's who at the Zoo, by I. S. Cobb; John Jones comes to life, by H. M. Lyon; The piper of One-Track Gulch, by F. Lynde; Dr. Burke's cure, by Dorothy Canfield; The courtship of Miles Sheehan, by F. E. Browne; The light in her eyes, by M. S. Gerry; Lassiter, by R. W. Child.

"A book which is delightful. The stories are all full of freshness and charm, and whatever their authors may have then lacked in finish is more than made up for by enthusiasm and youth."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 24 '25 320w

"Very interesting collection."

+ N Y Times p6 My 17 '25 480w

"Most of the stories retain in undiminished strength the quality which chiefly characterized them when they were new—readability. The average American short story, being a thing of plot and characterization primarily, does not date very rapidly. Where it lacks in insight, it excels in pace. These stories contain the element which made fiction popular in 1909; it is the same attribute that makes popular fiction popular to-day."

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 180w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Laughing Anne; One day more; two plays; with an introd. by John Galsworthy. 124p $2 Doubleday [6s J. Castle] 822 25-10508

"Conrad's three plays, One Day More, Laughing Anne, and The Secret Agent, are all adaptations from stories, and the two in this volume have, curiously enough, the same main theme—the suffering of a woman capable of self-sacrifice. . . . The process of adaptation is, generally, fatal to the achievement of a stage masterpiece; yet in One Day More Conrad so nearly achieved a little masterpiece as to show natural aptitude of the highest order."—Introd.

Booklist 22:22 O '25

"Were it not that Conrad is on the tight-rope here (but with no new tricks), and were it not for his saving genius, these two plays, in which every one is somewhat desperate, would run the danger of being insufferably tedious. And while the plays make good reading, they offer sufficient proof that Conrad was wise to fly no more in a strange sky." J: H. Preston

+ Int Bk R p808 'N '25 350w

"'Laughing Anne' and 'One Day More' must be judged to be two interesting failures. They might be described as Conrad's two weakest short stories presented in dialogue form. We get, as it were, the valueless skeleton of Conrad's art without its organic clothing, which alone is precious. Tendencies one prefers to overlook, tendencies which are disciplined to insignificance in the great novels and stories, are here undesirably obtrusive." R: Aldington

— Nation and Ath 36:272 N 15 '24 1050w

Reviewed by P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p3 My 10 '25 2250w

"The process of adaptation is, generally, fatal to the achievement of a stage masterpiece; yet in 'One Day More' Conrad so nearly achieved a little masterpiece as to show natural aptitude of the highest order. . . . It is exceedingly fortunate that we have these examples of Conrad's dramatic art, which disclose at once what he did, and what he could have done; yet convince us, perhaps, that he was right in not further sacrificing the novel to the drama." J: Galsworthy

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 3 '25 2250w

"These two pieces fail, and fail with distinction, like men of large ideas who cannot contract themselves to fit the formulæ of life. Conrad in the theatre might have lost more than he found. When he wrote 'Laughing Anne' he had not studied the elements of stage-contrivance. Mr. Galsworthy's preface makes this admirably clear and his verdict that we should have lost by Conrad's complete absorption in the playhouse is just. Elsewhere his genius drove them and he was right to follow."

Sat R 138:450 N 1 '24 250w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Sat R of Lit 1:42 Ag 15 '25 450w

"We see here what Conrad might have done if he had stuck to play-writing; yet, even while we rejoice in it, we are glad that he did not stick to play-writing. One Day More might just possibly have been a very lucky accident. Conrad was not a born playwright. He might have laboured on, only to produce plays which, if not second-rate, were not works of his peculiar genius. One Day More is a gem; but it may have been a tour de force. And from genius tour de force are not what we ask."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p705 N 6 '24 650w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Suspense; a Napoleonic novel. 274p $2 Doubleday

25-12983

In the fragment of Joseph Conrad's last novel, left unfinished at his death, are plainly discernible the proportions of the Napoleonic romance which he had planned. The scene is laid mainly in Genoa, during Napoleon's residence at Elba. Cosmo Latham, a cultivated and travelled young Englishman on a tour of the continent, is thrown into the midst of the spy-and plot-ridden scene. Everybody is living in a state of suspense and excitement. Rumors are flying about of Napoleon's death or escape, or of plots to bring him back from Elba. While he never actually appears in the story he is felt on every page and is in the back of everyone's mind. There is, too, a beautiful and unhappy young Frenchwoman, a friend of Cosmo's childhood, whom he meets again in Genoa as daughter of the French ambassador. The story ends in suspense, with Cosmo sailing aboard a small ship headed toward Elba and certain adventure.

Booklist 22:72 N '25

"In the creation of characters about whom an inevitable sense of an overshadowing destiny lingers, in a few fine passages of memorable prose, in the general sense of solidity—of a three dimensional quality—'Suspense' is admirable and interesting. No matter how far below Conrad's best it may fall, it is invested with an inevitable fascination because it marks the close of a great man's career." Herschel Brickell

+ — Bookm 62:337 N '25 350w

"Things move with an amazing amount of speed for him. As is usual with his writing everything dovetails perfectly and although he has not got away completely from his habit of circling back for explanatory purposes there is a decided lack of repetition. Another thing noticeable in 'Suspense' is the lack of psychological analysis with which we are wont to associate Conrad. He is telling a story this time, a story that in itself is complete in that the actions of the characters explain their motives." K: Schriftgiesser

Boston Transcript p5 S 19 '25 1400w

Cleveland p106 N '25

"My own view, after reading 'Drums,' by James Boyd, which treats of the same period of history and has certain interesting parallels with 'Suspense,' is that the writing of historical romances should be left to young men with imaginative genius and inexhaustible energy. One is halted continually in estimating 'Suspense," however, by the conviction that Conrad intended, as we have said, to make changes in his plan." W: McFee

CONRAD, JOSEPH—Continued

Int Bk R p705 O '25 1750w

"It is an excellent story rather than the net of utter enchantment. Yet one would read it, with devotion, if it had nothing more than another enunciation of that Courage which, more than any other writer, possibly, he has trumpeted; whose drama and significance and perplexing contradictions he has made evident." Sinclair Lewis

+ Lit R p1 S 19 '25 1150w

"Had Conrad lived to finish his last tale he would not have made it one of his major novels. It has elaboration and an extraordinary vividness of natural setting and an equally extraordinary dulness of development."

— + Nation 121:738 D 23 '25 150w

"Superficially, 'Suspense' has all Conrad's merits. It is constructed with immense skill and care; it is solid; it has the grand air; it is the work of an artist or craftsman who has a passion for his work. The characters are wonderfully worked over, typically Conradian. And yet, despite its solidity and seriousness, it leaves one with a strong feeling of emptiness and hollowness." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 38:18 O 3 '25 1100w

"Suspense is not Conrad at his best. If it did not appear to us as his last novel, we should probably put it near the bottom of his list. There is a slowness of movement, a mildness in coming to the point, which is different from the old Conrad habits of careful attack and deliberation. The characters seem to have been assembled by bits, with no little effort, and are at times as courageously, likably featureless as the heroes and heroines of ever so many historical romances." R. L.

— + New Repub 44:263 O 28 '25 250w

"I am frankly convinced that, if Suspense had been the work of an unknown man, it would not have suggested to most people that it was by an author of genius at all. Nor can it be justly retorted that we ought not to judge by an unfinished work. The fragment is as long as any ordinary complete novel: a novel of genius should come to life on the first page, and must come to life by the time we have been introduced to the main characters and situations. But Suspense does not come to life at all." P. C. Kennedy

— New Statesman 25:666 S 26 '25 580w

"'Suspense' cannot add to his fame—the fragment is too slight, despite its seeming length. But it should not detract, for flashes of the author's greatness are there; and the ever-pervading promise of a great achievement. Conrad's star is not out. But who will not miss the Conrad flash in the literary sky?" P. A. Hutchison

N Y Times p3 S 13 '25 2400w

Reviewed by Albert Guerard

N Y Tribune p4 N 29 '25 1000w

"It must remain a deep satisfaction to all admirers of Joseph Conrad that his last unfinished novel promised to be—is—one of his best. The beautiful style which already it is trite to praise is there; there, also, is a group of characters, each a finished portrait, although the broken story leaves their action incomplete; there, over all, magically evoked, broods the atmosphere of suspense from which the title arises."

+ Outlook 141:243 O 14 '25 200w

— + Spec 135:613 O 10 '25 1100w

"We have expressed regret that the book should have been left unfinished and without clue as to the author's intention. Yet from the artistic point of view it stands by itself. It is a fragment the length of an average modern novel, and if the plot is not completed the characterization is. As a fact, its last words have a dignity that would make a fitting end to any work, even of Conrad's."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p597 S 17 '25 1000w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Tales of hearsay. 120p $1.90 Doubleday [7s 6d Unwin]

25-4859

This book of four tales contains the first and the latest of Conrad's short stories. The Black mate, a sea story, must have been written about 1884. The scene of Prince Roman, written in 1911, is laid in Poland. It is the only one of his tales in which he deals directly with the country of his birth, or touches politics. In the third story, The tale, he takes the familiar episode of a ship fog-bound off a dangerous coast in wartime. This was written in 1917 as was also the fourth story, The warrior's soul, a tale of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow.—Condensed from Preface by R. B. Cunningham Graham.

Booklist 21:274 Ap '25

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

"These Tales by a master technician are beautifully fitted mosaics of words."

+ Dial 79:350 O '25 60w

"It seems to the present writer that Conrad probably had no intention of including this story ['The Black Mate'] in his projected volume, for it bears every evidence of being a trial balloon, an apprentice piece which was either rejected by the magazines, or—and perhaps wisely—withheld by the author. Nothing but praise, however, can there be of the remaining trio; and one of these three, with the simple title 'The Tale,' is, in its way, as nearly perfect a short story as is to be found in any literature." P. A. Hutchison

+ — Int Bk R p429 My '25 950w

"The story 'Prince Roman' was written almost half a century after this event. Within its tragic and perfect structure is one of the most exquisite of love idylls, and such a picture of autocratic eastern Europe 100 years ago as only Joseph Conrad, writing out of the great heritage of his knowledge and in his finest creative vein, could portray." G. W.

+ Lit R p3 Mr 21 '25 1450w

"In 'The Black Mate' Conrad's art is seen, so to speak, buttoned up in a cheap and skimpy suit. Poles removed, as art, is 'The Warrior's Soul,' where we have Conrad almost at his best. The tale is steeped in Conrad's peculiar atmosphere, and in style, tone, grace, and force it has all the quality of a drawing by an old master." E: Garnett

+ — Nation and Ath 36:718 F 21 '25 1100w

Reviewed by E: Garnett

New Repub 42:189 Ap 8 '25 1150w

Sat R 139:12" 7 '24 470w

"Naturally it is a joy to all Conrad admirers to be in possession of this new volume—would it were not the last! An assuredly great writer has passed, and Cunningham Graham's preface—a distinguished bit of writing—is a fitting valediction." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 1:594 Mr 14 '25 380w

Spec 134:121 Ja 24 '25 320w

"In The Black Mate, Conrad had already achieved a gentle purity of style, but he had not fully developed his command in psychology. And here, in Tales of Hearsay, we have the best example we could have been given to compare with his early work. 'The Warrior's Soul' was the last short story that Conrad wrote, perhaps the simplest and most lucid of them all."

+ Spec 134:206 F 7 '25 800w

"It would be idle to pretend that this volume ranks with Conrad's greatest work. Its qualities are unmistakably his. One would not barter its very imperfection for the finished niceties of other writers. But something of Conrad's elusive magnetism is lacking in all four stories."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p70 Ja 29 '25 700w

CONSOLIVER, EARL LESTER. Automotive electricity; a text and reference work on the construction, operation, characteristics and maintenance of automotive ignition, starting, lighting and storage battery equipment. 665p il $4 McGraw

629.2 Automobiles—Electric equipment

25-8277

"Covers practically all makes and types of electrical and battery systems used on automobiles, tractors, trucks, motor-cycles, motor-boats, aircraft, and stationary engines."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Naturally American practice is most fully considered, but most of the advice given is directly applicable to all makes of car. Many useful hints can be picked up from this book. The author has had considerable experience in instructing those who have to look after motor-cars; he gives the minimum of theory and lays stress on those points which are important in practical running."

+ Nature 116:424 S 19 '25 220w

"Contains information on the principles and operation of practically all types of electrical and battery equipment and is suited as a reference for automotive service stations and their employees. Text is unusually complete and there are 656 illustrations and diagrams."

+ N Y New Tech Bks 10:20 Ap '25

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:421 J1 '25

Pratt p17 autumn '25

CONWAY, SIR MARTIN. Art treasures in soviet Russia. 284p il $5.50 Longmans [16s E. Arnold]

708.7 Art, Russian [25-10547]

Contrary to wide spread rumors of destruction and sale, there exists in Russia today a stupendous amount of treasure in jewels and objects of art. These priceless collections, far from being desecrated or dispersed, are more closely and carefully guarded under the soviet government than under the old regime, and in some instances they are being restored and preserved from the decay into which they have fallen. Sir Martin Conway was given unrestricted access to the treasured contents of palace, monastery and museum and he describes some of the vast array of objects he saw and handled.

Booklist 22:61 N '25

Nation 121:sup442 O 14 '25 200w

"His book makes interesting reading. He visited all the museums in Moscow and Petrograd and their vicinity, and describes their contents, not, of course, in form of catalogue, which he had neither time to compile nor space to include in his book, but giving a good general impression with descriptions of such works of art as he considered outstanding. His book thus has the double interest of a guide to Russian museums and of a record of the impression made by the country and people on one who seems to have gone there with an open and honest mind, to look at works of art rather than, in an inevitably prejudiced manner, to criticize the new régime."

+ Nation and Ath 37:378 Je 20 '25 360w

"Impartial, though admittedly hasty and slightly bewildered, survey."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p346 My 21 '25 1250w

COOK, ARTHUR LEROY. Elements of electrical engineering; a textbook of principles and practice. 568p il $4 Wiley [20s Chapman & H.]

621.3 Electric engineering 24-25354

"Intended as a short course for college students. Treats of direct-current and alternating-current circuits and machines, emphasizing fundamental principles. Does not attempt to describe all types of electrical machinery."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:419 J1 '25

Pratt Technical Books p9 '24

COOK, OSCAR. Borneo: the stealer of hearts. 286p il $5 Houghton [18s Hurst & B.]

919.11 Borneo

[25-4762]

The author spent eight years as an officer in the North Borneo civil service, going about from district to district, serving the natives with enthusiasm and good will, learning to know them and share their life. His duties brought him into various relations with them. He assisted in land settlements, dealt with labor troubles, gave medical advice, and helped to fight cholera and locusts. It is a human story that he tells and one which gives a real insight into native life.

"It is human rather than governmental, full of life rather than statistics. Anecdotes and real stories of adventures rather than tables, reports and blue books form the basis of this personal narration. Wonderful scenery and strange life seen on his back-country expeditions help make the book attractive, as well as two dozen photographs of natives, scenery and architecture from Borneo."

+ Boston Transcript p5 F 14 '25 280w

"Folk who have sons or nephews in Borneo will read it with interest, as it gives a good idea of the obstacles against which the young administrator is likely to kick his shins."

+ Nation and Ath 36:124 O 18 '24 130w

"One quickly discovers that he is very much what is sometimes called temperamental, but his mood of indignation or despair, or whatever, never dominates him long. Indeed, one of the attractions of the book is the cheerful unconsciousness with which its author paints his own picture in his pages."

+ N Y Times p20 F 1 '25 470w

"The book has gusto, 'go,' and humor, gives a clear notion of the activities of the official on and off duty, and abounds in excellent description of varied sort—of native and imported human types, of scenery, costumes."

+ Outlook 139:277 F 18 '25 200w

"In spite of amateurish lapses into fine writing, he gives a vivid picture of the people among whom he worked for eight years."

+ Spec 133:566 O 18 '24 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p560 S 11 '24 230w

COOK, ROSAMOND C. Essentials of sewing. 238p il $1.40 Manual arts press

646.2 Sewing 24-19187

A textbook on garment construction giving explicit directions for all the essential stitches and processes involved. Explanations are well illustrated with photographs.

"The illustrations are excellent. The descriptions of processes are good; but even with the rather careful descriptions given, it is doubtful whether the pupils would understand without further explanations. A valuable help is provided, however, in the clear analysis of the steps necessary in each process." Lillian Stevenson

+ El School J 25:636 Ap '25 200w

"Valuable little book." S. J. Swenson

+ J Home Econ 17:224 Ap '25 250w

COOLIDGE, CALVIN. America's need for education; and other educational addresses. (Riverside educational monographs) 87p 80c Houghton

370.4 Education 25-9964

This volume contains several of the President's utterances on educational matters, including four addresses and two letters.

Booklist 22:8 O '25

"Not only for the clear, sound, and sturdy views of this author, but because of the importance given them by his position, I commend this handy little volume to careful and repeated

COOLIDGE, CALVIN—Continued

reading by all schoolmen who find themselves as most of us do, on the defensive for our cause." W: McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:146 O '25 400w

COOLIDGE, DANE. Lorenzo the magnificent (the riders from Texas). 320p $2 Dutton

25-10698

The story is concerned with the early days of the great Southwest when the Texans invaded Mexico in search of watering places for their cattle. Lorenzo the magnificent, a dignified Spanish grandee has for years occupied some valuable water rights. But with the coming of the Texans, the times change. Don Lorenzo is compelled to capitulate to the cattlemen, but not without a gallant fight. The book closes with the elopement of Angelita, Don Lorenzo's charming daughter, with Jason Coles, cattlemen.

"Some of the descriptions of the customs and conflict of the place and time are excellent and the picturing of the devastating delightful in its way."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 8 '25 250w

"Excellent reading and is as fascinating, as rugged and full of color and action as the people who wear sombreros and bright shawls and who live where the sun is hot." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p4 Ap 8 '25 250w

"'Lorenzo the Magnificent' stands out as a successful addition to the goodly multitude of Wild West romances. The author has taken pains with his characterization as well as with his plot. He recalls a colorful chapter in this country's history, and recalls it in a thoroughly colorful way."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 21 '25 600w

N Y Tribune p8 Ag 23 '25 180w

Outlook 140:432 Jl 22 '25 80w

"Mr. Coolidge seems to know whereof he writes. If his descriptions are labored they are at least circumstantial; if his characters do not breathe they are at least true to type; if his action does not run smoothly it is at least convincing. Yet 'Lorenzo the Magnificent' will not satisfy many readers: as a wild-west thriller it fails to thrill, and as an historical novel it is not very significant."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:15 Ag 1 '25 200w

COOLIDGE, JOHN GARDNER. Random letters from many countries. 408p $5 Marshall Jones

910 Voyages and travels 24-29649

"Covering the period from 1887 to 1908, these letters from the author to his mother make a volume which the reader may take as a travel book, an autobiography, or both. The letters come from many points, from Europe, Africa, Asia, and sometimes from South America and Mexico, not to mention such vague and unclassified ports as Santa Maria de Belem de Gram Para."—N Y Tribune

Bookm 61:604 Jl '25 200w

"There is movement and life on every page of this book. He has humor, good nature, sympathy and appreciation of the peoples and the events with which he has come in touch." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 15 '24 1700w

"Mr. Coolidge evidently enjoys a positive talent for being in an interesting place at an interesting time. His letters written to members of his immediate family are models of their kind, frank, humorous, and vivid."

+ Ind 114:478 Ap 25 '25 200w

N Y Times p11 Ap 5 '25 470w

N Y Tribune p9 F 8 '25 200w

"Here and there occur revelatory touches. They are the best things in the letters. These, moreover are most readably written, with the frankness and simple familiarity natural to the case. It is not up to what the breadth and timeliness of Mr. Coolidge's travels might lead one to expect, but it makes engaging reading and now and then something better." Philip Coan

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:508 F 7 '25 500w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 1 '25 300w

COOPER, MERIAN C. Grass; foreword by William Beebe. 362p il $2.75 Putnam

915.5 Bakhtiari. Persia 25-8071

"'Grass' is an account of the journey of the Baktyari tribe across terrible mountains and ghastly rivers of Persia—and it brings directly to the reader's mind and eye the sights and sounds and smells and feelings of an astounding drama. From his first reaching the camp of nomad princes, with the grass dried up and the flocks and herds on the verge of starvation, Mr. Cooper follows the tribes through desolate and snow-driven regions finally into the land of grass."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 21:334 Je '25

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 4 '25 1350w

"Grass is an epic; it can hardly be called anything else. Although wholly different, there is in this work the same feeling of elemental things that characterizes Keymont's epic of the Polish soil, The Peasants."

+ Cath World 121:714 Ag '25 200w

Cleveland p100 S '25

"Fascinating volume. Mr. Cooper succeeds in making their savage, migratory manner of life vividly familiar to us, and we follow with wonder and deep friendly interest their difficult wanderings in the face of hardship, privation, and peril." S. A. Coblentz

+ Int Bk R p385 My '25 1200w

Reviewed by L. Gannett

N Y Tribune p7 My 31 '25 450w

N Y World p4m Je 7 '25 200w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 10w

Pratt p31 autumn '25

St Louis p356 S '25

"To this effete reviewer Mr. Cooper's tireless vigor is at times overwhelming. The man simply snorts vitality. However I forgive him for the sake of the story as a whole, which is certainly well worth the telling and well worth the reading." Lawton Mackail

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:880 Jl 4 '25 400w

COOTE, COLIN REITH. Italian town and country life. 261p il $3 Brentano's [7s 6d Methuen]

914.5 Italy—Social life and customs. National characteristics, Italian

"Mr. Coote's book, which he calls 'Italian Town and Country Life,' is neither a guide-book, nor a history, nor a political treatise. Having fought side by side with Italians during the war, and having lived in Rome for several years, he writes with easy familiarity of such things as Roman workmen, aqueducts, the Pope and Popery, the perils of shopping, and the 'quaint psychology' of the contadini."—Nation and Ath

"Discriminating and keen is this critical study of modern Italian life, in town and country. It is, moreover, authoritative. A subject carrying a perennial spell is his. And when, as in this case, the story is told in a style delicately keen as the point of a rapier there is added a touch which is irresistible." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 31 '25 1400w

"Although his views are not unusual, they are sincere, and amusing enough. The book is eminently readable, at least for those who are not too sensitive to the note of higher-journalism."

+ Nation and Ath 37:625 Ag 22 '25 450w

"Italian Town and Country Life is a somewhat unattractive title, but it conceals one of the best books on Italy that has come into our hands in a long while. The author knows his Italy as well as any foreigner could get to know it in such a relatively short time, and, though he covers necessarily some well trampled ground, he brings to his study of Italian life a delightful freshness of outlook. The book is as well planned as executed."

+ New Statesman 25:578 S 5 '25 900w

"It gives a very clear account of things as the author saw them and the reader is left with a definite and probably a fairly exact conception of the curious and interesting Italian character."

+ Sat R 140:352 S 26 '25 60w

"This is a pleasant book and worthy of a place of honour in the great collection of English books upon Italy. He writes like a scholar and a soldier; there is nothing slipshod in his sentiments or in the style of their expression. He has an eye for character as well as for literary effect, and his judgments on persons and places, if inclined sometimes to be sweeping, are always entertaining."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p502 J1 30 '25 950w

COPPARD, A. E. Fishmonger's fiddle. 320p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d J. Cape]

25-26898

"Seventeen short stories mainly concerning English pastoral simplicities, with a sort of 'cool activity,' as if a breeze has only just passed, or a gale is brewing. Perhaps the finest and most representative of the stories are 'The Jewel of Jeopardy,' 'The Watercress Girl,' 'Fishmonger's Fiddle,' 'The Little Mistress,' 'A Three-Handed Reel' and 'A Wild Goose Chase.'"—N Y Times

"Clever, delicate, sophisticated, subtle, humorous, they represent some of Mr. Coppard's best work."

+ Booklist 22:72 N '25

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 8 '25 420w

"Mr. Coppard has a slippery and accomplished intelligence which comes to rest too easily on the surface things of life. Those fortunate occasions, however, when he penetrates this surface, lead one to hope that the facile winks and jests in which he often indulges, are not wholly native to his talent and may in time disappear."

+ Dial 79:432 N '25 150w

"His style is distinguished and often poetically lovely. His place among contemporary short story writers is very near the top, and 'Fishmonger's Fiddle' will do much to keep him there."—H. B.

+ Lit R p9 J1 3 '25 120w

Nation and Ath 37:406 Je 27 '25 250w

"A rarely genuine artist, as goes without saying, entirely sure of himself and master of his material, even to the least detail of those pretty trickeries that have so misleadingly artless and accidental an air. Yet Coppard can go wrong. He goes wrong in The Jewel of Jeopardy, even to the very title. Having set himself too rigid a theme, that easy conversational manner of his becomes charmless, the lovely ripples of his rhythm stiffen. It sounds, in fact, like an early story unsuccessfully made over."—O. H. Dunbar

+ New Repub 44:262 O 28 '25 600w

"Mr. Coppard has great gifts—lyric charm, and intellectual clarity and purity; and some of the stories in his new collection are very beautiful. But some are disappointing."—P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:397 J1 18 '25 160w

"No one of Mr. Coppard's whimsical and contrary-minded tales but may be prolonged indefinitely with the aid of his sumptuous materials and suggestions. They are delicious entertainment in and for themselves, but they are even more satisfying as springboards to that most fascinating of all pre-occupations—day-dreaming over stories and novels that may never be written."

+ N Y Times p8 Je 7 '25 650w

"'Fishmonger's Fiddle,' has several beautiful stories which, like all his others, defy analysis. As you read you neither like nor dislike. You are suffocated, at times irritated, but you go on reading. Many times you feel he could have presented his subject in a line or two while he uses a paragraph."—Margery Latimer

N Y Tribune p5 S 6 '25 960w

"Mr. Coppard is the most tolerant and the least mawkish of writers. Having a shrewd eye for character, he exposes human nature ruthlessly but with a genial smile. His prose is quick with the energy of his unwinking interest in every mortal thing that happens; it teems with a bright, visual imagery that makes the chairs and tables of his narrative more solid than actuality itself. His page has that air of spontaneity, that infectious excitement, which is the last reward of patient workmanship."—Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:646 Je 13 '25 1050w

"With a few chosen words he evokes a group as easily as he describes an individual with cumulative phrases, and it is typical of the easy sureness of his manner. By preference, it seems, he writes for the most part of the commonplace and the frankly ugly, permitting his prose no beauties save that of miraculously accurate transcription. But when he frankly yields to beauty he loses none of his vigor in surrender."—B. R. Redman

+ Sat R of Lit 2:311 N 21 '25 800w

"This young writer has a delightfully innocent and colloquial tone, he perfectly conceals the mechanism of his plots, his characters are as genuine as people that one reads of in the news, his conversation allows one the pleasures of real eavesdropping. And best of all, he has invented his own technique."

+ Spec 135:205 Ag 1 '25 350w

"Mr. Coppard is a born storyteller, and because his initial enthusiasm remains fresh and undiminished every volume he gives us yields a handful, if no more, of memorable tales. To everything that he writes this author imparts his own curious and attractive flavour. He is a true original."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p397 Je 11 '25 1000w

COPPLESTONE, BENNET, pseud. See Kitchin, F. H.

CORBETT, JAMES JOHN. Roar of the crowd; with a foreword by Robert Gordon Anderson. 329p il $2.50 Putnam

B or 92 Boxing

25-5671

"'The Roar of the Crowd' is James J. Corbett's memoirs of a life passed, for the most stirring part, in the squared arena. His great fights are set down with a simplicity that adds to their impressiveness. There is no boasting here or attempts at lengthening one's stature. It is very much like a man reminiscing among a quiet gathering of his friends, friends who know him very well and before whom he is simply himself and no legendary figure."—Bookm

Booklist 21:331 Je '25

"Unlike most books about pugilists (if we except the work of Bohun Lynch) it is astonishingly good reading. Mr. Corbett has a sense of humor and, added to this, a dramatic appreciation of the proper thrill at the proper moment. Of course 'The Roar of the Crowd' is in no sense of the word an addition to what we must term literary autobiographies, but it is sincere and straightforward and Mr. Corbett never loses a precise understanding of his own perspective."—H. S. Gorman

+ Bookm 61:92 Mr '25 300w

"It is written with no pretensions to be anything but an interesting narrative of personal experiences. The writer cherishes no grudges and speaks as fairly of those who have beaten him as those he has beaten. It will enliven many an hour for those in reminiscent mood

CORBETT, J. J.—Continued
who love, perhaps, to see, certainly to read, of the doughty deeds of fighting men."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 400w
Cleveland p112 D '25

"A surprisingly interesting book. It has an unmistakably genuine quality. It is written by Corbett and not by some hireling scribe."

+ Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 120w

"While James J. Corbett's book may not go down in the history of English literature as the epic of pugilism, it is nevertheless highly entertaining. The author has written a half-tale of his prize-fighting days that will interest and hold the deacon and the bruiser." Jim Tully

+ — Int Bk R p230 Mr '25 2550w

"The thoughts and words of a sportsman and a gentleman, and Corbett is both as well as being, perhaps, the most scientific boxer who ever held the world's championship. The book is worthy of the man." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p5 Ap 18 '25 250w

Nation 120:697 Je 17 '25 150w

"It is a good book, full of sentiment and kindliness, and picturing the life of its time as many a more pretentious work has not. Few who pick it up will be likely to regret that Jim Corbett forsook banking for a more hazardous and, as some might say, a less dignified career." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 F 22 '25 1750w

"The Roar of the Crowd' is easily the most interesting story of a prize-fighter's career that has ever been sent to press." Grantland
Rice

+ N Y Tribune p3 Mr 15 '25 300w

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 280w

"It is courteous, modest, and humorous." E.
L. P.

+ Outlook 140:340 Jl 1 '25 280w

Springf'd Republican p7a F 22 '25
1800w

CORDEAL, ERNEST. Railroad operation.
(Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 255p il $2 Simmons-Boardman

656 Railroads—Management 24-29435

"For the young man in the ranks of the operating department. Presents certain principles of management applicable to most railroads, showing results obtained by such application, and offers much good advice. Covers such phases as organization, the shop and roundhouse, locomotive performance, the passenger train, freight handling, train operation, storekeeping, maintenance of way, accounting, employees, and public relations."—Pittsburgh
Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:423 Jl '25

CORELLI, MARIE (MINNIE MACKAY). Open confession; to a man from a woman. 190p
$2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-8470

"There are twenty chapters, of which the first ten record the emotions of a woman's growing love, ardent, poetic, idealizing, and the second ten depict her disillusioning, her resulting bitterness against her former beloved, her effort to find in life a substitute for that which she has lost. The record is in the first person and speaks always of the lover as an artist and of the woman as a writer of some renown and commercial success. Toward the end she turns back to her work and, as she describes it, in her life and her home there are many suggestions of Marie Corelli's own surroundings and outlook on life as they were familiar to her public for many years."—
N Y Times

"It seems to us that this will be the final estimate of her best work, that it is florid and challenging, but that there is less virtue in its style than in its conception."

Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 400w

"Judged from the literary or 'highbrow' point of view, this book is almost incredible.
It is a lyrical ecstasy of bathos. Yet, if one can forget the ordinary standards of literature, one sees that it has a distinct quality which is not possessed by the hundreds of best-sellers which do not sell and of 'popular' novels which are never really popular." Leonard Woolf

— + Nation and Ath 36:777 Mr 7 '25 650w

"Merely ludicrous and petty; sincere enough perhaps, but with the self-deluding sincerity of one who has made hanky-panky with suffering, her life's main business." J. Franklin

— New Statesman 24:659 Mr 14 '25 100w

"The little story is told with that command of language which its author always possessed, with much ease and grace and beauty of style and phrasing, with an idealistic conception of love that is arresting and pleasing. But it shows only the human nature and is throughout superficial and sophomoric."

— + N Y Times p20 Mr 8 '25 850w

N Y World p7m Ap 5 '25 170w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p203 Mr
19 '25 200w

CORVO, FREDERICK BARON, pseud. See
Rolfe, F. W:

COUDENHOVE, HANS. My African neighbors; man, bird, and beast in Nyasaland. 245p il
$2.50 Little

916.89 Nyasaland. Zoology—Nyasaland

25-17364

"I have never seen an airplane, or a dirigible balloon, or a motor-bus, or a taxicab, or a motor-boat, or a wireless apparatus, or a cloud picture, or the president of a republic, or a portrait of Einstein, or a Bolshevik." Thus the author in his introduction. Whether such a state of affairs be regarded as a drawback or a blessing, it is evident that very little of the life in his African retreat escaped Hans Coudenhove's eyes. His book contains much interesting material about his neighbors in Nyasaland, both human and animal.

"Seldom do such adventures as here described come to a man possessing not only culture but the literary gift. The book is enough to incite all the rising generation of boys to pack their kits and run away to Africa."

+ Booklist 22:68 N '25

"It is always refreshing, after skipping through the hastily recorded impressions of tourist-naturalists, to come across a book written by a man who has lived his story and, living it, has found graceful expression for his thought. This is a remarkably entertaining account of the men, beasts, and birds of Nyasaland."

+ Ind 115:366 S 26 '25 60w

"His accounts of the grace and savoir faire of the unspolled African natives are no less revealing and significant than his endlessly interesting tales of the striking intelligence displayed by his many unusual pets." Carey Jeffreys

+ Lit R p2 O 24 '25 180w

"The chapters devoted to the study of animal life are fascinating, although curiously enough, with the exception of the lion, Coudenhove does not speak of the large mammals."

+ N Y Times p24 D 27 '25 780w

"From the first page of his introduction to the last page of his 'African Neighbors' Mr.
Coudenhove possesses the readers' interest. Indeed his introduction is a cunningly baited trap into which you are happy to walk." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p20 D 20 '25 800w

N Y World p7m N 1 '25 620w

"My African Neighbors' is a new type of travel book. It is a series of delightfully written essays, amusing, serious, sympathetic, by a man of unique experience. And it is so chock-ful of anecdote and information that it should be a source of repeated enjoyment to the vicarious wanderer."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:303 N 14 '25 400w

"Presentation of accurate observation in an entertaining manner is an art, and Hans Couderhove provides an example of such artistry in his newest book, 'My African Neighbors.' The book may be read profitably for its knowledge of the region."

+ Springf'd Republican p16 O 9 '25 600w

COUPERUS, LOUIS MARIE ANNE. Eastward; tr. by J Menzies-Wilson and C. C. Crispin. 286p il $5 Doran [18s Hurst & B.]

919.2 Dutch East Indies 25-2480

For descriptive notes see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:272 Ap '25

Bookm 61:488 Je '25 250w

"Lovers of Couperus will find their especial account in this valuable book; but strangers to his talent will certainly receive new ideas as to the possibilities of human life in Java and Sumatra."

+ Dial 79:350 O '25 180w

"There is a leisurely charm about 'Eastward,' for the author wrote what he wanted to write, wrote it flowingly and beautifully. It is all intimate, deliciously irresponsible." H. C. Burr

+ Int Bk R p259 Mr '25 800w

"The chief charm of the book lies in the personal note and in the brilliant and often subtle descriptions of both the lands and the peoples." H. L. Pangborn

+ Lit R p4 Ja 31 '25 550w

"There are a small number of outstanding chapters, showing that, after all, the book is worth reading, but showing, too, how much more worth while it might have been. The rest may on the whole be classed as polite and pleasing verbiage." Edwin Björkman

+ New Repub 43:300 Ag 5 '25 220w

"'Eastward' is far above the average 'travel book' in sustained interest and in the general impressions of beauty which it conveys. It is broadening to the imagination. And it is written with apparent affection on the part of the author for that East which at once so draws and so confounds the Western mind."

+ N Y Times p14 F 1 '25 2200w

"Such natives as the reader encounters are nearly always the tame birds kind who frequent residences, and minor exhibition rajahs, harried out to please the urbane and helmeted Olympians in his excellency's car. From first page to the last, the book is written from the outside in. Of the native East there is scarce a trace." H: Beston

N Y Tribune p10 My 24 '25 280w

"There is a deal of quotable stuff in the book. There is also a great deal of beautiful and fanciful writing mixed up with a philosophy that has humor: in short it is a book to read." is a book to read."

+ Spec 134:331 F 28 '25 550w

COWARD, NOEL. The vortex. 193p $1.50 Harper [5s Benn]

822 25-20498

Youth is Mrs Lancaster's god. She pursues it feverishly, defying middle age. She has always a youthful lover in tow as witness of her power to fascinate. Her talented son returning from abroad is sickened at the decadence which surrounds his mother and in the final tense scene of the play begs her to save herself with him from the vortex of beastliness that threatens to engulf them.

"A brilliant, swift comedy of sophisticated people, exchanging their dangerous urbanities, written with sharp irony and wit."

+ Ind 115:367 S 26 '25 100w

"Mr. Coward's object is satire, and he certainly achieves some satirical effects in the earlier part of the play. Types of futility like Pawnee and Clara are familiar to most of us. The Sunday-night scene in the country house is presented with every realistic device and modern improvement. The weak portion of the play is the Ibsenish last scene between the selfish mother and the neurotic son." R: Aldington

+ — Nation and Ath 36:682 F 14 '25 150w

"The Vortex has better dialogue than any English play that I have seen in several seasons, better for instance than Galsworthy's Loyalties or than A Bill of Divorcement or the Milne plays; its dialogue is more supple, more idiomatic and more variously speeded up. It is more genuine and less tricky than the French Bernstein, with much more purity of intention and far more of something that derives from youth, you may call it reticence, genuineness, innocence, poetry, or whatever it is that contrasts with the hard vitals of a well advanced Parisian success." Stark Young

+ New Repub 44:177 O 7 '25 1200w

"A play which in the theater is not only emotionally harrowing, but creates the illusion of social forces behind the characters driving them on, in cold type discloses those characters as weak, unimportant and detached individuals. The illusion of social forces is theatrical, a trick of the stage, of the atmosphere created by the director; actually this solid dramatic element is lacking in the play, which consequently has no abiding significance." W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p15 O 18 '25 100w

"Mr. Coward has written a play distinguished by the uncanny and diverting naturalism of its conversation, its light underlining of character, and its excellent dramatic situations. His climax, when the son faces his mother and accuses her of causing his ship-wreck by her years of self-indulgent neglect is frankly unbearable—in the same key as Hamlet's scene with Queen Gertrude." M. C. Canfield

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:234 O 24 '25 820w

"Immoral as the characters are, the ideas are most moral. One's sensibilities may have to stand a strain, but the ethical tone of the play is civilized. The characters are divested of the slightest excuse for their degeneracy."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 O 2 '25 500w

COX, CAROLYN. Stand by. 351p $2 Harper 25-15758

This is the story of a war marriage and its aftermath. Jackson Harlow, U.S.N., a happy-go-lucky young giant, is dazed to find himself married to a trusting little southern girl whom he has met by way of a snap shot pinned to the toe of a sock. They are married but a day when he rejoins his ship and Rosemary Lee goes home. Jack throws himself into the war with all his youthful vim and shuts his bride of the moment out of his life and thought. Rosemary's faithful letters are never answered. When the war is over they meet in Washington. Jack is ill, broken. He is forced sullenly to accept Rosemary's care. At intervals his brute love for her flares up, but she repulses him steadily, hoping always to lift their marriage to a higher plane. With what success, the book describes.

"A shrewd and understanding portrayal of human nature. It is a finer and more understanding story than its somewhat conventional beginning would suggest."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 250w

"It is all quite conventional, and more than a little saccharine."

+ — N Y Times p6 Ag 23 '25 360w

COX, JOHN HARRINGTON, ed. Folk-songs of the South; collected under the auspices of the West Virginia folk-lore society. 545p il $5 Harvard univ. press [25s Milford]

398 Folk-songs—Southern states. American ballads and songs 25-4180

"This collection contains no less than 185 songs and ballads, most of them appearing in a number of different versions. All of them have been gathered within the State of West Virginia, but a majority of them have been recorded in other States as well and must be counted a common inheritance of the stocks that first settled this country. Well-known old English and Scottish ballads have here their American counterparts, sometimes almost unchanged, as in the case of the stately and melodious 'Lord Randal,' and at other times localized, as when the English 'Botany Bay' here becomes 'The Boston Burglar.'—Outlook

COX, J. H., ed.—Continued

Booklist 22:143 Ja '26

"Beautiful and delicious modern volume of folk songs." D. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 F 7 '25 900w

"The charm of the book receives a great addition from Dr. Cox's notes about the circumstances in which he obtained the ballads." C. W. T.

+ N Y Times p13 My 10 '25 1600w

"Such ballad collections are laudable in every respect, and similar work should be pushed as much as possible before it is too late. The leveling forces of our machine-made civilization are hard at it, and soon the old fiddlers and ballad singers of the South will all be gone. For this study Professor Cox's collection is merely raw material, but of such crucial importance that without it the more difficult work is unthinkable." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Outlook 139:272 F 18 '25 800w

St Louis p339 S '25

"Excellent indexed, fully annotated; a volume welcome to everyone in any way interested in the modern survival of folk-song." J. Bennett

+ Sat R of Lit 1:760 My 16 '25 1050w

"Professor J. H. Cox has edited the volume with exemplary care, and it contains material of value in many fields."

Spec 134:683 Ap 25 '25 1050w

Spring'd Republican p8 Je 15 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p347 My 21 '25 820w

CRANE, CAROLINE (BARTLETT) (MRS AUGUSTINE WARREN CRANE). Everyman's house; with a foreword by Herbert Hoover. 226p il $2 Doubleday

728 Architecture, Domestic—Designs and plans. Home economics 25-9253

The house described, which was awarded first prize in the Kalamazoo 1924 Better homes demonstration, is a model of practical good sense in arrangement and equipment. The book tells how the house was built and how it may be duplicated elsewhere at the modest cost of from five to seven thousand dollars.

Booklist 22:19 O '25

Boston Transcript p2 Je 6 '25 420w

"It is a very modern house, equipped with labor and time-saving expedients, and it is trim and attractive, an inviting little home in every particular. Mrs. Crane is a persuasive demonstrator and she explains its features and sets forth its good qualities and its possibilities in a most engaging way."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 26 '25 360w

"Mrs. Crane points out the adaptability of this house, which is large enough to accommodate a family of five and proves its right to the name 'Everyman's House.' It is suitably arranged for groups of varying needs." Lettie Gay

N Y Tribune p8 S 27 '25 300w

"The book is full of suggestions to the man or woman who is planning to build a house. There is no question that many intending builders might make large savings by adopting some or all of Mrs. Bartlett Crane's suggestions."

+ R of Rs 72:112 J1 '25 200w

"The author's hints on sanitation and good housekeeping, her fine appreciations of motherhood, fatherhood, and the dignity of home-making give the book its larger values. Having lectured to civic organizations and women's clubs all over the country, having diagnosed and prescribed for sick towns and sick homes and sick souls, Mrs. Crane is just the one to know 'What every woman wants,' and what every family needs." A. F. Bacon

+ Survey 55:250 N 15 '25 560w

CRANE, CLARKSON. Western shore. 303p $2 Harcourt

25-6165

These studies of college life are written from an unusual angle, in an unusual style. Each chapter is a separate story, tho the same figures recur in many of them. The young men and women here pictured as students in a far-western co-educational university are neither very brilliant nor very good. The pictures are not all pleasant to look at; the disturbing fact remains that they are doubtless faithful likenesses.

Boston Transcript p5 Je 20 '25 460w

"This book has genuine merit in its sound grasp and depiction of character, its ability to project single scenes and situations with an exceptional, suggestive clarity, and in its unswerving honesty of artistic intention." E. C. Beckwith

+ Lit R p3 Je 27 '25 260w

Reviewed by Paul Rosenfeld

New Repub 42:350 My 20 '25 650w

"A book that is realistic, brilliant and sound, without being great or important in any respect."

+ N Y Times p22 My 10 '25 750w

"It has faults—the constant introduction of new characters may bother the reader at first—certain passages prove distasteful to individual audiences—but I am of the opinion that Mr. Crane's abilities are important ones and their development may secure him an original and distinctive place in American letters." S. V. Benet

+ N Y Tribune p4 Mr 29 '25 250w

"One does not expect to see life steadily and whole through a first novel. One does, however, expect to find revealed a fresh and vivid personality, that of the author. In this, Mr. Crane disappoints us. He fails to realize the tragedy or the pathos of the lives he depicts. It is permissible that Mr. Crane should acquiesce to such lives. He is under no moral obligation to protest. As an artist, however, he is under obligation to give line to his chaos, no matter how dull and meaningless that chaos may be. That obligation Mr. Crane has not fulfilled."

— Sat R of Lit 1:732 My 2 '25 250w

CRANE, FRANK. Why I am a Christian. 344p $3 Harper [6s Lane]

230 Christianity

This is the frank and sincere statement of a minister who left the pulpit to reach a wider circle thru the pen. Many of Dr Crane's readers and admirers will find that in this exposition of his religious beliefs he makes articulate their own.

Bookm 62:xxix S '25 180w

"With not the slightest implication of spiritual dishonesty toward Dr. Crane we feel that he pats the average man on the back and reassures him that his religion is a pretty good religion. . . 'Why I am a Christian' is a fine book full of very fine thoughts." W. E. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 J1 25 '25 700w

"Vaguely as he views institutional religion he says some sensible things in defense of it."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p287 Ap 26 '25 150w

Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

CRANE, LEO. Indians of the enchanted desert. 364p il $5 Little

970.4 Painted Desert, Arizona. Hopi Indians. Navajo Indians. Indians of North America —Government relations 25-17104

As agent for the United States government Mr Crane has been superintendent of Indian reservations in Arizona, New Mexico and South Dakota. In this book he writes of his work among the Hopis and Navajos of Arizona in the heart of the Painted Desert—a most varied and human work which brought him in closest proving live stock, holding court, policing snake touch with the daily lives of his Indian friends. The desert under his care was a busy place. His work included fighting dirt and disease, imdances, trapping bootleggers, struggling with floods, and building roads, schools and a hospital.

"No better picture of that desert is to be found in American literature. Mr. Crane, for years on years, battled for life with its eternal rocks and sands. He makes it brilliantly real, and he somehow makes it romantic." H. L. Mencken

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf N '25 450w

"An entertaining account."

+ Booklist 22:112 D '25

"Mr. Crane writes a prose of mature lucidity and distinction not frequently met with in the mass of books broadly termed 'Description and Travel.' The text is illustrated by more than fifty crystal-clear photographs of the region and its inhabitants."

+ Bookm 62:506 D '25 100w

"He writes interestingly and arrestingly both of the Indians and the desert where 'nothing is small save those who enter it without respect.' Both for the background, done with the sympathy of years of knowledge and experience, and for the sharp, intimate pictures of Indian and white man living together, Mr. Crane's book is worth buying and reading. It is well written and well illustrated."

+ Ind 115:366 S 26 '25 160w

"He has made his traders and tourists, his native police, his unreconstructed chieftains nursing sullen resentments, very real figures to the reader, in a series of pictures sharply etched, bearing in every line the impress of fidelity to a truth that is always more than stark realism." Fullerton Waldo

+ Lit R p4 O 24 '25 400w

"Picturesque and wholly fascinating book. Nothing more vital, more entertaining, more variedly informing, more colorful, has been written about the region with which it is concerned. Others have specialized with more detail and fullness on specific matters or have been concerned more with presentation of natural aspects. But there is almost nothing likely to enlist the interest of an intelligent person in the desert about which Mr. Crane does not have more or less to say."

+ N Y Times p7 S 27 '25 2050w

"This is an exciting book for all Americans. No one has more deeply felt nor more vividly described the great Painted Desert of the United States than Leo Crane. And no one has better understood or been more truly sympathetic with the inhabitants of that enchanted desert." E. S.

+ N Y World p6m O 18 '25 720w

"His book relates much that has been communicated to no other white man. As an authoritative account of Indian customs and ceremonies, it has no rival. Mr. Crane's intimate knowledge of the Indian service makes his comments on political meddling and bureaucracy at Washington extremely illuminating."

+ R of Rs 72:665 D '25 100w

CRANE, NATHALIA CLARA RUTH. Lava lane, and other poems. 68p $1.50 Seltzer

811 25-20048

In her second book of verse the child-poet of "The Janitor's Boy" shows an even richer imagination and an uncanny familiarity with history and archaeology.

"'Lava Lane,' her new volume, is a better book than 'The Janitor's Boy.' It may be that the lyric notes do not warble so freshly, but they have achieved an even greater cleverness." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:502 D '25 300w

"The juvenile atmosphere, evident in the earlier book, despite the startling sophistication and the mature phraseology, is here noticeably lessened. There is still the fresh childish narration, but only in occasional verses. For the most part there is allegory and metaphor delicately and even exquisitely expressed." W: B.

Boston Transcript p5 D 16 '25 480w

"There is a quality of imagination and suggestion, a strange rightness and felicity in the choice of words which certainly puts a strain on one's faith in the age of the author."

+ Ind 115:716 D 19 '25 130w

"No poet that ever lived delighted in amassing such curious, half-forgotten sounds; not even Francis Thompson had so great a vocabulary of rare and archaic terms. The new volume is ample proof of this. Moreover, it marks—incredibly enough—an advance. Her intimations are, if not deeper, more direct; the wisdom (which is one beyond gathered knowledge) less clouded in symbolism. . . . She speaks of the 'arrogance of modesty'; she sees, with a precision that any poet might envy, the humming bird 'pivoting on emptiness'—an effect never surpassed and rarely attained by Amy Lowell. . . . Out of what other world has the prescience of 'The Discoverer' been projected? But, as I have written elsewhere, it matters little where this poetry comes from. The important thing is that it is here." L: Untermeyer

+ Lit R p1 N 14 '25 1400w

"After all, poetry is not such a difficult thing to achieve—as the quantity of bad verse turned out annually attests. And Nathalia's verse is bad, very bad—that is, just so long as it is considered to be poetry, as serious-minded critics insist. As soon, however, as it is put in its proper place and treated as juvenilia it is very good indeed."

+ — N Y Times p2 N 29 '25 1200w

"At its worst, 'Lava Lane' has a tang and a technical competence. At its nor-best-nor-worst, 'Lava Lane' is rhythmic to an almost Kipling degree, inquisitive in the way a child with big eyes is inquisitive, and (to more than club women and English teachers) engaging. At its best—which means a third of the book—'Lava Lane' very nearly answers the requirement imposed by Emily Dickinson upon all bonafide poetry by promptly taking off the tops of our heads." Virginia Moore

+ N Y Tribune p4 N 22 '25 700w

"There is a divinity that hedges in a child, so that the child may continue to look upon the breathless circus parade that is the world with that candor, that unacknowledged honesty, that exclamatory freshness and freedom which is beautiful enough to break our hearts and is richer than all our tribe. But, as though this were not sufficient, without motive or manipulation of any sort, we fossils begin to probe and tap and explain; we talk of Nathalia's 'psychic' something-or-other, of the 'mystic,' 'cryptic,' 'apocalyptic' what-you-may-call-it in her poetry. And we rub our rheumy eyes with a gleeful, satisfactory motion—and Nathalia goes on saying inexplicably audacious things about butterflies and rainbows and bees and sings quite unconcernedly her wise and disturbing songs." Joseph Auslander

N Y World p7m N 1 '25 520w

"These poems thrill the reader not merely because they were somehow written by a child but because they exist. Whether the occasional excesses will grow or disappear, this work is, today, something more remarkable than a mere phenomenon. None of Nathalia's confrères has expressed deeper implications than are recorded in a dozen of her new poems." L: Untermeyer

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:367 D 5 '25 550w

"Nathalia Crane's 'Lava Lane' may be judged from the fact that the most general comment it has excited is one of surprise at her extensive vocabulary. Her range of subjects is small, and of forms rather smaller. If one word were to hit it off, it might be hard, or vulgar. It stoops to the idiom and the standards of the Bowery."

— Springf'd Republican p10 N 19 '25 450w

CRAWFORD, MORRIS DE CAMP. Come-back.
309p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

25-5544

"There is very little of the conventional character of the prize fighter about Red Donlin. He is a real person to whom fighting is his career, and he is wholeheartedly proud of his prowess in the ring. Then suddenly Red finds that through an accident his mighty right arm is rendered useless, that perhaps he never will be able to fight again. He takes a job in the lumber region of Maine and there in the Maine woods, among the logging men, he learns a great deal of life which he has never known before. It is an exciting tale, full of surprising incidents, but none is more surprising than the changes which are effected in Red's attitude toward life by the hard labor, the outdoor existence, and—of course!—by Jeannie the exceedingly pretty girl with whom he falls in love."—Boston Transcript

"It is an idealistic story with a strongly romantic twist to it, but it offers a new view of a prize fighter and of prize fighting."

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 400w

N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 520w

N Y Tribune p11 Ap 12 '25 100w

"One forgives Mr. Crawford his distrust of 'city slickers' for the robust and swiftly moving manner of his narrative. He has written just a real good action yarn and that is by no means to be despised."

+ — N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 180w

"It is not overdone and its atmosphere of the big woods, with its blizzard, its French Canadians, and its very rough lumberjacks is nowhere laid on too thickly."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:127 S 12 '25 150w

CRAWFORD, MORRIS DE CAMP. Heritage of cotton; the fibre of two worlds and many ages. 244p il $7.50 Putnam

677 Cotton

24-29310

"A brief historical account from prehistoric times to the present, avoiding technical discussion and statistics as far as possible. Gives much attention to art and design in cotton fabrics. Discusses the future of cotton, indicating the value of research. Includes chronology of cotton."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:294 My '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p337 My 14 '25 80w

CRESSWELL, NICHOLAS. Journal of Nicholas Cresswell, 1744-1777. 287p $5 Dial press

917.3 United States—Description and travel.
United States—History—Revolution 24-30436

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:379 JI '25

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 300w

Living Age 325:604 Je 13 '25 500w

"Whether he is confiding to his journal how on the previous evening the flesh overcame the spirit, as alas, it often did, or noting the details of farming practice, or the customs of the Indians—amongst whom he lived intimately for a time—or discussing any of the topics that engage his lively attention, he never fails to be interesting."

+ New Statesman 24:756 Ap 4 '25 450w

Reviewed by E. B. Greene

Pol Sci Q 40:459 S '25 800w

"Altogether, the grandson of Cresswell's daughter may be congratulated on printing so interesting a record. But it is a pity that he did not annotate it here and there, and add an index as well as an Appendix of Dates."

+ — Sat R 139:331 Mr 28 '25 550w

"The author pretended to no literary skill, but he had what was much better, a faculty for close observation, a blunt graphic mode of expressing himself, and a frank willingness to reveal his own personality." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 2:40 Ag 15 '25 1000w
Spec 134:503 Mr 28 '25 320w

"Nicholas Cresswell, who was a ready writer, an accurate observer, and possessed a great capacity for making friends, recorded his most varied experiences: now, one hundred and fifty years after they were written, they are published for the first time. Cresswell's diary is of such interest because he was thoroughly a human being." E. W.

+ Spec 134:724 My 2 '25 1700w

"Though suspected as a spy, and at one time searched and put on parole, he seems to have moved about the country without much hindrance, and to have had abundant opportunity for following the course of the revolution. It must be said that the result of his observation is a little disappointing. But we get, nevertheless, a notable account of the state of things in Virginia."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p149 Mr 5 '25 1200w

CREVECŒUR, MICHEL GUILLAUME SAINT-JEAN DE. Sketches of eighteenth century America: more Letters from an American farmer; ed. by Henri L. Bourdin, Ralph H. Gabriel, and Stanley T. Williams. (Philip Hamilton McMillan memorial publication fund) 342p $4 Yale univ. press

917.3 United States—Social life and customs
—Colonial period. Farm life 25-23064

Crèveœur was a Frenchman who came to the colonies from Canada about 1760, as a young man. For ten years he lived among farmers near the growing seaport of New York. He stood with the Loyalists in the Revolution and when he could no longer stay here he returned to France. Later, France sent him back to America as consul. In these sketches he gives an all-round picture of the American farmer—the work of the fields, the life of the farm home, the social life of the community and its political and religious interests. He describes the experiences of a frontier woman and gives an account of the Indian massacre at Wyoming.

Booklist 22:155 Ja '26

"He describes the everyday life of Eighteenth Century rural America with a sympathy and a clarity which make his observations both agreeable and historically valuable. He was a partisan, but a fair-minded and generous critic."

+ Ind 115:479 O 24 '25 100w

N Y Times p2 N 15 '25 280w

"Professor Bourdin has placed all students of American literature under obligation to him by his discovery of the manuscripts. His introductory notes about their discovery and about Crèveœur are interesting and valuable." F. L. Mott

+ N Y Tribune p8 D 27 '25 620w

"As instructive as they are interesting. He was one of the earliest, and remains one of the best, of our nature writers."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:253 O 31 '25 550w

CROCE, BENEDETTO. Conduct of life; auth. tr. by Arthur Livingston. (European lib.) 326p $2.25 Harcourt

170 Conduct of life. Ethics 24-24481

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"These essays strike one as a rather tedious combination of old, war-wearied Europe and Hegelian apologetics. The spirit of these essays, however, is sound: that after all, Morality should come down off her high horse and fight and play with the evils and passions she too often, to her harm, disdains." C. F. Tauesch

+ — Int J Ethics 35:316 Ap '25 300w

"One looks and looks in vain in this collection of essays, written at many times on many themes, for anything that could be called a consistent moral philosophy. Instead one finds the urbane, shrewd, sometimes rather shockingly worldly observations upon life of a discerning man of the world who has, one heard, also been a metaphysician." Irwin Edman

— J Philos 22:556 S 24 '25 1100w

"Each one of these essays is what such things should be—a provocation to reflection. Sometimes they provoke by stimulating and sometimes by exasperating, but all bite into the mind. None are dull, or reminiscent, or merely amiable. All betoken a fresh and independent gaze." C. A. Bennett

+ — Nation 120:296 Mr 18 '25 750w

"The truth is that when Signor Croce is ostensibly writing about such things as 'Sex,' 'Perfection' and 'Imperfection,' 'Forgiving and Forgetting,' he is in reality writing about his philosophy. He brings to these themes neither the practical wisdom of a man who has observed and suffered, nor the freedom of a disinterested mind; he brings only his philosophy."

— Nation and Ath 37:602 Ag 15 '25 700w

"Certainly the Conduct of Life is everywhere stimulating and refreshing. Another reason why these essays seem to have an especial grace and lightness is doubtless that Signor Croce has found in Mr. Arthur Livingston a translator happy in phrase and well able to reproduce the paradoxes and playfulnesses of the original."

+ Spec 135:108 Jl 18 '25 70w

"To sum up, we feel that though we can profit by the stimulating quickness and variety of Croce's mind, we cannot find in him that fundamental unity of character which is necessary in a man who is to add something to the scaffolding by which we prevent the universe from falling about our ears." R. C.

+ — Spec 135:310 Ag 22 '25 1050w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS. Electrical-machinery erection. 314p Il $3 McGraw

621.3 Electric machinery 25-10388

"A practical book on the details of operation in the installation of electrical machinery, beginning with unloading from the railway car, moving, erecting in its final location, foundations and other supports, and securing it in place ready for operating. A section is given to inspection and maintenance. Illustrated with 320 line drawings."—Pratt

Booklist 22:57 N '25

Pratt p16 autumn '25

CROFTS, FREEMAN WILLIS. Groote Park murder. 299p $2 Seltzer

25-8367

The trail of this murder story reaches from South Africa to Scotland. In Groote Park, a few feet away from the railroad track, the body of Albert Smith is found horribly mutilated, apparently having been run over by a train. A pocket book found in a shed nearby, a blood-stained hammer and a sandbag convince inspector Vandam of Scotland Yard that it was neither accident nor suicide which ended Smith's life. The complications which follow take Vandam to Langholm hall, Scotland, in search of the criminal, and here another tragedy occurs similar to the Groote Park murder. Were the two murders the work of one man? In solving the mystery detective Vandam gets an overwhelming surprise.

"It will be interesting to see what percentage of regular devotees of the detective story field respond to this work. 'The Groote Park Murder' cannot in any way be said to be the usual easy reading to which these fiction hungry souls are accustomed."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 200w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

"A story which shifts from South Africa to Scotland, and, allowing the reader to be possess of all the evidence in the case, contrives to puzzle him thoroughly." L. Moore

+ Int Bk R p471 Je '25 80w

"Here is a book that the most intensive seeker after baffling mysteries will find a thrill in. And until the author finally unravels the snarl and presents the solution any reader who goes on the time-honored theory that two and two make four is going to have his confidence badly shaken. 'The Groote Park Murder' is the most exciting detective story this writer has read since 'The Hound of the Baskervilles.'" A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p9 My 9 '25 380w

Nation 121:146 Jl 29 '25 30w

"It would be over-exacting to demand style in this class of book, but might we not be spared details every time the detective offers cordial thanks and tactful compliments? Mr. Crofts's murder mysteries would then gain in lightness and speed what they lost in length." E. B. C. Jones

— Nation and Ath 34:738 F 23 '24 150w

"It is so much pleasanter for a reader when a story is told in this fashion, since, for once, he is not expected to indulge in amazing flights of imagination and incredible deductions, which invariably prove to be false. The story will hold the attention until the last page has been reached." G. W. Wynne

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 250w

"The denouement is very neatly done."

+ N Y World p7m Ap 19 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p66 Ja 31 '24 160w

CRONSTEDT, COUNT NILS FREDRIK. Grip and I; our adventures in Nigeria; tr. from the Swedish by Frederick Whyte. 128p $1.75 Doubleday

916.69 Nigeria. Dogs—Legends and stories

This is the story of a dog who was given a bad name and very nearly hanged. Grip's sudden vicious attacks on man or beast had earned him a just sentence of death when he was saved by the interposition of the author and presented to him. With patience and remarkable skill Count Nils Cronstedt took the dog in hand and gave him a training so successful that the erstwhile lawless one called "white lion" by the Nigerian natives, became the loyal servant and friend of his master and a firm guardian of the law.

"We cannot have too many dog stories; but we may search far before finding one as exceptional as this direct account of 'Grip and I' in Nigeria."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 11 '25 450w

New Statesman 24:370 Ja 3 '25 120w

"Grip's story possesses the fascination inherent in most tales of evil-doing and temporary reform."

+ N Y Tribune p16 N 15 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p690 O 30 '24 300w

CRONYN, GEORGE WILLIAM. '49; a novel of gold. 278p $2 Dorrance

25-4213

"The latest novel of the gold rush wherein a highly colored melodrama is set against the background of the San Francisco fire and the Sacramento flood."—Int Bk R

"Mr. Cronyn has woven a fascinating tale of the rush for gold and the founding of an empire."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 200w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p656 S '25 30w

"The romance and thrill which followed the discovery of gold in California gives this story by Mr. Cronyn its pungent and rich flavor."

+ Lit R p10 Mr 21 '25 80w

"The story is too common to be worth much. It is the rich local color, on which Mr. Cronyn spent considerable time and study, which makes the book interesting."

+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 8 '25 300w

CRONYN, G. W.:—Continued

"The story of the rush of the gold seekers to California has been told so many times, in so many different ways, that it calls for courage to do it once more. Yet Mr. Cronyn is justified in the result, for he makes a very good tale of it and has even managed to escape the epithet of 'hackneyed.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:695 Ap 18 '25 300w

CROOKSHANK, FRANCIS GRAHAM. Mongol in our midst. 123p il $1.50 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

572 Mongols. Ethnology. Imbecility

24-20520

"The thesis upheld by Dr. Crookshank involves a basic revision of the philogenetic history of man. 'The three faces of man' are none other than the white, Mongol and Negro. But to these three faces there are important homologies on the interpretation of which hinges Dr. Crookshank's theory. The racial Mongol has an ape homolog in the Asiatic orang-utan and a human homolog in a kind of imbecile known by physicians as 'Mongol.' Similarly, physical characteristics common 'among certain whites' are approximated by the chimpanzee and by some individuals presumably suffering from dementia precox. The Negro, finally, bears certain physical resemblances to the gorilla, the great African ape. The contrast between the three types in physical (and, as the author often adds, mental traits) is further strengthened by an examination of racial postures. . . . He believes that a genetic relationship exists between the three races of man, white, Mongol and Negro, and their simian and pathologic homologs."—Survey

"Couched in language which is at times severely technical, 'The Mongol in Our Midst' is not easy reading. There is meat therein, however, and a definite contribution to the ethnological thought of our era. Even to one who is not consciously interested in the problem of the origin of races, this book will be welcome. It is adventurous reading and, very possibly, a work of considerable scientific moment." R. B. M.

Boston Transcript p8 N 12 '24 500w

Lit R p23 O 18 '24 300w

— Nation 121:40 J1 1 '25 460w

"This little book, whatever its theoretical insufficiency, contains many entertaining if rather gruesome facts. Dr. Crookshank quite rightly claims that his facts, gathered in the first instance from medicine, have been neglected by workers in other scientific fields such as ethnology, and though they are not likely to be converted, anthropologists will be grateful to him for calling their attention to some neglected truths. A word of praise is due to the publishers; the book is one of that excellent series initiated by 'Daedalus.'"

+ New Statesman 24:180 N 15 '24 400w

"Dr. Crookshank's theory as such is no worse than many other theories and it is elaborated not without ingenuity or even scholarlyness. Only in one particular is it sorely deficient and that is the method of proof. The author apparently has never heard of numerical tests, averages and distribution curves, or if he did, he failed to recognize the applicability of these devices to the case at hand. . . . In the absence of this statistical basis, Dr. Crookshank's theory must remain a curiously whimsical fantasy and it is perhaps to be regretted that his book should have been published in the same series in which have also appeared these two jewels of popular yet wholesome scientific speculation, Haldane's 'Daedalus' and Bertrand Russell's 'Icarus.' Alexander Goldenweiser

— + Survey 53:483 Ja 15 '25 580w

CROTHERS, SAMUEL MCHORD. Children of Dickens. 259p il $2.50 (10s 6d) Scribner

Dickens, Charles 25-21280

The author introduces each of these children of Dickens with a brief sketch, followed by a quotation from the story in which the little boy or girl appears. The volume is handsomely bound, and contains twelve charming illustrations by Jessie Willcox Smith.

Booklist 22:170 Ja '26

"Jessie Willcox Smith's pictures for the book, made some years ago, suggested this happy revival for a 'Holiday Series' well meriting its name over a long period of years." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:183 O '25 120w

"These tales are told, their scenes are described, their characters are portrayed clearly and concisely by Dr. Crothers. They should lead the children to a later and fuller appreciation of the art of Dickens." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 11 '25 520w

"Samuel McChord Crothers tells with much charm of style the story of a score or more of the famous children of Dickens's imagination, condensing, describing and illuminating so efficiently that he gets the essential interest of each one into a few pages."

+ N Y Times p6 D 6 '25 80w

N Y Tribune p8 D 20 '25 850w

"He has been wonderfully successful in these brief character sketches, for he has managed to preserve much of the spirit of the original, keeping the dialogue where it will be most effective and adding charming bits of his own humor and observation here and there."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:301 N 14 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p804 N 26 '25 250w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON. Introduction to the study of education and to teaching. (Riverside textbooks in education) 476p $2 Houghton

370 Education. Teaching 25-17711

A general introductory survey course in education for normal school, university and college students. Each chapter is accompanied by questions for class discussion, exercises and problems, and a list of collateral reading. The author is dean of the School of education, Leland Stanford Junior university.

Educ R 70:280 D '25 750w

"The text is a notable addition to educational literature." W. A. Brownell

+ El School J 26:230 N '25 500w

CULBERTSON, WILLIAM SMITH. International economic policies. 575p $3.50 Appleton

341 International law and relations. Economic policy. Commercial policy 25-11236

This book discusses the economic factors which shape the policies of nations and effect the relations between them. It is shown how competition for markets, for supplies of raw materials, loans and concessions are the chief source of rivalries and misunderstandings and the frequent cause of war between the nations. The book also makes clear the obligation resting upon nations and those who direct their foreign policies to find means for controlling these economic forces.

"The book touches a wide range of topics, many of them highly controversial and provocative of sharp clash of opinion. But it is based upon years of competent study and official experience, and represents a substantial contribution to the literature of the subject." P. S. Peirce

+ Am Econ R 15:749 D '25 750w

"From the many statesmanlike ideas suggested or endorsed by Mr. Culbertson for the improvement of international economic relations one might construct a well-rounded scheme of international control." H. S. Quigley

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:838 N '25 850w

"As might be expected because of his experience with tariff problems, his chapters on commercial treaties, tariff bargaining and British preference are among the best. International finance and other topics treated have not been so fully developed, while there is not space devoted to still other questions of importance, such as immigration." E. M. Patterson

+ Ann Am Acad 122:268 N '25 300w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 800w

Nation 121:582 N 18 '25 60w

New Statesman 25:612 S 12 '25 250w

"This is an important and a useful work, fully documented and replete with authentic information. Those who favor laissez-faire in international relations will disagree even with some conclusions which Mr. Culbertson presents most persuasively and effectively: but there can be no disagreement about the solid worth of the volume. It reveals an exceptional grasp of world political patterns and motives, and it is temperate in its treatment of them. It might well be made a handbook in our State Department, and studied by every American outpost in a foreign field, commercial, industrial and financial as well as official." Silas Bent

+ N Y Times p3 J1 26 '25 2000w

"There is little in it that is picturesque, dramatic or entertaining; but there is nothing that is not valuably informing and directly pertinent to our own present national interests. It is economic history raised to the nth degree, most timely when so many formidable if not authoritative voices are proclaiming that economic considerations dominate and direct the progress of the world." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:186 S '25 300w

Pratt p8 autumn '25

"His argument is directed to profit-seeking business men rather than to theoretical scholars and reformers. And that, of course, is one reason why International Economic Politics is such an important book." L. S. Gannett

+ World Tomorrow 8:349 N '25 700w

CULLEN, COUNTEE. Color. 108p $2 Harper
811 25-21678

Poems by a young Negro poet. The color of his race is often the theme, as the title reveals, but not always.

"Countee Cullen is an excellent poet, and he has a theme which gives him courage and originality." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:503 D '25 120w

"Much of his work is reminiscent of Miss Edna St. Vincent Millay and of A. E. Housman, but always it is informed with something personal to him, some quality of his own. It is never purely imitative. There is fine promise here of lyric power. The author is twenty-three years old. In view of that fact, his work is little short of amazing."

+ Ind 115:539 N 7 '25 120w

"Though one may recognize that certain of Mr. Cullen's verses owe their being to the fact that he shares the tragedy of his people, it must be owned that the real virtue of his work lies in his personal response to an experience which, however conditioned by his race, is not so much racial as profoundly human. The color of his mind is more important than the color of his skin." Babette Deutsch

+ Nation 121:763 D 30 '25 700w

"There are numerous things which Mr. Cullen as a poet has not yet begun to do, and there are some which he will never do, but in this first volume he makes it clear that he has mastered a tune. Few recent books of poems have been so tuneful—at least so tuneful in the execution of significant themes." Mark Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ja 10 '26 550w

"It would not be fair to Color merely to say that it is rich in promise; for a good deal of it certainly is performance in itself. A colored writer, in a considerable proportion of his verse his themes justify his title; but nevertheless his outlook is universal. There are some, if rare, clichés and unmusical lines; but as a whole it reveals excellent technique and, what is of even more importance—at least in a first volume—sensitivity, humor, imagination, insight, and vigor."

+ World Tomorrow 8:353 N '25 160w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Riddle of Three-Way creek. 338p $2 Doran [7s 6d C. Palmer]

25-7077

The Canadian Rockies is the setting of this dramatic tale in which figure the Northwest mounted police, an escaped prisoner, and a beautiful girl. Jim Pryse, having aided his brother to escape from the police is himself captured by Corporal McFardell, but in turn escapes. After seven days of terrifying cold and hunger, Pryse stumbles upon a homesteader, George Marton, who befriends him. Moved by Marton's kindness Pryse, with his sister, establishes a sort of "crook's refuge" at Three-Way Creek and dedicates himself to the service of social outcasts and those who are hunted by the law. Here with his sister Jim lives in seclusion until the day he meets Molly and Andy McFardell. The destinies of these three people are worked out in a tragedy which brings swift retribution to McFardell and happiness to Jim and Molly.

Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 300w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p655 S '25 180w

"A story of the North-West of Canada, not quite on the conventional lines."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 5
'25 120w

CUMMINGS, EDWARD ESTLIN. XLI poems.
54p $2.50 Dial press

811

25-9042

"'XLI Poems' continues in almost every phase the tradition which Mr. Cummings established for himself two years ago with 'Tulips and Chimneys.' No long poems are here, but there are Songs, Portraits, Chansons Innocentes, Sonnets, and war-pieces."—Nation

"Here again he displays a fine feeling for words, presents one or two pieces with a good many ear-marks of excellent poetry, and reveals a power of imagery that makes one instinctively wish he would sacrifice a little of the affectation of unconventionality upon the altar of clarity and comprehensibility." F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 13 '25 180w

"Essentially Mr. Cummings is an educated poet. For all his surface radicalism, for all his insistence that his mind is 'a big hunk of irrevocable nothing' which performs 'squirms of chrome' and executes 'strides of cobalt,' for all his warning to the timid reader that he will 'utter lilac shrieks and scarlet bellowings,' he is saturated with Chaucer, Spenser, and Shakespeare—to name only three of the great poets to whom he obviously has gone to school. Why should he not disregard the timid reader, as they did in their different ways, and fill his pages still fuller of the interesting and beautiful work of which he is capable? He has a richly sensuous mind; his verse is distinguished by fluidity and weight; he is equipped to range lustily and long among the major passions." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 121:72 J1 8 '25 450w

"He has tremendously invigorated and enriched American poetry, and has given it greater immediacy than the New Poetry rebels of half a generation ago ever dreamed of." W. F. Kohn

+ New Repub 45:60 D 2 '25 950w

"Mr. Cummings seeks always to present with exact minuteness every possible experience of sight and sound and taste and touch and smell. For these alone, only sensuous experiences, that is, occupy his pen. Psychological analysis and meditation upon the great problems of Life and Death are not within his sphere; on the outer world, not the inner, his vision is focused. To say that he cannot, therefore, be a great poet would be like saying that a painter to achieve eminence must do portraits instead of still life, or instead of the latter, landscapes. More significant than the nature of his subject matter is the fact that he expresses his physical reactions as skillfully, if not more so, than most poets do their spiritual and intellectual ones." Marcia Nardi

CUMMINGS, E. E.—Continued

N Y Tribune p4 Je 14 '25 1350w

CUNNINGHAM, GUSTAVUS WATTS. Problems of philosophy; an introductory survey. 453p $3.50 Holt
100 Philosophy 24-25649

The first part of the study is concerned with the relation which philosophy bears to common sense and science and with the origin of the problems of philosophy. Then the author turns to a consideration of some of the problems with which philosophy is concerned—knowledge, causality, matter, space and time, evolution, mind, goodness, immortality. Questions and exercises are given at the end of each chapter.

"Professor Cunningham offers an introduction which is marked by unusual clarity and directness of style. He speaks from the general position of idealism but sets forth other points of view with sympathetic understanding. Often he balances the arguments and leaves the reader to his own conclusions. This is sometimes apparently done for pedagogical purposes but also quite frankly at times because the author recognizes that the questions are as yet beyond any generally accepted solution." E. D. Ames
Int J Ethics 35:441 Jl '25 500w

"The book is clearly written and admirably organized, but the colorless neutrality of the author prevents one from feeling any vivid sense of the reality of the problems he discusses. Like the other books it is at once too abstract and too comprehensive to have much meaning for a beginning student in philosophy." Gail Kennedy
+ — J Philos 22:361 Je 18 '25 250w

CURTIS, CARLTON CLARENCE. Guide to the trees. 208p il $1.50 Greenberg

582 Trees—North America 25-9367

"Here are the trees of the Northeast, pocket-size. Here is such a key as any amateur can use; and if any key seems too difficult, here are drawings of leaves and twigs and catkins or acorns or berries or cones, and sometimes of winter buds—all in a flexible cover and small enough format to slip easily into one's coat pocket."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 22:14 O '25

"A pocket edition such as every tree-lover has often wished he had at hand."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 250w
Cleveland p97 S '25

N Y Tribune p16 My 31 '25 100w

"A brief and convenient book, well illustrated."

+ Outlook 140:116 My 20 '25 30w

"The book is wholly without literary style, unless it be the essence of style to crowd as much information into as small space as possible. Nearly all of this is correct, but experts will bemoan the inclusion of a few persistent old errors that have been carried through generations of tree books. But as the book is not for experts, it is a genuine pleasure to record the fact that no recent guide to our native trees should prove so satisfactory to amateurs as this one. It is thin and will slip into the pocket." Norman Taylor
+ — Sat R of Lit 2:258 O 31 '25 180w

"An excellent little guide."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:194 Jl '25

CURTIS, CHARLES PELHAM, and CURTIS, RICHARD C. Hunting in Africa, east and west. 281p il $5 Houghton

799 Hunting—Africa

25-22048

The informal record of a big game hunting expedition in Africa illustrated with pictures of the party, their quarry, and the country in which they found it.

"Curtis is not a craftsman of syntax, beautiful phrasing, rhythm, unity. But when he is moved to employ these because his impressions are so deep-seated, the realism of the thing grips you. The skilled writer does a beautiful moonlight scene naturally. It is his trade. That is why an adventurer-explorer who exploits no art—merely a pair of eyes and something to report: what he saw and how he was affected by it—surcharges his stuff with a conviction no author can inject." C. M. Lorenz
+ Boston Transcript p1 O 24 '25 3900w

"The interest of the present volume lies not so much in the events described as in the personalities revealed by the narratives. The two brother authors have observed African life, both human and animal, with discerning eyes. They write not only of hunting, but of the excitement and fun of traveling in Africa, of diamond mines and whaling, and adventures in a sportsman's paradise. Their comment is highly intelligent, their interest in what is interesting contagious, their good humor and their rather whimsical humors delightful. It is a pleasure to read a big game book in which the authors behave with so much courage and intelligence, and talk about it so modestly and truthfully afterwards."

+ Ind 115:654 D 5 '25 380w

"Told in an unassuming, informal, and thoroughly pleasing manner."

+ Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 20w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Ancient highway. 373p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

25-13866

"The Ancient Highway' is the road to romance. Clifton Brant comes back from the war to humiliate Ivan Hurd, who has killed his father and stolen his timber lands in French Canada. His fortunes are inextricably involved in those of Antoinette St. Ives and her mighty brother, Gaspard, who loves a fight better than life. She remains somewhat of a mystery to Clifton; and his impetuous love-making, as impetuous as Doug Fairbanks', enrages her. Hurd is bent on ruining the timber interests of Antoinette if she refuses to marry him. The stirring climax of the yarn boils up with racing logs down a dynamited and dammed stream."—Lit R

Booklist 22:72 N '25

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Bookm 62:215 O '25 120w

Boston Transcript p6 Ag 5 '25 900w

"James Oliver Curwood reduces life to simplicities—and one ought to say the large simplicities. Here is virtue on a large scale, beauty on a large scale, courage, villainy, food-hunger, laughter, shoulders. Each character and each event play their part well; one knows where they are all leading, one never really doubts but what the frigidity of Antoinette will thaw, one never doubts but what Clifton will survive dangers, surmount difficulties, come to herculean grips with the forces of adversity and down them. One never really doubts, but one is cleverly kept in suspense." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Jl 25 '25 300w

"The episodes of action, bravery and danger are perhaps fewer in proportion in this volume than in the usual Curwood story. That is due doubtless to the fact that the author is at pains to drive home points outside the narrative itself. Incidentally the story is a tract against bobbed hair."

N Y Times p7 Ag 2 '25 450w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
 N Y Tribune p9 S 27 '25 1100w
 Springf'd Republican p7a D 27 '25 100w
 The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 S
 17 '25 120w

CUSHING, HARVEY WILLIAMS. Life of Sir William Osler. 2v 686;728p il $12.50 Oxford [37s 6d Milford]

B or 92 Osler, Sir William 25-11250

"The subject of this biography, born in Canada and dying in Oxford in 1919, was a physician, endowed with singularly attractive qualities of mind, heart, and character, who attained the highest eminence as a clinician and a teacher in four important universities—McGill, Pennsylvania, Johns Hopkins, and Oxford. Not only the participation in the great forward movement of modern medicine, but also the events, the personal contacts, and tenacious friendships, the engaging character, the humanism, the historical and bibliographical studies, the extraordinary power by example and precept to inspire devotion and to influence ideals and conduct, especially of young men, all combine to impart to the story of Osler's life a variety of interest scarcely matched in other medical biographies. Dr. Cushing's theme is Osler, the man, even more than Osler, the clinician, the teacher, the man of science. The interest and appeal of the work are naturally strongest to physicians and students of medicine, but they reach as well to the general public."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by M. P. Ravenel
 Am J Pub Health 15:904 O '25 1200w

Reviewed by F. C. Shattuck
 Atlantic's Bookshelf J1 '25 850w
 Booklist 22:29 O '25

"The book is a true biography, because while it relates important events in the history of medicine, these are introduced so as to throw into strong relief the character of the man. This biography must surely be one of the few ever written in which the reader throughout two large volumes will find it difficult to place a finger upon a fault or point to an act of which he can distinctly disapprove." Joseph Collins

+ Bookm 61:699 Ag '25 1200w

"Splendid biography. The whole work must be read for anything like real appreciation of the man who inspired its production and made it 'a labor of love.'" Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 9 '25 2700w

Reviewed by J. H. Elliott
 Canadian Hist R 6:271 S '25 1100w

"It is written with infinite detail and scrupulous care. Every document, every scrap of paper, every recorded conversation has been studied and codified. Few men have had their lives presented with such complete and meticulous exactitude." D. R.

+ Ind 114:646 Je 6 '25 1100w

"Greatness is not so common in human nature or in biographic record that we can afford to miss it. Dr. Cushing's volumes are notable alike in their subject and in their literary form." R. M. Yerkes

+ Int Bk R p641 S '25 2200w

"What a book this is! On all counts it is the best biography since Beveridge's 'Life of John Marshall.' It is plainly a labor of love, full of natural unforced anecdotes. Its unprofessional atmosphere gives it rare charm." T: L. Masson

+ Lit R p1 Je 27 '25 1900w

"The work is bulky, but as a cyclopedia of Osleriana it will form an invaluable source book not only of the man but of the medical generation which he tends to symbolize. The excellent index and page headings will greatly enhance its value. The work is illumined by Osler's never-failing wisdom and charm, his sharp wit and gentle humor, and it is everywhere informed with Dr. Cushing's own literary skill and devotion to a great task." Herrmann Blumgart

+ Nation 121:387 O 7 '25 1000w

"At a rough computation, Professor Cushing's work contains well over half-a-million words, and it is not written with the rare skill which might excuse this portentous length. We fear that the present work will appear dull to all but Sir William Osler's intimate personal friends, and to them disappointing."

— Nation and Ath 37:332 Je 13 '25 750w

"Dr. Harvey Cushing, who handles pen and scalpel with equal skill, has made Osler live again for us in these pages. The theme is noble, the book is worthy of its subject; there is little to criticize; we could have spared a page treating of the Royal College of Physicians from a mistaken point of view, and the addition of a complete list of Osler's published writings would have been desirable; but the matter is all pure gold and the book should rank as one of the classical biographies." A. S. M.

+ Nature 115:562 Ap 18 '25 1550w

"To the lay reader it will seem that a considerable number of letters from and to relatively unimportant people have been permitted to swell the volume into occasional tediousness. We are inclined to question, however, whether much that is presented could have been omitted without detracting from the value of the work, which is far more than a biography of Osler. For, through the eyes of one of the great physicians of his period we obtain a unique picture of what may be termed the heroic age of medicine." Hans Zinsser

+ New Repub 45:61 D 2 '25 1150w

"This is an admirable month-to-month record of a great life. All physicians, medical students and those who intend to study medicine should read it. Habitual readers of biographies should be delighted with its charm and simplicity." Van Buren Thorne

+ N Y Times p6 My 31 '25 3850w

"One [cannot] conceive of any intelligent and aspiring young physician, surgeon, nurse, trustee of a hospital, or any one earnestly concerned with public health or medical education and research who will not desire to own the book—no owner would lend it long enough to read it through—and repeatedly to make his way through its fourteen hundred inspiring and richly informative pages." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 31 '25 2900w

Pratt p37 autumn '25

R of Rs 72:111 J1 '25 300w

St Louis p358 S '25

"While Carlyle's conservative statement that 'a well written life is almost as rare as a well spent one' does not imply any necessary connection between the two, it is delightful to find that Dr. Harvey Cushing has linked to the well spent life of Sir William Osler a well written story of that life, so rich in accomplishment, so strong in influence, so fine in character, so varied in interest." W: H. Welch, M.D.

+ Sat R of Lit 2:309 N 21 '25 3450w

"Harvey Cushing, one of the most virile and straightforward of living American writers, has very rightly conceived his Osler biography as mémoires pour servir. Leaving ultimate appraisal of this great physician's merits to posterity, he has, with secure good taste, taken eulogy for granted, and wisely shunned 'the foolish face of praise.' . . . Through its commendable absence of eulogy, fine writing and apologetic slaver, the book is one of the best of medical biographies, quite up to the standard of Roth's Vesalius in respect of continuity via documentation." F. H. Garrison

+ Science 61:611 Je 12 '25 1000w

"This is a mammoth production, the bulk of which almost defies the reviewer. But it will not defy the reader; it will instantly engage, constantly enchant and steadily lure him. It is a doctor's book in the sense that it was written by a medical expert, capable of expounding the various steps in Sir William's professional career. But it is not a medical biography or a scientific estimate; it is a human biography, in which the personality of the great teacher and practitioner is revealed by a rich store of personal letters and diversified material."

CUSHING, H. W.—Continued

+ Spring'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 1700w

"The life of Osler is certainly profitable company and a record of remarkable accomplishment. This story is delightfully told, full of that humor and whimsicality for which his hero was famous, and yet implicit with a sympathetic veneration for a great personality." N. B. Foster, M.D.

+ Survey 55:163 N 1 '25 1650w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p310 My 7 '25 1900w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

"The writer has not only wholly identified himself with his subject but has drawn as well upon all possible collateral fields of contemporary and ancient history with an astonishing industry and fulness of understanding hardly equalled in any extant medical biographic effort. . . . Are these two volumes which call for several days and some nights of reading, too much? I feel sure that they are not, and that generations of medical students and historians will raise to bless this Boswellian chronicler. The interest is cumulative to the sad dramatic finale." H. A. Kelly

+ Yale R n s 15:384 Ja '26 2850w

CUSTANCE, SIR REGINALD NEVILLE.
Study of war. 214p $3.50 Houghton [12s Constable]

355 War

[25-4973]

"Sir Reginald Custance has gone far towards attaining his avowed object of removing 'the vagueness and ambiguity in which the theory of war is usually enveloped.' His leading proposition is to show that 'the primary military aim of the navy, army and aery is to destroy or to neutralize the enemy armed force in order to attain the political object, security.' He substitutes the British doctrine of the 'will to security' for the Prussian doctrine of the so-called will to power. He draws apposite examples from a wide field of military history, ranging from the fifth century B.C. to 1914-18." —Sat R

"Admiral Custance is an old-timer; but he is a deep and steady thinker. His opinion deserves serious consideration. His instances and his references to historic occasions are to the point." Elbridge Colby

+ Lit R p6 Ap 18 '25 700w

Living Age 324:449 F 21 '25 550w

"Our main criticism is that the Admiral is so obsessed by his 'primary military aim' that he is in danger of forgetting that it is not an end in itself, but the means to an end. Admiral Custance has nevertheless written an admirable book that should be widely read. Particularly valuable is the way in which he brings out those permanent principles of war which underlie the changes produced by the development of material." C. E. Payle

+ Nation and Ath 36:308 N 22 '24 500w

"The Admiral's thesis, which has the merit of being simply set forth, embodies little that is new. He gives copious illustrations from history in support of his contentions, which make his volume interesting to any one who has not read much about the military art. In substance, however, there is little in his book that has not been brought out by Clausewitz, Mahan and Corbett." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p3 Mr 1 '25 420w

"Interesting and timely work." C. F. Goodrich

+ N Y Tribune p4 My 24 '25 1000w

"It is a common-sense book on the subject that leaves war inglorious."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 1 '25 100w

"This brilliant essay is a real contribution to military thought. We commend his concise argument to all students of modern war."

+ Sat R 138:550 N 29 '24 150w

"The book is an introduction and a guide which no military student can ignore; a textbook which, if prophecy is not rash, is clearly the first and may long remain the final authority." Arthur Pollen

+ Spec 133:845 N 29 '24 1000w

"It is to be hoped that Admiral Custance's latest book on war will meet with a success no less than it deserves, for it is an important contribution to the military literature of this country."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p806 D 4 '24 1300w

CUSTOT, PIERRE. Sturly; tr. from the French by Richard Aldington. 127p $1.50 Houghton [5s J. Cape]

25-26561

"The hero of M. Custot's quaint and philosophic story is a fish; and the habits of fishes are traced with the double zest of the scientific and the imaginative mind. The result is like nothing on earth, for it convinces us that it is very much like something in the waters under the earth. There is about it the glitter and grace of the swimming fish. It lends the glory of speech to creatures which in human ears seem exasperatingly and almost deliberately dumb, and this without merely dressing them up as scaly parodies of mankind." —Sat R

Booklist 21:371 Jl '25

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 150w

Ind 114:386 Ap 4 '25 40w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Lit R p3 Mr 28 '25 600w

"M. Custot's book is an extremely original one, and it has been excellently translated into English. It is one of the few successful books in which the world is represented through the eyes of an animal."

+ Nation and Ath 36:164 O 25 '24 150w

"The book was worth translating, and Mr. Aldington has done his work well in face of the many technical difficulties involved in finding the right English equivalent for the many unusual names of animals in the original. The book should stir the reader to a desire to an extended knowledge of marine life."

+ Nature 115:976 Je 27 '25 380w

"The very perfection of the biographer's art." D. B. Woolsey

+ New Repub 42:246 Ap 22 '25 300w

"This book, slight and simple apparently though it is, is a small masterpiece."

+ New Statesman 24:90 O 25 '24 500w

N Y Times p14 Ap 19 '25 400w

"Pierre Custot has mingled a rather lovely catholic mysticism with a scientific knowledge of the inhabitants of the sea, and the result must be pleasing to those who like that kind of mixture." L: S. Gannett

+ N Y Tribune p7 Ap 5 '25 650w

N Y World p6m Mr 22 '25 300w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 138:526 N 22 '24 330w

"There is poetry in 'Sturly,' a sense of beauty, a strength of language, and a vividness of metaphor so generally effective that the abundant figures never prove a defect. These qualities are admirably carried over in the translation of Mr. Richard Aldington."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:795 My 30 '25 360w

"Contains many beautiful descriptions of sky, sea and submarine life. These are pictured with the fervor of one passionately fond of the mysteries of the ocean."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ap 12 '25 300w

"M. Custot's symbolism is economical, unobtrusive, and expressed in vivid imagery, and the poetic quality of the whole (it scarcely reads like a translation) is heightened by the simplicity of the language."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p627 O
9 '24 800w

CUTHRELL, FAITH (BALDWIN) (MRS HUGH HAMLIN CUTHRELL). Sign posts. 119p $2 Small

811 25-2377

"These poems are reprinted from magazines and their themes are those common homely things that make a wide appeal."—Wis Lib Bul

"Marks no new era in poetry, but its contents are companionable reading, verse that is easy flowing but not jingly about subjects that are sympathetically close to the heart. There is a certain familiarity about her lines that is comforting."

+ Bookm 61:488 Je '25 100w

"Arresting is an adjective that may be truthfully applied to Miss Baldwin's little volume of poetry. These brief and tuneful measures do not stay long, perhaps, but they do halt you for the moment, with keen absorbed attention." L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 6 '24 400w
Cleveland p34 Ap '25

"If the gold of this volume had been carefully separated from the dross, the comparatively commonplace jingles weeded out from the more distinguished work and the whole sifted to one-half or one-third of its present length the book would be calculated to hold the lover of poetry fascinated. Miss Baldwin has written so many good poems that it is something of a shock to observe that she has written some that are not so good." S. A. Coblenz

+ Lit R p11 Mr 21 '25 250w

"Here are some clear gem-like effects, some satisfying figures." G. H. Busey

+ N Y Tribune p16 Ja 11 '25 70w

Sat R of Lit 1:532 F 14 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:88 Mr '25

CUTHRELL, FAITH (BALDWIN) (MRS HUGH HAMLIN CUTHRELL). Those difficult years. 349p $2 Small

25-9822

"Although there be nothing new in the delineation of the difficulties of a young married couple in adjusting themselves to one another and to life, yet the theme is one that is ever susceptible of fresh treatment because of the innumerable shades and gradations of individual experience and perception. The central character is a young married woman, Leslie Haddon; and the action of the entire story springs out of the hopes and struggles, the misunderstandings and reconciliations of Leslie and her husband after the honeymoon period and during the soberer maturing years."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 22:116 D '25

"This is a very readable story even for the jaded reader, and it is wholesome in its tone far beyond the 'Pollyanna' sort of thing which its pleasant ending causes one to compare with it. All praise to Miss Baldwin for the courage of her convictions."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 300w
Cleveland p87 S '25

"A pleasant, old-fashioned, sentimental little story of the sweet and pretty type." N Y Times p9 My 10 '25 380w

"Faith Baldwin has brought to an old subject an earnestness and an individuality that will doubtless find her many readers."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:899 Jl 11 '25 200w

"A good small library book."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

CUTHRELL, FAITH (BALDWIN) (MRS HUGH HAMLIN CUTHRELL). Thresholds. 301p $2 Small

25-19117

"We are interested from the beginning in the story of the commonplace, sensible Jane Marlow and her talented sister Anne. We watch with expectation when we see the two sisters simultaneously married, Anne to a man very much of her own type and Jane to a cold blooded, scheming and enormously ambitious young lawyer; and our expectations begin to be fulfilled when we observe the swift series of difficulties that arise in Jane's household. Just what maladjustments ensue, and just what steps the husband and wife take to meet the issue, constitutes the central theme of the novel."—N Y Times

"In this novel there is no vulgarity; but there is occasional fidelity to real life as most of us have known it. There is complete absence of sentimentality yet sentiment is understood. There is drama, real drama which never degenerates into melodrama. There is finally an atmosphere throughout the entire story of a striving for order, high ideals and self control. Few books are written today which show the development of character. In 'Thresholds' the author has made an astonishing success of her work." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 30 '25 700w

"On the whole, while Miss Baldwin's novel is not one that would shine among a hundred, she has done justice to her theme, and has presented us with a picture of marital difficulties which impresses one as being veracious in its implications at the same time as it is built upon a foundation of sound character observation."

+ N Y Times p24 O 4 '25 420w

"'Thresholds' is sparkling, succinct, and never cloyingly sentimental."

+ N Y Tribune p10 N 1 '25 520w

"It is a rare and grateful quality one meets in this book—the sincerity and fidelity of emotion. This book contains innocence and sophistication, sweetness and bitterness; it contains charm."

+ N Y World p5m O 11 '25 50w

CYNIC'S cyclopaedia. 135p il $1 Little 817

25-17473

"Containing six hundred and fifty wise and witty definitions of words most commonly used in connection with the fads and foibles of the day."—Subtitle

"Clever little book."

+ N Y Times p18 O 25 '25 250w

Spring'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 130w

CZARNOMSKA, ELIZABETH, ed. See Bible. Old Testament—Selections

D

DAKE, CHARLES LAURENCE, and BROWN, JOHN STAFFORD. Interpretation of topographic and geologic maps; with special reference to determination of structure. 355p il $3 McGraw

526.8 Maps. Geology—Maps. Geology—United States 25-12038

"A straightforward explanation of the relations which may exist between structure and topography. The reader is made acquainted with the common agencies that shape land form and with the appearance of these forms on topographic sheets. Preliminary treatment is given scales, methods of indicating relief, and the interpretation of contours and contour intervals. The book is not printed for the phys-

DAKE, C. L. and Brown, J. S.—Continued
 iographical specialist. Rather, it is written and illustrated to meet the demands for an adequate lay knowledge of geological-topographical processes."—Eng N

"So little material on this subject has hitherto appeared that this book by the professor of geology in the Missouri school of mines and the associate geologist of the United States geological survey should have wide use, and stimulate further work in the field of map interpretation. Very well made, good type, usable size, diagrams and drawings."

+ Booklist 22:105 D '25

Eng N 95:316 Ag 20 '25 90w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:34 JI '25

DAKIN, FLORENCE. Simplified nursing. (Lippincott's nursing manuals) 499p il $3 Lippincott

649 Nurses and nursing 25-13993

A simple, conveniently arranged text suitable for the home nurse, trained or untrained, or for use in high school classes in home nursing. "The matter is presented in the form of Lessons which follow a general plan of 'Definition,' 'Explanation,' and 'Instruction,' with 'Caution,' 'Safe-guard' and 'Note' where necessary. The instructions are given step by step, with full and complete notes designed to make the text clearer, or to refer to additional methods, suggestions, etc." (Preface)

"The instructions in this book are easy to follow and they are technically correct. They will prove of value to the home nurse who has had no regular training in nursing."

+ Booklist 22:57 N '25

"A clear, well-arranged handbook."

+ J Home Econ 17:520 S '25 40w

DANIEL, HAWTHORNE. Ships of the seven seas; with an introd. by Franklin D. Roosevelt. 321p il $4 Doubleday

623.8 Ships 25-8346

Those who have followed the sea and those who have not will alike find wonder and delight along with accurate information in this history of the development of the ships of the world. There are illustrations and descriptions of every type of bark afloat, and of some which have long since vanished from the seas. The book is written not from theoretical knowledge but from first hand experience, for the author has served in every capacity, from stoker to ships' officer.

Booklist 22:57 N '25

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 4 '25 750w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:20 Ap '25

"He has done an excellent job, the results of which should be fascinating reading for all boys and all sensible male adults. The lore of the sea is enormous, but so much of it, ancient and modern, in so handy and sailor-like a form, has not often been put into a single book." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p10 JI 26 '25 1050w

"The book is genuinely a sailor's book, and whatever the reader finds in it about ships and the sea rests on a knowledge and an attitude of mind which only actual experience at sea can impart. As I have said, the book is something of a hodge-podge, for Mr. Daniel has tried to do too much, and this attempt has resulted in certain thinnesses of material and literary shallows through which his vessel sometimes advances at half speed." H: Boston

+ N Y Tribune p8 JI 12 '25 650w

"The author sets himself the ragged task of telling the story of ocean craft from the very first crude rafts of the Mediterranean to the Flettner rotor ship, which is the latest evolution in man's strife to conquer the sea. And he achieves a fascinating tale."

+ N Y World p3m JI 26 '25 220w

Outlook 141:102 S 16 '25 50w

St Louis p345 S '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p622 S 24 '25 100w

DARGAN, OLIVE (TILFORD) (MRS. PEG-RAM DARGAN). Highland annals. 286p $2
 Scribner

25-17417

These chronicles of neighborly kindness on an upland farm in the Unakas show the mountain folk in all their contradictions of character; their wisdom and folly, strength and superstition; their poverty and abounding—no less than astounding—hospitality. Miss Dolly's love and understanding have won her the frank friendship of the mountaineers and have brought her as one of them into their hearts and homes.

Booklist 22:73 N '25

"Brimmed as they are with whimsical wit and humor, and a homely philosophy that is an abiding joy, the publication of this collection of little masterpieces is one for which every lover of literature will rejoice and give thanks." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 7 '25 780w

"Mrs. Dargan's affection for these people never melts to sentimentality; neither does it freeze into the objectivity of a sociological study. She aureoles what pathos she finds, what unconscious grandeur, with her own enthusiasm and understanding."

Nation 121:764 D 30 '25 80w

"In the fatality with which these rustics accept the tragic facts of life there is a striking likeness to the psychology of Thomas Hardy's peasants. In any case, the author has shown how to win not only our interest but our affection for her people of the Southern highlands." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p9 O 25 '25 850w

"'Highland Annals' has unquestionably a place in a very special niche. Its appeal is limited, but it is never commonplace, and its style is flexible, sympathetic and at times lovely." Emily Clark

+ N Y Tribune p12 O 4 '25 620w

"'Highland Annals' is a collection of superficial sketches. The mountain folk tell their own stories for the most part and they use a dubious dialect. Perhaps the speech is reportorially accurate, but the fact that it confines itself to about ten mannerisms in all makes one hesitate to accept it."

N Y World p5m O 11 '25 100w

"It is difficult to write quietly of this book; for, excepting a few pages of too fine writing, it is pure gold."

+ Outlook 141:488 N 25 '25 250w

"Mrs. Dargan has erected in this book a literary monument to what now seems the quaintness of a surviving frontier. 'Serena' and 'Granpap' are especially recommended to readers who like personalities with salt in them."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:299 N 14 '25 180w

DARLINGTON, WILLIAM AUBREY CECIL.
 Egbert. 315p $2 Penn [7s 6d H. Jenkins]

25-6194

"[Egbert, a snobbish young Englishman,] has spoken disparagingly of magic and magicians in the presence of a stranger, who retaliates by changing Egbert into a horned pachyderm retaining all his human attributes except form and speech. This occurs with no one but Egbert's friend Ted to witness the phenomenon. The task of caring for the hapless Egbert devolves upon Ted and Egbert's fiancée, Kathleen. How they solve their problem, with Egbert as the featured performer of a trained animal 'turn' in the music-halls, and his final restoration to his original earthly form, fill the balance of the tale."—Sat R of Lit

"Mr. Darlington blends with superb effect the realistic and fantastic. It is a racy tale well told." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 4 '25 400w

"Excellent book." G. K. Griffith

+ Lit R p12 Mr 28 '25 560w

N Y Times p9 Mr 1 '25 300w

"If one has a weakness for sheer farce one may find simple diversion in 'Egbert.' It is well written, not devoid of elementary humor and, though absolute nonsense, gives indications that its author is capable of better things."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:603 Mr 14 '25 220w

Spec 133:792 N 22 '24 50w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 250w

"The author gallops along with his story in a spirited manner, but the gallopings are sometimes rather ponderous, as might be expected from a rhinoceros."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p670 O 23 '24 180w

DARLOW, THOMAS HERBERT. William Robertson Nicoll, life and letters. 491p il $3.50 Doran [10s 6d Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Nicoll, Sir William Robertson

"Few men were more varied in their interests and work than the subject of this clearly written and well-balanced biographical record. Journalist, editor, author, political leader—he was equally effective in each rôle. . . . To his work as editor of the Expositor and the British Weekly he added the editorship of the Woman's World, Bookman, and several other journals. He was in addition the author of several works on religious and literary subjects, besides being literary adviser to Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton. And all this was done by a man who supplied a constant output of articles for papers published in this country and abroad. . . . Perhaps the chief debt under which Nicoll placed the reading public was his success in finding young authors of promise. Their introduction to the wider public secured by many men who afterwards became famous was due to his judgment and encouragement."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Mr. Darlow, who was an intimate friend of Nicoll's for half a lifetime, has done his work well. This is the 'official' biography so far as the family and friends can make it so." T. R. Richards

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 23 '25 1250w

"Mr. Darlow, though he praises what seem to us to be some of the least worthy elements in Nicoll, is no blind idolater. He does not conceal many of his subject's limitations—his lack of first-rate scholarship, his indifference to all the arts except literature, his complete ignorance of science, and his little idiosyncrasies of character and conduct. This in on the whole, a fair—and very readable—book."

+ Nation and Ath 38:62 O 10 '25 750w

New Statesman 25:632 S 19 '25 1500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p610 S 24 '25 950w

DARROW, FLOYD LAVERN. Through science to God. 309p il $2.50 Bobbs

215 Religion and science. Evolution 25-21594

The book has an underlying religious purpose—to harmonize religion and science and to show that the teaching of science gives the strongest grounds for belief in God and immortality. The author gives an account of the history of evolution and its religious significance, tells the facts about the origin of the Bible and discusses inspiration and the miracles. The last chapter briefly reviews the religious faiths of important scientists, past and present.

"Mr. Darrow reverently harmonizes religion and science, doing a workmanlike job in a worthy cause. But harmonizing religion and science is very much easier than harmonizing churches and science. So, in spite of Mr. Darrow, the quarrel between science and theology will probably run on as long as audiences and congregations show interest."

+ Ind 115:657 D 5 '25 100w

"It is a well-written and well-published book. It is easy to read. Its statement of scientific facts invites but little criticism. In fact if it were not a good book about science and God it would be a good book about science and evolution. It presents a good résumé of the evolution of man."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:396 D 5 '25 350w

DATALLER, ROGER. From a pitman's notebook. 269p $2.50 Dial press [6s J. Cape]

B or 92

25-13100

"An English pitman who it at once a man of feeling, an 'unusual' man, and a genuine miner, takes a worm's-eye view of the world. The book is made up of notes and jottings, conversations heard, incidents witnessed, opinions held."—Ind

Dial 80:71 Ja '26 80w

"It is interesting and suggestive because it is genuine in sympathy, and, also, thoughtful! in spirit."

+ Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 60w

"Notwithstanding his faults of labored style and attempted elegance, there are times when the author forgets he is writing and produces spontaneous and magnificent pictures."

+ Nation 121:sup444 O 14 '25 100w

"These pages from Mr. Dataller's journal are better than any novel: they give the rough ore of the miner's life, before it has been tried seven times in the fires of Art: they are written in a stiff and vivid prose that at times might have been plucked clean out of the best work of D. H. Lawrence."

+ Nation and Ath 37:80 Ap 18 '25 650w

"His sympathies are intense, his perceptions keen, and he writes with the genius of an artist—we regret that he could not have written out of a lifetime experience in the pits. His diary is, however, a fine human plea, well deserving of a high place in coal mining literature." E: A. Wieck

+ New Repub 44:182 O 7 '25 1050w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times pl My 17 '25 2000w

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons

N Y Tribune p3 Ag 30 '25 1500w

Outlook 141:612 D 16 '25 230w

"Some of the entries in Roger Dataller's note book are beautifully vivid, some amusing, all of them interesting and all very well written."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:883 Jl 4 '25 250w

"This is a very unsatisfying book. It might be moving and dignified and important. But the shadow of the author falls heavily over the people he is writing about. He does not philosophize, he presents his incidents with that self-conscious absence of comment, and will wind up with 'Who cares. . . Who cares?' Nevertheless, there is no doubting his sincerity and his knowledge of the pit and the mining village."

+ Spec 134:643 Ap 18 '25 180w

"No indignant outcry or plea for understanding eludes his vigilant self-guardedness. With a somewhat ruthless sincerity he maintains a completely objective attitude to the life of the collier. He writes with a kind of stern brevity of his interests, sympathies, habits, amusements—and labour. Outwardly, his descriptions are no more than coldly accurate. Occasionally emotion is betrayed by an unexpected hint of irony; but for the most part it is suppressed."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p215 Mr 26 '25 550w

"My only criticism of the book is that it does not give adequate treatment of the miner's home and family life. Apart from this minor defect my own experience in British coal mines

DATALLER, ROGER—Continued

leads me to say that the picture of the life and labor of the miner given in A Pitman's Note Book is an authentic one, and I can honestly recommend it to all those who desire to understand the life and work of the much misunderstood and too often ignored miner." R. H. Bowen

+ — World Tomorrow 8:251 Ag '25 460w

DAUDET, LEON A. Memoirs of Léon Daudet; 2^d ed., and tr. by Arthur Kingsland Griggs. 310p $5 Dial press

B or 92

25-24017

"Among the stormy petrels of French public life one of the stormiest is Léon Daudet, man of letters, Royalist politician and son of the famous novelist, Alphonse Daudet. . . . Everywhere the 'Memoirs' are strewn with sparkling recollections and pen-portraits of past and present celebrities, such as Renan, Gambetta, Loti, Maupassant, Rodin, Clemenceau, General Boulanger, Bourget, Barrès, Sarcey, Lemaitre, Jane Hading, Mme. Adam, Colonel Marchand, Marcel Proust, Paul Claudel and a score of others. An interesting chapter describes how Daudet became a convert to Royalism under the influence of Charles Maurras who is the brains of the movement, and their subsequent association as editors of L'Action Française, the leading newspaper organ of the Royalist party."—Lit R

Reviewed by Cuthbert Wright

Dial 80:53 Ja '26 1550w

"One feels grateful to Mr. Griggs for his excellent translation of interesting portions of Daudet's mordant and revealing 'Souvenirs,' six volumes of which have appeared in French since 1913." W. N. C. Carlton

+ Lit R p2 Ja 2 '26 800w

"While nearly all of Daudet's recollections have been strangely warped by his later political battles, his hatred of the republic, his anti-Semitism, his extreme nationalism and a late conversion to orthodox Catholicism, there are within the covers of this book many remarkable and interesting sections worth preserving and worth exporting to American readers."

+ — N Y Times p20 Ja 3 '26 860w

"His unreasonableness, his active and stinging prejudices, his defiance of modern and restraint, above all the vivid and fearsome pen which he wields, shape his 'Memoirs' into fascinating chapters. One may read them with mingled laughter and astonishment, but it would be unwise to rely too implicitly upon them for a fair picture of the period which they cover. Instead of this, they are a map of Leon Daudet's friendships and hatreds." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 620w

"There are few men of this time who have developed the art of removing the epidermis of their enemies more neatly and skillfully. Moreover he is one of those rare creatures, an admirable story-teller. Every page is alive with anecdotes. Before us defile all the great names of two generations of French literature, art, politics, medicine, each one with a tale attached, some of them with several. And there is, beside, in this book, a good deal of history, seen through royalist glasses, and much of it from the under side, but none the less important and certainly interesting." W. C. Abbott

+ Sat R of Lit 2:478 Ja 9 '26 700w

DAVENPORT, CYRIL JAMES HUMPHRIES. Art student's vade-mecum. 122p il $1.25 Stokes [4s Methuen]

750 Painting

[25-12140]

A small manual of instruction concerning perspective, composition, color and pigments, painting materials, enamels, oils and varnishes, etc.

Boston Transcript p4 O 17 '25 220w

"The book's particular usefulness for the art student lies in the care with which the author describes the origin, nature and use of practically all the materials which enter into art work. Wide and varied knowledge is in evidence in the bits of art history and biography which add interest and color to every chapter."

+ N Y Times p12 S 13 '25 300w

"The manual is written with lucidity and sense, and ought certainly to be useful to somebody. But the student, I fear, will find it pedantic and a little too scholarly." T. Craven

+ — N Y Tribune p15 N 22 '25 100w

"A trite and superfluous book."

— Sat R of Lit 2:380 D 5 '25 60w

"This, surely, is the oddest little book about art ever written. But for all that there are pickings in the book for the thoughtful student, of a kind not to be found in more conventional treatises."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p157 Mr 5 '25 100w

DAVENPORT, FRANCES ISABEL. Salvaging of American girlhood. 302p $3 Dutton 176 Girls. Sex instruction 24-19986

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"One is aware of immaturity and inconsistency as indicated by loose terminology throughout the book. For example, 'faith' is used for 'hypotheses'; 'psychology' for a body of classified knowledge in one place and for a practical attitude in the next. But these inconsistencies do not obscure the contribution of the writer to scientific method and information regarding the state of sex knowledge among girls." Evelyn Buchan

+ — Am J Soc 31:116 Jl '25 350w

"Having plotted the prevailing ignorance, Dr. Davenport is in a position to offer a constructive and valuable program, though here again convention and physiology are rather confused through her practical identification of love and marriage. But again she has definite contributions to make." A. B. Parsons

+ — Nation 120:360 Ap 1 '25 900w

"The book is a useful statement of a problem confronting teachers and parents, and girls themselves." Ernestine Evans

+ New Repub 43:272 Jl 29 '25 300w

"The questions are the chief value of the book and should be read by all those interested in the training of young women. The conclusions are not entirely sound and the program for improvement is not convincing; proper weight has not been given to constructive measures already taken." M. B. Blake

+ — Survey 54:117 Ap 15 '25 250w

DAVIES, WILLIAM HENRY. Selected poems. 76p $2 Harcourt

821

25-26562

"The better known poems of this beguiling Englishman are here embellished with small black-and-whites which in most cases skillfully respond to the verse."—N Y Tribune

Reviewed by Robert Hillyer

Atlantic's Bookshelf Jl '25 280w

Booklist 21:371 Jl '25

"His diction is clear and possesses a rightness that never calls attention to itself. He sees life with as fresh a light on it as on grass after a rain, and his craftsmanship has no unlovely contours."

+ Bookm 61:715 Ag '25 100w

"This is a book to read! This is the poet, unique among his contemporaries, who writes up to none nor down to anyone, yet touches the heart of all." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 2 '25 700w

"There is an early morning quality about these poems, as though the writer were awake before the rest of the world, to the freshness and mystery of living things."

+ Dial 79:174 Ag '25 50w

"W. H. Davies's work is a matter of delicate adjustments, but it is never classical. He is master of a naïveté that is pleasing but not deep, and there are times when this simple note is so forced as to be rather tiresome." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y Times p7 My 10 '25 320w

"A certain artful stiffness of line combines in the woodcuts with a certain gentle boldness in the handling of light to produce an effect of sweetness, clarity and strength which is very close to the effect for which the poems of Mr. Davies have long been famous both in England and America. The volume is one which any admirer of the poet will decidedly wish to possess."

+ N Y Tribune p2 My 10 '25 100w

"The fact remains that Davies is a child 'still wearing freckles on his puerile soul'; that he has the heart and the horizontal eyes of a child; that he is much more Blake than Wordsworth; and that he is first and last much more uniquely and deliciously the insubordinate changeling among poets than any one writing to-day except de la Mare." Joseph Auslander

N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 120w

"He is a worthy heir of the early Elizabethan poets and especially Robert Herrick, in a certain old-fashioned grace and delicacy shown in 'Her Portrait' 'Kitty and I' and the exquisite closing poem, 'Pastures.' But he sings in no cage, within no bounds. In an age of throbbing materialism, Davies is an original who can still look with wonder and reverence upon the face of Nature which is after all, the face of God."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:828 Je 13 '25 300w

DAVIS, ELMER HOLMES. Friends of Mr Sweeney. 282p $2 McBride

25-23368

Wild Ace Holliday they called him in college. Now, fifteen years later, he was the pudgy Mr Asaph Holliday, with a tooth-brush mustache, a cool and highly cultured wife, and a stationary salary, grinding out editorials for the Balance that reflected not even his own ideas, but Mr Brumbaugh's, who owned the Balance because he paid its yearly deficit. One day Asaph's wife left for Washington. Coincidentally an old college friend turned up and took him out to dinner and to see the town. They saw a good deal of it, thanks to a purely hypothetical Mr Sweeney. And they caught the staid Mr Brumbaugh out seeing it too. The adventures of that night recreated the Wild Ace Holliday of former years, a man's man, henceforth to command the respect of his wife, the grateful attention of Mr Brumbaugh, an editorial policy of his own and a salary commensurate with his self respect.

"One of the most amusing, delightful, whimsical books of the year. The plot is well constructed, the comment as keen as a thorn, but humorous rather than clever."

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 120w

"Screamingly funny in places, with an intricate plot running throughout, this novel will convince Mr. Davis's readers that he has a right to a place among the humorists of the day. It is an uproarious satire on New York." R. L. Kurzman

+ Int BK R p60 D '25 500w

"His stories are plainly devised and contrived, not meant to be taken at all seriously, and written to formulas as old as the art of tale-telling. But they succeed in doing two things he means them to—in entertaining their readers and helping out the family bank account." Herschel Brickell

Lit R p12 D 26 '25 350w

"Readers who enjoy fine artistry will find it on every page of 'Friends of Mr. Sweeney.' Those who only want a good story with plenty of punch will get it in overflowing measure; and those who are satisfied with something that makes them laugh will laugh in plenty. Incidentally, there is not a single description of any phase of New York life that does not ring true."

+ N Y Times p8 N 22 '25 860w

"'Friends of Mr. Sweeney' is the best tale which Elmer Davis has done and that puts it high in any list of entertaining fiction. The precise quality of the book is rare without being precious. The wild and rapid torrent of exciting incident makes it certain enough that you will eventually see 'Friends of Mr. Sweeney' in a motion picture version. But you should read the book in advance of that event, for there is much in it that the screen will never capture. Elmer Davis is a wit and a satirist as well as a shrewd story teller. There is plenty of keen edge to the fun and the picture people will get only the broader strokes." Heywood Brown

+ N Y World p13 N 11 '25 1300w

"A rattling, good, up-to-the-minute story of New York. As fresh and modern as this morning's paper; as satirical and pungent as George Ade at his best. If there's been a more amusing novel of American city life this year, we've missed it."

+ Outlook 141:640 D 23 '25 60w

"Mr. Davis has taken one of the most popular themes in the world, the turning of the worm, and played his own hilarious variations upon it. He has mixed well an elaborately concocted Manhattan comedy. His style is like a fresh stir breeze; and his narrative races." W. R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:404 D 12 '25 600w

DAVIS, ELMER HOLMES. Keys of the city 305p $2 McBride

25-4207

When Nicholas Rexford trudged into the prosperous little Indiana town of Hollisburg he did not receive a warm welcome, for Hollisburg was especially hostile to tramps and Nick looked pretty seedy. But he found a friend in Clay Sellers, lawyer and philosopher, who hired him as his office boy. Soon the attention of Hollisburg's leading citizen is focused on Nick—also that of Ruth Hollis, the charming daughter of a Southern gentleman. Then unpleasant rumors regarding Nick circulate thru the town and strange events occur which eventually lead to the downfall of Hollisburg and its potentate.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

Bookm 61:348 My '25 170w

"We find 'The Keys of the City' a little mixed in matter, but showing unmistakably the story teller's ability once again with a 'rattling good yarn,' while thoroughly aware of what he is doing."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 240w

Cleveland p32 Mr '25

"The book is a step backward from Mr. Davis' previous achievements, but it is a nice story which any child may feel safe in recommending to his parents."

— + Ind 114:274 Mr 7 '25 200w

"The humor of Elmer Davis's earlier books is missing. Not always plausible—there are times when the deeds are too strong for the motives behind them—the story is none the less carefully told, and is entertaining to the end. It is faintly reminiscent of Tarkington in his younger days." H. C. Burr

— + Int BK R p486 Je '25 400w

"'The Keys of the City' is a long way below 'I'll Show You the Town.' So full of sure-fire stuff, that I hesitate to hint it may not find a wide reading public. Certainly one cannot complain of any lack of action and certainly one has a feeling of being among old friends with its characters." Herschel Brickell

— + Lit R p6 F 21 '25 400w

"Of Mr. Davis's quiet Yankee humor there is not so much evidence as in his earlier writings. His characterization is catholic and diverting, but takes the form rather of direct observation of type than selection of significant detail."

— + N Y Times p8 F 22 '25 820w

DAVIS, ELMER HOLMES—Continued

"The unusual quality of the book is that one gains a feeling of people living in the town [of Hollisburg] of how they got their daily bread, of their contacts, friendships and antipathies. 'Main Street' had no backyard. I believe that Mr. Davis may in time supply that missing third dimension if he chooses to."

+ N Y Tribune p12 F 8 '25 500w

Outlook 140:160 My 27 '24 30w

"It is a highly agreeable and rapid story, ingenious in plot, humorous in narration, pleasantly modern. But we find here too little of that crisp and mordant humor for which he is widely esteemed."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:618 Mr 21 '25 160w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p318 My 7 '25 200w

DAVIS, OSCAR KING. Released for publication; some inside political history of Theodore Roosevelt and his times, 1898-1918. 463p il $5 Houghton

973.91 Roosevelt, Theodore. United States—Politics and government 25-18478

Oscar King Davis was Washington correspondent of the New York Times from 1907 to 1912, during the Roosevelt era, and his recollections are concerned almost exclusively with Roosevelt and the political events of those years in which he played the leading part. Nearly half the book deals with the presidential campaign of 1912.

"The book ranks well alongside of John J. Leary's Talks with T. R. There is probably material for a dozen more such books, for Colonel Roosevelt trusted his friends, and repaid their devotion with open talk; and nearly every one of the correspondents has some Roosevelt fragment in his note-books, but neither they nor this will add much to the outlines that are already well established for the historian. The time is almost ripe for a real biographer to survey the man." F: L. Paxson

Am Hist R 31:368 Ja '26 600w

"A profoundly revealing and valuable history of the dynamic president's last two decades of governmental and political activity."

+ Bookm 62:619 Ja '26 100w

"The narrative sets forth in a perfectly straightforward way the part which newspaper men, almost unknown to the laity, play in the affairs of state of this republic. No newspaper man can read this volume without being proud of his trade, and no tyro in the 'game' can read it without getting both a sound lesson in the ethics of journalism and renewed inspiration to carry it on." R: Walters

+ Ind 115:450 O 17 '25 950w

"Mr. Davis differs from almost all other memoir writers of the period in his extraordinary poise, his steady gaze, his keen judgment and a certain sanity that nothing can swerve by the fraction of an inch. His story is one of personal and intimate conversations, illuminated by a graphic interpretation that is never mistaken by so much as a hair's breadth." C: W. Thompson

+ Lit R p4 N 14 '25 1400w

"No admirer of Theodore Roosevelt can afford to miss it. His detractors will have cause to modify their judgments of him." H: E. Armstrong

N Y Times p3 N 8 '25 2300w

Reviewed by Mark Sullivan

N Y Tribune p10 D 27 '25 850w

Reviewed by W. P. Beazell

N Y World p6m D 13 '25 350w

"He tells in the most frank and direct way just what he saw and heard. Others saw and heard the same things from different angles, and their version of certain occurrences may not be the same as his. But we are sure they will be glad to have 'O. K.'s' narrative. It was well worth telling."

+ R of Rs 72:557 N '25 150w

"Half reminiscence, half history, this volume has the interest and the value that naturally attach to records of our own time made by those who have been close to the chief actors in the scenes presented. In addition, it has the journalistic merits of graphic and steady progress and in some measure that crowning virtue of memoirs—good anecdotes." R. J. Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 2:211 O 17 '25 1800w

DAVIS, ROYAL JENKINS. Boys' life of Grover Cleveland. 388p il $1.75 Harper

B or 92 Cleveland, Grover 25-16134

The political career of the man who was elected mayor of Buffalo, governor of New York and president of the United States in the brief space of three years furnishes most of the material of this biography for boys, which stresses Cleveland's tireless energy and uncompromising honesty in following the course he considered right.

"Told in a straightforward style suitable to its subject. It might well serve to awaken an interest in city, state and national politics."

+ Booklist 22:75 N '25

"This sketch is of the scope and of a directness of phraseology that will enable the boy to obtain an excellent glimpse of one of the most notable figures in American history. The choice of political material is calculated to emphasize the successive steps in his career and to give the reader all that is worth while in it."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 280w

"Mr. Davis's volume is to be commended as better than a whole syllabus of Americanization exercises in its contribution to citizenship. It will be welcomed by teachers and librarians, for whose needs the list of really good books of American biography for young people is extremely small, and no grownup will nod over it notwithstanding that it is not written for him." W: MacDonald

+ Sat R of Lit 2:272 N 7 '25 750w

DAWES, RUFUS CUTLER. Dawes plan in the making; with a foreword by Frank O. Lowden. 525p il $6 Bobbs

330.943 European war, 1914-1918—Reparations. Germany—Economic conditions 25-10922

This generous volume with its amplifying appendices reviews the situation which led to the inception of the committee of international experts and describes the gradual evolution of the reparations plan. The material for the book is taken in large part from a diary kept by Mr Dawes during the entire period of which he writes.

Reviewed by E. M. Patterson

Ann Am Acad 122:269 N '25 800w

Booklist 22:54 N '25

Bookm 62:616 Ja '26 180w

Boston Transcript p6 Jl 15 '25 800w

Dial 79:518 D '25 160w

"For that person who wishes thoroughly to understand the Dawes plan and to trace the steps through which it was created, this book will be indispensable. Mr. Dawes, who was chief of the staff of experts attached to the committee of experts of which his brother, Vice-President Dawes, was Chairman, has done his work very thoroughly."

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 5 '25 560w

"Whoever picks it up expecting to read in it the backstairs gossip of the making of the Dawes plan will be disappointed, for he will find, instead, a straightforward account of the way in which an international group of skilled business men and economists worked together." H: R. Mussey

+ N Y Tribune p3 Jl 19 '25 1500w

"It is well-nigh indispensable to one who should seek a thorough understanding of the Dawes Plan."

+ Outlook 141:100 S 16 '25 100w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY WILLIAM. Old youth.
365p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

25-17119

Eighteen years of semi-seclusion with an invalid husband, eighteen years of submission to her father-in-law's will. Then Eve, a widow at thirty-six, finds herself swept on a wave of returning youth out of the past toward a kindling future. A girlhood lover reenters her life to tempt her down the long forgotten paths. However, the way to happiness is not quite clear. Her husband's family have their claims; father, sister, brother, each needs something of her, and the new-old lover's daughter proves an added barrier. But the difficulties solve themselves somehow and there is at last a honeymoon in Venice.

"The best one can say of it is that it is perfectly innocuous—much ado about nothing."
Isabel Paterson

— Bookm 62:84 S '25 180w

"There are one or two moments in the book when the reader ventures to hope that the author will avoid the obvious and conventional type of happy ending. But these hopes are doomed to a speedy demise, and the novel progresses at an exceedingly leisurely pace toward a foregone conclusion." L. M. Field

Int Bk R p736 O '25 1100w

Reviewed by A. P. Terhune

Lit R p2 O 17 '25 480w

"The air of reality is rather thin, possibly as it was meant to be."

N Y Times p8 S 13 '25 600w

"As a writer of simpering fiction Mr. Dawson goes his colleagues one better in his story of Eve Greensleeve. The reader is very painstakingly guarded by Mr. Dawson from the wiles of the world; and when the book ends everybody is not only happy put pure. 'Old Youth' is a book no Babbitt can do without." Leonard Cline

— N Y Tribune p14 N 8 '25 600w

Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 200w

DAWSON, WILLIAM HARBUTT. South Africa: people, places and problems. 448p il $5.50 (16s) Longmans

916.8 South Africa

25-20852

Mr Dawson's book is a very comprehensive one, made up in part of a traveler's impressions but to a greater degree, of the seasoned conclusions of a student and historian. The social problems of the South African Union are his chief interest, the relations between the two dominating European races and of both with the natives. The latter question is discussed in the chapter entitled Will South Africa go black? Other chapters take up political and social life, education, types of scenery, gold mines, agricultural conditions, Asiatics in South Africa, right and wrong settlers, and the segregation question.

Boston Transcript p3 D 5 '25 320w

"Mr. Dawson has written a book which combines a vast amount of factual information with a very sane comment and analysis. A valuable volume for those seeking light on what we used to call the Dark Continent."

+ Ind 115:656 D 5 '25 60w

"Though its history is not a long one, the country is one in which the play of historical forces has created questions peculiar to itself. These Mr. W. H. Dawson studies with sympathy but with candour, devoting especial attention to the colour problem."

+ New Statesman 26:246 D 5 '25 100w

"He has much to say in praise of the country and its people, but his chapters on race and color are full of candid criticism. His book is chiefly valuable, in fact, for its discussions of social problems."

+ — R of Rs 72:665 D '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 15 '25 80w

DAWSON, WILLIAM JAMES. Autobiography of a mind. 341p $2 Century

B or 92

25-6898

In the sunset of his life fully lived as a preacher and writer Dr Dawson looks back over his seventy years and explores the kingdom of his mind. He writes of his life with philosophic detachment, looking at external events only as they had a part in developing the life of the spirit, and telling rather of what he has felt than of what he has done.

"It is not a book to be quoted so much as to be felt. It is not an experience simply to be read, but to be shared."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 260w

Cleveland p112 D '25

"A delightful book—a little pensive, maybe, but still not without sly humor. The chapter on 'My Mother' is excellently written; as filial in devotion as it is delicately sympathetic in expression." T. S. Knowlson

+ Lit R p9 Ap 4 '25 350w

"Very human book. It is warm with kindness and simplicity. It is free from pompous posings and the recounting of heroic victories which in many instances never existed."

+ N Y Times p5 My 17 '25 550w

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 22 '25 90w

Outlook 140:595 Ag 26 '25 180w

R of Rs 71:558 My '25 100w

St Louis p358 S '25

"Not a biography but a series of confessions. They make most interesting reading. Not only because of the revelations of himself but because of his descriptions of his development, the places where he has lived and visited and the people he has met; his analysis of situations, character, and results; and the purity, rhythm, and beauty of his prose style. His choice of words to fit his ideas is praiseworthy."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 22 '25 360w

Wis Lib Bul 21:169 Je '25

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS. Clothes make the pirate; containing thirty-four canties and ballads. 310p $2 Harper

25-5619

A rollicking yarn of colonial times centered about the figure of Captain Dixy Bull, pirate and terror of the Maine coast. Chance and circumstances conspire to thrust upon Tremble-at-Evil Tidd, a timorous Boston tailor, the glory of impersonating the doughty captain. For long it had been Tidd's chief diversion as well as his means of escape from the tongue lashings of his vixenish wife, to read about the exploits of the buccaneers of the Spanish Main. So he is ready for the part and for a few mad months he plays it with a will.

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 200w

"The story starts off well, but as it progresses it shows flaws of hasty construction." H. C. Burr

+ — Int Bk R p551 Jl '25 400w

"The situation is gorgeous farce, but the humor is not sustained. These gentlemen of the Jolly Roger belie their clothes and the cruise grows as dull as a becalmed sail boat with dull company. A most amusing situation is done to death from overdoing, perhaps, rather than lack of invention."

— + N Y Times p17 My 24 '25 620w

"A rattling good yarn, with plenty of romantic coloring, full of life and movement and not without humor." C: J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 22 '25 370w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 450w

"The entire yarn, except for a dull beginning and a tardy leap into the full swing of action, is a rich product of droll and lively foolishness."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:695 Ap 18 '25 400w

DAY, HOLMAN FRANCIS—Continued

"The story is a gay tale, and full of well-conceived situations which even the credulous will recognize as burlesque."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 320w
Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

DAYTON, FRED ERVING. Steamboat days.

436p il $5 Stokes

656 Steamboats. Steam navigation 25-20521

The story of a picturesque phase in American history—the development of the steamboat, and the era of brisk competitive navigation on river, lake and coast. The book describes hundreds of steamboats, and recalls many a famous run and many a famous race that has become a classic of steamboat days. Illustrated with 86 pen-and-ink drawings by John Wolcott Adams.

"A volume full of names and statistics, lightened somewhat by the excellent drawings of John Wolcott Adams. It is valuable for reference; one hopes it may beget other volumes of more interest to the general reader." Herschel Brickell

+ — Bookm 62:613 Ja '26 130w

"It is a valuable work of reference. It is well illustrated. One wishes the author would go further than he has—for instance, with the history of the Great Eastern. He stops at the most interesting point." D. R.

+ — Ind 115:588 N 21 '25 130w

Reviewed by Frank Shay

Lit R p11 N 28 '25 260w

"His book is not written with notable philosophical perspective or narrative skill. The mass of detail often chokes the narrative for the general reader but will be welcomed by those specially interested in the subject and should prove a mine for future historians or fiction writers in this hitherto amazingly neglected field. And what Mr. Dayton has partly missed in imagery and picturesqueness has been almost compensated for in the vivid and descriptive pen drawings of John Wolcott Adams." Arthur Warner

+ — N Y Tribune p16 N 15 '25 900w

"Mr. Dayton's book is richer in statistics relative to the business of steamboating than it is in those qualities of interest and picturesqueness one naturally looks for in any account of an occupation now almost extinct. Nevertheless his book is interesting because of the many facts he has so laboriously collected."

+ — Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 300w

R of Rs 72:664 D '25 100w

"This is a very fine book. A necessary book; its subject a proper part of the national annals." Meade Minnegerode

+ Sat R of Lit 2:338 N 28 '25 700w

"The visible charm of this book is largely contributed by Mr Adams's illustrations. They are drawn by a man who, as one of his colleagues says, knew the anatomy of a ship, or else studied old photographs with exacting care. These vivid, atmospheric pictures have that truth of draughtsmanship and eye for structural detail without which steamboat pictures are futile. The book will be treasured alike by steamboat lovers and devotees of local history."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 1 '25 1550w

DAYTON, HELENA SMITH, and BARRATT, LOUISE BASCOM. New York in seven days.

167p $1.50 McBride

917 471 New York (city)—Description

25-18265

A week's exploration of New York which includes in its full program not only the well-known places but some of the less known ones also and shops and restaurants as well.

"The book is so intensely practical and so entertaining that merely the reading of it is a pleasant pastime."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 24 '25 280w

Lit R p8 N 7 '25 80w

"Not without occasional glints of humor and sparkles of wit. Visitors to the metropolis will find the book a helpful and interesting guide, while New Yorkers themselves, most of whom are deplorably ignorant about their town, cannot do better than to give it careful study."

+ N Y Times p7 O 11 '25 280w

N Y Tribune p12 N 15 '25 150w

"It is packed with information, some of it exceedingly valuable."

+ Outlook 141:359 N 4 '25 180w

DEAMER, DULCIE. Devil's saint.

316p $2 International pub.

The highly-colored love story of a White knight of the Middle ages and a seductive little witch-girl who is held in thrall to a devil-worshipper of hidden identity. The White knight escapes from a voluptuous intrigue laid against him by a lady of quality, and in a lurid scene depicting the horrid practices of the devil-worshippers, rescues the girl Sidonia. Later, aided by a miraculous downpour of rain, he saves her from the stake.

"The novel has its moments and a certain saltiness. As an attempt to reconstruct a phase of an era it is more than mildly interesting." J: J. McLaughlin

+ — Lit R p6 N 28 '25 200w

"There is little we can utter in praise of this violent, hectically over-written mediæval fairy tale. It has happy moments, when the action calms down and gives promise of better things to come, but these are invariably brief and unfruitful."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:199 O 10 '25 100w

DE BRUYNE, NORMAN ADRIAN. Electrolytic rectifier; for electrical engineers, physicists and wireless amateurs, containing a chapter showing how to make and use a rectifier for charging accumulators from alternating current supply mains.

75p il $1 Pitman

621.31 Electric current rectifiers 25-6962

"A small book dealing with characteristics, theory, and principal uses. The first book devoted to the subject."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:419 J1 '25

DE CASSERES, BENJAMIN. James Gibbons Huneker.

62p $1.50 Lawren

B or 92 Huneker, James Gibbons

"In these few brief papers, reprinted from the pages of the New York Times, Musical America and The Nation, a brilliant tribute is paid at the shrine of the late James Huneker by his friend and contemporary critic." (Boston Transcript) "The volume comprises a tentative bibliography of Huneker's writings." (Nation)

"The slender volume, composed of fragmentary pieces comes before the world with no pretension to exhaustiveness, yet it brings with it an extraordinary breadth in scope and carries a rich cargo of information; without claiming to be definitive, it is by all odds the most capable and the most searching analysis of the personality and work of the late 'Steeplejack' that has as yet appeared." F. W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 16 '25 420w

"Although Jack London, Edwin Markham, James Branch Cabell, and other men of letters unite, on the jacket of the book, to honor Mr. De Casseres's genius, what he has to say about his friend and hero is undiscriminating as criticism, strained as epigram, and out of date as Philistine-baiting. It is a pity. Huneker was a great personality, and his services to American culture would be difficult to overestimate. He deserves the honor of intelligent criticism."

+ Nation 121:147 J1 29 '25 100w

"Notwithstanding the dominant note of adoration which sounds throughout the author's appraisal of the noted musical critic and author, he clothes his praise in an amazing variety of words and richness of phraseology."

+ N Y Times p2 My 3 '25 320w

Sat R of Lit 1:711 Ap 25 '25 50w

DE CASSERES, BENJAMIN. Mirrors of New York. 221p $3 Lawren

917.471 New York (city)—Description
25-21896

This is a collection of breezy essays on New York and New Yorkers, full of lightning flashes of wit and the rolling thunder of derision, the thunder being chiefly directed at the Volstead Act and its supporters.

Dial 79:175 Ag '25 150w

"'Mirrors of New York' is not a book containing the exposition of every-day life in the city, nor is it a guide to this, that and the other outré place, which one would long to visit upon arrival at the big city. The enharmonics, the overtones of the city described by a man who has lived all his life in it and has become part of every changing aspect of the spirit of the city and its ever-changing attitude and aspect, this is what Mr. De Casseres has attempted to catch and has succeeded." Konrad Bercovici

+ Lit R p4 N 7 '25 420w

"He is, perhaps, too much in New York to write completely of the very wonder which holds him in thrall, and too much inside to give her back as a world complete and final and desirable. Yet he understands as much as any man the soul of the modern belle dame sans merci who draws all the knights errant into the magic net of her fascination." Donald Douglas

N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 300w

"Mr. de Casseres is buoyant and astringent and loud. He has an enormously happy time of it and indulges a tremendous amount of animal spirits in dispensing a venomously intoxicating brand of gloom. He is paradoxical and conclusive and destructive. At times, however, his style has the somewhat obvious absurdity which lends glitter and glamour to an occasion, especially if tongues are thickened, but makes reading a bit difficult."

Sat R of Lit 1:779 My 23 '25 250w

Spring'd Republican p7a My 10 '25
300w

DEDRICK, BENJAMIN WILLIAM. Practical milling. 576p il lea $10 National miller, 628 W. Jackson blvd., Chicago

664.7 Flour mills
24-15994

"The only book dealing at all adequately with modern American practice. Based on the course in flour-mill engineering at Pennsylvania state college—the first course of its kind. The book is comprehensive; in addition to the principles and practice of milling, it includes history, food value of wheat, flour testing, baking, and chemistry of wheat and flour."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:427 J1 '25

DEJEANS, ELIZABETH (JANES) (MRS SIDNEY BUDGETT). Winning game. 329p $2 Doubleday

25-5382

"'The drunker I am the better I drive,' is Barbara Denne's opening speech. She is described as semi-divorced, the most daring of the Los Angeles fast set, and the mother of a gurgling infant. The novel reaches its climax during the ten-day sortie into the wilds of Southern California, whence the baby has been spirited by the unscrupulous half-husband."—N Y World

"There are many thrills in the story, but its real success will perhaps be due to the vigorous and straight-from-the-shoulder manner in which it is told." H. A. Jaggard

+ Lit R p9 Ap 18 '25 280w

"Miss Dejeans writes with both eyes and a stethoscope on the movies. She has conceived, here, enough masquerade balls, orgies and forest primeval settings to inveigle even the most super-super-million dollar producer."

— N Y World p6m F 15 '25 100w

DEKOBRA, MAURICE. Wings of desire; tr. from the French by Neal Wainwright. 317p $2 Macaulay

25-17703

A penniless Frenchman comes to America in search of adventure and fortune. He meets a man of mystery who promises both in return for implicit obedience to his commands. The bargain is struck. An obscure immigrant becomes overnight the distinguished Prince Seliman, a social lion and the accepted suitor of a charming widow of great means. In his new and enchanting rôle the pseudo prince finds adventure and to spare. He is by turns a tool, a prey, and a dupe. The drama of passion and revenge in which he plays a helpless part unfolds against the glittering social background of two continents.

"The tang of a French sauce is in this tale, and it is Montmartre and rue de la Paix even though the starging is anchored in New York city. What delightful raciness from an Old World vivacity in the telling and a New World life as material! This book is a splendid roller-coaster of thrills, with all the feminine shrieks, lost hats and second rides." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 24 '25 600w

"He has written a razor-edged satire of our 'best people,' piercing their foibles and idiosyncrasies with smart and daringly original rapier thrusts. The pages of the novel glitter with gems of ironic wit. Many of these jewels are French paste; but their factitious sparkle seems real if not subjected to too close scrutiny."

+ — N Y Times p14 O 25 '25 480w

DELAFIELD, E. M., pseud. See De La Pasture, E. E. M.

DE LA MARE, WALTER JOHN. Broomsticks, and other tales. 334p $3.50 Knopf [10s 6d Constable]

25-24272

"Give a poet a broomstick and there is no end to the number of things he can do with it. Mr. de la Mare of the Conjuring Department—can conjure up a forest full of wandering and labyrinthine glades by merely placing his broomstick lightly on the ground. He can convey into a dreaming garden forgotten by time, an ancient silent house enclosing a tiny old lady celebrating her 350th birthday: make fairy creatures, impish or kindly, visible to ordinary eyes, voices too small for mortal ears audible, a thousand delicate scents and sounds perceptible, a magic loveliness of light and colour steep the world so that even pallid and underfed imaginations are kindled by its glow. Witches, of course, he can summon—when were a witch and a broomstick divisible?—and bright-eyed furry things that signal warnings to gross human creatures, and scamper and scurry with a twinkling of ears and tails through enchanted woods."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The essential quality of this author unites all these stories, and yet they are as diverse as you can imagine. 'Broomsticks' will be a rare, rare treat for families that read aloud at night around the Christmas fire." Marcia Dalphin

+ Bookm 62:457 D '25 750w

DE LA MARE, WALTER, J:—Continued

"From the imaginative standpoint these are exquisite. Mr. de la Mare takes the grownup mind and hallows it with a curious illuminated fancy. . . . But delightful as these stories are, each and everyone of them, they are not for boys and girls. It is absurd to pretend that they are. Their appeal, however, is wide; and their quite delightful imaginative and human touches will make them exceedingly popular."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 16 '25 450w

"It is true the stories in this volume are unequal, and the best of them are vitiated by the touch of hypocrisy which seems unavoidably to come into the adult's voice when he is speaking to children. But when Mr. De la Mare forgets his audience, when he gets caught completely into his world of fancy and has no thought of anything outside, he is a wonderful and delightful writer. In pure beauty, in inspired invention, the fairy-tale of Myfanwy is a little masterpiece." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:440 D 19 '25 300w

"Altogether, this would be a remarkable book if it had been written by John Jones. But it wasn't. It was written by a man of genius, a man with one of the rarest and loftiest and most sensitive minds of our time; and to pretend to find every page of it, or even the general effect of it, worthy of him, is not complimentary but depreciation. If you want to measure how far short it falls of what a book about fairies and for children, a book of dreams and moralities, should be, take down your Hans Andersen. It may be said that this is a cruelly hard comparison. Nevertheless I insist on making the comparison; it is the measure of my reverence for Mr. de la Mare—and of my conviction that his genius is here on the wrong tack." P. C. Kennedy

— + New Statesman 26:273 D 12 '25 1150w

"It is with a delicate and almost-invisible skill that Mr. de la Mare fashions these strange webs that hold in their clinging folds so much that the child cannot grasp and which is patently intended for the surprised and somewhat fearful adult. Superficially some of these stories are tales for children. They are fairy tales and yet, gazing deeper, a more intricate pattern becomes dimly evident, a pattern that is traced in fragile and fearsome portents. We recognize a hushed world just outside the gates of our daily existence that is sometimes like a tranced nightmare and at others like Mr. A. E. Housman's 'land of lost content.'" H. S. Gorman

+ N Y Times p5 D 6 '25 2100w

"No one can make up more delightful conversation between children and grownups than Mr. de la Mare when he is clear of thesis and possessed by the spirit of poetry and nonsense. But he is not clear of thesis in 'Broomsticks,' far from it. As one of his adult admirers, I found some of the stories dull even for grownups. . . . the collection as a whole lacking in the variety and freshness of stories that stick in the memory." A. C. Moore

+ — N Y Tribune p6 D 27 '25 560w

"A collection of stories of consummate artistry. They are not 'juvenile' tales, though some of them would be loved and appreciated by older children and boys and girls whose imaginations and appreciation of exquisite literary beauty either by nature or development are keen. But it is a book to be put under the Christmas tree, for there is something in it for almost every one." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y World p7m D 6 '25 80w

"The delicate artistry of his performance is too rare and subtle a thing to be fully appreciated except by those who know how infinitely difficult is the blending of whimsy with ingenuity, of simplicity with poetry, that lends to his stories their lovely quality." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 2:427 D 19 '25 280w

"Broomsticks is a real addition to a genre in which English literature has been unrivalled since the time of Spencer."

+ Spec 135:1155 D 19 '25 750w

"It is a dizzying little book, like the dizzying little garden that Miss Rawlings wore in her bonnet, and the magic simply spills out of the pages, however quietly and carefully you may turn them over."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p797 N 26 '25 900w

DELANO, EDITH (BARNARD) (MRS JAMES DELANO). Way of all earth. 283p $2 Boni & Liveright [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-8665

After ten years of marriage Brice Dennison, conservative and energetic, was well pleased with his prospects, his small but comfortable suburban home, and his pretty wife Anne. But not so Anne. She wanted things—clothes, cars, servants—and being determined to have them, she found a way. But that way lead to despair and humiliation. It separated her from Brice, and led her to a small country place where motherhood, toil, contact with misery made a new woman of Anne, and here thru old Willy she learned the meaning of love and sacrifice. There is the inevitable reunion with her husband—but this time Brice found a wholly different Anne.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 15 '25 300w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Sanderson

Lit R p6 Ag 1 '25 220w

"The situation is one not infrequently encountered in real life, and it has been developed here with some skill. The novel has some gracefully drawn pen-sketches of the countryside, but it is much too long and in the latter parts, quite unreal."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 24 '25 600w

Springfd Republican p7a J1 5 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Ap 16 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

DE LA PASTURE, EDMEE ELIZABETH MONICA (E. M. DELAFIELD, pseud.). Mrs Harter. 284p $2 Harper [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-8265

The story of Mrs Harter is tragedy, but it is told by the method of satire. When Diamond Harter comes back to the little English village of Cross Loman, after a disastrous marriage, leaving her husband in India, this woman with a past is received with suspicion by the narrow little circle of country society. They react variously to her arresting, if repellent, personality. No one likes her except young Captain Patch, who understands and idealizes her. To most of the people of Cross Loman the love of these two for each other is a scandal. Certainly its result is stark tragedy and Mrs Harter pays the full price for any follies she may have committed. The interest of the story lies in the variety of feeling aroused by her strange personality and in the satirically drawn types of the country society.

Booklist 21:382 J1 '25

"A distinguished and entertaining novel." J. F. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 660w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"In 'Mrs. Harter,' up to and even after the Accident, Miss Delafield writes as she did in her earlier book, with humor and with subtle penetration. But the Accident disturbed me. The Accident is distressing. And only because it is such a carefully arranged accident." Walter Yust

+ — Lit R p3 My 9 '25 500w

"'Mrs. Harter' is technically satisfying and continuously interesting in the bargain."

+ Nation 121:194 Ag 12 '25 100w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:243 Ap 22 '25 120w

N Y Times p9 Ap 19 '25 660w

N Y Tribune p4 My 31 '25 100w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 130w

"Miss Delafield's prime and individual gift is for satire, and I would exchange all of the tragedy of her new novel for a few more of those light but deadly touches with which she keeps one chuckling through at least half its course. . . The minor characters are sketched in with a precision that is never unkind and always funny." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 138:636 D 20 '24 160w

Reviewed by Philip Coan

Sat R of Lit 1:755 My 16 '25 700w

"All the characters in this picture of life in an English country-town are cleverly drawn, and provide a sincere and lively background for the main story of an exceptional woman's tragedy. Mrs. Harter is the type of strong silent woman of whom we usually become aware only through bald newspaper reports of divorces and murder trials. Her personality is drawn here with skill, sympathetically but not sentimentally."

+ Spec 134:252 F 14 '25 70w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 800w

"More than once in Mrs. Harter Miss Delafield steps over the elusive boundary that divides portraiture from satire. It is a mistake that comes naturally to sensitive novelists; they find it hard not to react in the way of sympathy or repulsion to the characters they study, but the lightest surrender to this temptation falsifies the object. . . It must be said of the book as a whole that it never quite falls into the right perspective."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p820 D 4 '24 430w

Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

DE LIMA, AGNES. Our enemy the child. 288p² pa $1 New Republic

371.3 Education of children 25-21816

"A survey of the field of the 'new' education, with descriptions of many types of 'new school' movements—all set in contrast with the performances of the public schools, and ending with pen pictures of the worlds the children would make if they were allowed freedom of creation in their own right. This book will probably take the place long occupied by Dewey's New Schools for Old, since it covers much the same ground, and brings the material up to date. To be sure, Miss de Lima does not venture outside the schools. She has to do with schools only. She leaves to the rest of us the task of recommending this more intelligent education to the good sense and conscience of the modern community."—Survey

Booklist 22:143 Ja '26

"This is a really admirable book and one of unusual interest. It is a volume that all elementary educators who are alive to the times will want to have and a book that we should like to see in the hands of all parents of young children." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p8 Ja 9 '26 200w

Reviewed by J. K. Hart

N Y World p7m D 6 '25 650w

"An excellent survey."

+ Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 180w

"The pages turn under the fingers with the speed of a new Conrad. What if a small matter like a plot be lacking, when a book has ideas, personalities, humor, pathos and incident?" L. A. Dickey

+ World Tomorrow 8:316 O '25 400w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Passer-by, and other stories. 348p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hutchinson] 25-8945

Miss Dell's short stories like her novels are compounded of equal parts of romance and high endeavor. There is always a white knight and a lovely lady about whose deeds and doings there clings the glamor of the gently improbable. In the Passer-by, the title story of this collection, the white knight is a youthful Englishman whose lovely lady is the unknown subject of a famous painting by an unknown artist. An eccentric American—necessarily wealthy—offers Grey $50,000 to get a photograph of the artist for publication in American papers. Grey sets out on his quest, finds the artist, his lady, and a new raison d'être. Contents: The passer-by; Tommy-rot; The tenth point; The lucky number; The money monster.

"Just about what one would expect. Richly sentimental stories about rich, sentimental people."

— Ind 114:591 My 23 '25 10w

Reviewed by R. W. Thompson

Lit R p9 Je 13 '25 320w

"Miss Dell writes very definitely for the large public which craves vicarious emotion. 'The Passer-by' aims to satisfy that desire, and supplies 'heart interest' in liberal quantities. Taken by and large, none of the stories therein published will add greatly to Miss Dell's literary stature. But they all stand on their own feet as workmanlike yarns, well in line with the type of fiction which Miss Dell's readers have grown to expect, and well calculated to bring to those readers a fair share of pleasure and entertainment."

+ — N Y Times p22 My 17 '25 600w

N Y Tribune p9 Jl 5 '25 150w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 50w

"Ethel M. Dell cannot be accused of sensationalism, as her work for the most part is noticeably clean. No, she appeals to an even more susceptible side of human nature—the love for the dramatic, romantic, and impossible."

Sat R of Lit 1:864 Je 27 '25 230w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 16 '25 320w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p337 My 14 '25 100w

DELL, FLOYD. Runaway. 304p $2 Doran 25-19120

Michael Shenstone is a picturesque scoundrel who runs away from his beautiful wife and five-year-old daughter to follow in the footsteps of Marco Polo. Seventeen years later he comes back as quietly as he had left, actuated by nothing more than a curiosity to see his daughter and with no feeling of responsibility toward her. The story is concerned with the relations between Shenstone and his daughter, a wild and untamed creature with much of her father in her, who had secretly idealized him during the years of his absence. During the short month which he had planned to spend in Beaumont, he is destined to play an unexpected part in Amber's life and to attain an undreamed-of content for himself.

Booklist 22:116 D '25

"'Runaway' is a nice, pleasant story—but somehow or other we cannot adjust ourselves to thinking it is by Floyd Dell." K. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p5 O 10 '25 1250w

Cleveland p107 N '25

"There are many good things in Mr. Dell's new novel—a father and a daughter and an aunt of well-developed personalities, interesting people all and well presented. There are dramatic moments and big scenes. The book is well written, at times somewhat too well written. There is besides an emotional value in the novel, a suggestion of profounder queries than Mr. Dell has asked before. Yet, as a whole, the book leaves an impression of unreality. It is fiction and stranger than truth."

+ — Ind 115:508 O 31 '25 100w

"One finds at times in 'Runaway' the old Floyd Dell of striking phrase, of poetic description, of humorous irony. One misses, however, the Dell who was an interpreter of buoyant youth, vibrant with the spirit of discovery. One misses that exuberant treatment of the problems of adjustment between ideals and life, between individualism and tradition. Gone is the atmosphere of spontaneity, of fervid dissent, of honest, heartfelt protest. Instead of enthusiasm and surrender to his art, one finds clever craftsmanship, reworking old materials into a form that may entertain pleasantly while it disappoints artistically." W: R. Langfeld

DELL, FLOYD—Continued

+ — Int Bk R p56 D '25 550w

"We like Mr. Dell's new novel very much. Having entertained us for four hours running, it demands, with no little reason, that we recommend it to those who approach a new book as an explorer approaches a new country, keen, first of all, to see what is there, and, secondly, suffering no anxiety that it be either like or unlike any country he has known before." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 N 21 '25 400w

"Mr. Floyd Dell's novel, we are sorry to say, is far from a runaway. It will never be stopped in full gallop by a brave policeman. It proceeds, on the contrary, at something less than a walk, with strong tendencies to sit down, permanently if possible. There is hardly any substance to the book. Watery discourse, unconvincing incident, and flat people, like cold pancakes never cooked, or ever more than faintly browned in the oven of imagination."

— New Repub 44:313 N 11 '25 160w

"Mr. Dell has set out to write a novel of ideas. In the absence of material, 'Runaway' is plentifully furnished forth with Mr. Dell's opinions. They are intelligent opinions, such as should be found in the editorial columns of any well-conducted newspaper. Their subjects, however, are ephemeral, and the treatment of them does not serve to exploit whatever of permanent interest they may contain. Possibly there is a statement of values somewhere in 'Runaway,' but the only impression is of hopeless confusion and a complete lack of inner necessity on the author's part. Mr. Dell is himself the 'runaway.'"

— + N Y Times p8 O 4 '25 650w

"According to the jacket 'Runaway' is a 'father and daughter, and the longing for adventure' novel. That is true enough. But the next statement from the same source, 'This new novel by Floyd Dell marks his swift advance to a maturer skill and judgment,' is unadulterated nonsense. On the contrary, 'Runaway' suggests that Mr. Dell's skill has diminished and his judgment—gone." Harrison Smith

— N Y Tribune p4 N 1 '25 750w

"Mr. Dell needs a larger and less familiar canvas before he will be able to do full justice to his gift. In the meantime he has made the most of a slender theme. 'Runaway' fore-shadows better things to come." E: Davison

— + Sat R of Lit 2:210 O 17 '25 450w

DELL, FLOYD. This mad ideal. 246p $2 Knopf 25-7752

Judith Valentine is a feminine Felix Fay who in her search for her "mad ideal" rebels against the conventions of society and refuses to permit the boy she loves to give up his career as an artist to marry her.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

Bookm 61:220 Ap '25 180w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 650w

Cleveland p67 Je '25

Dial 78:520 Je '25 120w

"A novel to please and displease many people."

Ind 114:331 Mr 21 '25 50w

Reviewed by Kenneth Fuessle

Int Bk R p475 Je '25 1050w

"This is to me Mr. Dell's best novel so far, and one that raises new expectations in the place of older ones that may by now be regarded as safely buried." Edwin Bjorkman

+ Lit R p3 Mr 21 '25 800w

Reviewed by Lisle Bell

Nation 120:436 Ap 15 '25 680w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 42:243 Ap 22 '25 100w

"There is not anything in 'This Mad Ideal' to call down the wrath of the censor. Far from it. The story has not even one-half of 1 percent. kick. . . Mr. Dell's novel, as a whole, is not without many winsome features. In point of language, of style, the narrative is colorless; but Dell has succeeded in recapturing something of his earlier gift for telling a story as distinguished from merely building one. And the author's psychologizing of Judith is direct and convincing."

— + N Y Times p8 F 22 '25 1200w

"In 'This Mad Ideal' I find no advance in the development of his theme, and a marked falling off in his artistic resources. Judith is merely an excessively attenuated sketch of Felix Fay. Her rebellion and the first steps in her adventure are presented with a sophomoric thinness." S. P. Sherman

— N Y Tribune p1 Mr 15 '25 3100w

"Mr. Dell's inability to make Judith Valentine of 'This Mad Ideal' as definite and actual as Felix Fay of 'Moon-Calf' may be the result of a dozen influences which worked against his efforts. The fact remains that she isn't very definite; that she is less a human being than a limp bundle of theories. . . She remains a somewhat smug lay figure to the end of the chapter." Alison Smith

N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 780w

Outlook 139:424 Mr 18 '25 150w

"Mr. Floyd Dell writes efficiently and sympathetically, but 'This Mad Ideal' suffers from sketchiness." Gerald Bullett

— + Sat R 140:45 JI 11 '25 250w

"'This Mad Ideal' stands very like its predecessors, moderate of stature, beside them. It is again a study of preliminary experiences and first contacts. These, after all, only pave the way. Now that Mr. Dell has numbered a man's years, he should give us a book concerned with a man's major conflicts and mature encounters. Until then, no matter how good in his field, he must remain a minor novelist." L: Kronenberger

Sat R of Lit 1:786 My 30 '25 600w

"The book is interesting, and the heroine should serve as a useful warning to all young people not to be afraid of life."

Spec 135:382 S 5 '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p497 JI 23 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

DELTA, pseud. See Wentworth, P.

DENCER, FREDERICK WILLIAM. Detailing and fabricating structural steel. 511p il $5 McGraw

624 Steel, Structural 24-29833

"Discusses organization and describes practice fully, thus presenting much information not hitherto published in book form."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:296 My '25

DENNETT, TYLER. Roosevelt and the Russo-Japanese war. 357p $3.50 Doubleday

327.73 Russo-Japanese war, 1904-1905. Roosevelt, Theodore. United States—Foreign relations 25-8548

A study of American foreign policy in eastern Asia, 1902-1905, based primarily upon the private papers of Theodore Roosevelt. These papers, now in the Library of Congress, are concerned with American intervention in the affairs of Europe and in the Russo-Japanese war and with the Portsmouth peace conference called by Roosevelt.

"Mr. Tyler Dennett has written a brief but notable book which will have to be taken into account by all students of modern Far Eastern history. His chief new source has been the unpublished letters of President Roosevelt to which he has had access and from which he has gathered much important material. The main lines of Roosevelt's policy in dealing with Russia and Japan were already known, but Mr. Dennett has added not a little to our knowledge." A. C. Coolidge

+ Am Hist R 31:156 O '25 750w

"The study is a detailed one, yet the movement never lags. The book is one for the general reader as well as for the scholar." H. S. Quigley

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:631 Ag '25 750w

Booklist 21:360 J1 '25

Cleveland p99 S '25

"The book will be used by every historian of the period that it covers, for nowhere else can so much authentic information be found or so intimate a revelation of the purposes of two of the most prominent actors in it. The reader will regret, however, that Senator Lodge did not write a connecting and explanatory narrative to enable the younger persons and future students to understand the events to which reference is made." G. W. Douglas

+ Lit R p5 My 2 '25 300w

"Both those of the Roosevelt cult and those of the opposition should be grateful to Mr. Dennett for this thorough study and impartial presentation of the inner workings of American diplomacy under Theodore Roosevelt." Orrin Keith

+ Nation 121:172 Ag 5 '25 600w

"Like all of Mr. Dennett's work, it is marked by painstaking research, fairness, balance, and frankness. Besides its intrinsic merits, it has the added interest of being based upon the new Roosevelt papers recently deposited by the family in the Library of Congress and for the first time made available to students." C. A. Beard

+ New Repub 43:52 Je 3 '25 1000w

Reviewed by A. S. Will

N Y Times p1 Ap 5 '25 2550w

Reviewed by Karlene Kent

N Y Tribune p3 My 3 '25 980w

Reviewed by E. J. Young

N Y World p7m Mr 15 '25 650w

"The book supplies an unrivalled picture of Roosevelt as diplomatist and world statesman."

+ R of Rs 71:445 Ap '25 230w

World Tomorrow 8:188 Je '25 650w

DENNIS, CHARLES HENRY. Eugene Field's creative years. 339p $4 Doubleday

B or 92 Field, Eugene 24-28244

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Much has been written about Eugene Field, yet 'Eugene Field's Creative Years' is unquestionably the most important contribution to the subject since the appearance of 'Eugene Field,' the Slason Thompson biography of twenty two years ago." A. B. Maurice

+ Bookm 60:775 F '25 1500w

"The book was worth waiting for, for it is rich in new materials and tingling from cover to cover with the whimsical and perennially magnetic personality of the man who first made the newspaper 'colyum' famous." E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p166 F '25 1700w

"Set forth luminously, with full quotations from Field himself, and with a fine appreciation of the influences, Eastern and Western, which made him the blend of rustic and scholar and wag that he was. His niche may not be quite so high nor so wide as some of his admirers profess, but the present book, though somewhat belated, will aid in making his place secure." H. B. Fuller

+ New Repub 42:352 My 20 '25 200w

DENNIS, GEOFFREY. Harvest in Poland. 340p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-8314

Mr Dennis's new book concerns itself with the supernatural, being the battle between a young man and the giant who strives to win his soul for the devil. Emmanuel Lee, a young Oxford undergraduate receives warning thru the messages of a clairvoyant of a weird experience that awaits him in Poland. Subsequent events take him to Oxford, Paris, Breslau, across Europe to Poland and to the castle of a Polish prince, where the prophecy comes to fulfillment. Among the strange characters he meets there is the Giant, bond-servant of Lucifer, who attempts to win Emmanuel Lee for his master. Lee endures horrible tortures of the soul but comes thru the trial victorious, having won salvation for himself and his persecutor.

Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 330w

"A strong, powerful, vivid book, hanging always perilously on the edge of insanity; a mixture of psychical research, devil worship, mediæval legend, and metallic, modern observation. It is written with unquestionable, if somewhat détraqué power. One shrinks from contemplating the potential development of this young author."

Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 120w

"Assuredly one of the most extraordinary productions of current literature. Beyond question Mr. Dennis has at least moments of what one must call 'genius,' of inspiration; but sometimes it is the sort of inspiration that drives one to reflect that 'that way madness lies.'" H. L. Pangborn

Int Bk R p483 Je '25 450w

"Mr. Dennis has written an epic of mystical Puritanism with a strange, almost hysterical genius flaring unsteadily through it."

+ Nation 121:sup443 O 14 '25 50w

"It has neither economy nor clearness, and it would certainly be far better for them. The great weakness of the novel is that, while full of scenes which should be beautiful, it has very little beauty. It has power, but a signal lack of quality. Yet, if scarcely a work of art, it is a very interesting chaos." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 36:816 Mr 14 '25 300w

"An entertainment, a serious and most interesting one, but still an entertainment." J. Franklin

+ New Statesman 24:776 Ap 11 '25 1100w

"A book which defies analysis may be altogether charming or quite irritating; here it is a little of both. Written in a supple, straightforward style, couched in the first person, it pretends to be that 'mere autobiography tricked up as a tale which is a confession of weakness and poor balm for aching pride.' Actually, it is a mere tale tricked up as autobiography, which, while it adds to the vividness of an intriguing mystery story, cannot conceal the book's indebtedness to the author's personal history."

+ N Y Times p8 Ap 19 '25 900w

"It is curious that a novel which subordinates its metaphysics to its people with such skill should leave one tangled up in the problems of time and space lost in a vast unknown world. It is strange, too, that the people, so vivid and real, should become, when the book is closed, fantastic shadows and that the story, which is a very good one, should dissolve in the same way." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ap 26 '25 1000w

N Y World p7m Ap 19 '25 160w

"Certainly 'Harvest in Poland' is not a pleasant or a simple book, but it is a very remarkable one. And it is exciting." Gerald Gould

Sat R 139:247 Mr 7 '25 1000w

"The scenes in Warsaw, in especial, are described with genius. The divided family and their partisans will leave an indelible impress on the reader's imagination. Harvest in Poland at moments is almost a masterpiece."

+ Spec 134:294 F 21 '25 920w

"Mr. Dennis's first novel, 'Mary Lee,' showed considerable promise; but it is to be feared that he will not enhance his reputation by the present medley of melodrama and spiritualism."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p154 Mr 5 '25 350w

DE NORMANDIE, ROBERT LAURENT. Expectant mother; care of her health. (National health ser.) 57p lea'tte 30c Funk 618.2 Pregnancy. Woman—Health and hygiene 24-15498
Describes the health care needed during pregnancy.

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:412 J1 '25

DE SELINCOURT, HUGH. Young mischief and the perfect pair. 167p $2 A. & C. Boni 25-8316

"Here is an idyll of young love, and the story of how two young lovers—quite married and quite normal—set about reintroducing romance into the lives of an older 'pair,' who really should have been happy together, but weren't, because their relationship had always been too decorous for the free expression of love. The young people, secretly married, have a love bower to which they make pilgrimages. It is dedicated to the principle that love must be kept fresh by never being exposed to the dangers of too much intimacy. By a ruse they lure the older couple to this retreat, explain their theory and lock their pupils inside. This has the desired effect."—N Y Tribune

"The treatment is highly humorous, but never trivial. When we finish the novel, we feel that the sun is shining, and that the world is a good place to live in after all."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 450w

"Mr. de Selincourt avoids obvious cleverness and profundity. Both qualities are present, but hidden in character-drawing, in situation, and combined with gentle-voiced satire and a salty grain of truth. The book is fun, from beginning to end." Eva Goldbeck
+ Lit R p12 F 28 '25 600w

"Mr. de Selincourt has written a very charming comedy of manners in the form of a book. Action and suspense wait on each other, hand in hand, like mannerly twin daughters of the muse. Character is simply, adequately, agreeably drawn. The central idea is a wise, if not particularly novel, observation on life."

+ N Y Times p8 F 8 '25 1050w

"If one did not know his other work one would say that Hugh de Selincourt's most recent book establishes him in the Pollyanna school. The touch is light, and much sound philosophy on the art of love and the possible fineness of human relationships is disclosed in the narrative. Occasionally the author does not care how sentimental he grows and dispenses a gladness which is almost too good to last."

— + N Y Tribune p9 Mr 22 '25 300w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko

Sat R of Lit 1:556 F 28 '25 620w

"Not the least of its virtues is the fact that it is written skilfully in a smooth and artistic style, which somehow conveys the feeling of youth and life and energy; and that feeling is intensified by the characters and the plot."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 300w

"The story is delightful, and written with such charm that you have finished it before you realize that it is a chronicle of the gay revolt of youth against conventional marriage."

World Tomorrow 8:286 S '25 250w

DE STENDHAL, pseud. See Beyle, M. H.

DEUTSCH, BABETTE (MRS AVRAHM YARMOLINSKY). Honey out of the rock. (Appleton lib. of verse) 129p $1.50 Appleton

811

25-17478

In this second collection by the author of "Banners" the poems are arranged in four groups: Wind and iron; Time's fuel; Sonnets; For Adam.

Cleveland p121 D '25

"Miss Deutsch has here made a sweet distillation and a rich deposit out of the dark garden of her years and her agonies and her exaltations. The honey does not come out all 'sun-warmed, translucent and golden'; it is not, for us, 'the veritable honey of Hymettus.' It is much more a sullen and a savage honey, cellular, stained with the struggle; there is rock in it, a swarthy tinge of extraction; it is almost bitter, though not quite; it is certainly not a Greek, not a pure pagan comb, but a Hebrew essence, an urgently Jewish honey, terribly tender and mordant and implacable and piteous and solitary, and often true." Joseph Auslander
Lit R p2 N 7 '25 400w

"Since her early book Babette Deutsch's tone has become more resonant and has achieved that timbre which distinguishes one voice from all other voices. Her presentation is sometimes inadequate to the richness of the content; but there is a quality of sure, unhurried growth which betokens a future greater stature." Lola Ridge

+ Nation 121:601 N 25 '25 700w

"Though Babette Deutsch's second volume reveals a greatly enlarged store of technical knowledge, or, possibly, just because of that, Honey Out of the Rock is far too self-conscious in expression to contain much of the rich warm emotional essence its title would suggest. The predominating feature of the book is its coldness. Beneath the rouge and extravagant wardrobe of her vividly colorful vocabulary and wide variety of metrical arrangements, the pulse and running blood of an actual feeling is rarely detectable." Marcia Nardi

— New Repub 45:170 D 30 '25 450w

"Despite its pretentious title, there will be found both intensity of thought and intensity of expression. Miss Deutsch has all the ardor for thought that belongs to youth, and she is not afraid."

+ N Y Times p6 O 11 '25 230w

"I can think of no contemporary book of verse which explores so well that corner of the mind, where Time sits and gnaws at his own thought, where old age threatens, where visions come of stricken boughs and flinty skies, where in a word the winter of the spirit has its retiring place." Mark Van Doren

+ N Y Tribune p4 N 1 '25 700w

"The appeal of Miss Babette Deutsch's second collection, 'Honey out of the Rock,' is to the intellect rather than to the heart. Revealing a keen, educated mind and a sensitive spirit inclined to melancholy musings, it is sure of being amply praised by responsible critics. Wherefore I feel the freer to confess that it commands my esteem without stirring my enthusiasm, that it leaves me not unappreciative, but cold." Arthur Guiterman

+ Outlook 141:287, O 21 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p743 N 5 '25 50w

DEVINE, EDWARD THOMAS. Coal; economic problems of the mining, marketing and consumption of anthracite and soft coal in the United States; facts and remedies. 448p $3 Am. review service press, 509 North East st., Bloomington, Ill.

338.2 Coal industry

From the findings of the United States coal commission, 1922-1923, of which Mr Devine was a member, and his own independent study of the mass of material collected, the author presents a masterly summary of the facts about the production, mining, marketing and consumption of coal in the United States—of those facts which seem to bear most directly on the formation of a national policy. The whole is welded into a readable story and plentifully illustrated with charts and diagrams.

"A readable, fair-minded, and sympathetic account of the industry from the mine to the house coal-bin. We wish that every member of Congress would read this book."

+ Outlook 142:35 Ja 6 '26 120w

"In domesticating the unruly reports of the Commission he has succeeded admirably. He presents the gist of four large and forbidding volumes in a little over four hundred readable pages. He gives a perspective of the industry which only the undaunted reader can dig out of the official documents. His facts are comprehensive and accurate; his diagrams and charts, strangely enough, liven and lighten his description; and the multitude of interesting details never obscures the general picture. Imagination and apt phrasing make of 'Coal' a readable book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:417 D 12 '25 580w

"This book was written cooperatively by several Devines. There is Devine the editor and lecturer, gifted in the use of polished phrases, imaginative, quick witted, resourceful. His hand in the matter makes the book interesting and readable from beginning to end. Then there is the Devine who as a member of the U.S. Coal Commission came face to face with the facts as few men have an opportunity to do. He saw the coal industry in all of its phases and the book in consequence is a rich storehouse of information. In the third place there is Devine the preacher who lectures owners, operators, miners and dealers and urges them to change their evil ways. And finally there is Devine the economist whose presence on the stage is occasionally somewhat confusing both to the conciliator and to the preacher." J. A. Fitch

+ Survey 55:96 O 15 '25 1500w

DEWEY, JOHN. Experience and nature. (Paul Carus foundation lectures) 443p $3 Open ct.

191 Experience. Metaphysics 25-4301

"In professional philosophical circles the wish has long been expressed that John Dewey would some day produce a book making clear and explicit the metaphysical basis of his singularly humane and liberalizing philosophy of life. . . They wanted to know what lay behind his suggestive recommendations in the form of ultimate metaphysical conclusions. They have rightly suspected that there lurked in Professor Dewey's writings sufficient metaphysical novelty to make him, although known as an enemy of metaphysics, one of the arresting metaphysicians of our time. Their wish to have him come out in the open with the cardinal Grundriss of his thinking has been granted. With monumental care, detail and completeness Professor Dewey has in this volume revealed the metaphysical heart that beats its unvarying alert tempo through all his writings, whatever their explicit themes."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:356 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p5 My 9 '25 1000w

"Professor Dewey is both ingenious and thorough at carrying out the implications and ramifications of a philosophy which might be written in a paragraph or a library."

+ Dial 78:429 My '25 170w

"One can only recommend to those who are interested in philosophy a volume which will need no recommendation to those acquainted with Professor Dewey's work."

+ Ind 115:396 O 3 '25 180w

Reviewed by G. P. Adams

Int J Ethics 36:201 Ja '26 1500w

"An exceptionally stimulating and suggestive analysis."

+ J Religion 5:445 J1 '25 20w

Reviewed by H. N. Wieman

J Religion 5:519 S '25 7250w

"All of this is not to naturalize man; it is to humanize nature. It it this warm sympathy, even with objects inanimate, that makes Mr. Dewey the kindest and most humane of living philosophers." M. T. McClure

+ Nation 121:sup430 O 14 '25 1150w

Reviewed by C. E. M. Joad

Nation and Ath 37:682 S 5 '25 900w

"Many people who have read Professor Dewey's other books may be surprised to hear me describe his work as simple. I have not said that it is easy reading. His work is hard to read for various reasons. One is that he is incurably episodic. It is remarkably difficult to read straight through. But who ever said that reading a book straight through is the one valid test of worth in writing? Open a book at random, read what you find until you come to a natural break, and answer whether it was worth reading. Judged by such a test Dewey's writing is incomparably rich; taken in such doses it is actually exciting." C. E. Ayres

+ New Repub 42:129 Mr 25 '25 2550w

"Here, among the regiments of charlatans, is a thinker of the first rank, whose talents have been unpretentiously dedicated to the enfranchisement and enrichment of human life. Here is a philosophy as soundly American as that of Emerson, Thoreau, Whitman, or William James. The difficulty of John Dewey's style is well known to those who have had previous experience with it. He is capable of delicate wit, of homely humor and of an almost impassioned eloquence, but his purple passages are not numerous." R. L. Duffus

+ — N Y Times p4 My 3 '25 1850w

"Possibly not more than a thousand persons in the next decade will read, or be able to read, through this book completely. But that thousand will have had one of the few experiences possible in contemporary philosophy and will have enough ideas to make three or four philosophical careers. . . There is enough in this volume to make it an indispensable prolegomenon to all future adult philosophizing. It cannot be neglected by metaphysicians who realize they are talking in a world containing other things than words, nor by men of the world who want to know what kind of universe their words and acts imply. If one of the thousand who presumably will read this book through could translate it into the language of the lay mind, he would not only be doing a service to the cause of philosophy, but to that larger humanity which Professor Dewey is so profoundly anxious it should serve." Irwin Edwin

+ N Y Tribune p1 My 3 '25 1350w

"No doubt the book holds rich rewards for painful study by the elect few—very few; but decidedly it is not for 'the general.' Whatever the merits of the peculiar style, they are not the Socratic merits of lucidity and charm."

+ Outlook 140:267 Je 17 '25 250w

Pratt p6 autumn '25

+ R of Rs 72:560 N '25 160w

St Louis p333 S '25

"It has distinction of style and a certain eloquence and persuasiveness. It has the obscurity of discourse which is both abstract and literary, having neither schematic precision nor concrete vividness; but how the author's peculiar philosophy could be more skillfully and more aptly insinuated into the reader's mind is difficult to conceive." R. B. Perry

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:874 J1 4 '25 720w

Reviewed by F. C. S. Schiller

Spec 135:497 S 26 '25 280w

"'Experience and nature' is a philosophical classic, even if it claims to be a refutation of classical philosophy." G. Brown

Springf'd Republican p7a S 20 '25 1350w

Survey 54:534 Ag 15 '25 200w

Reviewed by Paul Jones

World Tomorrow 8:383 D '25 300w

DEWITT, MARGARET E. EuphonEnglish in America. 176p $1.20 Dutton [2s 6d Dent] 421.5 English language—Pronunciation. Phonetics 25-18856

Euphonetics furthers that form of a language which is universally recognized as the accepted standard or good. EuphonEnglish is, then, the best form of spoken English. This volume on EuphonEnglish has a twofold purpose, to stress the need of euphonetics and to give examples of standard English as it is actually spoken by a representative group which includes professors, clergymen and well known people of the stage. These examples of the spoken word are given in the form of Euphonetographs, intelligible only to the expert.

DEWITT, MARGARET E.—Continued

"This book is an important contribution to phonetics, because of the careful and extremely interesting records which Miss DeWitt has made of the speech of many speakers of English in the United States and Canada."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 1 '25 250w

"A book that is suggestive, stimulating and of wide implications, notwithstanding the pedagogical indications of its title. The second section of the book, filling almost half of it, is, it is true, chiefly of interest to the expert phonetician for whom it will be of great value."

+ N Y Times p29 My 31 '25 380w

"Such transcripts are always interesting, but as one reads through the records here given he begins to question whether this second part of Miss DeWitt's work is not really as hortatory as the first part. For one thing, the reader is struck by the uniformity of the speech here recorded. But naturally it must be uniform, since the specimens were, hand picked to present examples of EuphonicEnglish. Yet if these records are faithful and adequate representation of American speech, then all of Miss DeWitt's exhortation is not needed. She has wasted her ammunition, for the battle for EuphonicEnglish is practically won." G: P. Krapp

N Y Tribune p11 Je 7 '25 1350w

Outlook 141:321 O 28 '25 60w

"In a number of brief chapters, marked by freshness and originality, Miss DeWitt develops her brilliant argument, in which, by the way, you are either with her or against her: you can not be neutral."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:900 J1 11 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p377 My 14 '25 80w

"It is a live and interesting question and one that is worth talking about. But it is sincerely to be hoped that the people who talk about it in books will talk more clearly than Miss DeWitt. Evidently she knows her material—the form of her writing indicates that she has taught it, lectured on it, perhaps. She understands that the problem of the phonetician is not to standardize language, but to record its standards; to gather, classify and formulate the materials on its subject. But the book is almost impossibly difficult to read—a messy form and thought added to bad printing."

— Theatre Arts Mo 9:563 Ag '25 200w

DIBBLE, ROY FLOYD. John L. Sullivan; an intimate narrative. 209p il $3 Little

B or 92 Sullivan, John Lawrence 25-8516

The story of John L. Sullivan's spectacular career as prize fighter, actor, reformed drunkard and temperance lecturer.

"It is as hero and idol of the crowd that his biographer presents him, and as in the author's Strenuous Americans not Sullivan but the mob becomes the target of his genial but uncompromising irony."

Booklist 21:379 J1 '25

"Here is a keenly satiric review of a first class, blustering, bull-dozing straight-from-the-shoulder, plunging, unscientific fighting man... No one who reads Mr. Dibble's book has any doubt that he has not only portrayed the real John L. Sullivan, but that his method of indulgent satire is exactly the right method with which to treat this bizarre hero." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 29 '25 900w

Cleveland p80 J1 '25

"Mr. Dibble has written a thoroughly entertaining book veraciously and with sympathy. It is a real contribution to American biography."

+ Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 120w

"Mr. Dibble has done a fine job. The personality of Sullivan is on every page. Many stories and anecdotes about him and his career combine to make Mr. Dibble's biography of Sullivan stand out on a shelf holding books devoted to fistiana that are much read and prized." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p5 Ap 18 '25 600w

"Sullivan is not Mr. Dibble's own hero, nor is he, I take it, the reader's; he belongs to the crowd. It is through the crowd that we see him, and in the last analysis it is the crowd which Mr. Dibble the satirist is getting at. Not that he ever confesses his motive; but his book is all the better for the omission... I should not fail to record that Mr. Dibble has invented a mock-heroic style to fit the mock-grandeur of his theme." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 120:494 Ap 29 '25 520w

"A most excellent book, most excellently done." C: W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p11 Ap 26 '25 2200w

"Mr. Dibble, it may be stated without reservations, has done a splendid job. No knowledge of the prize ring is essential to an appreciation of it. I recommend it heartily to any 90 per cent American who wants to enjoy an hour or two before going to sleep." Carl Van Vechten

+ N Y Tribune p5 My 3 '25 850w

Reviewed by Frank Sullivan

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 280w

"John L. Sullivan' is an admirable example of a brief biography, is probably trustworthy as to facts, is certainly readable and amusing in content, and is, at the same time, satirical in the best sense of that hardworked word." E. L. P.

+ Outlook 140:339 J1 1 '25 980w

St Louis p358 S '25

"He is to be congratulated for his interest in an interesting phase of life as is evidenced by his writing of John L. Sullivan. That he did not scratch the veneer on this granite figure can be laid to his academic training. The fault with this book is its lack of human interest. Mr. Dibble tells anecdotes about the obvious." Jim Tully

— Sat R of Lit 1:666 Ap 11 '25 1050w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 16 '25 160w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 760w

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 J1 '25

DICKINSON, EDWARD. Spirit of music; how to find it and how to share it. 218p $2 Scribner

780.1 Music—Analysis, interpretation, appreciation. Music—Instruction and study
25-21693

Professor Dickinson's new book is written with the aim of awakening a more general appreciation of music. He does not attempt here an analysis of the various forms of musical composition, but seeks rather to induce in the reader a receptive attitude of mind and heart, so that capturing the spirit of music, he may derive from it the greatest emotional enjoyment.

"The book is well ordered, and effectively arranged; it cannot fail to arouse an intense interest in the questions of beauty, esthetic criticism and esthetic theory, besides the untold enjoyment and aid it will give to everyone with the slightest appreciation of music."

+ Boston Transcript p3 D 19 '25 360w

"Dr. Dickinson gives to all that he writes the grace of form and style. As he does not frame nor propound opinions hastily so he carefully molds his prose, and writers whom he quotes with approval, such as George Santayana, are not his superiors in the thoughtful structure of the essay in the difficult field of æsthetic appraisals and appreciations." Fullerton Waldo

+ Lit R p13 N 28 '25 560w

"Out of the fruits of a long life devoted to the study, the love and the teaching of music Edward Dickinson, Professor of the History of Music in Oberlin College, has made a useful book of fine spiritual quality."

+ N Y Times p13 D 20 '25 320w

"One may say of Professor Dickinson's book that at least it makes demands upon the attention. This pleasant drone of words—what is it all about? An essay on the gentle art of listening to music without intelligence might be a better title for it, if Professor Dickinson himself had not labeled it by his subtitles as one of the 'How to' school. Pleasantly, and not unprofitably, Professor Dickinson detains us by the wayside, moralizing on how to keep fit for our pilgrimage. But he does not tell us, we feel that he has not yet discovered for himself, the right road." P: Bowdoin

+ — N Y Tribune p15 Ja 10 '26 680w

DICKINSON, THOMAS HERBERT. Playwrights of the new American theater. 331p $2.50 Macmillan

812 American drama. Dramatists, American 25-10996

Mr Dickinson devotes more than a third of his book to a study of the art of Percy MacKaye and Eugene O'Neill and their influence on the American stage—the one as pioneer, the other as innovator. The rest of the book is given to briefer studies of other contemporary American dramatists and a discussion of new experiments in dramatic forms.

Booklist 22:63 N '25

"The book, I am happy to say, is not so bad as the title which suggests a series of heart-to-heart talks delivered to the associated women's clubs of Rotaria, but even with due allowance the title points to the central weakness of the book. There are theatres in America and there are plays, but where are we to find the abstracted entity to which Professor Dickinson applies that appallingly pompous, self-important epithet, 'the new American theatre'?" Granville Hicks

+ — New Repub 44:335 N 18 '25 750w

"The method of Mr. Dickinson's study of American drama is empirical. He has not set out with any preconceived notions as to what American plays should be; instead he has assembled the evidence. Nor does he draw his conclusions too fine. The evidence is far too heterogeneous to admit of anything like concise summarization."

N Y Times p14 Je 14 '25 1700w

"I question whether Professor Dickinson sufficiently makes it clear that observation, so useful to a dramatist in catching the sense of life and winning the interest of his audience, is of itself at best but mildly satiric and can never, unsupported by moral passion, cut deep enough to create fine comedy. On the other hand, it is impossible to read Professor Dickinson's volume without finding many passages which delight with their penetration or justice."

W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p4 S 6 '25 900w

"We could go through this book disagreeing with Mr. Dickinson as to particulars, but in the end reaching conclusions not unlike his as to the healthful potentiality of the American Theatre at this very hour. One could never accuse him of insularity, and yet there is an almost blind acceptance of the 'American product' as the best the market affords; this enthusiasm is an excellent quality, not often to be found in his writing." M. J. Moses

+ — No Am 222:171 S '25 900w

"Determined to evaluate the American contribution to this new theater. Mr. Dickinson is almost painstaking in his endeavor to divorce the American experiment from any influence outside its own soil. He does not seem to be hampered by any necessity on his part to show that the present activity among playwrights in this country is attached to any previous endeavor among the playwrights of England and the Continent." M. J. Moses

Outlook 140:498 Ag 5 '25 650w

Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

DICKINSON, THOMAS HERBERT, and CRAWFORD, JACK RANDALL, eds. Contemporary plays. 650p $3.50 Houghton

822 English drama—Collections. Drama—Collections 25-10047

Sixteen plays selected from the contemporary drama of England and America. Bibliographies and notes on dramatists and plays are given in the Appendix. Contents: Paolo and Francesca, by Stephen Phillips; The Voysey inheritance, by Harley Granville-Barker; The Cassilis engagement, by St John Hankin; John Gayde's honour, by Alfred Sutro; The mollusc, by H. H. Davies; Chains, by Elizabeth Baker; Kindling, by Charles Kenyon; Hindle wakes, by Stanley Houghton; Rutherford and son, by Githa Sowerby; The unchastened woman, by L. K. Anspacher; The circle, by W. S. Maugham; The hairy ape, by Eugene O'Neill; Mary the third, by Rachel Crothers; Icebound, by Owen Davis; The adding machine, by E. L. Rice; Oliver Cromwell, by John Drinkwater. Appendix.

N Y Times p14 Je 14 '25 280w

"A collection of sixteen contemporary plays in English of which only six are American. Does that represent, I wonder, Mr. Dickinson's real reaction to the American drama when he faces the bitter necessity of reading the scripts? Nearly all of them are significant dramas and the collection may well and no doubt profitably occupy a woman's club 'drama circle' for an entire winter." W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p5 S 6 '25 120w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

+ — Outlook 140:498 Ag 5 '25 520w

DICKSON, HARRIS. Old-fashioned senator. 205p il $2 Stokes

B or 92 Williams, John Sharp

The author writes in a friendly fashion of the private and public life of Senator John Sharp Williams, picturing his boyhood on Cedar Grove plantation, his student days in Germany, his early efforts at law, and his long political career in Congress.

"Mr. Dickson's pleasantly informal small book tells a good deal about the public career of Mr. Williams, but he is chiefly interested in the personal side of the man, and he paints an excellent portrait with the charming old white farmhouse and the rolling acres of Cedar Grove as its background." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p6 O 3 '25 330w

"It is, in its small way, a tragic book. Here, obviously, is the best that Mississippi can do, in theme and treatment—and it is such puerile, blowy stuff that reviewing it realistically would be too cruel." H. L. Mencken

— Nation 121:sup426 O 14 '25 1155w

N Y Times p3 O 18 '25 320w

"A most readable and delightfully informal biography of a man who for years was recognized as the most attractive Southerner in the public life of the nation."

+ R of Rs 72:556 N '25 120w

DIGEON, AURELIEN. Novels of Fielding. 255p $4.50 Dutton

823 Fielding, Henry

[25-10529]

A French critic and warm admirer of Fielding studies his four novels, "Joseph Andrews," "Jonathan Wild," "Tom Jones" and "Amelia," prefacing his study with a brief account of Fielding's life.

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"The study is admirably grounded upon a knowledge of the literature and events of the period."

+ Bookm 62:511 D '25 220w

"A clear and sound exposition." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 27 '25 1950w

DIGEON, AURELIEN—Continued

"His point of view is that of the appreciative critic of literature and not of the scientific research investigator. The fact that M. Digeon is French adds materially to the charm of his writing and to the value of his work. With his own background knowledge of French literature, he is better qualified to establish the close relationship in thought between the two countries in the eighteenth century than an English critic would be, and he treats Molière's influence with an assurance which would be impossible for a countryman of Fielding's." R. E. Spiller

+ Lit R p4 S 19 '25 600w

"M. Digeon has a few new things to say, and he has a new way of saying them. Fielding has seldom or never been subjected to subtle analysis and delicate appreciation by a critic of his own race." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 121:sup425 O 14 '25 750w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 37:177 My 9 '25 100w

"M. Digeon sketches the life of Fielding and gives an admirable analysis of each of his four novels which to those who have read them will recall a pleasure from the past, and to those who have not, will promise one for the future, at least in the case of Tom Jones." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 44:22 Ag 26 '25 1300w

"M. Aurélien Digeon is French, and this excellent volume is a translation; but it has none of the obscurity and awkwardness which so often mar translated work. It is a competent, interesting and sympathetic introduction to a study of Fielding's novels."

+ New Statesman 25:77 My 2 '25 1150w

"Straightforward and sympathetic study of a great English novelist."

+ N Y Times p11 J1 12 '25 1200w

"The book is admirable in its tone, and dismisses the idea of Fielding as a Bohemian rufian which has too long prevailed."

+ Sat R 139:390 Ap 11 '25 280w

"M. Digeon writes brilliantly; his style has behind it a fine psychology—not Freud, not psychoanalysis—but the real thing; it penetrates to the heart of Fielding's art and philosophy of life. It is only when he approaches semi-biographical details that lapses become apparent. Then the doubtful hypothesis shows its head."

W. L. Cross

+ Sat R of Lit 1:905 J1 18 '25 2450w

"Notable for studious and sympathetic thoroughness. In method, insight and ratiocination it is characteristically French—which means that precision and lucidity are sometimes attained through fine-spun elaboration of thought. But its wealth of ingenuity and theory, while pushed to the point where it becomes a positive defect, is matched by careful knowledge and fine appreciation."

+ Springfield Republican p7a J1 19 '25 1300w

"Can be confidently recommended to any English reader as an enthusiastic, acute, scholarly and concise account of Fielding's art as a novelist, with sufficient biographical reference for the purpose."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p381 Je 4 '25 1500w

DINGLE, HERBERT. Modern astrophysics. 420p il $8.50 Macmillan [30s Collins]

522.67 Astrophysics [25-8047]

"A pioneer attempt at popular exposition of the subject, thus offering considerable difficulty in condensing information and reconciling conflicting opinions. Is comprehensive and only moderately technical."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"In collecting and arranging the facts, Prof. Dingle has expended a great deal of labour—labour which will make easier the future tasks of others. For he has at least got the subject into a whole, though rather a shapeless one. . . The book would have been improved if the frequent dramatic and rhetorical passages had been omitted, for they do not succeed in stimulating the reader's emotions more than would simple narration. The author says that lack of space has compelled him to be brief. This shows want of self-criticism. The book suffers from diffuseness. Repeatedly, loss of clarity arises from excess of explanation. When one of the objects of the book is to give non-mathematical explanations, it is disappointing to find how often opportunities have been missed." E. A. M.

— + Nature 115:41 Ja 10 '25 1400w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:404 J1 '25

"Those who wish to read the newest theories about the structure of the universe, and to learn the latest facts as to the distance, arrangement, size and composition of the stars, will find all that they can wish in Professor Dingle's authoritative and luminous treatise."

+ Sat R 138:499 N 15 '24 160w

"The treatment is lucid throughout, and the book presents in logical sequence a great number of recent facts and theories which would otherwise be accessible only in the scattered pages of scientific journals. There are many excellent photographs."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:302 N 14 '25 420w

"There seems to be a danger that the book may fall between two publics—the 'general public,' for whom it may be rather too hard, and the instructed public, who could dispense with some of the attempted explanations. But too much must not be made of this fault, which, after all, affects only parts of the book, chiefly the specially technical parts, which the general reader may be content to skip or pass over lightly. The more descriptive portions are not affected in the same way, and are, moreover, helped by many admirable pictures and diagrams."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p837 D 11 '24 1700w

DIRR, ADOLF, comp. and tr. Caucasian folk-tales; selected and tr. from the originals; tr. into English by Lucy Menzies. 306p $2 Dutton [5s Dent]

398 Folklore—Caucasus [25-10107]

The earliest folklore of Europe is connected with the Caucasus. The variety of the tales, as explained in the Introduction, is due to the fact that the Caucasus lies almost in the center of a region round which great migrations took place, leaving behind them in the remoter valleys traces of many different nationalities. Included in the collection are fairy tales, heroic sagas, animal fables and national romances.

"If one wants to read good fairy stories with a new flavor, a new dash, and a freshening effect, then nothing better could have happened than this fascinating volume of Caucasian tales. There is nothing either Teutonic or 'scholarly' about the tales. They are the unadulterated, unimproved thing. That Professor Dirr spent ten years collecting them and is himself a distinguished philologist and that the stories are by way of being classics, is true. And yet you would never know it from the breeziness of the book." D. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 24 '25 600w

"Many of the pieces in this book can be traced to Hindu origins or to the mythological sources of ancient Greeks. But the Caucasus garbed them in fresh and charming colors; renamed the principal actors, let them absorb plenty of local color and retold them as enthusiastically as though they were original. And this thin disguise taken on by environment makes some of them, at least, more alluring than their ancestors." J. Ferris

+ Lit R p8 D 26 '25 150w

"Although the work in its present form is the translation of a translation, no one would guess it from the style which is as simple and easy as the tales themselves."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 100w

"The whole makes very delightful reading. For the serious-minded, the table of contents gives the racial sources of the originals. But very few of the fairy tales and animal fables are at all unique; certain mannerisms in the form of narrative are peculiar to a tribe or dialect, but the English reader will be acquainted with the substance of the story."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 5 '25 300w

DISHER, M. WILLSON. Clowns and pantomimes. 344p $10 Houghton [42s Constable] 792 Pantomime. Clowns

"It is quite evident from Mr. Disher's book that he has had a long acquaintance with the English stage, especially the music halls and pantomimes, probably from the inside. And in this large and copiously illustrated volume he has contrived to write a kind of discursive history of clowns and pantomimes, going back into the past far less for its own sake than because Charlie Chaplin and Dan Leno and Vesta Tilley appeal to him as manifestations of age-old theatrical instincts and customs, and he finds it fascinating to trace them back. So do we, his readers."—N Y Tribune

"The essays vary considerably in merit and in the amount of knowledge displayed. Mr. Disher is on sure ground so long as he is treating of English clowns, English pantomime traditions and the modern music-hall comedian; the essays dealing with Grimaldi show much patient research, the life of Grock is well done, the Circus Clowns are presented with interesting details. On these and one or two kindred topics, Mr. Disher always writes well and is therefore deserving of praise. He is not very convincing when he essays the psychology of laughter or attempts the philosophy of burlesque." R: Aldington

+ — Nation and Ath 37:707 S 12 '25 1050w

"Everything that could possibly be said about Harlequin and his relatives, Mr. Willson Disher has said, and if he seems a little heavy-handed at times it is because his hero is only too ready to melt at a touch into thin air. . . . An entrancing hotch-potch of 'Genii and Angels, Cupids, Syrens and Devils.' His illustrations deserve special praise, though we wonder that he does not allude to the present vogue for clowns and pierrots in pictorial art; surely a Seurat, a Severini, or a Picasso would not have been amiss, to remind us that if Harlequin is, out of sight he still lives in our imaginations."

+ — New Statesman 25:732 O 10 '25 1050w

"Unfortunately for American readers, Mr. Disher has little to say about any of our clowns and comics except Chaplin. However, he supplies ample material for application to our own stage, and you may realize how thoroughly, if apparently casually, his work goes into the whole structure of the comic, the elementally comic, in our theater." W. P. Eaton

+ — N Y Tribune p8 N 22 '25 680w

"A history with such rich material is bound to be a book of riches unless the theme has fallen into the deadening hands of dry-as-dust. Mr. Disher has an eye for richness, and his zeal in research has not blunted the edge of his passion for clown and pantomime. His devotion of long hours to theatrical archives has occasionally led him to include more detail than is quite fair to the human clowns beneath the burden and his most readable chapters are those in which the story of the man displaces the story of the motley. But for purposes of information all is valuable."

+ — Sat R 140:264 S 5 '25 1000w

"Here are rare facts, difficult to come at in the best of libraries without an incredible expenditure of time; here are rare illustrations more difficult still to find. And those newcomers into the theatre, the bannered army of amateurs and little theatrists, will find in this history a much needed inspiration from the tradition of a great profession—the art of making men laugh."

Jack Crawford

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:474 Ja 9 '26 550w

"Here is the complete Anatomy of Mirth at last. The elemental merrymaking of humanity, is expounded with much learning, a delightful lack of pedantry, and a bewildering wealth of detail from the earliest development of mirth to its last phase on the music-hall stage and on the film."

+ Spec 135:453 S 19 '25 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p596 S 17 '25 1850w

DIVER, MAUD. Coombe St Mary's. 445p $2.50 Houghton

25-22116

At her father's death Daphne becomes Lady Carlyon, mistress of Coombe St Mary's and of the outlying country estates. The inheritance would mean unalloyed joy to Daphne were it not for the presence of her cousin and co-trustee, Mostyn Sturt, who does not share her passionate devotion to the ancestral home. They clash constantly over the management of the estate, and without Daphne's knowledge, her cousin enters into a dishonorable transaction. The agent whom she trusts and likes is forced to leave, but the new agent wins her confidence from the start. Up to this time love for her home and its beautiful natural surroundings has been her strongest emotion. With the coming of John Lutyens as agent, Coombe St Mary's has its first rival. Their love story with its background of English country life is the story of Coombe St Mary's.

"The story is very delightful, not only because the tragedies are averted, but because things always happen the way you want them to, and you are left with no unsuppressed desires. But its greatness lies in its picture of England as the Land, instilling the Land into her true children, be they aristocrat or peasant." I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p4 N 21 '25 1650w

Cleveland p124 D '25

"One feels deep respect for Miss Diver's latest novel as a revelation of a type of British character fast disappearing nowadays—the landowning family which believes in noblesse oblige. Splendid characterization and a charming west country setting are two more reasons for reading this delightful book."

+ Ind 115:648 D 5 '25 60w

Reviewed by Eva Goldbeck

Lit R p13 N 28 '25 450w

"The manner is a bit slow, a trifle painstaking, but throughout it all there is a literary competency that could only be the result of long years of writing and a consistent feeling for loveliness which even long years of writing have not conventionalized." Elizabeth Todd

+ — N Y Tribune p10 D 13 '25 320w

"Mrs. Diver writes sympathetically and in notably excellent English diction."

+ Outlook 141:609 D 16 '25 130w

"The novel, setting aside any weakness it possesses in its wider implications as a typical example of the kind of struggle which is taking place all over England, is interesting enough as the story of a particular case."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p754 N 12 '25 300w

DIVINE, CHARLES. Road to town; a book of 2 poems. 85p $2 Seltzer

811

25-22481

A narrative poem depicting the life of the small American town, partly thru the eyes of the townspeople and partly thru the eyes of the observer. Of his own work the author writes, "I have tried to make you smell hay—along my road to town—then gasoline; to give you the transition of America from a land with a rural breath blowing through it to the land of machines and skyscrapers."

"Despite the humaneness of his attitude, he seems feeble after a reading of Robert Frost. Perhaps he seems feeble because more humane; and if that be the reason again, he should not be harshly dealt with." P. A. Hutchison

DIVINE, CHARLES—Continued

N Y Times p8 N 29 '25 220w

"His characters are not yet dead, but they possess a painful moribundity. They are merely stilted automata with casual speech as their only reality. The book is entirely written in blank verse, rarely transcending orderly monotony." — N Y World p6m D 13 '25 80w

DIXON, G. C. From Melbourne to Moscow.
320p $4 Little [16s G. Bles]

910 Voyages and travels. Russia—Politics and government [25-15867]

An Australian journalist describes his journey from Melbourne to Moscow via the East Indies, China, Korea, Japan, Manchuria and Siberia. His comments and impressions along the way are those of a hurried but well informed traveller. He devotes a chapter to Sun-Yat-Sen, China's revolutionary leader, one to Marshal Chang Tso-lin, the war lord of Mukden and another to a nine-day journey thru Siberia on the Trans-Siberian railway. The last quarter of the book is given to his impressions of Soviet Russia.

Booklist 22:155 Ja '26

"Throughout, Mr. Dixon has a keen descriptive sense. A great canvas was unrolled for him in this long and interesting pilgrimage. He has turned it all to good use and makes his readers enjoy every step of the journey with him." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 9 '25 760w

"An interesting and well-written story of present-day conditions in troubled countries."

+ Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 60w

"As a whole the book presents entertaining and enlightening reading. Its charm is enhanced by the author's sense of humor and its interest by the opinions he formed on the spot on subjects of international importance." A. M. Nikolaieff

+ Lit R p4 S 5 '25 500w

"Mr. Dixon is a level-headed, unbiased observer of the Old World in the melting-pot; he is not rushed into unconsidered generalizations. . . He is too wise to be led into prophecy. Events move altogether too rapidly in the Far East. It is significant that Mr. Dixon is an honest democrat, and that his main conclusions are drawn from Moscow, the Bolshevik's shop window." Edmund Candler

+ Nation and Ath 37:436 J1 4 '25 600w

N Y Times p18 S 6 '25 1300w

"A very sensible man, with considerable experience of Australia, and well read, he makes of his first voyaging a popular survey, and, of course, a shallow one. Asia is opaque to Western eyes until after years of study. The lacquer of the surface is often mistaken for the very different realities beneath." F. O'Brien

+ N Y Tribune p3 S 20 '25 1050w

"A readable collection of observations and some conclusions which are not without interest."

+ Sat R 140:138 Ag 1 '25 400w

"What starts out by being an archly entertaining and good-humored travelogue, Sidney to Canton, begins there to get heavier and heavier with political and social opinions, until by the time we reach Harbin, our tourist obviously realizes that 'a lot is expected from him.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:144 S 19 '25 200w

"The American reader will soon become at ease with the Australian journalist, and will find his unjazzed account of what he saw and learned interesting and informative."

+ Spring'd Republican p12 S 18 '25 400w

"He has an alert eye and an open mind, and he is well served by his pen. What he has to say about the Far East and Russia is the more significant as coming from a good democrat who would think that Tsars were well away." + The Times [London] Lit Sup p361 My 28 '25 360w

DIXON, THOMAS. Love complex. 286p $2
Bonni & Liveright 25-11486

Donna Sherwood and Alan Holt had been engaged for two years. As they were discussing wedding plans for the near future, a stranger makes a dramatic entrance into their lives. From the first he exerts a strange power over Donna. Alan analyses it as sheer animal attraction and begs Donna to free herself from the infatuation. There is evidence that the newcomer, who calls himself Banning, is a criminal. In spite of Alan's protests and pleas, Donna elopes with Banning. The remainder of the book recounts the frightful events of their wedding night in a dilapidated old house, high in the Catskills.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 350w

"None of the actors bear much resemblance to possible human beings, but Mr. Dixon, nevertheless, has much of the knack of narrative, as he has often demonstrated, and this is a better built story than most of its predecessors. It should be a sensational success on the screen." H. Walker

+ Int Bk R p617 Ag '25 480w

"Mr. Dixon's novel is hand-made melodrama, seasoned with a few dashes of pseudo-science and Freudianism. It is not a novel for discriminating readers, who insist upon an intelligent handling of plot and character. Its people are mere dummies, and at no point does the story rise above the level of the good old ten-twenty-thirty thrillers." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 Ag 15 '25 260w

"The story is not without thrills, especially in the last few chapters, but it is rather confused in basis and plays tricks with the reader's interest."

+ N Y Times p12 J1 5 '25 800w

"Erected upon the quicksand of untenable premises out of shaky conclusions continually tossed in the cross winds of an untamed style, it cannot truthfully be described as an architectural masterpiece. As a study of love at first sight versus love that has 'ripened' it is probably one of the worst." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p10 J1 26 '25 1150w

"The book is one which, despite its obvious excesses, is not easily laid aside before the end."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:90 Ag 29 '25 380w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 250w

DOBREE, BONAMY. Timotheus; or, The future of the theatre. (To-day and to-morrow ser.)
68p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

792 Theater 25-24706

Having had the good fortune to acquire H. G. Wells's Time machine the author is projected into the year 2100. This little book is a description of the theatre of that date, a satirical forecast of what the theatre will then be if present tendencies are allowed to reach their ultimate development.

"It is a very vivid and amusing and intriguing account, in which it is permissible to ponder just where the author's seriousness begins and where it ends."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 280w

"Mr. Dobrée's gay little book is not quite in harmony with the sober series in which it appears. But it makes delightful reading."

+ Nation and Ath 38:296 N 21 '25 120w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p16 Ja 10 '26 100w

"Mr. Dobrée's satire, though well implied, is too often hidden in the general fantasticality of his borrowed vision to remedy our present ills."

Spec 135:1048 D 5 '25 220w

"One book of the series which neatly fulfils the aim of academic pleasantry, and perhaps achieves a more definite satire than the rest, is Bonamy Dobree's 'Timotheus.' Mr. Dobree detaches himself from the abstruse sufficiently to poke fun at its extravagances, whereas some others have not so clearly shaped their conceits as to make the reader feel that they were not on the side of extravagance themselves. Mr. Dobree has fun with behaviorist psychology, mechanistic esthetics and expressionist 'art.' The fun is a little labored, but it does not lack point."

+ Springfd Republican p8 N 28 '25 1100w

DODD, LEE WILSON. Pegeen and the potamus; or, The sly giraffe; with some account of the wise old man who dwells in Tai-Poo. 187p il $2 Dutton

25-15049

A delightful nonsense tale for children, in which the history of Upper Tooting 'Island is for the first time made public, and wherein is recorded the involuntary voyage of Pegeen and Flips to the Palace of King Gwalo at the bottom of the sea. There are three happy endings and a number of happy illustrations.

"It is pure fantasy, most convincingly expounded, and Clarence Day, Jr., has drawn pictures for it which are the crowning touch to a gorgeously preposterous tale."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 120w

Reviewed by W. K. Rugg

Boston Transcript p6 N 11 '25 260w

"I rather imagine that parents will not have to be nagged to read it to their infants, for it is full of sly jests and genial laughs. It is worth reading if only to find out what a 'terrarium' is." H: Beston

+ Ind 115:351 S 26 '25 80w

"A book of drollery which is of never-flagging vitality. The setting of the story is quite unusual. It's an unlucky child who misses this book!" M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p814 N '25 220w

"A grateful whale, a simple-minded hippopotamus, Tooting Birds with beaks like a penny trumpet, all combine with the sly giraffe to make Mr. Dodd's absurd tales amusing. The illustrations are pure joy."

+ Nation 121:603 N 25 '25 40w

"The book, at least in its first 140 pages, suggests nothing so much as the picture of a young bachelor at that particular age and mental attitude which has most completely forgotten childhood, isolated suddenly in a bevy of children and called upon to tell them a story.

In the last fifty pages the author gets started in spite of himself and tells a sprightly and convincingly fantastic tale, wherein he is almost unselfconscious, betrays a real capacity for fairy stories and flashes of wit."

— + N Y Times p2 S 6 '25 850w

"Probably the more curious of the children who read the book will not rest until they have gone exploring for a 'Terrarium' on the bottoms of their own pet oceans. The charm of the book is at least doubled by the line drawings by Clarence Day."

+ Outlook 141:360 N 4 '25 220w

"The book is written in quite the proper nonsense manner, which is to give one's fancy perfectly free rein and set down almost anything it dictates, in a lively rippling narrative. Mr. Dodd certainly qualifies as an idle hour entertainer of the young." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 2:271 N 7 '25 480w

DODWELL, HENRY. Sketch of the history of India from 1858 to 1918. 326p $2.25 Longmans

954 India—History. India—Politics and government 25-11438

The book is less a sketch of Indian history than an account of the government of India for sixty years, from the Mutiny, which led to the transference of the government from the East India company to the Crown, to the Montagu Chelmsford report of 1918 providing for a measure of popular control of the government. Contents: Book I, The executive government; Book II, Foreign policy; Book III, Political development. Select bibliography. Index.

"The book is not properly a history, since a good part of it is taken up with a description of the Government of India, as modified at intervals since the Company gave way to the Crown. The volume, nevertheless, is serviceable so far as it goes. Mr. Dodwell tends to overstress the influence of the Indian Government in the Morley reforms. The trading post established in Tibet after the Younghusband Mission was at Gyantse, not Lhasa. The statement that the middle class of India does not include commerce is surely without meaning."

+ — New Statesman 25:430 J1 25 '25 280w

"Among other chapters in a thoroughly sound and thoughtful book may be singled out that on the Native States, not so much because it is pre-eminent in excellence as because it sets out a problem which in the course of the development of self-government in India must sooner or later emerge, but for which so far no solution has been found."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p455 J1 9 '25 1000w

DOMVILLE-FIFE, CHARLES WILLIAM.

Things seen in Switzerland in winter. 157p il $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Seeley, Service]

914.94 Switzerland—Description and travel. Winter sports

As the title indicates the writer confines himself to a description of winter in the Alps, particularly the winter sports in favorite resorts. Many of the snow scenes which illustrate the small book are exceedingly beautiful.

"I strongly recommend anyone who wishes to stay away from the Winter Sports not to buy that book. To anyone who has been there before, it is like the smell of roast goose to the younger Cratchits or the sound of the horn to the old hunter." P: Ibbetson

+ Nation and Ath 38:212 N 7 '25 1950w

Springfd Republican p5a N 22 '25 180w

"The book should prove useful to those contemplating a holiday in Switzerland."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p743 N 5 '25 50w

DONOVAN, HERBERT D. A. Barnburners. 2 140p $3.32 N.Y. univ. press

974.7 New York (state)—Politics and government

The sub-title describes the book as a "study of the internal movements in the political history of New York state and of the resulting changes in political affiliation, 1830-1852." The peculiar complexity of New York politics has been due to several causes, chief among them being the antagonism between New York city and up-state, the canal question, for half a century a violent political issue in the state, and the divisions of traditional party groups which led to new alignments. One of the most bitter of these internal conflicts, known as the Barnburner movement, occurred in the Democratic party during the fourth decade of the last century. It is to this schism that the greater part of Dr Donovan's study is devoted.

"Dr. Donovan's book seems to be exactly the type of essay which should find welcome in the publication department of a university, a careful, illuminating, highly desirable inquiry. A piece of investigation done for sheer love of historical writing, for which those who care to understand the history of an important era, and to probe beneath the surface, should thank him." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 26 '25 1900w

"It is a thorough and competent study with a carefully annotated bibliography and well constructed index."

+ Springfd Republican p10 D 4 '25 600w

DORIA, CLARA. See Rogers, C. K.

DORSEY, GEORGE AMOS. Why we behave like human beings. (Harper's modern science ser.) 512p $3.50 Harper

612 Physiology. Psychology. Evolution
25-21191

A comprehensive and closely packed account of human beings and their behavior. An anthropologist himself, Dr Dorsey picks up from several sciences and welds into an orderly, up-to-date story an infinite number of facts about man, his life and evolution, vital processes, germs of disease, causes of death, instincts, habits, appetites and emotions—all the "raw materials of human nature."

"From whatever angle we view it this book is fascinating material. Man viewed from any angle is an exceedingly interesting study, while the infinite possibilities inherent in the theory of re-education reveal why men like Dr. Dorsey find a lifetime far too short for all the interesting opportunities of life." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 9 '25 1350w

"This book teaches some old truths, and stimulates the reader to answer for himself some inescapable questions."

+ Ind 115:656 D 5 '25 100w

DOS PASSOS, JOHN RODERIGO. Manhattan transfer. 404p $2 Harper

25-23116

The book is a mosaic made up of many fragments of the New York scene. Several widely different stories set in as many different corners of the city seem to be under way at once. But as the separate destinies of the diverse characters unfold, each is seen to be a necessary part of the pattern adding form and color to the whole. To some readers, the disjunctive method of narration may detract from the interest of the book.

"What cements these incidents together, what furnishes this adhesion is the setting, and the artistry with which it is handled. It is here that Dos Passos displays his power, his architectonic ability, and a poetic sense of rhythms, colors, sounds and smells." N. R. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 30 '25 450w

"It is an interesting example of what might be called Neo-Realism, which, like the old, is inclined to stress rather than blink the ugly and the sordid. Its prose is purposely crude and the conversation of its characters has undergone no refining process whatever. One must grant it a rough vigor and something of the vitality of our island; much, too, of its commonness and sheer vulgarity. My own interest in it was chiefly as a literary experiment; it is unlikely in the nature of things to reach a very large audience." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p5 N 28 '25 480w

"Some of the scenes are excellent, but all together they somehow fail to add up. The canvas is too all-inclusive to leave upon us, at the end, a clear impression of its carefully thought-out design. Just as the book is overcrowded with scenes, so is each scene overdocumented with facts."

+ New Repub 45:118 D 16 '25 250w

"A powerful and sustained piece of work. It might be said that Mr. Dos Passos has an exasperated sense of the unpleasant. But the same has been said of the Brontës, and in any case such a comment has long ceased to be criticism. A juster estimate would perceive his work vitiated with an initial flaw, that he shares with practically all the impressionists and 'supernaturalists.' He ignores the immunity which the imagination acquires when disheartening or bewildering impressions crowd upon it." H: L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p5 N 29 '25 1500w

"Courageous but not impressive. Doubtless some novelist will eventually achieve an expression of New York equivalent to Joyce's expression of Dublin in 'Ulysses'; Mr. Dos Passos has attempted this, but he has failed. The attempt is, however, interesting and deserves to be recorded." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 60w

"If you are looking for a 'good story' pass this by. If novel it be, it is a novel with a rhythm, not a plot. But if, on the other hand, you are curious to know how New York looks and smells, how it feels as its kaleidoscopic pattern shifts about you, this is your book." Mary Ross

N Y Tribune p1 D 27 '25 1300w

"A novel of the very first importance; a book which the idle reader can devour yet which the literary analyst must take as possibly inaugurating, at long last, the vast and blazing dawn we have awaited. It may be the foundation of a whole new school of novel-writing. Dos Passos may be, more than Dreiser, Cather, Hergesheimer, Cabell, or Anderson the father of humanized and living fiction. . . not merely for America but for the world! Just to rub it in, I regard 'Manhattan Transfer' as more important in every way than anything by Gertrude Stein or Marcel Proust or even the great white bear, Mr. Joyce's 'Ulysses.'" Sinclair Lewis

+ Sat R of Lit 2:361 D 5 '25 1600w

DOUGALL, LILY. God's way with man. 93p
$1 Macmillan [4s Student Christian movement]

231 God

25-8080

This little book contains an introductory biographical sketch by Canon Streeter and five essays on God's way with man which sum up the author's philosophy of religion.

"In her discussion there are flashes of insight and original touches that are a tonic in themselves. Canon Streeter's brief biography and introduction are a real help in understanding the writer and her work."

+ Boston Transcript p3 J1 25 '25 300w

"Some of her subtleties present difficulties; but her fresh and suggestive writing is compact of sensibility and aspiration."

+ Springfield Republican p12 My 12 '25
480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p11 Ja 1
'25 220w

DOUGLAS, DONALD. Grand inquisitor. 319p
$2.50 Boni & Liveright

25-4609

In a drunken frenzy, John Graham strangles to death a woman of the streets. The reader is led directly into the chamber of horrors that is the murderer's mind and remains with him in its atmosphere of stark and gruesome terror. The dominant figure in the room is a white-faced, black-bearded man with shining, terrible eyes. Whether he is real, or the figment of Graham's disordered mind, Graham himself does not know. Angus Gordon comes to the help of his friend but he himself is caught in the coils of a restless unsatisfied love which ends on the same note of tragedy with which the book begins. The author stresses the psychological aspect of the drama of their lives.

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

Bookm 61:347 My '25 220w

"A nightmare novel partaking of the natures of both the Gothic romances of the early nineteenth century and the modern psychological horrors of Dostoevsky. Mr Douglas has written some almost unbearably vivid pages on the hallucinations of tortured nerves and divided personality. The violence of his imagination, moving in the region between madness and reality, carries off the confusion of his artistic purpose and some vices of style."

+ Dial 79:350 O '25 250w

"Devotees of Sabatini or Gene Stratton Porter will find little to solace them in this powerful and passionate arraignment. To such it can only be the farrago of an actual nightmare. But the more discerning reader will find an extraordinary intellectual stimulus in this singularly original piece of fiction." H: J. Forman

+ Int Bk R p339 Ap '25 1250w

"The tragic episode upon which 'The Grand Inquisitor' is based is so common of occurrence in American life that hardly a day passes without the report of one like it in the newspapers. Mr. Douglas has endowed one of these episodes with a deep and perturbing significance. He has given it dramatic intensity and he has related it to the inner experience of us all who occasionally beat against the bars of the cage of life." Burton Rascoe

Lit R p3 Mr 14 '25 1400w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Nation 120:244 Mr 4 '25 900w

"Finely wrought and penetrating novel. 'The Grand Inquisitor' is a novel of winged imagination and sheer, inexorable intellect. It is of the stuff of dreams. It is tinged with nightmare and suffused with a strange ghostly beauty."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 1 '25 750w

Outlook 139:423 Mr 18 '25 400w

Reviewed by L. Kronenberger

Sat R of Lit 1:771 My 23 '25 750w

DOUGLAS, GEORGE, pseud. See Brown, G: D.

DOUGLAS, NORMAN. Experiments. 264p $2.50
2 McBride

824

25-21408

"Experiments" contains a collection of literary essays, short stories, book reviews, a poem, and a polemic in which the writer defends the memory of his friend Maurice Magnus, and scores D. H. Lawrence for his introduction to the Magnus volume. Contents: Arabia deserta; Fiction; The correct thing; Blind guides; Theology; At the forge; Edgar Allan Poe; Books; social; Belladonna; Nocturne; Intellectual nihilism; Poetry; The last word; A man Englishman; Travel; Queer! Anacreontic; D. H. Lawrence and Maurice Magnus.

"In 'Experiments' there are interesting and well-written essays on Lord Nelson, Charles Doughty and Edgar Allan Poe. Interesting and truly informative is the account of that last of the mad Englishman, that prince of eccentrics, Watterson the naturalist. There are many book reviews, hardly worth preservation in book form. There is 'At the Forge,' a short story not easily forgotten, and 'The Correct Thing,' the ending of which is startling and led up to with the restraint of genius. Nor must we forget 'Anacreontic,' a charming poem." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 9 '25 1000w

"Of somewhat uneven merit, but consistently individual."

+ Ind 116:50 Ja 9 '26 140w

"There are only a few who will dance to Mr. Norman Douglas's piping. For he is an essayist; and whether you take or leave his essays is your affair alone. He writes with that elaborate simplicity, that slow lucidity which is a relic of the 'nineties; and the reader must go slowly too, licking his lips over macabre titbits, and dwelling upon the subtle juxtaposition of words."

+ Nation and Ath 38:sup380 D 5 '25 250w

"Vivacious, shrewd and admirably written. It contains also a very efficient bit of polemical writing against Mr. D. H. Lawrence on behalf of the late author of 'The Foreign Legion.'"

+ New Statesman 26:supxxii D 12 '25 40w

Reviewed by H. S. Gorman

N Y Times p7 N 22 '25 850w

"There is the author's side of a bitter quarrel with D. H. Lawrence—alas, that the humorist who wrote 'South Wind' should so far forget his humor as to think that he could make this quarrel interesting! There are other miscellaneous articles, but no powerful reason for the publication of the book itself."

— Outlook 142:34 Ja 6 '26 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p828 D 3 '25 920w

DOUGLAS, PAUL HOWARD. Wages and the family. 290p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

331.2 Wages. Family allowances 25-15555

An analysis of the family allowance system of wage payment whereby a minimum wage is fixed, sufficient to support single men, with added allowances for wives, children, and other dependents. After a brief discussion of the general problem of the living wage Professor Douglas describes this system of family allowance, which is spreading rapidly over continental Europe, and outlines a system that, in the author's opinion, would be practical and desirable to institute in this country.

Booklist 22:101 D '25

"Of especial interest to women is the question of family allowances described in 'Wages and the Family,' by Paul H. Douglas. To the woman who is the head of a household and to the woman also whose work lies outside the home, the question is vitally important, because the family allowance opens for woman the way—at present barred—to equal pay for equal work, with an adjustment for dependents." F. A. Armstrong

+ J Home Econ 17:667 N '25 320w

Management and Adm 10:159 S '25 220w

"I have seldom read a book of research which was so concise, so logical in its development, and so blissfully short in its chapters." Stuart Chase

+ Nation 121:sup438 O 14 '25 800w

"Professor Douglas has written an important book which will be discussed for a long time to come." G: Soule

+ New Repub 43:326 Ag 12 '25 1250w

"Mr. Douglas's comprehensive and illuminating analysis and discussion of the whole question, with especial reference to the applicability of the system in this country, is a real contribution to the interests of the time."

+ N Y Times p14 Ag 2 '25 1250w

"Professor Douglas presents his case with thoroughness, adequate statistics and disarming moderation. His demolition of the 'standard' family of five is complete. His substitute, however, is not beyond criticism." K: W. Bigelow

+ N Y Tribune p3 S 27 '25 620w

"Mr. Douglas has begun a discussion that will last for many years and run through many pages of print. No one who cares to be informed at the beginning can afford to miss this early setting out of the problem."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:452 D 26 '25 450w

"Contains matter of the greatest importance. It is a storehouse of facts which no one interested in sociology can afford to do without. It seems somewhat of a pity that the human interest matter with which the book is crammed does not readily get into the mind of the reader. In the matter of presentation it is complete and thorough, but it does not lure the reader on from page to page." M. B. B.

+ Survey 55:247 N 15 '25 1050w

"Will stimulate wide discussion and is worthy of attention from all persons interested in labor problems and social welfare."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

DOUGLASS, HARLAN PAUL. Suburban trend. (Century rural life books) 340p $2 Century

352 Suburban life

25-8827

Mr Douglass studies the constantly widening zone around cities where a modified form of rural life exists but which is yet definitely within the circle of urban influence. He discusses the extent of suburban growth and the varieties of suburban types, the cost of suburban living and the distinctive society and institutions of the suburbs. In conclusion he treats the problem of deliberate decentralization and scientific control of cities.

DOUGLASS, HARLAN PAUL—Continued

"Both for its extraordinary amount of information concerning the development of suburbs and for its revealing analysis of what they mean in our community life this book should find a wide reading. Its value will be appreciated not only by the student of civics but by every dweller in a city or suburb who tries to be an intelligent citizen." G. R. Taylor
+ Am Pol Sci R 19:640 Ag '25 520w

Booklist 22:9 O '25

"Never before has the American suburb been so thoroughly dissected as is here done by Mr. Douglass. The study is a fascinating one even though it is chiefly an assemblage of data with tentative and sometimes rather indefinite conclusions."

+ Eng N 95:111 Jl 16 '25 320w

"It is a searching and fair appraisal of a problem that calls for educational consideration. It should go into our college libraries and into high school reference use where the suburb is a factor." B. R. Andrews
J Home Econ 18:46 Ja '26 400w

Reviewed by C. R. Woodruff
Lit R p4 Ag 1 '25 400w

"The book will appeal to a limited class of readers interested in city planning, economics and regional development, but others will find its heavy style, supplemented with statistical data and at times confusing verbiage, partaking too much of a thesis requiring study and concentration to grasp its essentials. This is to be regretted, for with the wealth of valuable data which the author has undoubtedly accumulated and the timeliness of his subject, if the book had been presented in a more simple and entertaining style it would appeal to a large majority of suburbanites."

+ N Y Times p14 My 24 '25 620w

"Mr. Douglass's book is an excellent blend of the scientific and the popular. It will be interesting and suggestive reading for any renter or home owner, whether he travels by subway, bus or the 5:47." R. J. W.

+ N Y Tribune p9 S 20 '25 900w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

"In this book the long-suffering commuter has his full say. If the city dweller, on reading it, concludes that suburban life is not what it is sometimes cracked up to be, he may also derive from its pages a philosophy of the why and wherefore of modern suburbs."

R of Rs 71:672 Je '25 150w

"A careful and conservative study, it is often provocative, as for example in the final chapter, 'A crowded world must be either suburban or savage.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:781 My 23 '25 220w

Wis Lib Bul 21:140 My '25

DOW, DOROTHY. Will-o'-the-wisp. 93p $1.75
Boni & Liveright

811

25-9541

Love in its various moods is the will-o'-the-wisp which the author of "Black Babylon" pursues in her second volume of poetry.

"'Will-o'-the-Wisp' is almost solely concerned with what for want of a better phrase we may call 'sophisticated love poetry.' It doesn't bite very hard. Lacking both depth and impressiveness, its sole appeal is implicit in a certain passionate earnestness of expression and a fair lyrical quality." H. S. Gorman
+ Bookm 61:597 Jl '25 120w

"If we did not like Miss Dow's work we would decry the sadness and the melancholy that shadows the book: practically every poem to be found here strikes some minor chord. But since we do like Miss Dow's style and her method of treating a subject, we will say that she has chosen her slender themes with insight and a good poetic sense, and has treated them delicately and with discretion."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 20 '25 300w

"Miss Dow writes a technically perfect sonnet with much of a sure touch and with something to tell; then you come to the sixth line of the sestet and you find it lacks, purposely, two full feet. The result of this is a superb effect on the senses. Having discovered this, Miss Dow writes all her sonnets in this fashion. There are many places where Miss Dow's experiments will fascinate the reader, and interest the student of poetry." C. Norman

+ Lit R p4 Je 20 '25 250w

"'Will-o'-the-Wisp,' with which Miss Dow follows 'Black Babylon,' shows some improvement over it. 'Black Babylon' was imitative and empty; these poems contain somewhat more substance and indicate a better defined personality." Garreta Busey

+ N Y Tribune p12 My 17 '25 180w

"The author is sophisticated, disillusioned, apparently woman of the world, and yet she is satisfied with easy effects, easy sentimentalizations, and dramatizations of incurably ancient love situations. Miss Dow's metrical talent is fluent, and she can work rather adroitly." W. R. Benét

+ Outlook 140:404 Jl 15 '25 320w

"Miss Dow's kiss-me-again poems are gracefully turned, their cadence usually neat, their lines sprightly. Her verses should charm the many whose poetry of life is the plucking of immediate flowers."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:229 O 17 '25 50w

DOWNES, WILLIAM HOWE. John S. Sargent; his life and work. 313p il $8 Little

B or 92 Sargent, John Singer 25-23001

Here is given, in addition to a sketch of Sargent's life, a complete catalog of his works, chronologically arranged, with descriptions of the paintings and, in some cases, comments of art critics. Forty-two half-tone reproductions of his paintings are included.

"Its tone of appreciative admiration is dignified and is everywhere sustained, and the reproductions of Sargent's work are well printed and in a number of cases welcome for their comparative novelty." W. H. Low

+ Bookm 62:605 Ja '26 1000w

Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '25 1500w

N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 30w

Reviewed by H. I. Brock

N Y Times p7 D 13 '25 2250w

Outlook 142:30 Ja 6 '26 380w

"Sargent was reticent and reserved, and, although a few friends and colleagues have testified to his personal worth and mental alertness, material for a full biography is not yet forthcoming. Yet Mr Downes has provided an intelligent chronological commentary on Sargent's work, by means of which we see the impression the painter made on critics, fellow artists and the public. Although the catalog is not complete, it is nearly so, and, with the collection of critical and biographical notes, makes a useful addition to the history of art."

+ Springfd Republican p5a N 22 '25 1200w

DOWNY, FAIRFAX. Father's first two years. 124p $1.50 Minton, Balch & co.

817

25-17141

A small volume of facetious advice to new fathers on the care and training of the little stranger, illustrated with drawings in the same humorous spirit.

Cleveland p122 D '25

"Mr. Downey is a cheerful writer and occasionally a witty one."

+ Ind 115:332 S 19 '25 100w

"All in all, it is a jolly book. There are no pin-pricks or stiletto thrusts in its humor, even if the author does now and then hit a foible of fond parenthood or a folly of the time square in the eye. For he does it with such laughing good humor as to disguise its truth."

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 23 '25 1000w

"Although it is intended primarily as an aid to young fathers during a difficult period in their papahood, there is no good reason why veterans, aspirants and outsiders may not sample the wit and wisdom in Mr. Downey's volume. In its way it is quite as necessary in the household as the works of Dr. Holt himself." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p17 O 25 '25 480w

"His writing in 'Father's First Two Years' is unsteretyped and charmingly fresh. The little book will make an entertaining gift to any New Father that you know. Margaret Freeman's illustrations are quite in the spirit of the occasion."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:263 O 31 '25 100w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 27 '25 180w

DOWNING, ELLIOT ROWLAND. Teaching science in the schools. (Univ. of Chicago school science ser.) 185p $2 Univ. of Chicago press

507 Science—Study and teaching 25-16122

This volume provides a summary of the history and present conditions of science teaching, of its aims and methods and organization of material, with a brief view of science teaching in some European schools.

"The volume is filled with information and discussion of great value to teachers of science, all of it presented by logical method and in a clear and interesting style."

+ N Y Times p23 S 20 '25 350w

DRAKE, MAURICE. Doom window. 316p $2 Dutton

25-7677

Stained glass and the manufacture thereof enters into the pages of this love and business story. Herbert Kirby, a skilled and conscientious young glass designer, is given the valuable commission of restoring the Doom window of St Edmund's church in Shrewsbury. In the course of his work he discovers a simple process for forging medieval glass, the secret of which he tells to Gladys Damrell, his fiancée. She is a selfish young woman and subsequently makes use of this knowledge for her own advantage. Kirby, thru the crafty business dealings of a millionaire collector and the treachery of Gladys, loses the Doom restoration. Later, in New York, he finds romance and an opportunity to re-establish his reputation, and he eventually returns to England to complete the restoration of the most magnificent window in Europe.

Booklist 22:32 O '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '25 130w

"The author rises to fairly good character drawing, though the women of the piece are mere lay figures. But the narrative holds one's interest steadily." H. L. Pangborn

+ — Lit R p2 My 16 '25 520w

N Y Times p8 Je 7 '25 400w

N Y Tribune p11 Ap 19 '25 200w

"The author was a distinguished designer of stained glass and an expert adviser on that and other antiques to the South Kensington Museum of London. He made use of this thoroughgoing knowledge of old glass to construct this story, which is on its surface a mystery yarn. But actually it is a most illuminating thesis on the manufacture, nature and charm of ancient glass."

+ N Y World p5m O 4 '25 100w

"Mr. Drake has submerged his opportunity in the clasp of cheap fiction. Stained-glass and the reconstruction of old English churches should lend him an inviting atmosphere for a fascinating piece of story-telling. But Mr. Drake succeeds well in neither."

— Sat R of Lit 1:714 Ap 25 '25 170w

DRAPER, JOHN WILLIAM. William Mason; a study in eighteenth century culture. 398p il $6.50 N.Y. univ. press

B or 92 Mason, William

25-16813

"The Rev. William Mason, sometime Fellow of Pembroke Hall, and of the Minster, York, can hardly rank as more than one of the minor literati of the eighteenth century, friend and biographer of Gray though he was, and therefore assured a small niche in the gallery of fame. But here his life, character and writings, together with everything that can be brought to bear on him alive or dead, are set forth in the minutest detail by a sympathetic American student of the man and his period."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 21 '25 780w

"The author of the present volume has been extraordinarily successful. On its biographical side his book is both scholarly and 'human.' It is meticulously careful—every page witnesses to a conscientious gathering and winnowing of evidence—and it is also a well rounded whole. The reader does not merely learn about Mason; he sees him." R. J. Davis

+ Lit R p6 Ap 11 '25 640w

"Mr. Draper's research has been diligent; his criticism is marred by the logomachy which besets all those scholars who persist in talking about 'neo-classicism' and 'romanticism.'"

— + Nation 120:390 Ap 8 '25 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p168 Mr 12 '25 900w

DREISER, THEODORE. American tragedy. 2v 2 431:409p $5 Boni & Liveright

26-141

Clyde Griffiths is the son of street evangelists in Kansas City. Selfish and vain he rebels against the poverty and piety of the family life and longs to escape from it. At sixteen he becomes a bell-boy in a luxurious hotel. There he has his first glimpse of the easy side of life, and there he has his first taste of cheap pleasure, and his first affair. A joy ride in a stolen car terminates in tragedy and Clyde, already a moral coward, takes to his heels. He makes his way to Lycurgus, N. Y. where he is given a place in a rich uncle's factory. One of the girls working under him appeals to him and, beating down her scruples, he succeeds in seducing her. At the same time he is introduced to the social set in which his wealthy relatives move. The beautiful and expensive Sondra stirs him to new thoughts of conquest and to the glittering hope of possible marriage. Thus when Roberta makes plain her need of help and sympathy Clyde's ugly selfishness gradually takes form in a ghastly plot to get rid of her. The tragedy and the trial fill three quarters of the second volume. The reader is spared not a single detail, and at the end, is conducted with Clyde, to the very door of the death chamber.

"The commonplaceness of the story is not alleviated in the slightest degree by any glimmer of imaginative insight on the part of the novelist. A skillful writer would be able to arouse an emotional reaction in the reader, but at no moment does he leave him otherwise than cold and unresponsive. One feature of the novel stands out above all others—the figure of Clyde Griffiths. If the novel were great, he would be a great character. As it is, he is certainly one of the most despicable creations of humanity that ever emerged from a novelist's brain. Last of all, it may be said without fear of contradiction that Mr. Dreiser is a fearsome manipulator of the English language. His style, if style it may be called, is offensively colloquial, commonplace and vulgar." E. F. Edgett

— Boston Transcript p3 Ja 9 '26 1200w

"Mr. Dreiser is not imitative and belongs to no school. He is at heart a mysticist and a fatalist, though using the realistic method. He is a totally undisciplined, unorganized power—yet, on the evidence of this novel alone, none the less a power. 'An American Tragedy' is not to be recommended as fireside reading for the tired business man: yet, as a portrayal of one of the darker phases of the American character, it demands attention." R. L. Duffus

DREISER, THEODORE—Continued

N Y Times p1 Ja 10 '26 1950w

"Youngsters who think to shelve him with the retiring title of 'the grand old man of realism' reckon without his large, stolid, literary ambition, which to my mind, is his most salient and admirable moral characteristic. As a novelist he has been silent these ten years. And now with his familiar huge plantigrade tread he comes lumbering down the trail with a massive 800-page American tragedy which makes the performances of most of his rivals and successors look like capering accomplishments of rabbits and squirrels. . . . I do not know where else in American fiction one can find the situation here presented dealt with so fearlessly, so intelligently, so exhaustively, so veraciously, and therefore, with such unexceptionable moral effect." Stuart Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ja 3 '26 3000w

"Mr. Dreiser clearly demonstrates his mastery of the measured, implacable tracing of a disintegrating personality which was earlier indicated compellingly in the portrait of Hurstwood in 'Sister Carrie.' 'An American Tragedy' is not without its many minor defects, and a few serious deficiencies. American literature, however, is not sufficiently rich in big, comprehensive personalities, in dogged devotion to a vision of truth, in unrelenting effort toward a profound articulation of that vision, for such considerations to be permitted to cloud the name of Theodore Dreiser. 'An American Tragedy' is a sound and vigorous achievement in pushing out the boundaries of thought." J. W. Crawford

+ — N Y World p6m Ja 10 '26 1150w

"If you look for word-love in his book you'll get left. Love of human beings you'll find. It's a finer attribute in the end. Lay your Dreiser book over against the book of any of the modern 'smarties' among our writers and you'll understand. You'll understand also why all men here who care about writing care so much for Dreiser. You go on for endless pages of dulness with Dreiser, like walking on the prairies, endless piling up of heavy cumbersome sentences, something level and low, with a dreary sameness you think at first will drive you mad. If you think you are going to escape Dreiser by realizing he can be dull you are mistaken. He'll get you in the end. Buy this book and read it all." Sherwood Anderson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:475 Ja 9 '26 1300w

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS. Ethics in theory and application. 509p $3 Crowell

170 Ethics

25-9588

"The purpose of this volume is to consider the great issues of moral life and theory anew in the light of recent tendencies, that ethics may be brought into closer accord with practical life and the other social sciences. . . . The book is intended for use in college classes, and the order of subjects, the mode of presentation is based on experience in teaching classes in ethics. But the book is also intended for the general student of human life and literature, history, economics, sociology, social psychology, and social problems in general; hence the references appended to the chapters are for both the college student, taking up ethics for the first time, and for the student who has opportunity for general research."—Preface

"The author presents no distinctive system of his own, nor does he incline noticeably to any particular school. He is as impartial and merely explanatory as is possible under the circumstances, without taint of bias. But there are some factors that detract from the value of the book. He has divided his chapters into sub-headings, each a little less than a page in length. He has an unfortunate habit of jumping from one topic to another that makes for incoherencies and confusion rather than the possible conciseness. Hence there is a slight feeling of general hodge-podge that is far from illuminating. There is also a slight tendency toward prolixity."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 400w

J Religion 5:445 J1 '25 30w

Outlook 140:342 J1 1 '25 10w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Muse in council. 303p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Sidgwick & J.]

821 Poetry. Poets, English

25-8767

Essays relating to the theory and nature of poetry and the practice of certain English poets. Contents: Theories: The poet and communication; The poet and tradition; 'Simple, sensuous, and passionate'; Poetry and conduct; A footnote to 'The soul of modern poetry'; Ancient altars: Philip Sidney; John Milton; Thomas Gray; Samuel Taylor Coleridge; William Wordsworth; Percy Bysshe Shelley; Modern instances: William Cory; Lord de Tabley; William Ernest Henley; Alice Meynell; A. E. Housman's 'Last poems'; Edwin Arlington Robinson; Mr. Masfield's 'Reynard' and 'Right Royal'; Rupert Brooke; Francis Ledwidge.

"The style is beautiful and illuminating."

+ Booklist 21:371 J1 '25

"Whatever attitude one may take toward the 'ecstatic muse' one will be sure to find in this fair minded and candid volume a most interesting expression on poetry by a poet of no mean reputation."

+ Bookm 61:715 Ag '25 150w

Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 1150w

"There is much sound sense in what Mr. Drinkwater says, and his criticism of the ancients is interesting, if always a little trite and obvious. But his attitude towards the young revolutionaries in his own poetic territory immediately put me on the side of the poetic apes and Bolsheviks against Mr. Drinkwater and the angels." Leonard Woolf

+ — Nation and Ath 37:76 Ap 18 '25 380w

"The prose of 'The Muse in Council' is excellent. But that oneness of the critic's imagination with the poet he undertakes to discuss, without attaining which criticism fails of the breath of life, is denied Mr. Drinkwater. Nevertheless, the fact that the reader is not moved by Drinkwater's essays is very far from saying that they are entirely negligible; on the contrary, the studious care with which the author carries through his work begets that confidence in the judgment, failing which any critical work becomes valueless. Paradoxically stated, 'The Muse in Council' will win adherents by reason of its faults."

+ — N Y Times p11 My 3 '25 2450w

"His appreciations are like most appreciations, pleasant enough to read and of various degrees of communicable enthusiasm; and some of his pronouncements are sufficiently inciting to stimulate the reader to active agreement or disagreement."

Outlook 141:201 O 7 '25 360w

"The assorted papers that make up this volume vary in quantity and quality, and it is to the author's credit that the more he spreads himself the more readable does he become. One or two of the pieces are scrappy and trivial. But when Mr. Drinkwater digs deeper at the roots of poetry he rarely fails to do fruitful work, and in this collection of essays there is a continuity of temper and of thought which commands respect."

+ Sat R 139:392 Ap 11 '25 380w

"Unlike the poet, the critic to be interesting must either be profound or sensational. Mr. Drinkwater is in this book neither."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:109 S 5 '25 300w

"Mr. Drinkwater, if he is not an original thinker, has a lucid and agreeable manner of restating old truths; and he writes with commendable honesty to his own convictions."

+ — Spec 134:688 Ap 25 '25 200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p250 Ap
y '25 750w
Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

DRINKWATER, JOHN. New poems. 64p $1.25
Houghton
821 25-7773

Of John Drinkwater's latest volume of verse about one-third are translations from the German.

"The poet, in spite of downright British unexcitability, conceals, under his cupped and tranquil hand, quivering qualities as surprising as they are un-British. Both the twenty-one original poems which vindicate the maturer Drinkwater and the facile translations which retrieve eighteen German lyrics from linguistic annihilation possess this almost Celtic fringe." Virginia Moore

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '25 280w

"The best of this volume is not profound, but 'sweetly serious.'" Booklist 22:22 O '25

"It is finely written, it is impressive, it is mature, and yet, and yet. . . It is cold, cold." H. S. Gorman

+ Bookm 61:596 J1 '25 200w

Boston Transcript p1 Je 13 '25 380w

"Adds little to an established reputation."

+ Dial 79:174 Ag '25 80w

"In precise, polished little verses Mr. Drinkwater expresses the mild yearnings of his muse. It is the Nineteenth Century being consciously poetical."

Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 30w

"If Mr. Drinkwater has any depths, he doesn't display them in his poetry. Perhaps he chooses to keep away from them; or perhaps there aren't any depths—just pretty shallows." B. E. Stevenson

+ Int Bk R p660 S '25 180w

"We find a few graceful love lyrics, two earnest peace poems, a warning against occasional verse, three or four lapses into occasional verse and several other polished and gracious utterances that can only be counted, in comparison with Mr. Drinkwater's best achievements, poetic trifles." K. L. Bates

+ Lit R p2 J1 13 '25 500w

Reviewed by Babette Deutsch
New Repub 43:23 My 27 '25 80w

"Drinkwater is not a great poet, any more than his plays have proved him possessed of the qualities which go to make up a great dramatist. But he has a firm grasp on the fundamentals of artistic presentation. And just as he has an unerring eye for the dramatic, so, likewise, he has an unerring instinct for the poetical."

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 5 '25 750w

"The poems are pensive, though hardly touched with the soft stigma which that word would seem to suggest, they belong rather to the index of 'emotion recollected in tranquillity' than to the category of the immediate and the uncontrollable. They are sober without being sombre, poignant without passion and serene without profundity." Joseph Auslander

N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 220w

Reviewed by Arthur Guiterman
Outlook 140:112 My 20 '25 160w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 30 '25 280w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Pilgrim of eternity,
2 Byron—a conflict. 408p il $5 Doran [18s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron,
6th baron 25-25108

Mr Drinkwater's biography is in the main a defense of the poet. He faces all the charges made against Byron, carefully examining the evidence. The most serious of these charges, the controversial climax of Byron's life, is disposed of as not proven. His successive love affairs are followed in detail. For the rest, the book tells the story of his life in relation to his work, as directly as possible.

"His reasoning is not always convincing. Too often he seems to construe every doubt in Byron's favor. Mr. Drinkwater has marked narrative talent, and his charm of style makes his account of Byron's life, though lacking in as many illuminative flashes as we might expect, absorbing." Allan Nevins

+ Bookm 62:488 D '25 850w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Ind 116:49 Ja 9 '26 500w

"Those who have hoped to find in this biographical study a new or individual light will be quickly disappointed, for Mr. Drinkwater has limited himself in his design and has sought to present us with a judicious and well-balanced portrait. The scholarship, the careful estimation of evidence, the serious handling of the scales, are admirable. But the spirit is not quickened."

+ Nation and Ath 38:442 D 19 '24 780w

"A biography of Byron which has much of the new vitality, while adhering strictly to the scholarly method and form." P. A. Hutchison
+ N Y Times p9 D 27 '25 2750w

"Human and understanding portrait."

+ N Y World p1m D 13 '25 60w

"Mr. Drinkwater, with a wise selectiveness in the process, takes Byron's life-story as seen in relation to his work and tells it in a pithy but vivid fashion. His biography, therefore, becomes an adventurous book, the story of a hero." H. S. Gorman

+ N Y World p6m D 20 '25 1100w

"In the task which he has set himself Mr. Drinkwater has partially succeeded. While steering well clear of idolatry, he does certainly make Byron's redeeming virtues live more vividly before us. Of Byron's poetry Mr. Drinkwater writes pleasantly but superficially. Indeed, with the one reservation already made, this rather ponderous book adds little to our understanding of the poet or his work. Such few constructive arguments and interpretations as we are offered might have been far more effectively presented in a less ambitious and rhetorical style."

+ Spec 135:938 N 21 '25 550w

"It is a positive coherent study of character, achieving as it proceeds a constantly surer grip of a temperament which delighted to conceal itself behind the volatility of its moods. No one before him has so determinedly linked Byron's life with Byron's poetry; and it is because he has thus worked on Byron's own lines that he penetrates at times to the core of his being."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p791 N
26 '25 1050w

DRINKWATER, JOHN. Robert Burns; a play.
121p $1.50 Houghton [3s 6d Sidgwick & J.]

822 Burns, Robert—Drama

The play is not so much a dramatic rendering of the poet's life as a series of episodes from his life about which Mr Drinkwater has grouped some of Burns's most popular songs. There are as many as twenty-five of these fitted into the dialogue, or rather the dialogue is fitted to the songs. The music for "Robert Burns" has been composed by Frederick Austin, and the play may not be performed without this.

"The difficulties in the way of presenting Bobbie Burns as the central figure of a serious dramatic work intended for actual stage representation are many and obvious. Mr. Drinkwater has surmounted, or it might be more accurate to say, avoided, some of them with notable ingenuity and has produced a work which, whatever its fate, is remarkable for its adroit, vital and sympathetic treatment of its main subject. But as a matter of fact there is, in the six scenes of which it is composed, almost as much of song as of spoken dialogue, and in representation much will depend upon the skill of the vocalists. If Mr. Drinkwater's object was to provide a biographical setting for some of the choicest of Burns' poetic gems, he has achieved it very cleverly." J. R. Towse

DRINKWATER, JOHN—Continued

+ — Lit R p2 D 5 '25 800w

"In 'Robert Burns' Mr. Drinkwater has carried economy of word and thought to the pitch of hardly writing anything at all, the short, undramatic episodes consisting largely of Burns's poetry. 'The truth about Burns,' as Mr. Drinkwater calls it, is of the kind to gratify readers of that admirable 'vulgarisateur,' John o'London." Bonamy Dobree

Nation and Ath 38:sup246 N 14 '25 60w

"There is scarcely a really tense situation in the entire length of the play. With musical accompaniment, would provide an alluring 'Burns Evening,' but hardly more." P. A. Hutchison

— N Y Times p5 D 13 '25 750w

"Mr. Drinkwater seems to have applied the scissors-and-paste method to Burns. Perused at leisure, or performed with the music which has been composed for it, the play may conceivably justify that method; but at first view we find it rather comic that Burns should be so punctually and pertinently delivered of his lyrics. Would it have been so utterly impossible to have made a play about Burns the man, leaving us to recollect the poems?"

— Sat R 140:445 O 17 '25 120w

DRURY, FRANCIS KEESE WYNKOOP. Viewpoints in modern drama. (Viewpoint ser.) 119p $1.25 pa 75c A. L. A.

016.8 Drama—Bibliography 25-26321

The assistant librarian of Brown university has compiled this book, the fourth volume in the Viewpoint series in interpretative bibliography edited by Josephine Adams Rathbone. The selection contains a total of three hundred and sixty-eight titles and includes the most significant plays of the last thirty years which are available in English. In the first part the plays are arranged in groups classified by theme and annotated. In each case the setting is indicated and the number of men and of women characters appearing. Part two consists of a selective bibliography of books on the modern drama, of helpful lists of plays, and of play anthologies.

"Especially valuable to dramatic and study clubs."

Booklist 21:288 My '25

"The A. L. A. deserves credit for furnishing this much needed type of annotated book list on pertinent subjects. Other entries in the series will be awaited with interest." R. M. B.

+ Lit R p9 My 9 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:192 Jl '25

DUER, CAROLINE KING. How to tell the fashions from the follies. 193p $1.50 Scribner 391 Fashion. Clothing and dress 25-5567

Essays, by the associate editor of Vogue, on the vagaries of fashion and women's bondage to them and the art of selecting clothes with common sense. Partial contents: Figures that do and do not lie; Smartness versus prettiness; Recurring patterns in fashion's pagentry; The lure of the lovely frock; Our enemy, the wrinkle; The clothes, the place, and the girl; The mysterious who for whom women dress; The passing of the Sunday best; The simple mysteries of style; The price of bondage; The loss of the home-keeper; Hidden husbands; Cultivating personality.

Booklist 21:364 Jl '25

Boston Transcript p5 My 29 '25 170w

Cleveland p105 N '25

"Written without attempt at seriousness from the point of view of the well-to-do and sophisticated, combining common sense and worldly wisdom with good nature, humor, and a clever style."

+ J Home Econ 17:354 Je '25 100w

"Brief essays, light, slight, and bright."

+ Outlook 139:622 Ap 22 '25 30w

St Louis p352 S '25

"The irony, humor and sophistication of these essays will often attract those seeking instruction or diversion."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 230w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

DUGMORE, ARTHUR RADCLYFFE. Vast Sudan. 312p il $4 Stokes [21s Arrowsmith]

916.24 Sudan [25-5986]

Major Dugmore's expedition to the Sudan was made primarily to film the animal life of the Upper Nile. By way of introduction he gives a brief outline of the chief events in the history of the Sudan up to the time of its re-conquest by the combined Anglo-Egyptian forces. The rest of the book is given to an account of its people, its animals and the development that has taken place under the joint administration of Great Britain and Egypt.

"He had many thrills and narrow escapes of which he writes so modestly that his book is less a story of adventure than an extremely interesting account of the Fauna of the Sudan. It also has a topical interest, for it is a careful and temperate survey of that country's history and present-day problems."

+ New Statesman 24:666 Mr 14 '25 160w

"Major Dugmore is another film hunter and a good observer, though without the writer's gift."

+ — Spec 134:468 Mr 21 '25 160w

DUNHAM, B. MABEL. Trail of the Conestoga; with foreword by W. L. Mackenzie King. 342p $2.25 Macmillan

Early in the nineteenth century there began a Mennonite migration from Pennsylvania to Canada. The Trail of the Conestoga is a drama of that migration. Vivid pictures of pioneer life in Ontario illumine the romance of one Sam Bricker and his Beccy, of whom Sam's oft repeated assertion is, "It don't give many women like my Beccy." The young couple encounter the usual hardships and dangers of frontier life, and some that are not so usual, but their courage and determination carry them thru to happier days, and a realization of the dream that urged them northward.

"She gives us a strong, well-constructed story in which she mixes her ingredients with exceeding skill. She keeps admirably within historical bounds." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 14 '25 750w

N Y Times p9 F 1 '25 470w

"A simple story told with a sincere human-nature touch and with humorous dialect."

+ Outlook 139:230 F 11 '25 70w

DUNLAP, KNIGHT. Social psychology. 261p $4² Williams & Wilkins

301 Social psychology 25-11817

"The author has not attempted to develop his subject on the basis of a single doctrine which he wishes to 'put over' such as 'imitation' or the 'group mind,' but rather it is his aim to present general principles and concrete facts of organization so as to give the reader a broad view of the subject. His method of presentation also ties up the purely psychological data with other fields of knowledge such as biology, anthropology and philosophy. These features, together with its readability and vigorous style, constitute the special merits of the book."—Am Pol Sci R

"A clear, readable and scholarly presentation."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:858 N '25 150w

"A clear, admirably developed discussion of the fundamental psychological factors which govern the relations of people, one with another."

+ Ind 115:220 Ag 22 '25 130w

"His book is likely to be considered the most careful survey of the assumptions and implications of the new psychology which has yet been published by an avowed behaviorist."

C. E. Ayres

+ New Repub 44:260 O 28 '25 820w

DUNTON, EDITH KELLOG (MARGARET WARDE, pseud.). Holiday book. 208p il $2 Little

25-19430

Biddy was a little girl ten years old, and Buddy a little boy of six. The book tells about their holiday celebrations on the farm. Illustrated in color and black and white.

"Anything more delightful than these holidaying adventures we cannot imagine. And many a lesson in kindness and good breeding do they teach unobtrusively. If we started to say which one we liked best, we just couldn't. We should have to say: 'Every single one of them.'"

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 24 '25 400w

"Many of the ideas are simple, such as a group of children might themselves carry out, and herein lies the chief merit of the book, which, read for itself alone, is at times rather dull going."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:282 N 7 '25 80w

DURUY, VICTOR. General history of the world; 2 rev. and continued to 1901 by Edwin A. Grosvenor; with supplemental chapters to 1925 by Mabel S. C. Smith and J. Walker McSpadden. 931p $4 Crowell

909 History, Universal

25-21602

A new revision of this standard work with supplemental chapters bringing the history up to the opening months of the year 1925.

DUTCHER, GEORGE MATTHEW. Political awakening of the East. 372p $2 Abingdon press

915 Egypt—Politics and government. India—Politics and government. China—Politics and government. Philippine Islands—Politics and government. Civilization, Oriental 25-11035

"The Hedding Professor of History, Wesleyan University, bases this work on a series of lectures given on the George Slocum Bennett Foundation at Wesleyan University, in which he drew on his experiences of fifteen months travel and study in Japan, China, the Philippines, India, and Egypt. His thesis is the penetration of modern ideas and methods among the peoples of the East."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"His opinions are given so temperately and are offered with such evident fairness and lack of bias, that any criticism is more than half disarmed. Professor Dutcher has given us a book that for general reading and reference will be of value for several years to come." K. S. Latourette

+ Am Hist R 31:174 O '25 450w

"In some places there are repetitions; in others, breaks in the narrative explained by footnotes. Occasionally the style is less smooth than ordinarily. These faults are probably due to the circumstances under which the subject-matter was first presented. Moderation and common sense, fairness and impartiality are among the qualities radiated from its pages. The originality of thought and treatment, shown time and time again, lighten the pages and add to the enlightenment of the reader. One is impressed also by the amount of valuable and needed material that the author has been able to bring together." A. I. Andrews

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:633 Ag '25 400w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 1 '25 680w

Outlook 140:268 Je 17 '25 10w

R of Rs 71:670 Je '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p338 My 14 '25 60w

DUTTON, CHARLES JUDSON. Second bullet. 301p $2 Dodd

25-7751

A shot in the dark, and a murdered man on a lonely doorstep—so the story opens. The doorstep belongs to the summer cottage rented by John Bartley, a famous detective. Who was the dead man? Why was he seeking Bartley? Who fired the shot that killed him? Working almost without clues the detective sets out to answer these questions. The solution is wholly unexpected and comes as a shock to all save Bartley himself.

"As murder yarns go, this is a perfectly presentable one, and you may read it and thank Heaven it did not happen to you—which is why people read this sort of story anyway."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 350w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

Reviewed by L. Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 80w

"Mystify the reader until the very end is the first principle of a good detective story, and Mr. Dutton has done this in his latest tale. Further than this, it is mighty well told and holds the interest."

+ Lit R p11 Ap 11 '25 150w

"The narrative reads smoothly and easily with modern psychology, as well as the science of nose prints, playing a prominent part in the unfolding of the plot."

+ N Y Times p24 Je 21 '25 180w

Reviewed by G. W. Wynne

N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 300w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 150w

DUTTON, HENRY POST. Factory management. 329p il $2.75 Macmillan

658 Factory management

24-5936

"This book is an introductory text for students of factory management. In addition to the discussion of such topics as equipment, planning, material control, etc., it includes chapters on financing, selling, personnel, and accounting . . . and costs. A noteworthy feature are the problems arranged to accompany each chapter."—J Pol Econ

Reviewed by Spurgeon Bell

Am Econ R 14:746 D '24 400w

"Clearly, concisely and in logical sequence the outline and functions of the manifold activities of the modern factory are unfolded. The student, specialist, manager or owner seeking general or particular data will find within the pages of this volume the latest developments in the science of industrial management." L. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 17 '24 380w

"Written in a simple, straightforward style, well adapted to beginners."

+ J Pol Econ 32:734 D '24 90w

St Louis p378 N '24

"The book is well balanced and the relationship of the various elements and functions that enter into and are concerned with the conducting of an industrial enterprise is nicely established. Furthermore, there is a wise exposition of the principles upon which this relationship depends, accompanied by examples and descriptions of the methods to show how these principles are made effective." N. G. Burleigh

+ Taylor Soc Bul 9:286 D '24 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p342 My 29 '24 50w

DYBOSKI, ROMAN. Outlines of Polish history; a course of lectures delivered at King's college, University of London. 283p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Allen & U.]

943.8 Poland—History

[25-10074]

"Professor Dyboski has divided his book into two parts. The first includes the substance of Polish history from the earliest times to the partitions in 1795; and the second, entitled 'Poland's Captivity and Deliverance,' forms a chronicle of events up to contemporary times. Professor Dyboski aims notably at elucidating 'the international position and the domestic problems of the new Polish State of to-day'; and in three admirable chapters on the Poles under Russia, Prussia, and Austria respectively, he provides the preparatory material which will enable the reader to understand the points at issue in the final chapter on 'The War and the New Polish State.' The political and other disabilities which the Poles suffered under their previous rulers are carefully traced in historical perspective."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Nearly half the volume is given to the period since the partitions, and this seems to the reviewer much the best part of the book. Another outstanding merit of the book is the relatively large attention given to literature, education and art, and the constant effort to correlate all sides of the national development. The author writes with commendable detachment and objectivity, not sparing severe judgments upon his countrymen in certain cases, but—in accordance with the present tendency in Polish historiography—taking a brighter view of the nation's past record than was customary a generation or two ago." R. H. Lord

+ Am Hist R 31:161 O '25 550w

"A scholarly, compact and readable survey."
+ Booklist 22:25 O '25

"This book is the work of a scholar who modestly apologizes in his preface for writing on a subject outside his special field. The apology is unnecessary, for Professor Dyboski has produced a very readable book on Polish history for English people." A. J. Toynbee

+ Nation and Ath 36:752 F '28 '25 350w

"At once full and clear, shapely and continuous in interest."

+ Sat R 139:391 Ap 11 '25 420w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p814 D 4 '24 420w

"No apology is needed for this excellent work, which certainly forms the best account of Polish history which has yet appeared in English. For we are not aware of any previous English publication on the subject which revealed a first-hand knowledge of the sources, and in which, at the same time, the leading facts were presented in an impartial manner. It is particularly in this respect that Professor Dyboski is so superior to his predecessors; and although complete freedom from bias is hardly possible in a writer of history, above all when he is describing the vicissitudes of his own country and when that country is Poland, yet Professor Dyboski contrives to preserve an air of detachment, even when discussing the most controversial topics."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p162 Mr 12 '25 760w

DYSON, GEORGE. New music. 152p $2.85 Oxford [8s 6d Milford]

781 Music—History and criticism 25-26106

A series of lectures on contemporary music, dealing with such questions as melody, rhythm and texture. The musical aims which have given rise to so many schools of opinion are analyzed, and the ways by which modern artists seek to obtain their effects.

"Combines sound musical judgment and excellent literary style."

+ Booklist 21:222 Mr '25

"More far-reaching and thorough-going in the criticism of contemporary tendencies in music than anything that has appeared for some time." D. G. Mason

+ Nation 120:695 Je 17 '25 400w

"A mine of keen, scholarly interest. His is no easy reading. From the very appearance of its numerous musical illustrations, we realize that the book contains many nuggets to be broken up and raked over. Its literary style is almost as dense as it is dignified. Principles rather than personalities are the theme. Preferences are silently dismissed, but the contrasts of musical styles are explained in the luminous terms of their antecedents, how they have arisen and from what origins." M. E. Opdycke

+ New Repub 44:sup7 S 30 '25 450w

"It is all readable. A better compliment could hardly be paid a treatise which boldly explores the knottiest problems of present-day music." Pitts Sanborn

+ N Y Tribune p16 My 3 '25 30w

"The matter is more weighty and sound than anything which has appeared in English in this generation; only those questions are raised which are worth raising, and they are treated thoroughly. . . There is no waste of words—we do not remember, for instance, a single superlative—but, much more important, no waste of ideas, no sauntering down alluring side-paths, no mistaking the sizes of things."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p727 N 13 '24 900w

E

EAGLE, SOLOMON, pseud. See Squire, J: C.

EASTMAN, EDWARD ROE. Trouble maker. 2 315p $2 Macmillan

25-19727

The editor of the American Agriculturist has not unnaturally chosen for his novel a rural scene and a rural subject. The dairymen of New York state are dissatisfied with their treatment at the hands of the milk dealers; prices are low, and milk is occasionally refused at the station and turned back without reason to the dairymen who brought it for sale. Jim Taylor is interested in forming a co-operative organization but his neighbor, John Ball, is opposed. Dorothy, Ball's daughter, is thus torn between love for Jim and loyalty to her father. Some of the dairymen agree to call a milk strike. Serious trouble arises during the agitation and Jim is unjustly accused. He is brought to trial, but his detractors are discovered and he is acquitted. The Dairymen's league wins its fight for fair prices, Jim is the community hero, and the book concludes with a wedding.

Mr. Eastman knows the people about whom he writes. These are not make-believe farmers and country people. They are as real as the language they talk. If this story is not as popular as the utterly false novels that sell into the thousands it is a reflection on the reading public and not on the present author." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p12 N 14 '25 200w

"The editor of 'The American Agriculturist' has on occasion so lost sight of his novel as a work of art as to inject into it the statistics of milk production for the year nineteen— But perhaps it is editorial license to become so imbued with facts that art is forgotten."

— N Y Tribune p8 N 8 '25 250w

"It is something of a triumph in story-telling to make an exciting novel out of a milk strike and the troubles of a Dairymen's League. Mr. Eastman does this, and provides action and fun of a homely but lively type."

+ Outlook 142:74 Ja 13 '26 40w

Sat R of Lit 2:467 Ja 2 '26 90w

EASTMAN, MAX FORRESTER. Leon Trotsky: the portrait of a youth. 181p $2 Greenberg

B or 92 Trotsky, Leon, pseud. (Lev Davidovich Bronshtein) 25-9052

"Among Americans there is none better fitted than Max Eastman to write the story of Leon Trotsky, for he is the most intimate English-speaking friend of the Russian leader. Moreover Trotsky has to a certain extent collaborated with Max Eastman in the writing of the book. Max Eastman possesses a profound admiration for Trotsky. . . . He tells of his youth, his days in prison, his exile to Siberia, his escape, his marriage, and his meeting and relations with Lenin."—Boston Transcript

Booklist 21:379 J1 '25

"Its pictures, especially of Trotsky the boy, are clear and colorful. They supply a graphic history of the early pioneers of revolutionary thought. Of the action that finally came as a result of these endeavors, Mr. Eastman has little to say. If this study does not satisfy the casual reader, we can only conclude that even so careful a characterization and chronicle of events as Mr. Eastman's book leaves a hundred questions about present day Russia still unanswered."

+ — Bookm 61:711 Ag '25 250w

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 18 '25 450w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"He has accomplished [his purpose] with earnestness, good temper, and brevity."

+ Dial 79:353 O '25 100w

Reviewed by T. S. Knowlson

Lit R p8 My 23 '25 130w

"Max Eastman's biography is an anti-climax, for it is sentimental." Ernestine Evans

— Nation 120:696 Je 17 '25 130w

"Though it is confessedly written in a spirit of ardent admiration, it succeeds notably in bringing into focus the figure of a man who is commonly pictured either as a demi-god or a demon." J. D. Adams

+ N Y Times p1 J1 12 '25 1070w

"He has achieved a book the reading of which is a delightful experience. He has collected a body of hitherto inaccessible information concerning one of the most striking figures in recent history and presented it with a candid intelligence and a genial lucidity which seduces one from criticism." Avraham Yarmolinsky

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 28 '25 420w

"Eastman's book is the first slender installment of a Trotsky biography, compressed, obviously designed as a Communist text book, but written with such economy and acuteness that others will enjoy it." P. F. Sifton

+ N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 350w

Outlook 139:622 Ap 22 '25 40w

EASTMAN, MAX FORRESTER. Since Lenin died. 158p $1.50 Boni & Liveright [4s Labour pub. co.]

947 Russia—Politics and government. Trotsky, Leon, pseud. (Lev Davidovich Bronshtein). Lenin, Nikolai [25-21666]

Max Eastman, who has just returned from Russia, gives an account of the crisis in the Communist party following Lenin's death and the displacement of Trotsky. He shows Trotsky trusted by Lenin and his logical successor as head of the Soviet government and describes the means which were taken by Trotsky's enemies to discredit him and detract from his popularity.

Booklist 22:154 Ja '26

Ind 115:110 J1 '25 '25 120w

Nation and Ath 37:465 J1 11 '25 280w

"We cannot help thinking that this hymn of praise is a trifle too loud. That, however, is not to say that Mr. Eastman's book is of no importance. It contains a great deal of information, some of it documented, not merely about personal quarrels, but about the political developments which lie behind those quarrels."

— + New Statesman 25:204 My 30 '25 420w

Reviewed by J. D. Adams

N Y Times p1 J1 12 '25 1050w

"An outsider must emphasize the fact that Mr. Eastman makes a very interesting story out of a tempest in a samovar." H. Alsberg

N Y Tribune p4 Ag 16 '25 1100w

"Such as it is, the little book is a defense of Trotsky, and one cannot help questioning Mr. Eastman's wisdom and good taste in writing it. If Trotsky is all the author says, he needs no defense and if he isn't—" Grove Wilson

— N Y World p3m J1 19 '25 350w

Outlook 140:501 Ag 5 '25 10w

"'Since Lenin Died,' or that part of it which is readable, is as depressing an account of intrigue and petty jealousies as even the most violent anti-Bolshevist could possibly desire."

— Sat R 140:167 Ag 8 '25 250w

EATON, GEOFFREY DELL. Backfurrow. 332p $2 Putnam

25-18177

"Backfurrow" is an unrelieved picture of farm life and the groping attempts of a young man whom circumstances had tied to the soil to find a way out of the web in which he is caught. An illegitimate child, Ralph Dutton is brought up by his grandparents on a Michigan farm. He sees his kind grandmother die, a victim of the endless drudgery of the farm, and his grandfather turn to drink as house and farm steadily decline. Ralph summons courage to go to the city, and there things open up for him a little, especially the world of books, but hunger and necessity drive him back to the farm. He marries. Soon there are children's mouths to feed and debts accumulate. Ralph has a severe illness and his wife discovers that she can run the farm better than he. Gradually she takes over its management and he finds time to read and to teach the children. He begins to feel a certain content and to develop some sort of a philosophy of life.

"The author has an eye for dramatic values, and makes his story entertainingly realistic."

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 7 '25 720w

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

"A worthy but depressing book."

+ — Ind 114:274 Mr 7 '25 270w

"Grim and sordid and yet striking novel."

S. A. Coblenz

Int Bk R p331 Ap '24 980w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 80w

"The book would be better if the final agony were mercifully abbreviated. It would be better, too, if its author had maintained to the end his sturdy contempt of fine writing instead of marring his work with a weak concession to mawkish sentiment in the closing paragraphs which drip with synthetic honey and reek of cheap perfume." Kenneth Latour

— + Lit R p6 Mr 7 '25 720w

Nation 120:524 My 6 '25 90w

"Pitched in a low key and sustained in monotone. In its simplicity and straightforwardness it is altogether disarming. The two themes, soil and sex, are woven together in the life of the hero without a hint of overemphasis." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:212 J1 15 '25 100w

"A very good book indeed." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:728 O 10 '25 100w

"One may seek in vain among travels of rural life for one wrought with more savage, cumulative, acid intensity than G. D. Eaton displays in his morbidly gloomy picture of life on a Michigan farm. So vitriolic is Mr. Eaton's work that it somewhat defeats its purpose. It is the intensity, the vigor of Mr.

EATON, GEOFFREY DELL—Continued
Eaton's paean of loathing which is new; the characters and situations are for the most part old friends."

N Y Times p16 F 15 '25 650w

"The story is true enough in general outline, although details are often unconvincing. The book is clearly conceived, firmly built and doggedly brought to the end in mind. But the writer brings no very distinctive quality to its telling, in spite of evident sincerity and courage, and the whole thing lacks the poignancy which alone would give it new value."

Ruth Suckow

— + N Y Tribune p4 Mr 8 '25 580w

"Granted that the author has a right to look at only one side of country life if he so choose, it must be admitted that he has made a good job of his misery chronicle. It is realistic to the limit; you see and suffer with these people."

— + Outlook 139:382 Mr 11 '25 90w

"Painstakingly and even finely as Mr. Eaton writes, his simple story of Ralph the farm-hand never really seizes the reader's interest, save when he describes the groping thoughts of this typical American boy."

— + Spec 135:419 S 12 '25 500w

Spring'd Republican p7a F 15, '25 450w

"It is an able though rather a depressing novel."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p481 J1 16 '25 220w

ECA DE QUEIROZ, JOSE MARIA. The relic; tr. from the Portuguese by Aubrey F. G. Bell. 289p $2.50 Knopf

25-16206

The hero of this religious satire is a young Portuguese voluptuary. By cloaking his profane deeds in a mantle of piety Theodorico gains favor with the sternly devout old aunt whose fortune he hopes to inherit. His life, therefore, is a blasphemous lie. The crowning act which shall clinch his aunt's favor, is a pilgrimage to the Holy Land from which he promises to bring back a sacred relic. The joys of the pseudo pilgrim en route are many but not varied. A generous little glove mender detains him in Alexandria, and on his departure gives him a keepsake in a small brown paper parcel. Arrived in Jerusalem, Theodorico dreams himself back in the time of Christ and present at the scenes of the Passion. This is the most beautiful passage in the book. He secures the relic, wraps it in brown paper, and carrying it home, delivers it to his aunt. She opens it with trembling fingers. It is the wrong parcel.

"The story is remarkably constructed and is full of clever, beautiful, and brilliant writing. The translator has done the work so successfully that there is no suggestion that one is reading a translation; he seems to have kept fully the spirit in which De Queiroz wrote and evidently has kept the atmosphere without anglicizing it. The seeker for a novel that is different will find it in 'The Relic.'" F. M.

— + Boston Transcript p3 S 5 '25 700w

"There is reason to hope that 'The Relic' may be able to overlap the boundaries of nationality, and to prove, as it did in the original tongue, that the spell of humor, and the magic of words can everywhere prevail against religious scruples and historical prejudices. Nordic or Protestant habits of thought are here pitched against the wiles of a consummate artist." Ernesto Montenegro

— + Int Bk R p715 O '25 1550w

"The Relic' is not a novel for pietists, moralists, or the unhumorous. For all others it will be a delight."

— + Nation 122:67 Ja 20 '26 110w

"The story is told in the first person, in English so chaste and exquisitely clear that one wonders whether the style has been filtered at all in passing through the hands of the translator. The characters step out familiarly, and from the hero down to the most casual hotel porter they are amply alive. Like Thais, The Relic stands securely in the long line of European masterpieces which are indebted to the Catholic Church for their existence. From a churchly standpoint, it is ribald and blasphemous in the extreme, as are the novels of Anatole France and the romances of Voltaire."

Rose Lee

New Repub 44:104 S 16 '25 400w

"Within a few pages he has us straining to keep up with the modernity of his thought, we are instantly impressed by the purity and imagery of his style, respectful before his restraint and economy of word and incident; above all, fascinated by the rapier-like thrust of his satire. And—yes—convulsed by his hilarious comedy."

— + N Y Times p6 Ag 16 '25 1300w

"The quality that lifts him far above the most distinguished men of his generation in his own country and gives his work a certain measure of universal importance, is that exquisite irony, that irresponsible, skeptic, almost Aristophanic mockery of his." Eliseo Vivas

— + N Y Tribune p13 O 11 '25 800w

EDDY, SHERWOOD, and PAGE, KIRBY. Abolition of war. 224p $1.50 Doran

172.4 War

25-529

An earnest presentation of the case against war by two leaders in the crusade. Sherwood Eddy is a Y. M. C. A. worker, who has been speaking in American colleges during the last two years, pleading for the abolition of war and showing how wrong it is in its methods and its results. Kirby Page has been speaking constantly on the subject of war for about eight years. In the second half of the book he writes down his answers to the questions which have been repeatedly put to him at meetings followed by discussion from the floor.

Booklist 21:325 Je '25

"A lively and revealing commentary upon recent world events."

— + Boston Transcript p2 F 7 '25 180w

Reviewed by Kenneth Latour

Lit R p11 Ap 18 '25 400w

Reviewed by D: S. Jordan

N Y Tribune p9 My 17 '25 400w

"Knowing the number of persons this book will reach, remembering something of the bitterness of the present fight against Eddy, I want to go on record as predicting that conscientious objectors won't be as lonesome in the next war as they were in the last." P. F. Sifton

N Y World p8e D 28 '24 700w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

EDMONDS, PAUL. Peacocks and pagodas. 282p il $5 Dutton

915.92 Burma—Description and travel

[25-2870]

The peacock is the emblem of Burma and the pagoda its typical sight. The title expresses the book, which gathers up an English traveler's impressions of the country and its people whom he describes as "perhaps the happiest and most contented in the world."

"Its easy, discursive style and black and white drawings convey a pleasant fresh impression of the 'happiest and most contented people in the world.'"

— + Booklist 22:68 N '25

"With the writer of the Burmese chronicle you feel that you yourself took the trip. It is utterly delightful." I. W. Lawrence

— + Boston Transcript p4 S 26 '25 1400w

"The text is slight, dry, almost statistical. It is illuminated and warmed by the many drawings by the author. There is even some humor in them. A whole book of drawings would have done better for the author's fame. Still, the book is worth reading, even for the 'words.' F: O'Brien

+ Lit R p4 D 12 '25 280w

"Tours that are as capably done as this one are always of value to the stay-at-home traveler."

+ N Y Times p2 S 20 '25 650w

"His very vocabulary dispels at once the enchantment of peacocks and of pagodas. The merry mood of Burma is not in the pages." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p10 S 20 '25 1050w

Pratt p31 autumn '25

"He has written a pleasant, easy-going book and has illustrated better than he wrote it."

+ Spec 134:84 Ja 17 '25 120w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 760w

"With the exception of an interesting chapter on Burmese music, Mr. Edmonds's record of his experiences is not a serious contribution to the growing literature on Burma."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p786 N 27 '24 350w

EDWARDS, AUSTIN SOUTHWICK. Psychology² of elementary education. (Riverside textbooks in education) 333p $2 Houghton

150 Psychology, Educational 25-14637

"The author presents a study of the nature and conditions of education, the psychology of the learning process, the applications of this psychology to teaching, and a brief consideration of those individual differences among pupils which modify all attempts of the school to serve them."—Editor's introd.

"It seems to me that Professor Edwards' book would keep a teachers' class alive under any principal. I hope the University of Georgia, in which this young man is professor of psychology, realizes its good fortune in having him."

+ Educ R 70:282 D '25 520w

"The author has attempted to cover too much ground in the short space of approximately three hundred pages of reading material. It is probable that some students of education will question the proportionate amount of space allotted to certain topics. The author is to be commended for referring to the experimental literature in discussing many of the topics treated." C. V. Good

+ El School J 26:312 D '25 420w

EDWARDS, DAVID MIALI. Philosophy of religion. (Doran's lib. of philosophy and religion) 318p $1.75 Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

201 Religion 25-3332

Contents: The problem and scope of the philosophy of religion; The origin of religion in the light of anthropology; The psychical origin and development of religion; The historical development of religion; The nature of religion, and its relation to other activities; Religion and the problem of knowledge; Religion and ultimate reality; God and the absolute; Bibliography; Index.

"An interesting and suggestive approach to the philosophy of religion."

+ J Religion 5:218 Mr '25 30w

"He forgets the religions of the world and how religious ideas and attitudes came to be and writes, not a philosophy of religion, but a religious philosophy in terms of Christian theism. It is well done; clearly and beautifully written. Nevertheless, his bow to the science of religion is only a gesture. What has emerged is not the result of a knowledge of religions as they have revealed the spiritual quest of man through the ages but a projection of the inherited ideas of one religion into the structure of the universe." A. E. Haydon

+ J Religion 5:424 Jl '25 1100w

"Neither in style nor in content does the book attain distinction."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p830 D 4 '24 500w

EDWARDS, GEORGE F. Old time Paris; a plain guide to its chief survivals. rev ed 150p il $2 Dutton

914.436 Paris—Description

This little book is not a complete guide to Paris, but a tour of its ancient landmarks only. In six excursions of two hours and a half afoot the places of historic interest are pointed out and described. Interiors are not visited.

"The information which he imparts in this volume would be difficult to find elsewhere and his directions, concisely given, are easily followed. He has mapped out a veritable treasure hunt—in which everyone who finishes is a winner."

+ Bookm 62:509 D '25 120w

"A book different and indispensable. It has obviously been written with a great deal of care. All the walks have been taken by the author so that the descriptions ring with authenticity."

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 31 '25 220w

"Dr. Edwards has a truly encyclopaedic knowledge of the byways of Paris and few memorials of antiquity escape his observation. The book, small enough to slip in one's pocket, may be commended to anyone who wants to save himself the trouble of digging the antiquities of Paris out of a general guide book."

+ New Statesman 25:432 Jl 25 '25 350w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 80w

EDWARDS, GEORGE WILLIAM. International trade finance. (American business ser.) 495p il $4.50; students' ed $3.60 Holt

332 Foreign exchange. Foreign trade. Banks and banking, International

24-25815

Written by the professor of banking in New York university, this book is a study of foreign exchange, international banking and trade finance. The treatment of these subjects is not confined to the United States but includes a comparative study of practice in the commercial nations of Europe as well as of South America and the Far East.

Am Econ R 15:534 S '25 150w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 25 '25 200w

Harvard Business R 3:380 Ap '25 220w

"The chief weakness of the book lies, perhaps, in the omissions in the treatment of foreign exchange. A clear and practical description of the exchange market is given, together with a satisfactory classification of the typical credit instruments used in foreign exchange, but there is little attention devoted to the rates of exchange, and the effects of the rates on the currents of trade. Nevertheless Dr. Edwards has produced a book which is distinctly worth while, and which should carry an appeal to the practical man of affairs, and to the college instructor."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:636 Mr 28 '25 420w

EHLERMANN, CARL. Cornerstones of auction bridge. 291p $2.50 Doubleday

795 Auction bridge 25-22921

A textbook of auction bridge which lays its emphasis on the fundamental principles of the game and drives the lesson home by constant reiteration and an exposition which is unusually simple to follow.

"In the sense of having anything different to say from what has previously been said, this would seem to be impossible. But the impossible has been attained, and not at the cost of good common sense. Perhaps the author's success is due to his purpose." E. A. W.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 28 '25 420w

"By all odds the clearest exposition of auction bridge for a beginner, and for a good many players who might well begin again."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a O 25 '25 320w

EIKER, MATHILDE. Mrs Mason's daughters.
367p $2.50 Macmillan

25-5965

Mrs Mason lived to see one of her daughters settled and a successful school teacher, one a business woman, and the youngest, five years a wife and many times a mother. On the whole, she felt, her girls had done well; these were conventional careers and acceptable. Then Mrs Mason died. Nan, the F. Mason of the school register and reports, became for a little while Fernanda, as she was christened. It is a long way from F. Mason to Fernanda. Pauline, the second sister, entered a Roman Catholic convent, while Bette, the third, divorced her husband and married again. It was just as well that Mrs Mason could know nothing of these changes. She would have abhorred them all. But they were perhaps inevitable. Nan, whose career is one of the three most closely followed in the book, came to know that she had been striving after the half gods. They were gone. Would the gods arrive?

"The author reveals rare powers of psychological insight but from the point of view of plot the story cannot be said to be altogether successful. Too drab for many readers."

+ Booklist 21:382 J1 '25

Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 1100w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"Mrs. Mason's Daughters" is a thoughtful, well-written novel, unusually interesting and unusually worth while." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p426 My '25 600w

"This is a dignified novel; not one of shrinking dignity that lifts its skirts from life, but of an assured bearing and a poise in the best sense worldly. The book is concerned with that most difficult of cultural, as well as of artistic, problems; what not to say, what not to do. The mastery of the tact and technique of omission is its chief merit." Eva Goldbeck

+ Lit R p3 Je 6 '25 820w

"Here is a first novel which is so good that it ought to be great deal better. Its virtues are to be found mainly in the beginning, its weaknesses are concentrated toward the end. Virtues of solidity, of cumulative, unsentimental honesty; the patient courage of one who sets out to paint a drab landscape in gray tones and refrains heroically from brighter colors." Robert Littell

+ New Repub 42:268 Ap 29 '25 1050w

"In design the story, although coherent and progressive, is not always artful or consistently well written. It seldom attains the heights of eloquence. The treatment is not as profound and impressive as the theme deserves. But there is a balanced, healthy bitterness about the book, and a mellow heartening conclusion."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 29 '25 700w

"A novel with substance, vitality and open honesty. With the obvious allowances for difference of time and scene it earns a place in the excellent American tradition of 'Sister Carrie.'" Mary Ross

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ap 26 '25 620w

"The story is a long one. In a way it is discursive, but however the tale wanders, we find that we cannot let go until the book is ended."

+ N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 250w

Outlook 140:221 Je 10 '25 280w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"Among the recent novels portraying the growth of the individuality in struggle against the mass mind and the limitations of its own nature, 'Mrs. Mason's Daughters' stands well to the fore. For a first novel it is a happy achievement, with a maturity of thought behind it, well gauged and feelingly experienced."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:713 Ap 25 '25 500w

ELDERLY SPINSTER, pseud. See Wilson, M.

ELIOT, ETHEL AUGUSTA (COOK) (MRS SAMUEL ATKINS ELIOT, Jr.). Fireweed.
311p $1.75 Doubleday

25-18698

The story of a delightful summer spent in a quiet New England village near the sea. Crystal Barker was sixteen and certain that she wanted to be an actress. When the news came that Victoria Gildersleeve, America's greatest actress, was to spend the summer in the village, Crystal was happy as only sixteen can be. Then the great actress decided not to come herself, but sent her children with their housekeeper and her friend. With this friend, Hebe, and the children who were near her age, Crystal spent a happy summer which even strengthened her convictions on the subject of acting.

"It is a good story well written, but improbable. Perhaps that adds to its charm."

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 21 '25 120w

"The loyalty and devotion of the girl for the older woman is excellently done, nor has a girl's love of the stage ever been shown with more fairness and sympathy in a story. Snobbery is shown up in all its absurdity, yet without sentimental stress. And it is not too juvenile for girls in their 'teens.'" M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p813 N '25 120w

"Mrs. Eliot can be recommended as a workmanlike, if not an inspired, writer for girls."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:349 N 28 '25 60w

ELLIOTT, CYRIL. Distillation in practice.
2 (Chemical engineering lib., 2d ser.) 188p $2
Van Nostrand [6s Benn]

668.7 Distillation

"This little book is the companion volume to 'Distillation Principles,' in which the underlying principles of evaporation were explained, and the author assumes that the reader is familiar with them. In fact, the first half of this book might well be considered a continuation of the subject, and covers the theory of fractional distillation and condensation and heat transfer."—Ind & Eng Chem

"The average chemical engineer will find the first part of this book very difficult reading unless he has a very thorough knowledge of physical chemistry. The last half, however, gives concise descriptions of distilling apparatus in the chief distilling industries—ethyl alcohol, petroleum, and coal tar. The book should prove valuable to the designer and the research chemical engineer. He can find here, in a very few pages, practically all that is known on the subject. The plant operator will also find much of interest, if he can dig his way through the formulas and make use of the general conclusions." Carl Haner

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:988 S '25 550w

"Forms a useful supplement to his 'Distillation Principles.'"

+ Nature 116:572 O 17 '25 60w

ELLIOTT, CYRIL. Distillation principles.
(Chemical engineering lib.) 166p $2 Van Nostrand [6s Benn]

668.7 Distillation

[25-6064]

"Subject briefly treated from the theoretical physical chemical standpoints. Practical procedure will follow in a second volume."—N Y New Tech Bks

"This little book is an excellent compilation of our present ideas about the theory of distillation, from the standpoint of the physical chemist. The reviewer's only criticism is the likelihood that the chemical engineer for whom the book is intended will find it rather concentrated nourishment unless he has had a thoroughgoing course in physical chemistry." C. S. Robinson

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:641 J1 '25 100w

"Readers who possess such a volume as Young's 'Fractional Distillation,' new edition, will find nothing in the present book that is not in Young's work. However, as a convenient and concise presentation of vapor pressure, equilibria, and thermal relationships of mixtures of volatile components, both miscible and non-miscible, the volume can be recommended." W. L. McCabe

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:657 Je '25 120w

"On the whole, a clear and readable account of a subject which most students find difficult. In a few places the text is not so perspicuous as it might have been, but the general treatment is sound."

+ Nature 116:391 S 12 '25 180w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:20 Ap '25

ELLIOTT, LILIAN ELWYN. Central America; new paths in ancient lands. 280p il $5 Dodd [15s Methuen]

917.28 Central America 25-10027

Miss Elliott's description of her book as a "summing-up of gipsy travellings" does not give an adequate idea of the information that is to be found in it. The book is based on long experience in the countries of which she writes and history, archeology and accounts of social and economic conditions are combined with the descriptions of each country. The book covers pathways of travel in Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and British Honduras. It tells something of the story of this great Maya region before the arrival of the Spaniards, of the Spanish expeditions of discovery and conquest, of the three-hundred year colonial period and of the gradual development of these lands to their present-day condition.

Booklist 21:376 Jl '25

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 11 '25 780w

St Louis p131 My '25

Spec 135:498 S 26 '25 260w

"This book strikes a personal note; and, while it gives an invaluable and critical survey of the history of this picturesque and romantic region and touches lightly, but with scientific accuracy, on its archaeology, it is written with a humour, a freshness of impression which conveys an irresistible invitation to visit the lands which she so obviously loves. It is a notable book both as a book of reference, but also as a book to read and re-read for the pleasure of reading. . . The illustrations are worthy of the beauty of Central American scenery."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p834 D 11 '24 920w

ELLWOOD, CHARLES ABRAM. Psychology of human society; an introduction to sociological theory. 495p $3 Appleton

301 Social psychology 25-19762

According to the author's statement in the preface, this book, which is designed as an elementary text in sociological theory, is intended to supersede his "Sociology in its physiological aspects" and his "Introduction to social psychology." It is not a revision of those books but an entirely new work, the progress of both sociology and psychology having necessitated a restatement of the theories of the earlier books.

Educ R 71:54 Ja '26 550w

"The spirit and tone of the discussion is generous and reasonable, but even with all of the author's efforts at clearness and definiteness the reader will find it necessary to bring his powers of concentration to bear on the task if he is to lay the book down with a feeling of satisfied curiosity. This necessity is not the fault of the author; it grows out of the fact that both psychology and sociology are still in a formative and plastic stage that leaves the seeker after definiteness sadly discouraged." Edgar Dawson

+ Hist Outlook 17:40 Ja '26 250w

"One of the most suggestive contributions to the literature of sociology of recent years."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 14 '26 420w

"While the approach to sociological problems is avowedly psychic, the author so marshals his materials that practically the whole array of social fact passes in review. Hence the book is available as a text in general sociology. . . . The social worker will find much food for thought in this admittedly theoretical book." A. J. Todd

+ Survey 55:251 N 15 '25 350w

ELSNER, ELEANOR. Spanish sunshine (Eng title Romantic Spain). 368p il $4 Century

914.6 Spain—Description and travel 25-5871

An enthusiastic account of Spain by a traveler who went in search of beauty, who found it everywhere and interprets it to the reader. She journeyed by motor mostly on main travelled roads and spent her time in the cities. The route led from Málaga and Córdoba across the Andalusian plains to Seville, thence by way of Cadiz, Ronda, Bobadilla, Granada, Valencia and Majorca to Barcelona, then by Zaragosa to Madrid and Toledo, and on to Segovia, Valladolid and Burgos.

Booklist 21:335 Je '25

"Mrs. Elsner has a very keen feeling for Spain and through her pages she creates again sun-soaked, history-soaked Spain, grand and florid and cruel and proud. Under the easy tone of her writing she brings in much of the history and much of the character of the people, till she makes the reader long for these sights and sounds of which she writes."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 2 '25 300w

Cleveland p55 Je '25

"Mrs. Elsner knows her Spain; she has written well and interestingly of the charm that pervades its old cities, its art galleries, its parks, churches and cathedrals, its museums. For those who have yet to do their first reading regarding Spain her work will be of absorbing interest. But all this has been done before, and in repeating what others to a greater or less extent have written Mrs. Elsner has overlooked her big opportunity." E. B. Smith

+ Lit R p7 Ja 3 '25 530w

Reviewed by H. J. Massingham

Nation and Ath 36:sup386 D 6 '24 50w

"The work is very uneven, with some heavy patches of guide-book material. But, despite all these defects, the author succeeds in getting the reader closer to the heart of Spain than most writers of travel books on that country. She has considerable powers of observation of a decidedly feminine kind, but this is not the secret of her success; it is rather a sort of intuitive perception."

+ New Statesman 24:576 F 21 '25 580w

Outlook 139:585 Ap 15 '25 380w

"Mrs. Elsner's gift of leisure and pleasantness well consorts with a naive people."

+ Sat R 138:549 N 29 '24 600w

"Mrs. Elsner's book is in no sense literature; it is simply the talk of a well-bred woman. Therefore the reader, content to sit back and appreciate her impressions, is indifferent to laxity in style, that in another might be called slipshod, because it is due not to ignorance but to the syncopations and incoherences of spoken discourse; and in the same way to a good many conspicuous errors of fact, easily rectified by appeal to any guide-book." G. G. King

+ Sat R of Lit 1:772 My 23 '25 260w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 30 '24 50w

Wis Lib Bul 21:111 Ap '25

ELY, MARY REDINGTON. Knowledge of God in Johannine thought. 151p $1.50 Macmillan
226.5 Bible. New Testament—St John. God 25-9417

The author studies one phase only of the religious thought of the Fourth Gospel—St John's conception of the knowledge of God in the mystical experience and the emphasis which he placed upon it as essential to religion.

J Religion 5:442 J1 '25 30w

"A genuine contribution to the study of Johannine thought. The author has selected a single concept of the Fourth Gospel, 'knowledge of God,' and has submitted it to a painstaking examination in order to find its meaning and the part it plays in the religion of the author of the Gospel. The volume will prove a useful one both from the standpoint of the thesis which it maintains and from that of the method which it uses. The reviewer finds much to commend and little to criticize adversely. A few typographical errors were noticed in reading, but who is immune? The book is a valuable addition to our Johannine material." E. W. Parsons

+ J Religion 5:545 S '25 680w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 4 '25 800w

"How did the author of the Fourth Gospel come to emphasize the 'knowledge of God' as essential to religion, and what meaning did he give to the term? These questions are here considered with learning and acumen in the light of first century ideas about the place of knowledge in religion and their influence on the Evangelist."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p483 J1 16 '25 220w

EMANUEL, VICTOR ROUSSEAU (VICTOR ROUSSEAU, pseud.). Middle years. 332p $2 Minton, Balch & co.

25-5960

Henry Carthew, at forty-five, looks back on a dreary stretch of domestic commonplaces and unexciting routine. His wife's idiosyncrasies have become suddenly irritating, his adolescent son has grown beyond him, and even his idolized little daughter seems capricious, uncertain in her moods of affection. Then comes a drab romance that brings a temporary pale excitement into his life and a flash of bitterness and suspicion to his wife. The excitement is soon over, and with a sigh of relief, Henry lapses again into the commonplace.

"It is impossible to say that Mr. Emanuel is unfair. He pictures American women and American men accurately. In their different ways neither comes through the process very admirably. This is not Mr. Emanuel's fault, but the result of innate characteristics always clear to the observer. If Mr. Emanuel errs it is not in the truthfulness of his portrait but in the conclusions which he draws and the unwarranted sympathy he offers the American man." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 2 '25 1200w

Reviewed by H. L. Pangborn

Lit R p12 My 9 '25 420w

"A very powerful and well-written study, as strong as it is unpleasant."

N Y Times p8 Mr 22 '25 1050w

"The book is written in a style which fits its subject material a little too tightly. The author apparently seems to be deathly afraid of being dramatic; that is to say, dramatically interesting. If I did not gather from the book a sense of natural exuberance held stiffly in restraint, the meticulousness of the style would not disturb me." Sampson Raphaelson

+ N Y Tribune p4 Ap 12 '25 600w

"The book has not even agreeable style to lend it distinction."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:695 Ap 18 '25 160w

EMANUEL, VICTOR ROUSSEAU (VICTOR ROUSSEAU, pseud.). The Selmans. 372p $2 Dial press

25-19431

"The Selmans, like Miss Stern's Matriarch, is the chronicle of a Jewish family in London. Selmans, Salmons, and Solomons are the offspring of Schmoool Solomon, dealer in uniforms, gold lace and old cloths, who died in 1835. His son Isaac had eight children, and thirty-one grandchildren—so many that reference to the genealogical table is needed to keep in mind their proper relationships. Through their alliance with the Dimandstones who have flowered into Lord Cairnmachrie, they are in contact with la haute juiverie, and at their lowest with the pawn-broking, loan-sharking, cast-clothing trades. Of the Selmans within their family relations the author renders a complete and veracious account."—New Repub

"Reportorial in style, kaleidoscopic in approach, in so far as it is as tiresome as the particular people it involves, this novel may be said to attain verisimilitude."

+ Dial 79:516 D '25 40w

"A remarkably keen and able novel concerning a clan in London Jewry. Each of the crowding actors is drawn surely and deftly."

+ Ind 115:589 N 21 '25 100w

"It is not a masterpiece, but it has situations so truthful and dramatic dialogue so incisive and a prose style so kempt that it creates an atmosphere of tenseness nearly to the finish. The book is at once very good and rather bad, but even the parts we consider bad are not without interest." Hugo Sonnenschein

+ Lit R p12 Ja 2 '26 260w

"Nothing could be better than the psychology and behavior of the pack, among whom there is noisy jealousy and secret envy and intrigue, but who are united in the hunt. When he touches the plane of contact with the gentile he is less sure of his ground." R. M. L.

+ New Repub 44:264 O 28 '25 260w

N Y Times p36 D 6 '25 600w

"So careful is V. R. Emanuel of his details that we are given at the beginning of the book a chronological table of the family. It is the most sympathetic part of the work. Without comment, it naturally does not suffer from the sneering manner which sometimes makes you shudder at what follows. It is a mean book." Leonard Hess

+ N Y Tribune p14 N 22 '25 650w

"Family chronicles are endurance tests for reader as well as author, and sympathetic participation alone makes them bearable. Mr Emanuel, conspicuously lacking in warmth and grace, fails to impart any interest in the Selmans."

+ N Y World p7m O 25 '25 150w

Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 150w

EMERY, J. INMAN. Tiger of Barungana. 363p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Jarrolds]

25-21073

"A romantic tale hinging on the theft of 'The tiger of Barungana,' a famous emerald belonging to a native prince. The hunt for the thief involves a thrilling chase across India and the suppression of a threatened mutiny."—Cleveland

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 350w

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

N Y Tribune p13 Ap 19 '25 160w

Spec 132:66 J1 12 '24 40w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 J1 24 '24 230w

EMMETT, WILLIAM HENRY. Marxian economic handbook and glossary. 350p $3.25 International pub.

331 Marx, Karl. Economics. Capital

[25-17729]

"The object of the present handbook is to clarify the English version of Vol. I of Marx's Capital—to popularize as far as may be its main or general message. It is intended to clarify and to popularize especially the first three chapters, comprising Marx's Part I, which three chapters are herein summarized, more or less, in three corresponding chapters. But they are not strictly summarized, for in places I have not hesitated even to expand a paragraph into a virtual explanation. The present book is designed to simplify the gist of Marx's economic work, not only for the use of students, but also in order to rescue as far as possible the definite meanings of this really marvellous work from the misunderstandings, both friendly (or unintentional) and hostile, from the masses of confusion, both innocent and deliberate, that have unfortunately been crowded around them."—Preface

"Here is the best second-hand Marx ever prepared—best because it does not 'interpret,' merely sorts and makes available the essential doctrines hidden in the masses of verbiage of 'Capital.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 50w

"Mr. Emmett's qualifications for the task, which includes the function of corrector-general, are a boundless enthusiasm and a commensurate industry. One cannot but admire both. Marx has never had a more enthusiastic admirer, in spite of his slips."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p408 Je 18 '25 1600w

ENDICOTT, WENDELL. Adventures with rod and harpoon along the Florida Keys. 273p il $4 Stokes

799 Fishing 25-3204

A veteran fisherman describes adventures with the game fish and sea monsters of Florida waters. In particular he tells of his experiences with tarpon, with the much sought sailfish, with the savage barracuda, and with sharks. He includes a chapter on the Florida East Coast railway and one of fishing facts and suggestions, telling about bait, tackle, fishing seasons, etc.

"To the man who has been there the book is a renewing of old times and old scenes and old friends. To the man who never has been but hopes to get there, the story forms an added lure and incentive to pawn his overcoat, his coal bin and his furs and buy a ticket 'South.'"

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 14 '25 380w

"He makes the reader realize something of the excitement and pleasure the occasion afforded. Nor does he ever forget for long the beauty of the surroundings, the infinite play of lovely and varied colors on sky and sea, the restfulness of palm-covered shore, the wonders and the beauty of the depths. The illustrations are noteworthy for their excellence and remarkable for the success with which some of them have caught the acrobatic stunts of the sailfish."

+ N Y Times p7 F 8 '25 520w

N Y Tribune p10 F 8 '25 200w

ERNST, CLAYTON HOLT, ed. What shall I be? 252p $1.50 Appleton

374.1 Profession, Choice of. Vocational education 24-10227

"Practical information, advice and suggestions intended to assist the young man in choosing a vocation. A chapter is devoted to each of the professions, to farming, foreign trade, lumbering, etc., each having been written by a specialist in the field."—Booklist

Booklist 21:7 O '24

"It is not expected that just to read this book will settle the question of a 'career.' It is intended simply 'to help the reader help himself.'"

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 25 '24 330w
Cleveland p92 D '24

"Straightforward, uncolored, concise information."

+ N Y Tribune p22 Ag 3 '24 150w

"The discussions are popularly written and will appeal to the interest of the young man of high-school or college age. It should also prove valuable to teachers and others who are confronted with the problem of giving vocational guidance to young men." J. M. McCallister

+ School R 32:790 D '24 400w

ERSKINE, BEATRICE (STRONG) (MRS R. STEUART ERSKINE). Vanished cities of Arabia. 2nd ed 324p il $6 Dutton [25s Hutchinson]

913.94 Arabia—Antiquities. Petra, Arabia. Gerasa. Kerak [25-8397]

Mrs Erskine tells the story of the vanished cities of Arabia Petraea, and peoples their deserted sites with those who made their history. Thousands of years are covered in her pilgrimage among the ruins of Petra, Kerak, Madaba, Ammon, and Jerash. Some of the illustrations are in color.

"The book not only revives the glories of departed eras and the pomp and circumstance of lost nations, but it takes the reader on a delightful journey into some of the most exciting and energetic centuries of existence. The book is admirably illustrated with reproductions of water color and pencil sketches from originals by Major Benton Fletcher."

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 7 '25 220w

"A very interesting book, though I wish that she had spared us at least one of Major Fletcher's too romantic colour pieces in order to include a map." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:649 F 7 '25 100w

"Mrs. Erskine has a lively and readable style, despite an occasional lapse in her English and a breakdown here and there over a classical name, and Major Benton Fletcher is a useful accompanist with the pencil."

+ New Statesman 24:546. F 14 '25 160w

"The tourist in search of new sensations will welcome her impressions, learn how, when and where to go, what provisions and raiment to take, what difficulties to anticipate. The scholar will rejoice over a profound study of the vanished cities of Arabia and learn all there is to be learnt from ancient lore and modern research."

+ Sat R 139:274 Mr 14 '25 280w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 15 '25 200w

ERSKINE, JOHN. Private life of Helen of Troy. 304p $2.50 Bobbs

Helen of Troy—Fiction 25-21590

What happened when Helen and Menelaos went back to Sparta? This is Mr Erskine's theme. Here are the mother and father confronted with the problem of the marriage of their daughter. Helen is persuasive, unruffled, wise, maddeningly reasonable it seems to Menelaos who fumes and fusses like a modern parent. Hermione is respectful, or tries to be, but she does not approve of this mother of hers, and represents the recent notoriety as much as the interference, after a twenty-year absence, in so personal a matter as her marriage. Helen's whole delightful philosophy of love and life, as Mr Erskine conceives it, is given in her talks with her family and her friends. In fact the entire book is written in dialogue; all of the setting and action is inferred from the conversation.

Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"The story is quite utterly delicious. Never for an instant does Mr. Erskine lose the Homeric flavor, yet never for a moment do you lose the sense of actual live people." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 28 '25 1450w

"The book is a 'stunt' and a frankly amusing one. One feels that its single failure lies in garbure. Too much conversation finally palls, a fault which the author might easily have escaped had he given more attention to descriptive passages or pure narrative writing. But despite this objection, the book is diverting."

ERSKINE, JOHN—Continued

+ — Ind 115:650 D 5 '25 180w

"Without background or local color? It is simply the familiar situation of the flighty mother who has a serious and very sensible daughter. If the names of the characters were modernized and the setting contemporary, nothing would be added to or taken away from Mr. Erskine's invention." Ernest Boyd

Ind 115:683 D 12 '25 1100w

"A long series of dialogs wherein, with the most commendable naturalness, the characters talk about one another, about life, love, beauty, and human motives and impulses." L: Kronenberger

+ Int Bk R p55 D '25 900w

"A gay, witty, scintillating novel of ideas." Lloyd Morris

+ N Y Times p2 D 6 '25 100w

"The whole book is almost continuously witty, rather by implication than obviously. It has charm, distinction and genuine originality in the treatment of a theme one would have supposed long since done to death. It is a book to be read leisurely and shared with one's friends." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p4 D 13 '25 1100w

"As a sustained essay into human conduct the book is an admirable one. It is rarely one encounters a book so palpably mature in thought and conception, in the writer of publishing today." Laurence Stallings

+ N Y World p6m N 1 '25 420w

"In a day of 'Hamlet' in mufti it will not seem strange that the classic characters in this fascinating book converse in an altogether modern and sometimes cynical manner."

Outlook 141:675 D 30 '25 250w

"The peculiarly delectable qualities of this book are wit, irony, satire. The surface of the dialogue is highly polished, for all its deceptive colloquialism, and its effect is an unflagging scintillation. It is the gaiety of Mr. Erskine's book that one acknowledges with delight. For he has given us a book that is invariably entertaining." Lloyd Morris

+ Sat R of Lit 2:427 D 19 '25 620w

ERSKINE, JOHN. Sonata, and other poems.
69p $1.25 Duffield

811

25-9933

Several long poems, two sonnet-sequences and some lighter pieces make up Mr Erskine's new volume of poetry.

"A collection of vivid, dramatic, and thoroughly modern poems which display a human interest that is handled at once delicately and with imagination. The book contains a number of exceptionally beautiful sonnets."

+ Booklist 22:22 O '25

"The dual literary personality of John Erskine is well demonstrated in his latest collection of verse, 'Sonata.' Here we have the scholar, with a lively interest in technical dexterity, approving the inclusion of verse that has a distinct copybook flavor. At the same time, the poet, with his heart set on a distant goal of beauty, brings to the little volume poems that convey authentic artistic conviction." Hildegrade Fillmore

+ Bookm 62:79 S '25 400w

"There is much lovely verse in this little volume, and what is far more there is thought-provoking verse here—revealing the reality of Mr. Erskine's inspiration." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 11 '25 650w

"Upon the mind of one reader certain undeniably distinguished and gentle poems here did not strike freshly and powerfully enough to make that reader forget other poems, other arts, other ideas. Among the discoverable reasons for this the most trivial would be that Mr. Erskine has so frequently employed 'poetic diction'—inversions, poeticisms like ere, and contractions like 'neath, o'er, 'mongst, 'twixt, 'twas, 'twould, and 'twere. A more significant reason is that he has drawn too heavily upon the common stock of moods and ideas which linger about the word Beauty." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 120:63 My 27 '25 560w

"The meticulously minded will find some effort now and then to eke out a line; not every line will escape its proximity to prose. But the sonnet-touch is here; the poetic touch. And the poetic touch is present on every page of 'Sonata,' with its 'Other Poems.'" P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p11 My 31 '25 1000w

"Quiet little book of verse. There is a faintly academic flavor about these poetic discussions of beauty, whether they occur in the comic narrative in Spenserian stanzas on 'The Poetic Bus-Driver,' . . . or in the Browningsque opening poem." Babette Deutsch

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 21 '25 220w

"'Sonata' seems to me to be handled a bit heavily throughout, and 'Ambush' to lack somehow the salience it might have had. The rest is dignified and rather academic poetry." W: R. Benét

+ Outlook 140:404 J1 15 '25 100w

"His book is surprisingly good and deserves a great success."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:396 D 5 '25 260w

"The best work lies, probably, in 'Sonata' and the sonnet-sequences, but even here the beauty is a tired, housewifely beauty, admired only by the housewife's husband and only for her goodness."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 30 '25 400w

ERSKINE, LAURIE YORK. Confidence man.
303p $2 Appleton

25-2466

"The story of Corvan, a master crook whose 'streak of honesty' defeats his meaner motives. Corvan rolls recklessly into a sleepy little Long Island village to retire for a time from his more strenuous activities in the city. For a while his days are filled with the thrill of the game, but the implicit trust which the friendly villagers place in him when he inveigles them into one of his schemes, pricks his conscience. Gradually the wholesome influence of Margaret Fiske, a type of womanhood such as Corvan had never met before brings into play his nobler qualities and wins him to better ways."

"'The Confidence Man' has almost all the qualifications of a 'good' movie, from the viewpoint of a ten-year-old, and therefore few qualities of a good novel. Action and excitement there is in plenty, but for literature to be taken at all seriously, the fastidious reader must look somewhere else."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 18 '25 250w

N Y Tribune p18 Mr 15 '25 270w

N Y World p4m F 1 '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

ERSKINE, LAURIE YORK. Valor of the range.
282p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

25-17342

Old Man Parmelee is boss of the range. If a man dares to dispute his authority, the Old Man breaks him and makes him his tool. He has a dozen such derelicts ready to do murder on demand. Eighteen-year-old David is different. When his father orders Preest hanged for cattle rustling, David and his loyal friend Aleck ride up on the lynching party, rescue their victim from the noose, and flee to a cave in the canyon until they can turn him over to the sheriff. It means war, of course, with the Old Man, but David is not afraid of war, nor of his father. He fears cruelty and injustice, and is willing to die to prevent them. There is a hard fought battle in which even little Madge shares, with an ultimate victory for justice."

"It is a readable yarn, occasionally improbable, according to our standards, and that bit different."

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 17 '25 320w

"There is a charming love interest and the 'Valor of the Range' is a good yarn."

+ Lit R p7 S 26 '25 60w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p774 N 19 '25 120w

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. Anthony and Anna; a comedy in three acts. 92p $1.50 Macmillan [3s 6d Allen & U.]

822

25-24040

The scene is the Inn of St Peter's Finger. An American millionaire and his daughter have arrived and close on their heels an eminent author and a strolling gentleman appear. The eminent author is already in pursuit of Anna and as soon as Anthony sees her he wants her too. Acting on the friendly old waiter's advice—"L'audassy, sir, toojoors l'audassy"—he plans a campaign that throws Anna into contemporary confusion. But she has not been a spoiled American girl all her life for nothing. By the end of the third act she gets what she wants—in fact they all do except the eminent author.

Booklist 22:150 Ja '26

"'Anthony and Anna' is somewhat diaphanous stuff to come out of the workshop of the author of 'Jane Clegg' and 'John Ferguson,' but it is very cleverly and vivaciously written. The intrinsic merit of the piece lies in the amusing characterization and in the dialogue which is consistently bright and witty, with much snappy satirical comment upon current social conditions and manners." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p3 O 24 '25 250w

"Mr. Ervine's play does not illuminate life, and is rather nonsense. Hankin might have made the play do: Mr. Ervine has not enough wit or originality. If the characters are stock, and the thought shallow and commonplace, we are helped neither to enjoy life nor to endure it, one of which ends, to paraphrase Dr. Johnson, a good play should attain." Bonamy Dobrée

— + Nation and Ath 37:599 Ag 15 '25 250w

"More than commonly remunerative light reading."

+ N Y Times p5 O 4 '25 400w

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

N Y Tribune p15 O 18 '25 100w

Reviewed by Wells Root

N Y World p7m D 20 '25 60w

ERVINE, ST JOHN GREER. Parnell. (Curiosities of politics) 341p $4 Little [12s 6d Benn] B or 92 Parnell, Charles Stewart

[25-21147]

Charles Stewart Parnell, 1846-1891, Irish nationalist leader, entered Parliament in 1875. "Eleven years later he was master of the House of Commons, with Mr Gladstone and Lord Salisbury openly or covertly seeking his suffrages. Sixteen years later he was dead." Mr Ervine, a compatriot of Parnell, confesses that he began this book with a feeling of prejudice against Parnell and ended it with a feeling of deep affection. He treats Parnell's life as a tragic drama, often referring to the "sardonic dramatist" who devised the plot and assembled the characters.

Booklist 22:158 Ja '26

"A brilliant and valuable addition to biographical literature. It is difficult to conceive of a more nearly perfect relationship between an author and his materials than is here exemplified. Although adhering strictly throughout to the work's established sources, Mr. Ervine, by the masterly vividness of his prose, imbues the book with a dramatic intensity unsurpassed in either his novels or his plays."

+ Bookm 62:617 Ja '26 100w

"Mr. Ervine is a born dramatist, but he has all the acumen and balance to make a faithful biographer, with that insight and sense of the dramatic which holds the life drama at concert pitch and at the same time keeps the figure within the bounds of truth. Above all, Mr. Ervine is one of the most evenhanded authors alive." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p5 O 10 '25 1500w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"Having dissented frequently from the popular estimate of [the author's] novels and plays, I am all the more pleased at this opportunity to congratulate him upon a first-class piece of work. One feels that the fascination of this haughty, cold, irresistible personality captured the biographer's imagination until he was able to evoke the living Parnell as though he were a creation of his own brain." Ernest Boyd

+ Ind 115:449 O 17 '25 1150w

"Mr. Ervine is not by any means the ideal historian of Irish patriots. He has made his book unnecessarily passionate and controversial. The fascination of Parnell's career has to make headway against the fury which Mr. Ervine's attacks on the Catholics and the anti-Parnellites have not unnaturally caused. . . Mr. Ervine has thrown so much of his own brilliant personality and Ulster vindictiveness into this book that the critic is at a loss whether to be carried away by interest in Parnell or in Parnell's biographer." Shane Leslie

— + Int Bk R p724 O '25 2100w

"This promises to be a year of notable biographies. There will hardly be a greater one than 'Parnell' nor one that will stir more sad, bitter and sorry memories out of the ashes of old feuds." C. M. Morrison

Lit R p1 N 21 '25 1300w

"In spite of constant confusion between human nature and Celtic nature, Mr. St. John Ervine has told a fine story. He detracts a little from the power of his drama by showing us too much of its machinery. He reminds us too often that his characters are getting together for the climax, mentions the 'Sardonic Dramatist' too often, and slows down his narrative by telling us that 'the drama now gains pace.' He is often witty and penetrating, succeeds admirably in making us understand Parnell's complex character, and leaves us, as he should, wondering at his tragedy and asking whether, if the Sardonic Dramatist had been a little less in the mood he displays to Mr. Thomas Hardy, a solution of the Irish problem might not have been found forty years ago." Kingsley Martin

+ — Nation and Ath 37:518 J1 25 '25 1000w

"With a writer of Mr. St. John Ervine's skill the tale develops at a pace that sweeps the reader breathlessly through three hundred pages. While he has made better narrative out of Parnell's tragedy than any previous biographer, Mr. Ervine's knowledge of every trick of the dramatist's trade leads him into pitfalls that a poorer craftsman might have avoided."

+ — New Statesman 25:478 Ag 8 '25 1300w

Reviewed by Frances Newman

— N Y Tribune p8 Ja 3 '26 750w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p6m N 29 '25 420w

"What lends interest to Mr. St. John Ervine's life of Parnell is the fact that he writes of the nineteenth century, not as an ancient, but as a modern. When Parnell died, his latest biographer was only eight years old. Yet over those time-worn intrigues he yawns not once. On the contrary, he is gripped." P. W. Wilson

+ No Am 222:341 D '25 1300w

Reviewed by C. B. Green

Outlook 141:608 D 16 '25 700w

St Louis 23:438 D '25

"A fine sense of dramatic values has guided Mr. St. John Ervine in writing this fascinating biography, which, while not superseding earlier works, definitely adds to our knowledge and understanding of the great Irish leader."

+ Sat R 140:74 J1 18 '25 550w

ERVINE, ST J: GREER—Continued

"Mr. St. John Ervine would be a better historian were he able to rid his mind of certain obsessions more in place in the servants' hall or in the columns of the London Morning Post than in a serious work of biography." H: L. Stuart

— Sat R of Lit 2:405 D 12 '25 1350w

"Mr. Ervine's mistakes are too numerous to catalogue here. It is no pleasure to point out that a man who has contributed admirably both in drama and the novel to the modern literary achievement of Ireland falls here below any standard to which one can honestly give praise; and that a main reason lies in his lack of that knowledge which he could easily have acquired. Yet so much harm has been done by men writing on Irish matters without adequate knowledge that it is necessary to protest." Stephen Gwynn

— Spec 135:108 JI 18 '25 760w

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 1 '25 620w

"He has written it hurriedly and without touching up his background, yet with real understanding of the human problems involved in Parnell's life and inevitable downfall." E. A. D.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 15 '25 1200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p441 JI 2 '25 1600w

EVANS, AUSTIN PATTERSON. Episode in the struggle for religious freedom; the sectaries of Nuremberg, 1524-1528. 235p $2.50 Columbia univ. press [12s 6d Milford]

270.6 Reformation. Religious liberty 24-31307

The book studies the ferment of religious thought in Nuremberg in the early years of the Reformation, and especially the influence of a certain group of sectarians in shaping a theory and policy of repression of dissent in Lutheran lands between the years 1524 and 1528. Lutheranism as it hardened and narrowed caused increasing opposition. Dr Evans shows the bearings of this dissenting movement on the development of religious toleration.

"Professor Evans has written with care, with scholarship, after much research upon this movement as it showed itself in the sectaries of Nuremberg. Heretofore they have been condemned as a seditious, turbulent, radical element—but he shows them as real 'protestants' for individual liberty, for the right of private judgment and as pioneers in an age-long struggle for an intellectual and religious liberty."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 250w

"This treatise is not written in a pseudo-fictional vein; it is exposition—simple and to the point—but it has the spirited tone and the evocative power of good fiction. Nearly every page is dramatic; the reader feels that the situation is a vital one. The heavy ballast of research is cast overboard from text and notes." Eva Goldbeck

+ N Y World p9m Ja 4 '25 350w

EVANS, HOWEL. Murder club. 365p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Jarrolds]

"Richard Brinsley, the enterprising proprietor and editor of an energetic newspaper, The Wire, offered £500 to any one who could solve the mystery in a detective story running serially in The Wire. Six men sent in correct solutions, and these six were invited to dine with Brinsley; it is with this dinner that the tale opens. Brinsley suggested that the men who had been so successful in finding out the criminal in the imaginary murder should see what they could do with a real one. Then and there 'The Murder Club' was formed. The case of 'The Woman on the Telegraph Wires' was followed immediately by that of 'The Murder in the Flat,' and after these came others, many of them with strange, apparently bizarre features, which the special knowledge of the various members of the club enabled them to understand."—N Y Times

"The plan of the story is certainly ingenious."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 25 '25 380w

Nation and Ath 35:126 Ap 26 '24 180w

"Though rather carelessly written, they are ingenious yarns, usually well worked up, and with a reasonable number of surprises sprinkled through them."

+ — N Y Times p16 F 22 '25 400w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 22 '25 200w

"Mr. Evans has hit, indeed, upon a novel idea in mystery and detective yarning, and he has worked it out in vivid chapters. No reader is likely to let go of his book until Number One and the murder tales come to an end at one and the same time."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 15 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p289 My 8 '24 120w

EVANS, JOAN. Life in mediæval France. 234p il $5.25 Oxford [15s Milford]

914.4 France—Social life and customs. Middle ages [25-22127]

"Miss Evans's purpose is to present the general reader with a picture of mediæval life through the medium of France. Her concern, she says, 'is with neither the political nor the literary history of France, but with the elements of her mediæval civilization.' From the admirable introductory chapter, she passes to discuss in turn feudal society, town life, monastic life, pilgrimage and crusade, learning, education, work and religion, ending with a general chapter on the end of the middle ages, in which she analyzes the results of the Hundred Years' War and the slow dissolution of the characteristically mediæval civilization, to give place to a new world in which France was still the leader."—Nation and Ath

"The author has evidently cultivated mediæval literature and art, read at least some of the better modern works about France in that time, listened to suggestive teachers, and digested part of her acquisitions. So she is able to say many true things, and sometimes in a striking or living way. But unfortunately Miss Evans ventures to speak on many more matters than she knows competently. And the naïvetés, though less than in the first chapter, keep appearing." E. W. Dow

+ Am Hist R 31:306 Ja '26 620w

"Dr. Evans has made no attempt in this volume to deal exhaustively with the literary history of France. She is none the less conspicuously successful in depicting the mediæval elements of her civilization. And as these include 'the life of castle and cottage, monastery and cathedral, school and university, city and countryside,' all of them more or less permeated with the atmosphere of feudalism and chivalry, pilgrimage and crusade, the picture limned is at once vivid and instructive." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 29 '25 780w

"Miss Evans deserves congratulation for the competence with which she has carried out her task. Her book is solidly constructed, illustrated throughout by quotation from a wide range of contemporary literature, and extremely readable. No one could read it without taking away with him a definite and vivid picture of how men lived and thought and had their being in the middle ages." Eileen Power

+ Nation and Ath 38:21 O 3 '25 1000w

"Mediæval France is a wonderful subject, and at least the illustrations of this most attractive-looking book live up to the theme. They have been collected with great care. But, perhaps unfortunately, Miss Joan Evans seems to have too much to tell us about every aspect of her theme to be able to go into quite enough detail where such detail would be really interesting. But then, after all, Mediæval France gives us so much to read and to look at that it is ungracious to complain. Miss Evans and the Oxford Press between them have produced a delightful book; let that suffice."

+ — New Statesman 25:554 Ag 29 '25 1000w

"Miss Evans's book has the advantage of being easily read, handsomely printed and most interestingly illustrated, while it is equally remote from textbooks and the fashionable 'outlines' of all possible subjects."

+ N Y Times p5 S 13 '25 700w

"When it is admitted that Miss Evans is quite unoriginal and that she has limited her survey to certain aspects only of life in France in the Middle Ages there is little to be said that is not favorable to this handsome and interesting volume." S: C. Chew

+ — N Y Tribune p12 O 11 '25 800w

"Miss Evans deserves praise for the skill with which she has traced main outlines, the taste and intelligence she shows in presenting her material. Enthusiasm and learning controlled by good sense and good taste, will nearly always produce a readable book. As an introduction, a stimulus to the study of medieval France, Miss Evan's book should be of great use."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p453 J1 9 '25 1600w

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE. Spanish Acres. 303p $2 Little

25-15850

Spanish Acres is a vast tract of Texas cattle country, forty by sixty miles in extent. More than one man has a covetous eye on the land, but since the exile of the Indians and Porter's subsequent death the hacienda lies deserted and the little 'dobe village falls into ruin. Tom Langford, owner of the Bar 2 Bell ranch wants the place to add to his own acres. Hollister wants it too, tho his purpose is to make it a sheep range and to bring back the Indians to their pueblo. Coulard, the silent enemy of both, works the two men against one another. He nurses their rivalry, hoping to force them to come to grips and destroy each other. But Hollister realizes his purpose, and with the help of the Indians, the government and his best girl, he brings justice to the Palo Verdes and lifts the curse from Spanish Acres.

Booklist 22:116 D '25

"It is a very real Western story, this 'Spanish Acres,' in itself well worth reading and it possesses, in common with any good tale of that period the ineffable charm that belongs to 'old, unhappy far-off things and battles long ago.'" S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '25 420w

"Superstition, stirring fights and a good love story are combined in this book."

+ N Y World p5m O 11 '25 70w

"A good tale of what was the Old Southwest, by a man who knows it."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 20 '25 200w
Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

EWART, JOHN SKIRVING. Roots and causes of the wars (1914-1918). 2v 676:677-1204p $12.50 Doran

940.311 European war, 1914-1918—Causes
25-9076

In his searching and impartial analysis of the origins of the World war, the author treats it not as one war but a number of wars waged by the nations, some as principles, some as accessories and others as associates. He distinguishes between roots and precipitating causes and from a close and detailed study of documentary material discloses the reasons for the entrance into the war of each of the participants. The inquiry takes him into the intricacies of relations among the European nations for years before the war.

"A notable and distinguished addition to the war literature of the day." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 2 '25 720w

"The most important, the most lucid, and, I hope, the most far-reaching analysis of world-politics in their relation to the Great War that has yet been written. Out of their own mouths he judges each politician and each country." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p1 J1 3 '25 1950w

"This is a very important contribution to a widening debate. . . The book should be in every public library. It is a mine of invaluable data." F: Bausman

+ Nation 121:212 Ag 19 '25 1050w

"Mr. Ewart has a lively and acute mind, and his analysis and opinions are often valuable, but the real value of his book consists in the vast mass of facts bearing on his subject which he has collected and the admirable way in which they are set out."

+ Nation and Ath 37:767 S 26 '25 250w

"The most considerable and, in many ways, the best book on the subject which has appeared in English. . . Two general criticisms of The Roots and Causes of the War may be noted. The author does not always distinguish between the relative value of his authorities, and often omits to call attention to material which would weaken his argument and which opposing counsel would be quick to pounce upon. And he is apparently unacquainted with such German, Italian, and Russian sources as have not been translated into English or French. Yet it is a remarkable tribute to his perspicacity and acute analysis of the material at his disposal that he so often comes to correct conclusions." S. B. Fay

+ — New Repub 44:49 S 2 '25 1100w

"Whatever the standard of appraisal it may with safety he said that no study of the subject quite comparable to Mr. Ewart's two stout volumes in thoroughness, penetration and destructiveness has yet come from an English pen." W: MacDonald

+ N Y Times p1 My 24 '25 3050w

R of Rs 72:110 J1 '25 250w

St Louis p413 N '25

"It is a book which cannot be neglected, and many of the chapters will be of very high value to all students of the subject."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p747 N 12 '25 1100w

EYTON, JOHN SEYMOUR. Jungle born. 294p il $2 Century [7s 6d Arrowsmith]

25-6699

The beauty and the cruelty of the jungle are portrayed in this singular story of Nanga and Parmala, children of the jungle. Sixteen years before Nanga's parents had been killed by the man-eating tiger of the Ridge, leaving their boy baby to the mercy of jungle beasts. A mother ape fosters the child, and Nanga grows to young manhood knowing no other companionship than that of apes. With the coming of Parmala, the daughter of Piri Ram, into the life of Nanga, comes also the dawning of self-consciousness, for hers is the first human face he has ever looked upon. Their meeting is the beginning of a strange tale of love and adventure in which the tiger of the Ridge plays a terrifying part.

Cleveland p123 D '25

"'Jungle-Born' may strike one as over-fanciful and impossible, but it is interesting, and not the least entertaining features are the pictures by Mary Sherwood Wright." E. A. H.

+ — Lit R p9 Mr 28 '25 330w

"It is very delicately, very delightfully told, and frames in the atmosphere of wild life an idyllic love-story. Slight as it is, it must be recognized as a distinct achievement."

+ Living Age 324:273 Ja 31 '25 100w

N Y Times p27 Je 14 '25 260w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

EYTON, JOHN SEYMOUR—Continued

"The secret of his rare accomplishment rests mainly in the exquisite quality of his prose, in the sheer mastery of writing without which the basic materials of the story could have been distorted into the likeness of another 'Tarzan.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:763 My 16 '25 500w

"The story has vitality as a narrative of the wild and its intimate descriptions of jungle life and Indian thought are to be commended."

+ Springfield Republican p7a My 31 '25 200w

F

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. The heavens; tr. by E. E. Fournier d'Albe. 336p il $5 Lippincott [15s Unwin]

520 Astronomy [25-7237]

"The work is divided into twenty-five lessons, or chapters, and of these all, except three, are concerned with the solar system, and principally with an elementary presentation of its mechanics. There is a preliminary lesson on simple geometry."—Nature

"He has the art of so elucidating the wonders of astronomy as to make them intelligible not only to the man in the street, but also to the children who continue to revel in his descriptions of insect life."

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '25 500w

"For lucidity of style, for simplicity of language, and for felicity in illustration, this book on descriptive astronomy is probably unique. Many passages are quite poetical, while the charm of others lies in their wealth of descriptive allusions. Even the elementary mechanics become absorbing when clothed in such vivid language, and the explanation of how the earth is weighed, and of such subjects as parallax, inertia, and centrifugal force, are presented in a most attractive style." A. L. C.

+ Nature 115:188 F 7 '25 300w

"The book has admirable imaginative accuracy. But the reviewer thinks 'The Heavens' will bring the keenest joy to those who already know Fabre as the poet and prophet of the insect world." C. Johnston

+ N Y Times p10 J1 5 '25 1750w

"The plan of the book is simple and effective. The descriptions are severely simple and lucid, and convey to the reader the dignity of the subject in a way that cannot fail to be impressive. Each point is made clear and graphic by reference to some well-known principle or process that offers an analogy." C. H. Payne

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 21 '25 750w

"The professional astronomer will at once recognize that parts of the book creak and groan with old age. But the book was not written for the professional astronomer. We wish to recommend it in the highest terms to the friends of the stars, the amateur and the beginner." S. A. Mitchell

+ N Y World p3m Ag 2 '25 450w

"Although this is intended for the layman and even for children, the reader must be prepared for the stiff dose of mathematics which is essential to any real study of astronomy."

Outlook 140:194 Je 3 '25 50w

St Louis p341 S 25

"The elementary explanations of astronomical measurements and movements, well illustrated with clear diagrams, naturally still hold good, but in view of the existence in English of numerous works by the late R. A. Proctor, the late Sir Robert Ball, and other more recent writers of popular astronomical books, the necessity for this translation of a French work of pre-Proctor days is not readily apparent."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p831 D 4 '24 300w

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Wonder book of plant life; tr. by Bernard Miall. 410p il $5 Lippincott [15s Unwin]

581 Plants. Botany—Physiology

The great naturalist gives the fruit of his minute and loving observation of plant life in a book which is simple and at the same time poetical. It is an account of the organization, structure and growth of plants and of such particular subjects as the sleep of plants, the movements of leaves, the flow of sap and the mysteries of fertilization. There are many illustrations, some of them of real beauty.

Boston Transcript p6 Je 13 '25 450w

"This book is almost, if not quite, as fascinating as the famous naturalist's famous works on insects."

+ Nation and Ath 36:504 Ja 3 '25 100w

"It is a book right readable and well expressed, the kind of book that adults buy with praiseworthy intent to give to their children, but on opening it find it so interesting that they defer the gift until they have read it through." C. de Kay

+ N Y Times p10 Je 14 '25 1750w

"His book is truly full of wonders and things the world has found it very important to know. He has to deal with the hard terms of science, but does so plainly and simply."

+ Sat R 139:36 Ja 10 '25 160w

"The truth about the book appears to be this: it is rather crammed with error, and when it is right is uninteresting."

— Sat R of Lit 2:53 Ag 15 '25 280w

"Except for various individual and unmis-takable Fabre passages, one might almost think it had been written by a son, inspired with his father's knowledge and steeped in his spiritual atmosphere. Fabre is, as it were, on holiday. That almost painful concentration and relentlessness of observation is not called into play as it is in the insect books. He has wandered into the world of green and golden mystery, where the secret is forever almost (but never quite) revealed, where we seek our Host, that we may thank Him for what Fabre so beautifully calls 'a frail magnificence.' For a time his benignant face is bent over the gentler doings of the plant world—factories of gum and resin and aromatic oils. He is here primarily the observer, full of wonder." Mary Webb

+ Spec 134:471 Mr 21 '25 580w

"This illustrated book on plants is less racy than those describing his observations on insects, but has much of his persuasive charm. His information has occasionally to be supplemented, and his translator once corrects him on a point of chemistry. But the attraction of Fabre's writing will always appeal to many readers with little taste for more formal treatises; and except for an occasional blur the translator reflects his author clearly and well."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p863 D 18 '24 420w

FAIRBANK, JANET (AYER) (MRS KELLOGG FAIRBANK). The Smiths. 433p $2 Bobbs

25-10884

Two romances run parallel with each other in this drama of modern life—that of Peter and Ann, and that of the city of Chicago. Peter and his pretty wife begin their married life in a humble little home on the edge of the city. Peter is the type of American husband whose business is his first concern. A founder, his ambition is to become an iron master, and with the gradual rise of the Smiths from obscurity to prominence is also depicted the steady growth of Chicago. To the Smiths come children, happiness, some sorrow and disappointments and to the city, fire, panic, strikes—all of which Peter and his wife happily survive. Ann in her old age, a wealthy widow, is the same independent and alert body that she was the day Peter married her, loved and respected by her grandchildren.

"Will be deservedly popular with nearly all classes of readers."

+ Booklist 22:33 O '25

Boston Transcript p5 Jl 26 '25 1050w

Cleveland p107 N '25

"Her book has value not only as a competent work of art, but as a social document—a document whose value will increase with time."

H: B. Fuller

+ Int Bk R p663 S '25 1000w

Reviewed by Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 Jl 18 '25 250w

"The theme is fascinating, and it has captured Mrs. Fairbank's imagination. She deals with it comprehensively and impartially; and whether it is finance, big business, politics, love, matrimony, pleasure that occupies her, she manages to make the subject interesting and even dramatic." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 38:326 N 28 '25 200w

"The Smiths is literally a homespun book, firm in texture and true." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 43:187 Jl 8 '25 450w

"It is certainly good. But is it good enough? Somehow the epic scale seems to demand an epic grandeur; and we do not get that. Not that Miss Fairbank gives the impression of having aimed at it and missed; her air of competence and success is unquestionable." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:306 D 19 '25 350w

"The Smiths' is intended to be an epic of Chicago's growth. But the novel falls short of its objective. Mrs. Fairbank's descriptions might apply to any American town, and not necessarily to a Western town, at that. One constantly comes upon familiar names and incidents. But there is always the feeling that the author is depending upon hearsay and facts culled from books. It is only when she swings into the years that she knows, because she has lived through them herself, that her material becomes plastic and plausible."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 28 '25 620w

"A sound, honest, well informed novel, distinctly above mediocrity if a little less than inspired." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p8 Je 14 '25 1000w

N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 260w

"A serious and distinguished work whose breadth and richness of materials far outweigh the minor flaws perceptible in its technical structure and method of narration. Those who care for fiction which pictures life clearly, realistically, competently, yet without any of the strong odors which arise from sex laboratories, can scarcely find better reading among the current novels than 'The Smiths.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:919 Jl 18 '25 580w

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p741 N 5 '25 200w

FAIRBRIDGE, DOROTHEA. Lady Anne Barnard at the Cape of Good Hope, 1797-1802. 344p il $10 Oxford [30s Milford]

B or 92 Barnard, Anne (Lindsay), lady. Cape of Good Hope [25-9810]

"The author of 'Auld Robin Gray,' also of a journal and memoirs which probably never will see the light, is here presented as a writer of voluminous letters. Lady Anne (born Lindsay), after many years in the best social life of London, married Andrew Barnard, twelve years her junior. A few years thereafter she went with him to the far distant Cape Town, just taken from the Dutch, where for six years he served as colonial secretary. Most of these letters were written to the Earl of Macartney, friend and patron of the Barnards, who went out with them to act as Governor of the colony, but who returned to England within a year."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:379 Jl '25

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '25 1400w

"The letters do not add greatly to our knowledge of South African history, but they give an interesting picture of official society at the Cape, and bring us into contact with a very charming character, Lady Anne herself, and with her husband Andrew Barnard. The explanatory narrative which accompanies the letters is full and clear, and adequate explanations of various points referred to in them are usually given. Lady Anne was no mean artist, and her pictures of men and scenes at the Cape add greatly to the interest and value of the book." H. L.

Eng Hist R 40:468 Jl '25 160w

"A delightful volume. One acquires a liking for her personality which increases as one reads the book. And one is constantly amused by her comments on life and people."

+ Ind 114:422 Ap 11 '25 100w

"Lady Anne gives an interesting picture of life at the Cape and of the petty maneuvering of small politicians there. The text is illuminated by many of her own drawings, which show her a competent and witty artist as well as letter writer."

+ Nation 121:241 Ag 26 '25 80w

"Her letters, like her character, are remarkable for their charming vivacity; but the appeal is romantic." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:649 F 7 '25 120w

"The charm of this entertaining and well-edited volume is doubled by the reproduction of more than fifty of Lady Anne's landscape and portrait drawings, sensitive and witty."

+ New Statesman 24:660 Mr 14 '25 1150w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

N Y Tribune p10 Ap 26 '25 470w

"As entertaining a volume as any of its kind, embellished with more than fifty of the writer's delicious drawings." Hamish Miles

+ Sat R of Lit 2:98 S 5 '25 900w

"The picture of life at the Cape in the first days of the English occupation as presented by Lady Anne is extremely interesting in itself; but it is her rich personality, ardent, witty, gay, that gives the chief charm to the book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p113 F 19 '25 2050w

FARIGOULE, LOUIS. See Romains, J., pseud.

FARINGTON, JOSEPH. Farington diary; ed. by James Greig; v 4, September 20, 1806, to January 7, 1808. 291p il $7.50 Doran [21s Hutchinson]

B or 92

23-7187

The fourth volume of Joseph Farington's diary carries his minute record from September, 1806 to January, 1808. As in the earlier volumes Farington's entries relate most frequently to art and artists.

Booklist 21:337 Je '25

Bookm 61:607 Jl '25 200w

Reviewed by A. H. Wharton

Lit R p6 Je 20 '25 1100w

"Farington's Diary is a useful, readable book; and if there are not many large plums in this record of other men's small talk and of their habits at the dinner-table, there is a plentiful store of damsons and berries." Augustine Birrell

+ New Statesman 24:421 Ja 17 '25 1300w

"The glimpses into the intimate life of the early nineteenth century, which we owe to Joseph Farington, continue to be quite entertaining."

+ Sat R 138:550 N 29 '24 160w

"To turn over Farington's pages is rather like going into the Soane Museum; there is a certainty of lighting on something pretty good, and endless possibilities of minor interest in the varied but disconnected mass of bric-a-

FARINGTON, JOSEPH—Continued
brac. There is no denying the piquancy and historic value of many of these entries."
 + The Times [London] Lit Sup p790 N 27 '24 750w

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON. When America was young. 372p il $6 Harper

917.3 United States—History. United States
 —Social life and customs 25-19574

"A five-page bibliography shows how wide and thorough has been Mr. Faris's search for his material and the book itself is evidence enough of the ingenuity and the care with which he has classified and pieced together the enormous number of excerpts culled from the many sources consulted. There are sixteen chapters dealing with as many phases of early American life. . . . The volume is profusely illustrated, many of the pictures being from old prints, and its front end-paper is a reproduction of a map of early post routes."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:113 D '25

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
 Bookm 62:613 Ja '26 50w

"It is a well-written book full of quaint discoveries which have been ably described as well for the general public as for the amateur of antiquities. It is a fine example of historical research, attractively presented." D. R.

+ Ind 115:588 N 21 '25 60w

"The book is full of entertaining material, and is attractively illustrated."

+ New Statesman 26:314 D 19 '25 200w

"The book makes an interesting and entertaining mosaic panorama of manners and customs in the days of our forebears."

+ N Y Times p10 N 22 '25 380w

Outlook 141:642 D 23 '25 50w

"Much interesting material has been gathered from old letters and other contemporary manuscripts. The illustrations are authentic and pertinent."

+ R of Rs 72:558 N '25 60w

"It is not so much a book as a curio shop of valuable antiques, with the customary quaint old pictures on the walls. A vast amount of industry has gone into the collection. It is a pleasant place in which to loiter."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:349 N 28 '25 120w

"No book so compact of extracts from a multitude of sources can make easy continuous reading, however well the matter be grouped to give each chapter the semblance of a thread of narrative. The author, however, has done his best, and it is a good best. The volume is full of pleasant pickings, and it will be a boon to future writers on American early history."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p850 D 10 '25 1200w

FARJEON, ELEANOR. Mighty men; v 1, From Achilles to Julius Caesar; v 2, From Beowulf to William the conqueror. v 1-2 97;112p ea $1 Appleton

(25-20047)

If apology is needed for presenting heroes of legend along with heroes of history the writer finds it in the fact that both alike kindle the childish imagination and awaken an ideal. "From Achilles to Julius Caesar" contains stories of mighty men of the south, "From Beowulf to William the conqueror," of the north of Europe. The two volumes are illustrated by Hugh Chesterman.

Booklist 22:168 Ja '26

"They are good stories to read aloud. Always the boy is asking 'Tell me a hero story.' Here is a fresh treatment of the time when there were giants in those days."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 14 '25 160w

"Each little story is very short, but juicily sweet in style and fancy. The pictures, in black and white, chaste and fanciful little pictures, catch perfectly the needs of the text."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:279 N 7 '25 250w

FARJEON, JOSEPH JEFFERSON. Uninvited guests. 362p $2 Dial press

25-10697

"Brambles, the dilapidated yet comfortable country house where all the queer things happen, is a delightful sort of place, English, of course. To Brambles come the uninvited guests: a motley crew, who appear at the most unexpected hours and on the most impossible errands. Singly and in procession they arrive to trouble the calm of Ambrose Blythe, sexagenarian owner of Brambles, and of Peter Haslam, his house guest. Add to these an imperturbable butler, a tragic-eyed damsel and a fat commercial traveler and you have the varied ingredients of an absorbing story that most people will devour at one sitting."—N Y Times

"John Grant is a detective of parts. And he never did a cleverer bit of work than this. Likewise, Mr. Farjeon."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 27 '25 350w
Cleveland p87 S '25

"The love interest is charming and the villains more or less attractive. In fact it is a most interesting yarn and the reader's interest never flags." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p9 My 23 '25 230w

"Uninvited Guests" is a subtly contrived tale; mystifying, yet without any of the unpleasantly grewsome situations upon which so many shilling shockers depend."

+ N Y Times p17 My 24 '25 400w

"The author of 'Uninvited Guests' writes well, and his characters, without detriment to the plot, are quite a different breed of cats from the usual inhabitants of mysterious fiction."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 7 '25 200w

"Even for the most crime-weary reader the harvest is rich and the winnowing desirable. You simply must not overlook J. J. Farjeon's 'Uninvited Guests.'" Donald Douglas

+ N Y World p10s My 31 '25 100w

Sat R of Lit 1:899 Jl 11 '25 200w

"The detective who is called in to solve the mystery is a good figure, and has some agreeably human qualities to distinguish him from his kind. Indeed, in the drawing of most of his people Mr. Farjeon makes us suspect that he has a gift for the creation of character to which the detective story hardly gives full scope."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p546 Ag 20 '25 220w

FARNHAM, DWIGHT THOMPSON, and others. Profitable science in industry. 291p $3.50 (15s) Macmillan

658.57 Scientific management. Industrial research 25-2887

Mr Farnham's introductory chapter on the principles of scientific management in industry is followed by chapters on methods of research in different industries, by various writers. Contents: Introduction, by Dwight T. Farnham; Scientific research and the progress of the electrical industries, by R. W. King; The X-Rays, by R. W. King; Earning power of chemical research, by H. E. Howe; Profit earning research, by H. E. Howe; The waste problem—methods of procedure toward research, by H. E. Howe; Contributions of scientific research to the development of mechanical engineering, by J. A. Hall; Relation of research to high speed machinery and the mechanical working of metal, by J. A. Hall; Progress in textile machinery—an example of profitable science, by J. A. Hall; Scientific vs. casual management, by D. T. Farnham; Results of scientific management, by D. T. Farnham; Scientific research as an association activity, by H. E. Howe.

"The manner of presentation is simple, popular and in parts admirable. It is the kind of reading that would make a 'tired business man' forget his mental fog, provide him with a story or two to tell his friend tomorrow and, let us hope will deepen his respect and admiration for the modest scientific toilers." W. N. Polakov

+ Am Management R 14:140 Ap '25 570w
Booklist 22:14 O '25

"The unusual manner of presentation, combined with the professional calibre of the authors, makes the book an exceedingly useful one and one which makes a strong case for scientific management." J. G.

+ Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 100w

"Mr. Farnham discusses with the skill of an expert all phases of scientific management, while Dr. Howe in his single chapter takes up a study of scientific research. The whole discussion is informing and interesting to even the non-technical reader." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 14 '25 160w

"Profitable Science in Industry" is a valuable contribution. It will be read and re-read by many. It will convince the thinking man that he should consider research in building up an organization and developing an industry." Alexander Silverman and E. V. Hjort

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:436 Ap '25 750w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p339 My 14 '25 30w

FARNOL, JEFFERY. Loring mystery. 344p
$2 Little [7s 6d Low]

24-22004

"This here is a murder as should interest you uncommon, sir!" So old Jasper Shrig announces the discovery in the river of the mutilated body of David Loring, twenty-four, gentleman of Virginia, rightful heir to Loring Chase in Sussex. Happily it was not David Loring. How cruel Sir Nevil Loring met his end, how suspicion fastens on his passionate and rebellious ward whom David greatly loves, how a ghost walks at night, and how old Jasper Shrig of Bow street wends his way thru devious trails straight to the mark, thereby resolving all doubts and restoring to David's arms his Lady of the flaming hair—and spirit—is to be found in Jeffery Farnol's new tale of mystery and romance.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

"Another delicious yarn." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 980w

"His novel, as always, bears the Farnol stamp, and is distinctive, ingenious, and will furnish a very pleasant evening to readers who like tales of romance and mystery." F. F. Kelly

+ Int Bk R p352 Ap '25 520w

"Jeffery Farnol has done two things in 'The Loring Mystery.' He has written a romantic tale in the grand manner and at the same time penned a detective and mystery yarn that might well serve as a model for some of the present-day mystery-mongers." C. M. Morrison

+ Lit R p4 Mr 21 '25 550w

"The Loring Mystery' is a good thriller. It has about everything you could ask for, surprise, sentiment, excitement, and some capable comedy—rather high comedy at times, for Mr. Farnol has a graceful pen."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 8 '25 750w

N Y Tribune p10 My 10 '25 150w

"Mr. Farnol has attempted to combine a detective story with a romance of his usual type. The result is not happy. Detective Shrig's more or less comic conversation, with its missing h's and transposed w's and v's, has a grotesque suggestion of Sam Weller, minus all that makes the one and only Samivel immortal."

— Outlook 139:503 Ap 1 '25 200w

"It is melodrama without one single rag of disguise, and not intended for those who are unable to accept romantic conventions. Heroes are out and out heroic, and villains double dyed in their villainy. Justice is poetic and sentiment unashamed. It is really a rattling good yarn. Jeffery Farnol has a knack of making the impossible seem, for the time, real."

Sat R of Lit 1:649 Ap 4 '25 360w

Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 22 '25 300w

"A breezy, bustling story this, but the author makes the mistake of overcrowding his canvas and of overstretching the long arm of coincidence."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 12 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:112 Ap '25

FARNSWORTH, BURT BYRON. Practical psychology for men and women in the industries and professions, and for the general reader. [new and rev ed] 349p il $2.50 Sully 150 Psychology 25-11369

Simply and clearly written, this book is an introductory text applying the fundamental principles of psychology to personal development and the daily task. Several chapters have been added in this new edition as well as questions on each chapter and an index.

"Professor Farnsworth here contrives to popularize modern psychology without sacrifice of its scientific character, and to make his book useful to the student without lessening the value of its appeal to the man in the street."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 2 '25 350w

"Prof. Farnsworth is eminently practical in his treatment of the subject of psychology. He takes the human mind apart and puts it together again. If he has overlooked any emotion or feeling it is hard to discover the fact. The 'misunderstood' should welcome this book as shedding much daylight on their problems."

N Y World p4m S 20 '25 160w

FAULKNER, HAROLD UNDERWOOD. American economic history. (Harper's historical ser.) 721p il $3.50 Harper

330.973 United States—Economic conditions 24-21096

"This is an economic history written by a historian. The author stresses economic causes and explanations rather than most economists would. It is obviously intended for a textbook but ought to appeal to the general reader. Many interesting quotations from contemporaries, are introduced into the text. The presentation of the subject is aided by a large number of maps, graphs and statistical tables. At the end of each chapter are 'Notes for Further Reference' and also 'Selected Readings' which are properly intended for teaching assignments. The index is unusually adequate. Three chapters will be of especial interest to social worker, Labor in the Colonies, Social Background of the Formative Period and The Labor Movement."—Survey

"An excellent text, which while similar in method to Bogart's Economic history of the United States is more detailed and better adapted for college use."

+ Booklist 21:327 Je '25

Boston Transcript p5 D 10 '24 380w

"On the whole, the book is satisfying: it is well organized, broad in outline, and likely to prove suggestive to the student. If the author leans too heavily upon secondary material for the accounts of our later years, particularly in the chapter on the labor movement, he partly justifies himself by selecting this material with unusual discrimination. Otherwise the sources given under 'Notes for Further References' are well chosen and so arranged and described that they stand ready for the use of the advanced student." Alzada Comstock

+ J Pol Econ 33:361 Je '25 620w

"The style is pleasing and the reader's interest well maintained. The treatment shows a wide range of reading."

+ Survey 53:365 D 15 '24 200w

FAUSSET, HUGH I'ANSON. John Donne: a study in discord. 318p $3.50 Harcourt [12s 6d J. Cape]

B or 92 Donne, John [25-6265]

"Here is a large book about a small poet whom it is the current fashion to proclaim a great genius. Mr. Fausset has taken the known facts of Donne's life—little more than a series of dates—and collating them with his poetry and his macabre apocalyptic sermons produces a kind of psycho-analytic study of Donne."—Sat R

Booklist 21:299 My '25

Bookm 62:96 S '25 200w

"Mr. Fausset's critical biography, or, as he calls it 'A Study in Discord' is probably the most lucid of all [the books about Donne], the book which best interprets the man." Karl Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p5 F 21 '25 2550w

"Sometimes didactic, over-decorated, and carelessly familiar, this accurately denominated study in discord, strives with Freudian energy to commemorate a man 'compact of sensuality and sublime longings.'"—

Dial 79:79 J1 '25 60w

"A valuable contribution to the literature of a genuinely original man in English letters."

+ Ind 114:480 Ap 25 '25 60w

"It is probably not too much to say that Donne's personality has here been explored somewhat more profoundly than ever before. Any one will be richly repaid for the time spent in reading this volume, be he student, philosopher or a casual reader." A. R. Turner

+ Lit R p7 Ap 25 '25 850w

"The writer is one of those critics who care a great deal more about the meaning of facts than about the facts themselves. It might not be unfair to say that the facts matter scarcely at all to his vision of the truth. At any rate he does not seem to have taken excessive pains to make sure that his information was correct." Jacob Zeitlin

+ Nation 121:235 Ag 26 '25 1200w

"Whatever faults his book may have (and what book is free from them?) are more than compensated by its achievements. Mr. Fausset writes with the eloquence of conviction; one might add, with the artifices of eloquence; he interests, excites, convinces his reader. He also provokes query and dissent; and this is all to the good, for one either has to accept what he says or to find solid reasons for disagreement." R: Aldington

+ Nation and Ath 36:220 N 8 '24 1450w

"Throughout the book, the reader is illuminated by flashes of insight and presented with thoughts about Donne which force attention and meditation. It is a book which few contemporary critics could have achieved, and one which everybody who cares for English seventeenth century poetry will have to read. I do not know where a more stimulating book on Donne is to be found." R: Aldington

+ New Repub 42:164 Ap 1 '25 1150w

"The effect of this irritating, interesting book is to make one feel how little value Donne's life has compared with the living portion of his work; and feel, also, the irony that it should be so." F. L. Lucas

New Statesman 24:112 N 1 '24 2350w

N Y Times p7 F 15 '25 1950w

"Mr. Fausset's book belongs to the species of imaginative biography; it is continuous in its narrative, even where the evidence is fragmentary. His divination is often most happy." L: I. Bredvold

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 15 '25 750w

"To the reader of poetry it may be of some interest, but it is certainly of no importance, to know that Donne was a hypocritical sensualist and a parasite who by continuous flunkeyism became Dean of St. Paul's; although it may be granted that if so acceptable an end ever justified so odious a means the sermons do justify it. What is of importance is the thing done, the man's poetry, and if that is difficult to understand (which it is not) as it is difficult to read (which it is) no insistence upon the poet's carnal nature or the discord promoted in his personality by his physical and spiritual neuroses can help our appreciation. Mr. Fausset's insistence, his unwearied but wearisome insistence, upon Donne's sensuality is most trenchant." A. E. Coppard

— Sat R 138:449 N 1 '24 580w

"In his monograph, Mr. Fausset has hacked Donne about to make him fit into the framework, Sinner to Saint; he has exaggerated and misstated the discordancy in Donne's soul. Still, he gives us a vigorous and dramatic life of somebody, and illustrates his life with excellent quotations from Donne's works." Alan Porter

+ Spec 134:122 Ja 24 '25 800w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p647 O 16 '24 2250w

FAWCETT, MILLICENT (GARRETT) (MRS HENRY FAWCETT). What I remember. 271p $4.50 Putnam [12s 6d Unwin]

B or 92 Woman suffrage [25-4122]

"The old Suffolk town of Aldeburgh is the starting-point of Mrs. Fawcett's memories, which go back to the middle of last century. She grew up in a large and joyous family and she was barely twenty when she married Henry Fawcett, and thereby became a person of consequence among the Cambridge Liberals of fifty years ago. There could hardly be a more rigorous education in public affairs than that which she underwent as the helpmeet of a blind economist and politician, and the world has long known how thoroughly she profited by it. Mrs. Fawcett was a suffragist by nature, and her devotion to the cause began with her political life. Her memories of parliamentary speaking cover the whole half-century of the struggle."—New Statesman

Reviewed by Edmund Noble

Boston Transcript p3 F 14 '25 2800w

"The chief historical importance of 'What I Remember' lies in Mrs. Fawcett's story of the growth of the movement in which she was so deeply interested. The book is filled with amusing and touching stories of a great procession of people of all sorts, humble and grand." I. M. Tarbell

Lit R p1 Je 13 '25 1550w

Nation and Ath 36:532 Ja 10 '25 300w

"Agreeable volume. Its incidents and touches of character are often as revealing as they are entertaining."

+ New Statesman 24:542 F 14 '25 500w

Outlook 140:224 Je 10 '25 10w

St Louis p358 S '25

"Mrs. Fawcett, though not exhilarating, is readable." Stephen Gwynn

Spec 134:sup462 Mr 21 '25 130w

"She tells innumerable interesting anecdotes of other people, important politically, or merely pleasant as acquaintances, and yet she leaves us without any feeling of intimacy with herself; and that, many times, is the best reason for an autobiography. However, the volume as a whole is a readable, well-balanced account of the struggles and ultimate successes of the suffragist movement."

+ Spring'd Republican p6 Je 1 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p810 D 4 '24 1300w

FAY, MRS. ELIZA. Original letters from India (1779-1815); with introductory and terminal notes by E. M. Forster. 307p $3.50 Harcourt [15s Hogarth]

915.4 India—Description and travel

25-13075

"'Original Letters from India,' is the first edition to be printed in England [or America] of a book that appeared in Calcutta in 1817 and which has since twice been reprinted there. The original text, which apparently was tampered with in the volume which came out under the auspices of the Calcutta Historical Society in 1908, has now been carefully restored by Mr. E. M. Forster."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"Her viewpoints are unforgettable, likewise her style. She is tremendously alive, even today, through the vitality of her writings, always personal, always pointed."

+ Bookm 62:91 S '25 150w

"Not only is this a marvelous character study of a society we have forgotten or never known; it is a historical picture of India in 1800." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 15 '25 1950w

"If we do not agree with [the introductory] statement that 'Eliza Fay is a work of art,' we can sincerely admire her as a plucky, enterprising Englishwoman of the middle class, and an expert housewife, whose character is only besmirched for the reader in Mr. Forster's censorious criticisms of her life in his terminal notes. The letters are of little historical or literary value." H. Glynn-Ward

Int Bk R p800 N '25 550w

"Now and again one happens on a diary or sheaf of letters which humanize history and disclose a unique individual. Eliza Fay's book, first published more than a hundred years ago, is brought to light again because of its value as a human document." F. O'Brien

+ Lit R p2 J1 11 '25 600w

"There can be no doubt about the fascination of Mrs. Fay. Her descriptive powers, her capacity for pungent criticism, her robust sense of humour, and—more remarkable, perhaps, than these—the boundless vitality of her style make her Letters truly exciting and delightful." J. Beresford

+ Nation and Ath 37:239 My 23 '25 800w

Reviewed by K. A. Porter

New Repub 44:77 S 9 '25 860w

"Mrs. Fay's style is all her own; her grammar is indifferent, her construction extraordinary. But she has that rare gift of being able in some strange way to make her personality shine out through the mist of misshapen sentences and contorted clauses."

+ New Statesman 25:346 J1 4 '25 520w

N Y Times p10 J1 19 '25 850w

"The charm of her style consists in its incongruities of detail; on almost every page occurs some odd twist of a grandiose phrase which provokes a smile. She is conventional and unexpected, formal and suddenly forthright." Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p1 J1 19 '25 1550w

"Mr. Forster must be confirmed in the essential point that, whatever she may have done or been or written, Mrs. Fay never fails to deserve our interest and compel our admiration. He characterizes her very justly as frank, naïve, courageous, humorous, gallant, lively, observant, and so forth: but it is difficult to see why he feels that she was tiresome and irritating to the people around her. Even his strictures on her grammar are over-severe. But it is probable that Mr. Forster knows more of his author than he has seen fit to reveal." E. Davison

+ Sat R 139:648 Je 13 '25 750w

"Why it should not have been reprinted earlier is somewhat of a mystery, for her letters are among the most delightful of the simpler annals of travel, and have a freshness of interest that neither remoteness of time or scene in the least impairs." Amy Loveman

+ Sat R of Lit 1:908 J1 18 '25 700w

"Mrs. Fay needs no mayonnaise, or any other sauce than her native liveliness. Next to Mr. Forster's own Passage to India there is no other passage to that country as well worth following as this, or as likely to remain stuck fast in the mind of the fortunate reader."

+ Spec 135:200 Ag 1 '25 1000w

"A unique and interesting collection." Sydney Greenbie

+ Springf'd Republican p5a S 13 '25 920w

"Her vignettes of people are venomous but alive; she herself is always positive, superior, and virtuous."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p361 My 28 '25 1200w

FEBVRE, LUCIEN PAUL VICTOR, and BATAILLON, LIONEL. Geographical introduction to history; tr. by E. G. Mountford and J. H. Paxton. (History of civilization ser.) 388p il $6 Knopf [16s K. Paul]

901 Anthropogeography. Man—Influence of environment. Sociology [25-9476]

"Of the two factors, Race and Geography, which have exerted so important an influence on the development of civilization, Professor Febvre has chosen the latter for treatment. Approaching this subject from many angles, he deals with the influence of climate on the human organism, the determination of natural areas and their boundaries, the adaptation of means of life to varying geographical features and with the conflict between artificial political groupings and natural human aggregates. The volume concludes with an outline of the task before the geographer, and the methods by which it may be attacked."—Publisher's note

"The book is a notable contribution to the problem of human geography. M. Febvre steers a clear course through the maze of theory that surrounds the subject. He avoids the pitfall of assuming any necessary connection between the culture of a community and the natural surroundings in which it lives. . . The atmosphere of the book is somewhat strange for the English reader. He is taken at once into the world of French studies: the instances are drawn from that country, and the author's heroes or villains are usually French." W. J. Perry

+ Nation and Ath 37:374 Je 20 '25 800w

"That is not a good name for the book, nor is 'The Earth and Human Evolution' much better. That was the head title of the original French edition of 1922. Really it is a study, and a very sound and critical one, of the attempts that have been made to apply geography to history. . . Of course he is best read in French geography. His admiration for Vidal de la Blache comes near to worship. But after all this is at every point a historian's work, not a geographer's. Febvre has not shown in the book any fitness to write a geographical introduction to history." Mark Jefferson

+ N Y Tribune p19 O 25 '25 1050w

"As a whole this book is probably the most thoroughgoing critique of the Ratzel stage of anthropogeography, and the most adequate invitation to soul-searching on the part of anthropogeographers which has yet been produced. It is a more thorough piece of work on this subject than has been brought out by any of the cultural anthropologists or historians. The chief criticism of it is the worshipful discipleship and Gallicanism which exudes from nearly every page." H. E. Barnes

+ Sat R of Lit 1:874 J1 4 '25 1000w

"A masterpiece of criticism, as witty as it is well-informed, and teeming with nice observations and delicate turns of argument and phrase."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p324 My 14 '25 1350w

FEDDEN, KATHERINE WALDO (DOUGLAS) HUNTER (MRS ROMILLY FEDDEN). Peacock's tail. 243p $2 Houghton

25-19827

The story is laid in Morocco during the world war. An American in the British Intelligence service is sent to the Anjera hills to discover the truth about a Spanish plot to wrest French Morocco from France. The young officer meets the daring and beautiful girl who is the guiding spirit in the plot. From her English father she has inherited a level head and intrepid courage; from her Spanish mother, the fiery patriotism that is her ruling passion. The American and the girl are caught in a sequence of exciting events. Their enmity, springing from purely political causes, is temporary and does not control their hearts.

FEDDEN, KATHERINE W.—Continued

"A delightful story."

+ Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 50w

"Divertingly told, upon a background of rich tropical colors." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p8 D 19 '25 80w

FEIS, HERBERT, ed. Collection of decisions presenting principles of wage settlement. 452p $3.50 Wilson, H.W.

331.2 Wages 25-6055

"This volume furnishes a direct approach to the study of wage settlements. It is the product of a systematic analysis of the wage decisions made in the past by arbitration boards and courts, impartial chairmen and similar authorities, in the United States and abroad. It contains a large collection of original decisions, arranged and edited so as to reveal the chief subjects of wage disputes, the economic problems raised by them, and the various principles which may be used as a basis of wage settlement. In the introductions with which each chapter and decision is prefaced, the economic problems involved are analyzed in the light of general economic doctrine and experience. The arrangement of the cases brings out clearly the significance and limitations of each of the principles presented, it also clarifies the relation of different principles to each other."—Publisher's note

"Every thoughtful student of labor problems should examine Dr. Feis's book. It may not be too much to hope that arbitrators, present and future, will acquaint themselves with its contents. Dr. Feis, by this book, seems to the reviewer to have done the most tangible thing yet to organize our thinking in the matters of wage settlement. The reviewer believes that the addition of an index would have added materially to the book's value as a reference volume." P. E. Batzell

+ Am Management R 14:202 Je '25 1100w

"The cases are carefully edited and the various sections of the book are prefaced with short statements of the principles illustrated, and their place in the whole scheme. Frequent comments and supplementary notes further elucidate individual decisions. Mr. Feis maintains throughout the book the attitude of the editor rather than that of the proponent of any one group of ideas."

Harvard Business R 3:509 Jl '25 250w

"In spite of the limitations of the volume, students of the problem of wage determination are indebted to Professor Feis and to the publishers for access to material which would not be readily available otherwise." B. M. Squires

+ J Pol Econ 33:472 Ag '25 460w

"Each decision has been chosen because of its clarity and because it demonstrates some principle of wage settlement. Study of this book should provide considerable information concerning causes, effects, prevention, and settlement of wage controversies."

+ Management and Adm 9:394 Ap '25 60w

FELDMAN, HERMAN. Regularization of employment; a study in the prevention of unemployment. 437p $3.50 Harper

331.13 Unemployment 25-13657

"Contains the results of an exhaustive study which was begun in the fall of 1921 under the direction of the economic advisory committee of the President's Unemployment Conference and completed and published under the direction of the American Management Association. Dr. Feldman begins by discussing the causes of irregular employment and the evil results which it brings in its train. As to methods of prevention, Dr. Feldman discusses practically all which have been tried or suggested. Control of demand, diversification of output, renovation of sales policies, standardization of styles, anticipation of seasonal and cyclical changes, training and transfer of workers and modern personnel methods all are given attention. The author also treats of social and governmental remedies, including long-range planning of public works, the co-ordination of agencies in the labor market, the transfer of man power from one district to another and various possible methods of 'decasualizing' labor."—Lit R

"To the engineer-constructor the section of Chapter VIII on construction unemployment and the beginning and closing chapters are of most direct value. The other chapters have more direct interest to the sociologist and the manufacturer."

+ Eng N 95:642 O 15 '25 150w

"Dr. Feldman's book represents probably the most thorough study thus far made of the subject of irregular employment. It should have a wide influence in bringing about the adoption of means by which this irregularity may be at least measurably reduced." E. S. Cowdrick

+ Lit R p5 O 3 '25 750w

Management and Adm 10:158 S '25 180w

"There is a vast amount of material in this book. If such a thing is possible, there are too many facts. Their constant pounding makes them almost monotonous. A little of this is due to repetition. Yet it is unfair to find fault with a volume that is so valuable in breadth of information and depth of research. It would be a fine thing for American industry if all haphazard employers who work along hit-and-miss methods would make this book their source of business information." R. C. Feld

+ N Y Times p3 Ag 23 '25 2050w

"Mr. Feldman's careful study of the technique of distribution and sales will interest the industrial manager more than the general reader. His chapter on unemployment insurance gives valuable detailed information on the latest practice in the centers of American experimentation." H. R. Mussey

+ — N Y Tribune p14 N 8 '25 480w

St Louis p403 N '25

"The whole argument of the book is constructive, taking the ground that 'industrial good health is contagious' so that 'every little improvement in regularity of operation made in one concern or locality sends out ripples that help to steady the rest of industry.' Students of management and of industrial problems generally will find it a sane and useful survey of conditions and experiments in their field today."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:243 O '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:227 O '25

FELT, EPHRAIM PORTER. Manual of tree and shrub insects. (Rural manuals) 382p il $3.50 Macmillan

632.6 Trees—Diseases and pests. Insects, Injurious and beneficial 24-19302

"A popular practical work dealing concisely with the insect problem in its relation to forest, shade, and ornamental trees. The author, state entomologist of New York, has given attention to this subject for more than thirty years and is an authority."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:299 My '25

FERBER, EDNA. Old man Minick; a short story; [and] Minick, a play based on the short story, by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman; also a brief and quite gratuitous explanation by the authors. 271p il $2 Doubleday

812 25-5565

"Old man Minick," the short story from which the play "Minick" was made, and the play itself are both printed here. Minick is an independent old man, who at the death of his wife, goes to live with his son and daughter-in-law. Finding that he is much in the way in his son's small apartment, Minick calmly betakes himself to an old man's home where he can live his own life without interfering with others.

Booklist 21:268 Ap '25
Cleveland p88 S '25

"This is a delightful book to own. Aside from its interest to the general reader—and let it be said that there is no trace of 'artiness' about story or play—the book has unusual value for students of the drama." H. B.

+ Lit R p9 F 21 '25 220w

"Miss Ferber is still taking the curse off the theatre; 'Minick' is so irresistibly convincing that this reviewer could scarcely restrain an impulse to enroll in the nearest retreat for old age." J: W. Crawford

+ N Y World p8e Ja 11 '25 650w

"The humor, insight, and reality of dialogue and characterization are what make us remember it as vividly as if the Minicks lived in the next apartment to ours. I don't say that Old Man Minick is as picturesque a figure out of American folk lore as 'Rip Van Winkle,' or even 'Lightnin',' but he certainly deserves a place on the same park bench with these other stage cronies." Rachel Field

+ Sat R of Lit 1:660 Ap 11 '25 300w

"Everyone who has discovered the fascinations of play-building will receive this book, which contains both seed and flower, as well as hints on gardening, with gratitude. To be sure the play suffers somewhat from its proximity to the story which has a certain perfection in its own kind, but even this comparison has its value."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:420 Je '25 120w

FERENCZY, ARPAD. Kunala; an Indian fantasy. 255p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

"In a dense Himalayan forest the gorgeous Kunala, the King of the Parrots, was reproved for his extreme unkindness towards his three and one-half thousand and two high-born wives, by the equally polygamous Cuckoo-King, and justified his marital conduct by narrating, from ten thousand former incarnations (for he was indeed the Lord Buddha), events which completely demonstrated the worthlessness of the female sex. These sixteen stories are drawn from the treasure-house of the Jatakas."—Nation and Ath

"One cannot help thinking that milder language on the Kunala bird's part would have brought more satisfactory results." Will Cuppy

Bookm 62:214 O '25 180w

"The stories are the type that may be read many times without losing any charm. The oriental atmosphere enchants and pleases one for a few passing hours. Let us not take this book of myths seriously, but just enjoy the tidbits of humor and irony that run throughout this pessimistic theme."

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 19 '25 320w

Reviewed by R. W. Thompson

Lit R p5 S 26 '25 420w

Nation 121:764 D 30 '25 50w

"The fantastic, naïve, and at times purely boisterous humor of the fables, quickly dispels the monotony of moral, and indeed neutralizes the inculcation of celibacy."

+ Nation and Ath 37:274 My 30 '25 180w

"Verges on the monotonous. Taking for his theme: 'Women are depraved and dangerous and calamitous,' he twangs out fifteen variations; all of them on one string; all of them in one mood."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 16 '25 650w

"The method in which the Kunala bird relates these adventures of the beasts when involved with women is ornate and gaudy and eventually very tedious." L. F. Hellman

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 18 '25 380w

"Stories, full of lusty humor and deep, rumbling laughter at the spectacle of the male in love. The latter is, it seems, a stupid and helpless mammal—but a delightful if unconscious clown upon whom to spend our chuckles."

+ N Y World p4m S 6 '25 100w

Sat R of Lit 2:300 N 14 '25 100w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 J1
23 '25 360w

FERGUSON, IAN, pseud. See Watson, F:

FERGUSON, JOHN ALEXANDER. Secret road. 274p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Lane]

25-15388

As the story opens the Bumali stone is about to pass into the hands of an Indian rajah. According to native tradition in the Punjab, he who holds this famous diamond will hold all India in his hands. Thus the passing of the stone during some wild Hindu ceremony will be the signal for a bloody uprising against the English. To intercept the powerful talisman is to prevent the insurrection. John Neville is sent out on this secret and dangerous mission. The perils that lurk in crowded bazaar, at the shrine of the serpent god and in lonely mountain passes are many and terrible. Neville braves them all, meeting temporary success and bitter disappointment in his love affair as well as in his quest. But he finds the secret road that leads to safety and at last to happiness.

"Mr. Ferguson has a flare for his 'subject,' and plunges one simply yet interestingly into the verisimilitude of large events. More than most writers of such tales he has a fondness for stopping long enough to philosophize with a ready and keen mind. Plausibility is a trait too often lacking and so twice valuable when found."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 22 '25 220w
Cleveland p108 N '25

"Those who remember that really splendid 'thriller,' Stealthy Terror, will want to read anything new by Mr. Ferguson. The Secret Road, a story of intrigue and adventure in India, is much less good, but good." P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:341 J1 4 '25 40w

"So swift is the action that one can sympathize with the character who remarks, 'I am trying to think. This is all so unexpected.' Only those who prefer a quiet life will feel, as does the hero himself, 'a little jaded with the golden Orient and its ways.'"

N Y Tribune p14 O 18 '25 200w

"This is a good mystery tale and has also a strong feminine element."

+ Outlook 141:56 S 9 '25 60w

"It is a first-class yarn."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je 11 '25 220w

FERGUSON, MELVILLE F. Motor camping on western trails. 300p il $2.50 Century

796 Automobile touring. West—Description and travel 25-5858

The adventures of a family of eight who spent a year upon the road traveling eighteen thousand miles by motor. With a caravan of two cars and two trailers and every conceivable kind of camping equipment they made a cross-continent tour and back, with a detour into Canada and a side-trip to Hawaii, lighting their camp-fire in one hundred and twenty-three different places along the way.

Booklist 21:294 My '25

Cleveland p54 Je '25

"Not only a delightful and stimulating narrative but an assuring one for hesitant persons who fear the difficulties of such a trip."

+ N Y Times p12 My 3 '25 620w

"It is an irresistible book for the general reader at any time or place, and contains much that will be of great practical value to motorists."

+ N Y Tribune p9 J1 26 '25 220w

FERGUSON, MELVILLE F.—Continued

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 20w

"The book pictures the various camping conditions that every motorist will encounter when he starts on a similar journey. These conditions are well worth knowing in advance. The reader will find them faithfully and vividly described in Mr. Ferguson's book."

+ R of Rs 72:336 S '25 130w

"A worthwhile addition to the growing literature of this popular phase of American recreation."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:680 Ap 11 '25 320w

"Mr. Ferguson's detailed and well-written report will cheer the potential motor campers who must be fastidious even while heeding the call of the Red Gods."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 15 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:109 Ap '25

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO. Women of the Caesars. 337p $3.75 Putnam

920.7 Women in Rome. Rome—Biography

"The women of the Caesars are Livia, the wife of Augustus and the mother of Tiberius; the two Julias, daughter and granddaughter of Augustus; Antonia, the beautiful and dignified daughter of Mark Antony and wife of Drusus and the mother of Germanicus; Agrippina, the wife of Germanicus, daughter of the elder Julia and Agrippa; the sisters of Caligula; Messalina, the scandalous but after all not wholly inhuman wife of Claudius, and Agrippina the younger, last wife of Claudius and mother of Nero. They thus represent the history of the Julian family and the empire for about one century, from the marriage of Augustus and Livia in 38 B.C. to the murder of Agrippina at the instigation of Nero in A.D. 59."—Sat R of Lit

Bookm 61:606 Jl '25 120w

"Whoever may have a leaning toward history will find in Ferrero's book interest and information in plenty."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 1 '25 360w

"It is a vigorous, stimulating book, written with all the author's well-known attractiveness; and, though we may not be able to share his belief in his confident reconstructions, his demolitions are done to perfection." C: W. Thompson

+ — Lit R p1 Ag 22 '25 1600w

"Whether so intended or not, 'The Women of the Caesars' is a fine tribute to the women of ancient Rome and to womankind in general. Ferrero writes with directness and confidence, and is always readable and stimulating. The interest of his pages for the general reader is due in large part to his interpretations of ancient life by reference to modern conditions." Grant Showerman

+ Sat R of Lit 1:757 My 16 '25 750w

FIELDING, ARCHIBALD. Eames-Erskine case. 244p $2 Knopf [7s 6d Collins]

25-9299

The story opens with the discovery of a dead man in the wardrobe of a hotel room. In the pocket of his coat is found a letter signed Reginald Eames and addressed to the hotel manager, which indicates that the case is one of suicide. It is not until Chief Inspector Pointer of Scotland Yard discloses several strange facts about Eames's death that the work of a murderer is suspected. Pointer, by painstakingly tracing the most insignificant clues comes upon a surprising fact, the real identity of the dead man. This is the first link in a chain of events which lead to the discovery of the murderer, a person of unusual cunning, who chooses the easier way out of a bad predicament.

Booklist 21:383 Jl '25

Cleveland p68 Je '25

Reviewed by L: Moore

Int Bk R p471 Je '25 100w

"Has the finest first paragraph that I can recall in my long career of crime. It was not expected that the clutch of this first paragraph should be maintained throughout the book, but it remains a good story to the end." Simeon Strunsky

+ N Y Times p4 Ap 5 '25 250w

"Well written; in strong, serviceable, rounded style." Leonard Hess

+ N Y Tribune p11 Ap 19 '25 370w

Wis Lib Bul 21:142 My '25

FINDLAY, ALEXANDER. Chemistry in the service of man. 3d ed rev and enl 300p $2 (6s) Longmans

660 Chemistry, Technical

"Author is a master of clear exposition. In these lectures to an audience without knowledge of chemistry, he sets forth in an interesting manner some of the more important ways in which the principles of chemistry and their application have contributed to human welfare. Contents: Introduction; Radioactivity and atomic structure; The rare gases of the atmosphere; Combustion and the production of fire; The chemistry of illuminants; Energy, fuel and explosives; Cellulose and cellulose products; Metals and their alloys; Velocity of reaction and catalysis; Fixation of atmospheric nitrogen; Glass, soda, soap and lime; Electricity and chemistry; The colloidal state; Molecular structure; Synthetic chemistry; Fermentation and the action of enzymes and micro-organisms."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:302 My '25

FIREBAUGH, W. C. Inns of the middle ages. ltd ed 274p il $7.50 P. Covici [18s G. Richards]

394 Hotels, taverns, etc. Civilization, Medieval 24-22961

"This is a volume of erudite gossip, concerning inns from the time of Odoacer to the time of Shakespeare. We pass from the Port Rouge of Villon to the Scratching Donkey, visited by the father of Joan of Arc; the Boar's Head and the Drinking Magpie. The rogues are here in force, especially the Pardoner, who would sell you the comb of Peter's cock, or David's pebble that smote Goliath."—Lit R

"To bring back the tavern and mine host of the Middle Ages, Mr. Firebaugh has drawn upon contemporary stories, legends and histories. Our chief complaint against him, indeed, is that he has drawn upon them so heavily there is very little of Mr. Firebaugh in the book at all, so that it is more of a compendium than a chronicle. He has, however, made an interesting, gossipy tale of the result." S. L. R.

+ — Boston Transcript p3 S 6 '24 800w

"Spoils a fine subject, as a bad cook may ruin a fine roast. Here is neither fish, fowl, nor good red herring. It pretends to scholarship, as it pretends to wit and to style, and as its make-up pretends to sumptuousness. It has none of these qualities."

— Dial 78:159 F '25 80w

"The book lacks a systematic and historical treatment of its theme, but it gives pleasant leisurely browsing for all that. Such illustrations, from contemporary sources, as appear, are welcomed; more would not have harmed the book." C. W.

— + Lit R p10 S 13 '24 120w

"A great part of the book is hardly about inns at all; and when it deals with them specifically, every paragraph closes with a lament over the vices of the mediæval world. It is difficult to write coherently about a book of this kind. It is necessarily a patchwork of quotations, some of great amusement and value. The passage on courtly behaviour from a mediæval book of deportment is charming; so is the story of Hroswitha's Sainte Courti-sane; but the book's sole value lies in these. The author gives no picture, apart from his quotations, of anything but himself, as he scolds and patronizes past times which one doubts if he has ever attempted to understand."

+ Nation and Ath 37:212 My 16 '25 350w

"Chicago has apparently, a poor standard of proof-reading. In page after page, we see mistakes that might have been detected. The book deserved to be better revised."

+ New Statesman 25:234 Je 6 '25 720w

"Mr. Firebaugh writes vividly and picturesquely. Some of the stories which he has culled from old documents are necessarily coarse, and we cannot resist the feeling that he likes them none the less on that account. At the same time, no really irrelevant matter is introduced, and, though the book is too loosely knit and suffers by reason of careless printing and punctuation, it is an interesting and valuable addition to the literature of its subject."

+ Spec 134:314 My 16 '25 900w

"This work is a curious production. It is well printed and very expensive, and is written by an author who betrays some familiarity with the social history of the early Middle Ages, but little or no acquaintance with the sources which would have been most useful to him. It is extremely difficult to form any opinion as to his scholarship, for with one or two exceptions he does not name his authorities; he does not even tell us where he found his illustrations."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p26 Ja 8 '25 430w

FIRESTONE, CLARK BARNABY. Coasts of illusion. 410p il $4 (16s) Harper

910 Geographical myths. Animals, Mythical. Legends 24-28913

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:228 Mr '25

"The librarian will find it difficult to catalogue 'The Coasts of Illusion,' for history, geography, mythology, science, anthropology, and folk lore are drawn together by the golden thread of imagination and woven inextricably by the story teller's art."

+ Bookm 60:779 F '25 250w

"His book is a serious one, full of curious stories and curious learning; it is well written." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 36:649 F 7 '25 600w

"Here is vast material for a magnificent book, and if Mr. Firestone had a sense of proportion, or æsthetic sensibility, he could display his riches more as an artist might and less like a cataloguer. But there is not a dull or ill-judged passage in his findings that is not matched with its islands of enchantment, its El Dorados, its petrified cities." Ernestine Evans

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 12 '25 480w

"An extraordinarily interesting and thorough work."

+ Spec 134:121 Ja 24 '25 150w

"Mr. Firestone in this most entertaining book examines the tales of old adventure and the sagas of the sea."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 30 '25 620w

FIRKINS, OSCAR W. William Dean Howells. 356p $4 Harvard univ. press [20s Milford]

813 Howells, William Dean 24-29670

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

Booklist 21:296 My '25

Bookm 61:235 Ap '25 220w

"I can only hope that it will never again fall to my lot to read the expansive writings of William Dean Howells—still less an exhaustive treatise on them by so conscientious a critic as Mr. Firkins." Llewelyn Powys

— Nation 120:694 Je 17 '25 900w

"If it is difficult to understand how such a book as Mr. Firkins's can be written in this day and generation, it is equally surprising to have it sponsored by the press of our greatest university, except for the fact that Mr. Firkins on Howells has something of the aimless and arid quality of the doctor's thesis in literature." Robert Herrick

— New Repub 42:47 Mr 4 '25 1200w

"On the whole, it would be hard to find modern critical writing that is more sensitive, exact, and well-balanced than Mr. Firkins has given us in this volume. Yet somehow one may read the whole book through without knowing much more about what Howells means to one than one knew before." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 221:570 Mr '25 1100w

"Mr. Firkins has brought to his exhaustive critical study of Howells the two essential qualities of the commentator—enthusiasm and impartiality. Moreover, his book is written as admirably as it is planned; his style is enlivened by wit, and his entire study abounds in pointed and thoughtful comments on aspects of literature and life. Yet all his keen perception and sympathy fail to stimulate us to a profound interest in Howells."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p85 F 5 '25 850w

"We cannot have a more charming or authoritative interpreter than Mr. Firkins, whose book must take its place at once as the standard work on Howells." J. W. Beach

+ Yale R n s 15:400 Ja '26 780w

FISCHER, FRANZ. Conversion of coal into oils; auth. English tr. ed. with a foreword and notes by R. Lessing. 284p il $8 Van Nostrand [36s Benn]

668.7 Coal. Coal-tar products [25-21092]

"During the past 10 years, no less than 200 important papers on the chemistry of coal have appeared. This is some indication of the great technical interest in coal carbonization and allied problems, the results of which may change the entire economic aspect of coal, thus forming the basis of an enormous new chemical industry. The carefully controlled low-temperature carbonization of coal to make primary tar, forms about three-fifths of the subject matter of the book and hydrogenation and synthetic processes occupy most of the remainder. Extraction processes, and liquefaction through carbides are discussed rather briefly, but with as much attention as is probably deserved. The author thoroughly establishes a case for the production of primary tar supplemented by synthetic processes."—Chem & Met Eng

"Aside from being a digest of the worthwhile literature of coal liquefaction, the book contains several hitherto unpublished papers by Fischer on synthetic processes. Altogether it is a work commensurate with the distinguished author's past accomplishments, and it is an authoritative and much-needed contribution to fuel technology."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:877 N '25 220w

"It is especially helpful at the present time to those workers who are seriously studying the subject to have available a translation of Dr. Fischer's work from one so competent to handle the subject as Dr. Lessing, himself identified with much valuable work on the constitution of coal." C. H. L.

+ Nature 116:566 O 17 '25 920w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:34 Jl '25

FISHBEIN, MORRIS. Medical follies. 223p $2 Boni & Liveright

615 Quacks and quackery. Osteopathy. Homeopathy, Chiropractic 25-17175

The book is described in its subtitle as "an analysis of the foibles of some healing cults, including osteopathy, homeopathy, chiropractic, and the electronic reactions of Abrams, with essays on the antivivisectionists, health legislation, physical culture, birth control, and rejuvenation." The author is editor of the

FISHBEIN, MORRIS—Continued

Journal of the American medical association and associate professor of clinical medicine at the University of Chicago.

Booklist 22:105 D '25

"His treatment is often superficial and consists too much of mere scorn; but a more important fault is that Dr. Fishbein holds far too roseate a view of medical diagnosis and the ethics of those who practise it, and betrays too much of the guild spirit which is common in the self regulating professions of law and medicine, and both unpleasant and dangerous."

—Bookm 62:349 N '25 150w

"Dr. Fishbein writes amusingly and readably; he swings a vigorous club, and when he comes to such absurdities as 'The Big-Muscle Boys' he scores with every swing. Just what good a book of this sort will do is open to question: there will be cults and followers for them as long as mankind lasts. But it is interesting reading, and Dr. Fishbein has done his part admirably." Carey Jeffreys

+ Lit R p4 S 19 '25 200w

"Any one can read this book with profit to himself. Physicians can render an excellent collateral service to their patients by keeping a copy of it on their waiting room tables, in place of the out-of-date magazines with which so many of them are littered." Van Buren Thorne

+ N Y Times p11 S 6 '25 2250w

"Dr. Fishbein writes with a good broad pen; he strikes, not to wound, but to annihilate. He is championing the great cause of the science of medicine, and he is never half-hearted or lukewarm." L: Johnson, M.D.

N Y Tribune p8 O 18 '25 1600w

"He is witty and sound and useful as he flays the fakers."

+ Outlook 141:202 O 7 '25 100w

St Louis p404 N '25

"The book gives the comment of a competent student of medical practices."

Survey 55:383 D 15 '25 200w

FISHER, DOROTHEA FRANCES (CANFIELD)
(MRS JOHN REDWOOD FISHER). Made-to-order stories. 263p il $2.50 Harcourt

25-18275

"Dorothy Canfield's 'Made-to-Order Stories' were selected from innumerable tales told to her ten-year-old son in accordance with specifications furnished by him. He would say to her, 'I'm sort of hungry for a made-to-order story. I believe I'll have it about a sack of potatoes, a busted bicycle, a fox caught in a trap, a pony cart and a house afire. And of course a little boy.' Whatever his specifications—and each of the dozen stories in the book begins with Jimmy bouncing upon the scene, sketched as the background for the start, and announcing the properties he wants used in a new story—at once his mother starts off in unconventional style, sometimes picking up the thread of the story far enough along for Jimmy to have to ask for explanation."—N Y Times

"They are entertaining, often humorous, and make a welcome volume to recommend for reading aloud."

+ Booklist 22:75 N '25

Reviewed by A. C. Moore

Bookm 62:178 O '25 320w

"It needs a rich fund of invention and humour to unify such diverse material and make of it a book that will bear the test of reading aloud to a chuckling audience without seeming either silly or commonplace. And Mrs. Fisher accomplishes just this with the finish of the gifted story-teller that she is." A. M. Jordan

+ Ind 115:560 N 14 '25 150w

"The work of an author who has originality, imagination and the gift of story-telling to such a degree that one reads her stories a second time (I read most of them as they first appeared in St. Nicholas) with keenly held interest." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p812 N '25 550w

"It is very cleverly done, for the attention is engaged at once and the story unfolds rapidly, with all manner of unexpected turns, surprising developments and mounting excitements."

+ N Y Times p4 N 8 '25 350w

"Not only are the stories themselves original, but the method of telling them is in itself unique. Dorothy Canfield has undoubtedly discovered a new way in which to tell stories—a way which is a sure preventive of stale plots and stilted combinations. For Jimmy's choice of what to put into a story is not so hit-or-miss as it may seem." Edith Rees

+ N Y Tribune p6 N 1 '25 650w

"Here you will find no hackneyed plots, no cut-rate quantities of enfeebled morals thrust at the child, no simperings and no smirks. It is a book of unusual originality and quite a delight."

+ N Y World p7m N 8 '25 70w

"The book is enriched by the drawings of Dorothy Lathrop, who understands animals as well as she understands the management of pen and ink. But the best part of 'Made-to-Order Stories' is the lovely friendliness between a mother and her little boy that shines from every page." Anne Parrish

+ Sat R of Lit 2:271 N 7 '25 350w

FISHER, LETTICE (ILBERT) (MRS HERBERT ALBERT LAURENS FISHER). Then and now; economic problems after the war a hundred years ago; with an introd. by David Lloyd George. 118p $1.75 (5s) Oxford

330.942 England—Economic conditions
25-18570

"A comparison of England's present economic situation with that which developed after the Napoleonic Wars. The writer is the wife of the eminent Englishman who as Minister of Education virtually re-wrote the school laws of his country."—R of Rs

Boston Transcript p8 N 14 '25 350w

"It is rare to find an economic treatise written in a style which is intelligible to the general reader. Mrs. Fisher's able survey possesses this quality. Its lucidity and vividness will appeal to anyone who is interested in the problems of post-war reconstruction, while the student will appreciate the care with which the facts have been collected."

+ Nation and Ath 37:493 J1 18 '25 550w

"Mrs. Fisher is a student who has the gift for making clear and impressive pictures of the objects and scenes of her historical studies. Her previous books made that gift manifest, but it is especially in evidence in her treatment of her subject in this new one."

+ N Y Times p26 S 6 '25 380w

"Not a few of the matters discussed are of importance to Americans by way of example and warning, while the entire volume will give to American readers a more complete and just appreciation of the trying problems with which the British Government now has to deal, and will thus conduce to better mutual understanding between the nations." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:185 S '25 250w

R of Rs 72:335 S '25 40w

"This is a rather disappointing book, for it does not, as a whole, live up to the merits of its admirable introductory chapter. However, Mrs. Fisher has found an excellent subject; she understands her theme and has a clear and pleasantly varied style."

—+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p433 Je 25 '25 280w

FITCH, JOHN ANDREWS. Causes of industrial unrest. 424p $3 (12s 6d) Harper

331.8 Industrial relations. Labor and laboring classes—United States 24-20077

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The chief merit of the book does not lie in the presentation of any new factual evidence or point of view, but rather in the careful and splendidly balanced interpretation of familiar data and the refreshing style in which that interpretation is clothed." G. S. Watkins

+ Am Econ R 15:128 Mr '25 400w

"This is one of those unusual books, a product and a mirror of its time, which catches up the significant trends of tendency and weaves a tapestry of permanent worth and large significance. It promises to be one of the classics of American industrial literature." Ordway Tead

+ Am R 3:226 Mr '25 1200w

"Brilliantly, fresh thought are not here, but they are not attempted. Sound research and a philosophic temper are on every page, and they illuminate peculiarly those subjects that still radiate the fierce heat of controversy."

C: R. Walker

+ Bookm 60:772 F '25 620w

"As Mr. Fitch admits in the foreword, he does not consider agreement but merely struggle between the two groups [capital and labor] and hence does not present a complete picture of existing social relationships. . . The book should be of interest to those business executives who desire a calm, rational explanation of the workman's reasoning and attitude as evidenced by his actions in the past."

+ — Harvard Business R 3:381 Ap '25 250w

Reviewed by D: E. Lilienthal

Nation 120:472 Ap 22 '25 680w

"This is a very wise and a very well documented account of the things which trouble the industrial worker, by a very thoughtful and tolerant man." Stuart Chase

+ New Repub 42:190 Ap 8 '25 580w

Reviewed by G: W. Stocking

Springfd Republican p7a My 3 '25 680w

"This is by all odds the most perspicacious book upon labor problems which has been written since Robert Hoxie's 'Trade Unionism in the United States.' Both workmen and employers have much to learn from this work. Each group will secure from it a more vivid and sympathetic appreciation of the problems and grievances of the other." P. H. Douglas

+ Taylor Soc Bul 10:27 F '25 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 20:253 N '24

"The first three parts of the book, which deal with objective factors involved in the equation of unrest, possess qualities of simplicity, clarity and authenticity which surpass those of any other comparable work. The fourth part, which deals with Fundamental Principles, does not deserve equal praise." E. C. Lindeman

+ — World Tomorrow 8:23 Ja '25 420w

FITTING, RALPH U. Report writing. (Rono-graph ser.) 100p $1.25 Ronald

620.7 Reports 24-17338

"Outlines the methods for formulation and preparation of reports which may be concerned with business, engineering problems, or public utilities. Based largely on material contributed by the author to volume two of 'Language for men of affairs.'"—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:410 Jl '25

FITZGERALD, FRANCIS SCOTT KEY. Great Gatsby. 218p $2 Scribner

25-10468

As a subject of conversation over the tea table or the highballs, Gatsby's palatial Long Island home ran second to speculation about Gatsby himself—his origin, his fortune, the nebular hypothesis that he had once killed a man. All the world and its mistresses came to his lavish parties, tho he maneuvered some time before he got Daisy and Tom Buchanan there. Daisy was the woman he loved. She had loved him too, but when the war came and took him away, she grew tired of waiting for him to come back and married Tom Buchanan along with his money. They had been fairly happy, for Tom had consolations outside of his home, and Daisy had her little girl. Now she was in love with Gatsby again. Most of the rumors about him were founded on fact, for Gatsby was not troubled with scruples, but his claim to greatness—and he is the only character in the book with the remotest claim to it—lay in his loyalty to Daisy and the price he paid for it.

"'The Great Gatsby' is a strange combination of satire, burlesque, fantasy, and melodrama. It is Fitzgerald writing with his old gusto, with driving imagination, and with a sense of the futility of life and of the constant presence of bootleggers." J. F.

Bookm 61:469 Je '25 160w

Boston Transcript p4 My 23 '25 400w

"The plot works out not like a puzzle with odd bits falling into place, but like a tragedy, with every part functioning in the completed organism. I cannot find in the earlier Fitzgerald the artistic integrity and the passionate feeling which this book possesses." Gilbert Seldes

+ Dial 79:162 Ag '25 1050w

"'The Great Gatsby' is not a good book, but it is superior to his others with the exception of the first. The conversation throughout is a rather quaint collection of epigrams. But at least, he is over the awkward age, and later books may prove that he can still be effective—outside the field of sophisticated juveniles."

+ — Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 140w

"Reading 'The Great Gatsby,' one has an impression that the author entertained in his urbane and ever more polished imagination ideas for a melodrama, a detective story, and a fantastic satire, with his usual jazz-age extravaganza adding its voice to the mental conversation. And the result is not confusion, but a graceful, finished tale, as if each of the four had contributed a keen, well-timed remark to a good-mannered and highly efficient committee meeting." E. K.

+ Int Bk R p426 My '25 470w

"The novel is one that refuses to be ignored. I finished it in an evening, and had to. Its spirited tempo, the motley of its figures, the suppressed, under-surface tension of its dramatic moments, held me to the page. It is not a book which might, under any interpretation, fall into the category of those doomed to investigation by a vice commission, and yet it is a shocking book—one that reveals incredible grossness, thoughtlessness, polite corruption, without leaving the reader with a sense of depression, without being insidiously provocative." Walter Yust

Lit R p3 My 2 '25 900w

"This is a fine yarn, exhilaratingly spun." Carl Van Vechten

+ Nation 120:575 My 20 '25 650w

"A curious book, a mystical, glamorous story of today. It takes a deeper cut at life than hitherto has been essayed by Mr. Fitzgerald. He writes well—he always has—for he writes naturally, and his sense of form is becoming perfected." Edwin Clark

N Y Times p9 Ap 19 '25 750w

"What has never been alive cannot very well go on living; so this is a book of the season only, but so peculiarly of the season, that it is in its small way unique." Isabel Paterson

— N Y Tribune p6 Ap 19 '25 2150w

N Y World p7m Ap 12 '25 180w

"In subject-matter the book is not essentially different from his other stories. The end is uncurbed melodrama. The virtues of this book are its painstaking, often exquisite, workmanship and its humor."

+ — Outlook 140:341 Jl 1 '25 150w

"We like the book! It has some miscues, but they seem to us negligible. It is written

FITZGERALD, F. S. K.—Continued
with concision and precision and mastery of material." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 1:739 My 9 '25 1250w

"A little slack, a little soft, more than a little artificial, 'The Great Gatsby' falls into the class of negligible novels."

— Springf'd Republican p7a J1 5 '25 200w

FITZPATRICK, JOHN CLEMENT. Spirit of the Revolution; new light from some of the original sources of American history. 300p il $4 Houghton

973.3 United States—History—Revolution 24-27683

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"Though most of the topics are of minor importance they can not fail to interest the historical student, the antiquarian, and even the general reader if he has in any degree a taste for American history. Now and then, on the other hand, his undocumented statements are not entirely convincing." L. S. Mayo

+ — Am Hist R 30:609 Ap '25 750w

"There are many interesting details, but, unfortunately, details make up the whole volume. Of the deeper forces or of the color and life of the period, implied in the title, the book has very little." Dexter Perkins

— + Am Pol Sci R 19:409 My '25 120w

Booklist 21:271 Ap '25

"His nineteen interesting chapters picture as many different aspects of the hard-fought struggle for independence, and even the casual reader will enjoy them." L. E. Robinson

+ Nation 120:666 Je 10 '25 220w

"Some of the information is curious and very interesting, and it is just such information as is not to be obtained in the regular histories." H. J. Eckenrode

+ New Repub 42:299 My 6 '25 400w

Reviewed by S. E. Morison

N Y Tribune p4 F 15 '25 150w

Reviewed by C. H. Van Tyne

Yale R n s 15:185 O '25 260w

FLAGG, JAMES MONTGOMERY. Boulevards all the way—maybe. 225p il $2 Doran

917.8 West—Description and travel, Automobiles—Touring 25-21272

A jaunty account of a motor trip from coast to coast and back and of the roads, weather and people encountered. Illustrated by the author.

"His reminiscences of a coast-to-coast journey that was also a honeymoon jaunt will offer a rich variety of divertissement to car-owners, landscape-lovers and road-map devotees. Independent of the sixteen illustrations that adorn the book, they will reveal him not only as a sensitive observer but as a graceful and ingratiating raconteur." H. A. J.

+ Lit R p13 D 12 '25 200w

"James Montgomery Flagg has cleansed his inkwell of much perilous and amusing stuff in this account. Its carefree and humorous text is adorned with drawings by the author-artist."

N Y Tribune p14 N 29 '25 150w

"Dashed off with that cheap jauntiness which has become the familiar patter of the American humorist. Illustrated with three good pictures and ten fair ones by the author."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:303 N 14 '25 120w

"The artist eyes of the author were quick to note gorgeous cloud effects and other scenic beauty, and his pen preserves the impressions and passes them on to the reader. The journey is described in whimsical vein, and the light heartedness of this 'super driver' and the 'motor queen' apparently suffered no eclipse beyond that which might be caused by a passing cloud."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 N 17 '25 300w

FLANNER, HILDEGARDE. Tree in bloom, and other verses. 15p $1.50 Lantern press

811

25-4623

"The poems are collected from various media, from The Yale Review, F. P. A.'s 'Conning Tower' and so on. There are only twenty poems in all. But what is chiefly notable is that in almost every one of these poems Miss Flanner shows a delicate mastery of phrase, a beautiful precision of workmanship."—Sat R of Lit

"Exquisite, with a fragility that speedily proves indestructible. In her next book I look for Miss Flanner's flight to be absolute." Genevieve Taggard

+ N Y Tribune p5 F 8 '25 800w

"Occasionally a slight, unobtrusive book of poetry appears in which the judicious can discern more fundamental worth than in many more clamorous volumes. Such a book is Hildegarde Flanner's 'A Tree in Bloom.'" W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 1:706 Ap 25 '25 600w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Annexation society. 284p $2 Knopf

25-11823

A valuable heirloom, the tsar's cross, was stolen one night from the cabinet in which it lay, with other relics, in the state chambers of Scraye castle. The Marquis of Scraye thought he knew who took it. A clever young clubman with a flair for detective work was dragged into the hunt and before he was thru with the chase he had bared the machinery of the Annexation society, a band of crooks, who had been quietly helping themselves to a number of valuable art-treasures.

"An entertaining mystery story of the better Fletcher type."

+ Booklist 22:33 O '25

Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 60w

"The chief characters are spared and the actual villains are not divulged until the very end, which is as it should be in all well-conducted mysteries, and there isn't a dull moment in the yarn from beginning to end." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p10 My 9 '25 280w

N Y Tribune p9 J1 12 '25 220w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 40w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 140:264 Je 17 '25 150w

"It gets away to an early and baffling start, quickly gathers speed and holds a rapid pace through most of the distance, but toward the close, when we are primed for the amazing explosion which will reveal all, we are annoyed by a weak little 'pop' like the faint bang of a damp firecracker."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:180 O 3 '25 280w

"Violence and chicanery and the inevitable romance make an interesting snarl, which is deftly and logically straightened out in true Fletcher style. This author's audiences know that though there are thrills in his mystery-detective stories they are not due to any unwarranted flight of imagination."

Springf'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 200w

"Not up to the author's usual standard, but better than the ordinary thriller."

— + Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Mill of many windows. 338p $2 Doran

25-8909

The capital and labor problem is the main-spring of this story. The most prominent landmark in the manufacturing town of Haverthwaite is Marrashaw's mill. An immense building in Italian architecture with its carefully kept surroundings, it represents the industry, ingenuity and ability of four generations of Marrashaws. The story concerns the fifth generation, young Bright Marrashaw who upon his father's sudden death inherits a business for which he has no liking. The new responsibilities bring him into contact with industrial problems and in trying to solve that of equitable distribution of wealth, he puts the business on a profit sharing basis. The new system meets with the most violent opposition by his employees who are led in their rebellion by Marrashaw's secretary and fiancée, Hermione Clough. A strike, the first in the history of Marrashaw, takes place, but Bright holds fast to his ideals to make Marrashaw a modern industrial concern, and wins in the end.

Booklist 22:33 O '25

"It is cleverly done. Mr. Fletcher is best known as an author of mystery and adventure fiction, but in this novel he has written an entirely different kind of story, finding his material more in character delineation and in the mental and spiritual struggles of the youth."

+ N Y Times p8 My 10 '25 500w

"One can see the influence of Mr. Fletcher's other work in the smoothness with which the story develops, in the niceties of construction by which incidents and action dovetail. The first essential of a mystery story is its mechanical perfection, and one finds Mr. Fletcher's experience in that class of fiction displayed in the balance and evenness of this tale." W: R. Langfeld

+ N Y Tribune p10 Je 7 '25 500w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p7m My 3 '25 60w

Outlook 140:302 Je 24 '25 50w

"In this vigorous story of a manufacturing town of to-day Mr. Fletcher exercises both his skill as a writer of sensational fiction and his deep knowledge of Yorkshire life and character. There is a refreshing absence of propaganda, and full justice is done to all sides."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p721 O 29 '25 160w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Secret of the Barbican, and other stories. 354p $2 Doran

"[A series of short stories]. A capital mystery is solved in 'The Murder in the Mayor's Parlour'; in 'Room 53' a quick-witted chambermaid solves a riddle in an inspiring way; 'Against Time' teaches husbands to wait to hear all that wives say in answer to their questions; and 'The Earl, the Warder and the Heiress' shows how easily a man may disappear in London on a bet and remain undiscovered."—Lit R

"A most interesting series of short tales of drama and mystery, but the author hasn't chosen the best for the titular one." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p7 S 26 '25 100w

"Mr. Fletcher's fifteen short stories comprising 'The Secret of the Barbican,' are readable enough for their variety of incident, their occasional surprising twists and their uniformly pleasant verbal integument, though they do not always succeed in satisfying the higher logical faculties."

+ N Y Tribune p17 O 25 '25 160w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH SMITH. Wolves and the lamb. 316p $2 Knopf

25-1018

The lamb among wolves is a young Englishman whose inheritance of a large fortune brings him to London, where he falls prey to an unscrupulous financial agent and his clever woman secretary. But in their greed these two over-reach themselves and young Richard buys his experience fairly cheaply compared with the price he might have paid for it.

Booklist 21:275 Ap '25

"An ingenious, well constructed and well written yarn, holding the reader's interest from beginning to end." L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p356 Ap '25 450w

"The experienced reader of detective stories may be able to guess the probable outcome early in the movement of the tale, but he will find between that moment and the end much spirited action, many surprising incidents and unexpected turns, and developments that will lure him on from page to page in the usual Fletcher fashion and keep him in a state of excitement until the last page."

N Y Times p9 Ja 11 '25 320w

Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 30w

"'The Wolves and the Lamb,' is, if not conspicuously superior to those that have gone before it, up to the average in both entertainment and workmanship."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:564 F 28 '25 300w

FLEXNER, ABRAHAM. Medical education; a comparative study. 334p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

610.7 Medical education 25-4466

A comparative study of medical education in certain European countries and America. Since medical education cannot be described or discussed apart from general education, the study is made against the background afforded by the general educational and social systems of the respective countries. Dr Flexner gives an account of the three types of medical school—clinical, university and proprietary—pre-medical training, medical curricula in the various countries, laboratory equipment and teaching, clinical teaching, and the costs of medical education.

"The study is valuable as a well directed enquiry into the aims, methods and values of medical training. It is of more interest to the reviewer as a justification of the value of the comparative method of study in educational problems." Seth Wakeman

+ Am J Psychol p6:465 Jl '25 60w

Booklist 22:14 O '25

"It is a very candid book, meting out criticism where needed, and bestowing praise when called for, with the utmost impartiality." E. N.

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 18 '25 680w

"As an account of the development of medical education and a comparative portrayal of the work of the European countries and America the book should be of interest to everyone who is aware of the importance of medicine in modern life." C. E. Ayres

+ New Repub 43:298 Ag 5 '25 1100w

"There is enough meaty matter of a general educational character throughout the book to make it one of the outstanding contributions to education." B: Harrow

+ N Y Times p10 Jl 12 '25 1450w

Pratt p14 autumn '25

R of Rs 71:448 Ap '25 110w

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott

School Life 10:140 Mr '25 150w

"For the technician in diagnosis and treatment of disease, for the dean of a school of medicine, for treaters of the sick, here is an analysis at the same time erudite and sympathetic. But the student of preventive medicine, that type of modern science servant soon to dominate the occupation of medical practitioners, will look in vain for even the slightest reference to his preparation or any consideration of the method, content, or relationships of this topic." Haven Emerson, M.D.

+ Survey 55:256 N 15 '25 750w

"The work is of value not only to those interested in medical education but to all who occupy themselves with technical education in any form."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p242 Ap 2 '25 250w

FLINT, LEON NELSON. Conscience of the newspaper. 470p $3 Appleton
070 Journalism 25-9045

The professor of journalism in the University of Kansas presents the principles and problems of journalism in the form of actual cases which newspaper editors have met in their daily work. These cases, collected from newspapers all over the United States, are stated briefly, the editor's decision is given, and the author's comment drives home the principle involved.

Booklist 22:4 O '25

"The book shows clearly how the 'human element' rather than deliberate skulduggery is responsible for many journalistic derelictions. Whether a contemplation of newspaper ethics such as this will help editors elevate their profession is doubtful, but it will help the average reader interpret the news he reads."

Bookm 61:708 Ag '25 200w

"It is a book which can be read with profit by the general public as well as by the profession." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 620w

"That Mr. Flint's book, despite its lack of systematic arrangement and its constant repetitions, will be useful in schools of journalism we have no doubt." O. G. Villard

+ Nation 121:360 S 30 '25 750w

"Mr. Flint has endeavored to ascertain, with much help from actual 'cases,' how editors behave when confronted with questions of right and wrong, as well as to assail the far more difficult question of what right and wrong in journalism really are. He has done a heroic job, and has collected a mass of extremely useful material. Mr. Flint is not much of a generalizer, and his book is on that account inconclusive." R. L. Duffus

+ New Repub 43:243 J1 22 '25 1700w

"Thoughtfully and impartially surveys general principles of journalistic ethics and discusses the concrete cases which come to the editor for solution."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 8 '25 500w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p450 J1 2 '25 100w

FLISCH, JULIA A. Old Hurricane. 356p $2 Crowell

25-5389

The land grant system of Georgia in its early days before the war enters into this story of the soil. The principal character is Sally McFarlane, independent and fearless, who marries a shiftless young farmer. Abner Wheelock draws Old Hurricane, a prize piece of land, in a land lottery, but he depends wholly upon Sally to make it thrive. A crafty neighbor lends Abner some money and tries to seize Old Hurricane. Then Sally takes the matter into her hands and to save her home and rear her children she ploughs and hoes, plants and reaps, buys and sells, until Old Hurricane prospers and her dreams for the children are realized.

Cleveland p86 S '25

"A good sort of story for city folk to read." Ind 114:506 My 2 '25 90w

"The author stays close to the soil and has fashioned a novel which—while it has no startling merits—possesses an authentic flavor."

N Y Tribune p14 Ap 19 '25 130w

"The story is told with sympathy and understanding, with an evident knowledge of rustic types and conditions and with a clear although not obtrusive portrayal of the background; and the book will undoubtedly prove entertaining to the reader who is interested in that type of narrative which, in recent journalistic verbiage, is known as an 'epic of the soil.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 1:732 My 2 '25 170w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 J1 '25

FLYING carpet; [ed. by Lady Cynthia Asquith]. 200p il $2.50 Scribner

25-21215

A compilation of story and verse by celebrated English writers, with illustrations by well known artists. The book is ostensibly for children, yet many of the selections seem to have been written with at least one eye on the grown-ups, and the most delightful contribution, J. M. Barrie's Neil and Tintinnabulum, is subtitled "An interlude for parents."

"'But isn't it an imitation of the 'Joy Street' books?' asks someone. No, for the content of 'The Flying Carpet' is far richer and more permanent in character, with more direct appeal to the children themselves." A. C. Moore

+ Bookm 62:178 O '25 320w

Cath World 122:429 D '25 150w

"The fourteen artists who have made colored frontispiece, black and white illustrations, chapter headings and tail pieces, paper jacket, decorations, have added immensely to the beauty, interest and charm of the book, for their work, all of it, is of fine, distinctive quality."

+ N Y Times p4 N 8 '25 500w

"Mechanically, the book is a delight, stoutly bound, beautifully printed and adorned. It contains, moreover, several contributions which any imaginative, fun-loving child would be sorry to miss. But, as a whole, the collection is disappointing. It is not light enough on its wings. The famous names seem fatally to have weighed it down." L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 2:271 N 7 '25 300w

"If you don't find what you want the first time, why try again. Young children, it seems, should like the 'Flying Carpet' because of its very butterfly fashion of darting hither and thither and never lingering over long on one pet rose bush."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 220w

"Altogether, it makes quite a distinguished miscellany; but it is scarcely a children's book so much as a book to be read aloud in parts to children and enjoyed in parts by their elders."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p804 N 26 '25 280w

FLYING Osip; stories of new Russia. 318p $2.50 International pub. co., inc., 381 4th av., N.Y.

Short stories—Collections

25-4773

A collection of eleven short stories, the work of young Russian writers whose art has been influenced by the Russian revolution and whose chief theme is the new way of life in Russia. The title story is a tale of a soldier of the Red army who yearns to avenge the slaughter of his family by the White guards and looks for death in the front ranks of battle. The stories have been chosen by Alexander Chramoff, who has written a critical introduction to the book. Translated from the Russian by L. S. Friedland and J. R. Piroshnikoff. Contents: Flying Osip, by Ivan Kasatkin; A theatrical performance in the hamlet of Ogryzovo, by Vyacheslav Shishkov; Leather jackets, by Boris Plinyak; The lawbreakers, by Lydia Seifulina; The 'Merican, by Vsevolod Ivanov; On the rails, by Vsevolod Ivanov; The soldiers, by A. Arosev; Lenin, by A. Arosev; Thirteen, by Mark Kolosov; Hunger (a diary), by S. Semenov; A mere trifle! by Efim Zozulya; Glossary.

"It is pretty bad work and is only saved from being abject by the vitality and strangeness of the scenes and the viewpoint presented."

+ Ind 114:371 Mr 21 '25 130w

Reviewed by Eva Goldbeck

Lit R p3 Ap 11 '25 680w

"One sees with relief that there is no attempt at the well-made story and that, while crude workmanship is not affected, there is a conscious preference for spontaneous and individual rather than for polished and standardized work. It is notable that although the authors are concerned with the pain and struggle of revolution and its effects on individual lives, there is such gusto, and humor in their work as Russia has not known since the early days of Chekhov." J. J. Smertenko

Nation 120:470 Ap 22 '25 200w

"The first trial sample of post-revolutionary Russian literature to reach England is a great disappointment. Obviously the translation must be partly to blame, for it has neither style nor taste, and gives one, indeed, the impression of having been written in American by people who have only begun to master the American language. Although the best stories are immensely graphic, the pictures lack the significance which the reflection of a free mind would have given them. It may be, however, that the stories in this volume are non-representative. One would like to see more of Ivanov's work." Edwin Muir

— + Nation and Ath 37:546 Ag 1 '25 660w

"All are tinged with the journalistic interest which any valid report from Russia is bound to hold just now. But the new literature heralded by blurb is not to be found among this collection. Their message is rather that Russia may change from white to red and the muzhik become a comrade, but underneath, the folk remains the same. And its expression is similar. So marked is the resemblance between old and 'new' that the first three sketches by Kasatkin and Shishkov might have been inserted in War and Peace or included in The Black Monk with no one the wiser. Where there is a contrast it is less in how the thing is told than in what there is to tell." Betsy Greenebaum

* New Repub 43:25 My 27 '25 420w

"It is a good title, but a rather mediocre performance. The volume is, therefore, interesting as an index of the coming literature of Russia and invaluable as a sidelight on the state of mind of the revolutionary Russian."

+ — N Y Times p14 Mr 8 '25 800w

Reviewed by Avraham Yarmolinsky

N Y Tribune p11 Ap 19 '25 550w

Reviewed by J. E. Mitchell

N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 100w

Reviewed by Abbe Niles

Sat R of Lit 1:627 Mr 28 '25 600w

"The translation of many of the stories must have presented considerable difficulty. We should accordingly hesitate to call it a bad one. But it would certainly have been improved if the translators had firmly decided to eschew the more 'colorful' idioms of American speech. The vocabulary of the muzhik is not very extensive, and, further, it is, on the whole, singularly devoid of imagery."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p237 Ap 2 '25 800w

FOERSTER, NORMAN, ed. American poetry and prose, a book of readings, 1607-1916; under the general editorship of Robert Morss Lovett. 1063p $4 Houghton

810.8 American literature—Collections 25-14232

A comprehensive selection of American literature from Captain John Smith to Carl Sandburg. The editor's aim has been to show "the true main current of our literature in its historical progress, and the truly excellent in all kinds." The writers included are amply represented, Emerson having been allotted as many as ninety-two pages, and other major writers in proportion. Some eighty-five minor writers are also included.

"A representative and carefully selected single-volume textbook anthology of American literature."

+ Booklist 22:109 D '25

"This is an excellent collection displaying in its selection the new conception of American literature as an expression of a developing continent as well as a division of general English. The selections from the standard authors are satisfying, and the colonial material included and the literature of the renaissance in American letters which began about 1906-1910, give the book a scope and significance, absent from earlier volumes of the kind."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:71 Ag 22 '25 200w

FOLSOM, MRS ELIZABETH (IRONS). Free. 320p $2 Macaulay

25-16972

This is the love story of Daniel Morrow, a dreamer struggling for expression in verse, and Cicely the subject of his dreams. Daniel's pretty, pleasure loving cousin Maizie comes to live at his home. She attracts Arnold Slater's idle fancy in the moments he is not devoting himself to Cicely. The four young people are caught in a labyrinth of conflicting desires. They suffer long and acutely before the avenging hatred of one woman and the unselfish love of another set Daniel and Cicely free.

"Mrs. Folsom, well known as a short story writer (she won the 1923 O. Henry prize for the best short story under 3000 words) now comes forward with her first novel. It is a creditable performance and fully justifies the author in having enlarged her field of activity." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p2 S 12 '25 520w

"If one searches 'Free' in vain for the new interpretation of Middle Western small town life promised by the publishers he finds nevertheless a readable story of a rather footless and futile young clerk with literary aspirations who might have lived and loved at any time or place."

+ — N Y Tribune p8 O 18 '25 150w

"An easily readable book, fresh and individual enough to justify itself even though its theme happens to be one of those which other writers have been dealing with in recent (and sometimes non-recent) years." R. W. N.

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a S 20 '25 300w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Under dogs. 325p $2 2 Doran [7s 6d Collins]

25-19121

An exciting yarn of the New York underworld, in which Mme Storey, an extraordinary woman and a famous detective, joins a criminal gang in order to save one of its members. As Jessie Seipp, Mme Storey makes a daring robbery, breaks up the gang and exposes the master crook who is the invisible boss of its operations, and restores to her husband and respectability the young girl she has risked her life to save.

"Dramatic and tense situations abound, highly colored but actual in effect, and the interest is held from beginning to end. It's a capital mystery tale." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p8 D 26 '25 130w

"Old fashioned crook melodrama, with all the ancient contrivances set shakily to work once more."

— Sat R of Lit 2:324 N 21 '25 180w

"The story is well told and cleverly worked out."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p910 D 31 '25 140w

FORBES, JOAN ROSITA (TORR) (MRS ARTHUR THOMAS MCGRATH). From Red sea to blue Nile; Abyssinian adventure. 386p il $3.50 Macaulay

916.3 Abyssinia—Description and travel 25-19846

"This is not a book on Abyssinia. It is the record of three months on mule-back. The story of what happened to Mr. Harold Jones, moving-picture operator, and myself during our eleven hundred mile trip thru mountains, forests, rivers and deserts in search of photographic material. It is a tale of adventures serious and frivolous—of what we saw and did between the Red Sea and the Blue Nile.

FORBES, JOAN ROSITA—Continued

It is only an impression of Abyssinia as she appeared from tent and saddle."—Foreword

"Mrs. Forbes writes economically. That is, she tells a very plain and straightforward story without any embellishments. Sometimes, like New England cooking, it is too plain and wholesome. A few extraneous incidents would add savor to the whole." W. T. T.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 N 14 '25 500w
Cleveland p114 D '25

"With the aid of temperamental mules and guides and constant reminders that she, after all, is a woman, Miss Forbes manages to force an atmosphere of excitement into what would nevertheless be a rather enjoyable book of travel."

+ N Y World p7m D 20 '25 120w

Reviewed by Dale Warren

Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p696 O
22 '25 380w

FORBES-ROBERTSON, SIR JOHNSTON. Player under three reigns. 324p il $5 Little [21s Unwin]

B or 92 Actors and actresses 25-9612

Recollections of a long career on the stage during the later years of which Forbes-Robertson was actor-manager. It is a modest autobiography, filled with anecdotes and stories of his contemporaries on the London stage and of artists of his art student days, for his early taste was for painting and he received his training at the Royal Academy.

"It is the record of a distinguished career, told with simplicity, modesty, and directness. The volume is full of anecdote and interest and is never dull. It is written with fine discretion and betrays the sensitiveness of the artist and the good breeding of the gentleman. But it has one fault in common with all other books of dramatic reminiscences. When the reader lays it down, he knows nothing more of the stage and its lure or of the life and emotions of the actor than he did before he read it. We miss this and we are sorry. We wish the author had not been quite so modest and self-effacing." MacGregor Jenkins

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf S '25 580w

"Although the author is rather careless about details, he writes with the charm and wit of the thoroughly polished gentleman."

+ — Booklist 22:29 O '25

Cleveland p80 J1 '25

Reviewed by Brander Matthews

Int Bk R p452 Je '25 550w

"The fascinating book in which Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson has embodied his reminiscences has scarcely an uninteresting page, and yet, in one respect, because of the rare modesty with which it is written, is somewhat disappointing. Rich as it is in fleeting glimpses of prominent figures of the literary, artistic and dramatic worlds, it gives only the barest record of his own personal achievement, without reference to the methods, principles and practice adopted by him while studying the profession of which he was to become a conspicuous ornament." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p1 My 23 '25 1650w

"Modest and charming book."

+ Nation and Ath 37:114 Ap 25 '25 280w

"Besides being an interesting theatrical record, has many fresh anecdotes about artistic and intellectual Bohemia."

+ New Statesman 25:318 Je 27 '25 500w

"In spite of its being a more or less valuable footnote to stage history in England and this country, is not an impressive book. It is, naturally, urbane. But it is loosely written and careless as to detail."

+ N Y Times p3 My 17 '25 2100w

"Most of us will be disappointed by his book, a little puzzled that a man who could create with such beauty, such dignity, such intel-tual assurance, in one art, has so little to say when working in another." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p9 Je 7 '25 1000w

"It is a thoroughly conventional autobiography, with a wealth of incident and a rich fund of characteristic comment which adds another invaluable chronicle to the store of stage literature."

+ N Y World p4m My 17 '25 460w

"There is no self-conceit in Forbes-Robertson's reminiscences. He gives us a quiet narrative, with much humor in it, and running through with but one insistence—his hatred and mistrust of the Hun. Toward the middle of his book, memory being full, he seems to have rushed his story. That is unfortunate. This gentleman, who with his pen has caught some of the courtly rhythm of 'Hamlet,' should have given more of his full life."

+ — Outlook 141:321 O 28 '25 480w

Pratt p36 autumn '25

R of Rs 72:111 J1 '25 150w

St Louis p359 S '25

"This pleasant account is well worth reading, and contains many lively sketches of famous men and women."

+ Sat R 139:416 Ap 18 '25 150w

"From a player of such obvious intelligence, and a man with so many years of rich associations behind him, one naturally expects an autobiography of rather unusual interest and quality. But one doesn't get it. There is a kind of stubborn reticence about his autobiography, which may be the mark of a British gentleman, but is certainly not the mark of a born autobiographer. Not even when writing of other people does he pass beyond brief and casual comment, or sketchy anecdote, to any revealing utterance. The book is curiously bare, unimaginative, chilly." W. P. Eaton

— Sat R of Lit 2:42 Ag 15 '25 400w

Spec 134:635 Ap 18 '25 820w

"Not prolific in intimate and authentic revelation either of Sir Johnston's mind or of the lives and minds of his associates. But it is a kindly, dignified, mildly humorous record, filled with details (including minor mischances) of stage history and rising at times to novel interest and charm."

+ Springfield Republican p10 My 6 '25 1000w

"Sir Johnston writes with a light touch; he has many good stories to tell and such of them as have been told before are worth retelling."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p233 Ap 2 '25 900w

"Superficiality is too often the hall mark of stage biography, and this dignified and urbane volume is not without that reproach."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:488 J1 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:196 J1 '25

FORBIS, JOHN F. Shakespearean enigma; and, An Elizabethan mania. 342p $4.50 Am. library service

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Sonnets

25-3026

Mr Forbis's ingenious theory of the sonnets is as follows: that like most of the young men of his time, Shakespeare had the habit of taking intoxicants; that his genius or his art loved and demanded wine while his moral nature rebelled against it; that the sonnets tell the story of the conflict between these two urges; that Wine was the mistress of his passion, personified by the Dark Lady. To each of the sonnets a suggestive reading is appended, showing how it should be read and interpreted to bear out this theory.

"Of all the strange things which have been written upon Shakespeare's sonnets, it seems to us that Mr. Forbis's book is the strangest of all."

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 7 '25 400w

"Mr. Forbis, whose spiritual ancestry must combine Ignatius Donnelly and Frances E. Willard, has priceless qualifications as a sleuth for the Anti-Saloon League. He is the only living man who can analyze the exhalations of the ex-tanks of Queen Elizabeth's day and estimate the percentage of alcoholic content in their potatoes. As an author he is not so good."

— Ind 114:106 Ja 24 '25 300w

Outlook 139:194 F 4 '25 250w

FORESTER, C. S. Josephine, Napoleon's empress. 246p il $4 Dodd [10s 6d Methuen]

B or 92 Joséphine, consort of Napoléon I

The author confines himself on the whole to the accepted facts of Josephine's extraordinary career; the embroidery is not excessive, and the digressions on clothes, fashions, and etiquette are not without interest."—Sat R

"The science of psychology has served him in good stead. And the result, even to the pedantic student of history, is decidedly worth reading."

+ Bookm 62:507 D '25 200w

"For the casual reader who knows little of Josephine the volume will be enlightening and absorbing. As a narrative the biography is admirable." R. B. M.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 25 '25 420w

"This is a very readable book. It is necessary to make one criticism: though in a work of this kind no one would look for footnotes, for it is clearly primarily intended for the general reader, it is unfortunate that there is no bibliography. Mr. Forester writes well, in a style commendably free from obscurity, if not free from a curiously staccato manner."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:192 O 31 '25 150w

"Mr. Forester handles his theme in the proper tone and spirit—not with the ponderous scholarship of M. Petit-Radel drawing up the list of Helen's lovers, but as an historical romance." Albert Guérard

+ N Y Tribune p9 N 15 '25 600w

"We do not understand that Mr. Forester had access to any important unpublished materials, nor that he makes any claim to be adding to our knowledge of the facts in the life of his heroine. Yet he has succeeded in making an interesting book because of his lively interest in the subject and his sense of the telling points in the story."

+ R of Rs 72:556 N '25 150w

"The latest of her many biographers has nothing new to add to the story of Josephine's eventful life. Mr. Forester writes for those whose interest in history is mainly confined to the gently scandalous, but his book is inoffensive and fairly accurate. While not well written it is easily read, and if the humour is sometimes unconscious and the judgments at times superficial or inconsistent nobody is much the worse."

+ — Sat R 140:342 S 26 '25 450w

"The latest of the many biographies of the Empress Josephine is a pleasantly written and amusing volume which will interest the general reader if it does not add to what was already known to the historian."

+ — Spec 135:719 O 24 '25 700w

"His comments are often witty, and the whole book is lively. If only it broke a little new ground one could praise it heartily; as it is, it seems designed only for those strange people who will read in a book hot from the press what they would never dream of reading in one twenty or fifty years old."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p638 O 1 '25 450w

FORESTIER, JEAN C. N. Gardens; tr. from the French by Helen Morgenthau Fox. 237p il $12 (52s 6d) Scribner

710 Gardens

24-31190

A note book of garden plans and sketches by a French gardener who has planned some lovely gardens in France and Spain. They are mostly small and walled gardens and have their terraces, benches, pools, walks and arbors. They are planned for privacy and are places for study, for pursuing gardening as a fine art and for simple social gatherings.

"In the main the plant material suggested by M. Forestier is used in this country or equally good substitutions can be found; certainly the type of design he suggests fits our suburban problems exactly. It is adaptable to many kinds of houses in practically all sections of the country." Richardson Wright

Bookm 61:224 Ap '25 300w

"Every community which feels pride in its appearance, from the landscaping point of view, should be possessed of a copy of this most valuable work, which would, at a minimum of expense, show it how to follow the lines indicated by the excellent 'Garden City' movement in France, and which is one of the best and most practical volumes which has appeared in some time." A. L. Hill

+ Lit R p12 F 21 '25 380w

N Y Times p11 Ja 25 '25 360w

"Altogether his 'Gardens' is the most helpful and satisfactory book of design that has appeared." Richardson Wright

+ N Y Tribune p5 Mr 15 '25 370w

"The text of this richly interesting volume is everywhere secondary to the admirable plans and sketches, which are extremely varied, often novel, and frequently of great beauty."

+ Outlook 139:196 F 4 '25 170w

"The text reads awkwardly, as if the original had not been fully assimilated by the translator."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 15 '25 170w

FORGIONE, LOUIS. Reamer Lou. 279p $2 Dutton

25-759

"I have always considered myself a half and half foreigner, though I was born and brought up in America." There is something foreign in the tone and intensity of this saga of the young workingman's life, due no doubt to the Italian parentage of the author and hero. Reamer Lou comes from a mining town near Scranton to work in the Staten Island shipyards. He and his fellow workers know no higher law than physical strength, no keener joy than the fierce gratification of the senses. He glories in the perfection of his big frame, and the sense of power it gives him over the men—and women—he meets. The story covers a comparatively short period, telling of the young man's friendships and loves, his loyalties and betrayals.

Boston Transcript p1 Mr 7 '25 360w

Ind 114:303 Mr 14 '25 50w

"It is hard to write a logical criticism of 'Reamer Lou.' The story is told with a seemingly purposeful uncouthness and crudity and an awkwardness of plot-handling. Yet, somehow, one has the impression of peering into a cynic-sentimental hobo's soul; and of looking on at a tangled drama of much gay and semi-tragic interest." A. P. Terhune

Lit R p3 F 28 '25 520w

"'Reamer Lou' is not a 'hobo book'; it is not even the crude narrative of an honest working-man. There is an engaging and rather curious guilelessness about the story which at moments defines sharply its sophistication, but oftener than not it is a polished literary performance."

+ Nation 121:sup442 O 14 '25 180w

"There is no doubt that here in 'Reamer Lou' is something rather fresh and original, and sometimes rather powerful. For literary purposes it is on the whole successful, for despite its crudities—and they are unintentional as well as intentional—it is vigorous and new. For sociological purposes it does not succeed so well: for it wavers too much from point to point, and makes too many personal gestures, to prove a very rousing plea."

FORGIONE, LOUIS—Continued

+ — N Y Times p14 Mr 1 '25 850w

"'Reamer Lou' is a piece of modern realism. Nowhere is the boiling cauldron of America so vividly portrayed as in this book whose prose throbs with a strange new life and whose descriptions and character studies will undoubtedly inspire many readers to enthusiastic praises." Pascal D'Angelo

+ N Y Tribune p8 Mr 29 '25 500w

"A clearly drawn portrait of the type of hand-laborer who is intelligent and brave but with no moral balance or social background. The book is notable for its vividness and truth."

+ Outlook 139:382 Mr 11 '25 80w

"The novel is crude, rough, and bold. Its crudeness that of reality; its roughness that of solid rock; its boldness that of honesty. There is a lack of continuity in development and characterization which makes it more than a picture. Its choppieness, its incontinuity, its see-sawiness, actually embody and live the temper of the immigrant community and of the drifting souls who dwell therein. And I think that is art." Constantine Panunzio

+ Sat R of Lit 1:723 My 2 '25 900w

FORREST, HERBERT EDWARD. Old houses of Stratford-upon-Avon. 180p il $3.50 Doran [7s 6d Methuen]

914.248 Stratford-upon-Avon

Stratford is remarkably rich in early timber framed houses, more than half of them dating from the fifteenth century. In a tour around the town Mr Forrest makes minute research into these ancient houses, dating them as far as possible, identifying their owners and studying the details of their structure and their history as deduced from these details. There are thirty-seven illustrations.

"Mr. Forrest has made excellent use of his opportunities. His own writing has little artistic merit. But he has so selected and arranged his material that it speaks for itself, and no reader with a spark of the real historic sense will fail to revel in the pages of this well produced and illustrated book."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:652 Ag 29 '25 520w

N Y Tribune p10 N 29 '25 150w

"Visitors, making their pilgrimage to Stratford-upon-Avon, could not, in future, do better than take with them Mr. Forrest's fascinating book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:325 N 21 '25 180w

"He has not only enthusiasm but also he really knows his subject." Mary Webb

+ Spec 134:1052 Je 27 '25 180w

"An accession of knowledge on several points and a most informing general account of the architecture of Stratford."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p566 S 3 '25 560w

FORTESCUE, JOHN WILLIAM. Wellington. 2 314p $3 Dodd

B or 92 Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, 1st duke of 25-25865

Written by the King's librarian this biography of the Duke of Wellington is devoted almost entirely to his military career and gives little attention to the events of his life after Waterloo. There is a chapter on his work as an administrator and the closing chapter sums up his character and personality.

"Mr. Fortescue has wisely decided to fall between two stools. He has not inflicted upon us still another monumental two-volume biography; nor has he attempted one of those elegantly satirical portraits which are the fashion of the moment. . . . He has admirably achieved his task of drawing the simple outline of the epic struggle between England and France, and of the part played in that struggle by the inspired common sense of Wellington."

+ New Statesman 26:146 N 14 '25 800w

"To a great man who has, so to speak, long been buried beneath his own greatness, Mr. Fortescue's book brings a new, a different and a better evaluation, and Wellington emerges an even greater man. The book is undoubtedly the best critical biography of the Duke of Wellington even written." T. J. C. Martyn

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 10 '26 1850w

R of Rs 73:111 Ja '26 80w

"The details of twenty-eight strenuous years of such a military life cannot be told in a single volume. What has been well called a 'hill-top view' is alone possible; and this is exactly what Mr. Fortescue has given us. He takes us up into the high places and points out the great essential features of the landscape which is spread out below, and does it all so clearly that when we come down we feel that we know the country better and more intimately than we have ever done before."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p763 N 19 '25 2200w

FOSCA, FRANCOIS. Renoir; tr. by Hubert Wellington. (Masters of modern art) 62,40p il $1.75 Dodd [5s Lane]

759.4 Renoir, Firmin Auguste 25-26323

A monograph on the life and work of the French impressionist painter, with forty illustrations of his paintings.

"On the whole, [the book] offers the lay reader a most interesting and accurate introduction to one of the leading figures of contemporary painting, and the illustrations are beautifully printed in colotype." T. Craven

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 29 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p165 Mr 12 '25 900w

FOSTER, HARRY LA TOURETTE. Tropical tramp with the tourists. 335p il $3 Dodd

918 South America—Description and travel 25-22875

Forswearing for a time his vagabond manner of working his way, the tropical tramp joined a sixty-five day cruise de luxe around the South American continent as tourist conductor. The trip, which naturally covered the usual tourist places, is described in a lively narrative.

"Mr. Foster's descriptions of the great South American cities are notably good. His pungent comments upon South American political, social, economic and industrial ideals are peculiarly grateful as well." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 28 '25 1200w

"The 'tropical tramp' had given up tramping for once and decided to see the world as others see it. We judge he succeeded, and the result fully justifies the means for his new book is as keen a satire on the American tourist as we have seen." Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 130w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK. Modern bridge tactics. 279p $2 Dodd

795 Auction bridge 25-10442

"A complete exposition of the latest theories of four-card suit bids, approaching bids, and suit distribution, together with an entirely new theory of the no-trumper."—Subtitle

"The points made are admirably illustrated with typical hands. If one studied and practiced this book with the help of a competent partner, one need never work again."

+ Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 60w

"His book is expertly planned, and up to the minute. It is a stimulating and a practical guide to the game."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 14 '25 220w

"The book is not designed for kindergartners in bridge, but even a beginner may learn from it and an expert may get several new ideas if not inspired to suggestion."

Spring'd Republican p6 Je 8 '25 200w

FOSTER, WILLIAM TRUFANT, and CATCHINGS, WADDILL. Profits. (Pollak foundation for economic research. Publications) 465p $4 Houghton; Pollak foundation

330.1 Profit 25-22510

The book is a closely reasoned analysis of the theory of profits, of the economic problems that center around profits and the relation of profits to the common welfare. The conclusion of the argument as summed up by the authors is as follows: "Progress toward greater total production is retarded because consumer buying does not keep pace with production. Consumer buying lags behind for two reasons: first, because industry does not disburse to consumers enough money to buy the goods produced; second, because consumers, under the necessity of saving, cannot spend even as much money as they receive. There is not an even flow of money from producer to consumer, and from consumer back to producer."

"Seriously attempts a contribution to traditional theory. The hypothesis is similar to, but not identical with, J. A. Hobson's theory of 'over-saving,' and it deserves careful study." G: Soule

+ New Repub 45:67 D 2 '25 130w

Spring'd Republican p12 O 28 '25 420w

World Tomorrow 8:386 D '25 40w

FOURNEAU, ERNEST. Organic medicaments and their preparation; auth. tr. by W. A. Silvester; with prefaces, to the French ed. by Emile Roux and to the English ed. by George Barger. 262p il $4.25 Blakiston [15s Churchill]

615.3 Chemistry, Medical and pharmaceutical [25-14308]

"A translation of the French volume containing the lectures and the practical training in the synthesis of organic medicinals that M. Fournieu 'organized and presented in Madrid in 1917, at the request of the Junta para Ampliacion de Estudios. The English edition has been brought up to date by appendices to each chapter. The book does not pretend to cover completely the field of synthetic organic medicinals, but merely summarizes the knowledge along several lines in which the author has been particularly interested and in which he has had much experience. It is not an ordinary text for it contains, in addition to the general and specific discussion of synthetic medicinals, information of all kinds; the calculation of costs, details on the uses of medicinals, a chapter of general remarks about the relation of physiological action to chemical constitution, a few pages on the elimination of medicinals by the organism and on disinfection."—Am Chem Soc J

"Fascinating book. The book has an appeal to any who have a scientific interest in drugs, whether they are primarily organic chemists, pharmacologists, pharmacists or even manufacturers of medicinals." Roger Adams

+ Am Chem Soc J 47:2258 Ag '25 300w

"This book is a very interesting and valuable contribution. It is to be regretted, however, that some chapters were apparently written in haste. A further shortcoming is the dogmatic character of some parts of the book, a common characteristic when an instructor tries to present many important subjects in the limited space of a monograph." G: W. Raiziss

+ Ind & Eng Chem 17:656 Je '25 750w

"Mr. Silvester has done his work well and the terseness, clarity, and precision of the original have not suffered in his handling of the text." T. A. H.

+ Nature 116:536 O 10 '25 200w

FOURNIER D'ALBE, EDMUND EDWARD. 2 Hephaestus; or, The soul of the machine. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 76p $1 Dutton

338.4 Machinery 25-24462

The Greek god of fire whose mighty workshop and huge anvil were set up on Olympus has, after many centuries, come back into his own. The bellows of Hephaestus are blowing, his fires are burning and his machinery has this earth in its grip. That the mechanical age has come to stay, that it is on the whole beneficent to man, liberating him from drudgery and giving him opportunity to develop his intellectual and artistic powers, it is the purpose of this brilliant little book to show.

"A very strong sense of humor dominates this tale of Hephaestus. Dr. Fournier D'Albe, himself a celebrated physicist studies in vigorous language the machine. He writes with especial point upon what the soul of the machine is and what effect it is likely to have on the future of man."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 26 '25 320w

"Mr. Fournier D'Albe displays an enthusiasm that is too unrestrained to carry real weight."

Nation and Ath 38:296 N 21 '25 120w

"The author is a ready writer, perhaps too ready, indeed. His ink flows freely, his pen has a smooth nib, and his hand a light touch. He lets nothing cramp his style. But after all in an essay intended for quick reading one cannot put in all the qualifications that scientific-minded persons are rather in the habit of appending, for honesty's sake, to generalized statements of fact." Vernon Kellogg

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:478 Ja 9 '26 280w

FOURNIER D'ALBE, EDMUND EDWARD. Quo vadimus? some glimpses of the future. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 92p $1 Dutton

901 Progress. Civilization 25-10857

With sanguine philosophy the author meditates on the trend of civilization as indicated by the immediate social and scientific progress of the race.

Reviewed by F. N. House

Am J Soc 31:271 S '25 70w

Booklist 22:26 O '25

"You may not agree with the whole content of these ninety-two pages, but a reading of them will be well worth while. Mr. d'Albe's treatment is entertaining rather than comprehensive, stimulating rather than exhaustive. But as far as he goes, he is soundly provocative of thought in the reader's mind."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 25 '25 460w

Ind 114:730 Je 27 '25 320w

N Y Tribune p12 Ag 16 '25 620w

"These thoughts and reflections of a distinguished man of science are interesting and contain much that is stimulative of thought. But they are scarcely worked out as a coherent or connected whole."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p206 Mr 19 '25 150w

FOX, CHARLES ELLIOT. Threshold of the Pacific; with a preface by G. Elliot Smith. (History of civilization) 379p il $6 Knopf [18s K. Paul]

919.35 San Christoval, Solomon islands. Solomon islands. Folklore—San Christoval, Solomon islands 25-4465

"This book is an account of the social organization, magic and religion of the people of San Cristoval in the Solomon Islands. 'San Cristoval' we are told 'is for the ethnologist an island of peculiar importance; it has preserved until the present day many remarkable survivals of a culture, for the exact parallel of which we have to go as far as Egypt, and as far back in time as the Pyramid Age forty-five centuries ago.'"—New Repub

FOX, CHARLES ELLIOT—Continued

"A new and important contribution to race history." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '25 700w

"The reader will be rewarded by a capital description of conditions rapidly approaching extinction." R. H. Lowie

+ Nation 121:44 J1 1 '25 800w

Nation and Ath 36:532 Ja 10 '25 30w

Reviewed by B. Malinowski

Nature 116:38 J1 11 '25 450w

"Will take high rank among the works which record first-hand study of primitive peoples. Dr. Fox writes with the intimate knowledge which comes from careful inquiry as well as long acquaintance with the subject matter; yet he retains a freshness of observation undimmed by familiarity, which serves to carry his reader through a mass of detail without even a suggestion of weariness."

+ — Nature 115:125 J1 25 '25 1350w

"Mr. Fox knows his technique. The chapters follow orthodox ethnological divisions and the material is well arranged." J. Langdon-Davies

+ New Repub 42:324 My 13 '25 1300w

Reviewed by Northcote Thomas

Sat R 139:32 Ja 24 '25 600w

"Owing to the amount of painstaking labor which Dr. Fox has expended, and to the meticulous honesty which prevents him from introducing any speculations, without expressly labelling them as such, 'The Threshold of the Pacific' remains a valuable collection of accurate ethnographical information, despite the defects inherent in a scientific work written in the defense of a peculiar orthodoxy."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:182 O 3 '25 400w

"The present account of the inhabitants of San Cristoval, in the Solomon Islands, is one of the very best contributions to ethnology we possess."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p394 Je 11 '25 1550w

FOX, DAVID, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

FOX, RALPH. People of the steppes. 246p il $2.50 Houghton

914.7 Russia—Economic conditions. Russia—Social life and customs

The writer served as a member of a British relief commission in south-eastern Russia in 1922-23. Sent out for the double purpose of buying horses for the use of the mission in their work of agricultural reconstruction, and of making a survey of famine conditions, he spent months in the isolated villages of the steppes, living with the peasants. The book is the interesting narrative of his experiences. There are intimate pictures of peasant life and thought, of communism and of communists who speak for themselves in these pages.

Boston Transcript p4 N 7 '25 1100w

"Mr. Fox has given us portraits, which we believe are faithful, of a diversity of people, but as there is no connected scene in which these characters act, there is little to remember them by; out of the words no visible shape arises. What the book needs is a thread to connect these desultory encounters; physically a point-to-point objective would have been helpful, or spiritually, some growing conviction documented by experience. Still, Mr. Fox is fresh and individual, and sees things through his own eyes, and his redness is a healthy redness, an impatience with the falsities of civilization."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:120 O 17 '25 1000w

"His mission is human and not political, and he carries it through with an unbiased altruism and yet manages somehow to give us a clear idea of the political condition of the country." Karlene Kent

+ N Y Tribune p10 D 13 '25 600w

"Mr. Fox is one of those Englishmen, like Hugh Walpole and William Gerhardt, who know and love Russia; he can write as well as they, and has more hope for its future than either of them has shown." Earle Walbridge

+ Outlook 141:450 N 18 '25 120w

"He gives proof of insight and an elegant pen. The information he brings us passes beyond information into literature. He is the romantic idealist and man of action who hugs the facts and mother-earth. The background of the steppe is felt and rendered, and mankind is veraciously set forth in a strange medley of East and West."

Sat R 140:239 Ag 29 '25 550w

Reviewed by J. W. Gassner

Sat R of Lit 2:448 D 26 '25 580w

"His account of his travelling is well written and gives us much new and needed information."

+ Spec 135:307 Ag 22 '25 80w

"Though he indulges very frequently in somewhat richly coloured asides; summonings-up of the great shades of the Turko-Russian past; or fantasies spun out of landscape-engendered moods; yet these dangerous habits never betray him into banality, or that personal sludge with which many books by amateur travellers are bespattered. Mr. Fox is no dilettante, chasing the mere of ennui round the world. He had a definite work to do, and from what one reads between the lines, he did it well."

+ Spec 135:494 S 26 '25 1050w

"As Mr. Fox has a mind appreciative of vitality and a command not only of words but of that rhythmical order which invests a particular statement with a wider meaning, he would be read with pleasure whatever his subject. In this book the pleasure is intensified, for he has a subject to appeal to his love of the new and picturesque, the unsophisticated and spacious."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p709 O 29 '25 1000w

FRANCK, HARRY ALVERSON. Roving through southern China. 649p il $5 Century

915.1 China—Description and travel 25-19913

In this book of wanderings, illustrated with frequent pictures and a map showing the route followed, the author covers practically all of China left unvisited in a previous volume, and presents a varied, entertaining and enlightening picture of Chinese life and the influences at work upon it, from the cosmopolitan cities of the coast to the remotest post in the provinces.

Booklist 22:113 D '25

"Barring the evidences of a petty spirit, Mr. Franck's latest is a competent picture of the surface of China. If you want to know how the Chinese make china or fight fire or till their fields or expose their girl babies, 'Roving through South China' is an excellent book for you to read. But if you want to get at the meaning under all these things, read something else. It is astonishing that as intelligent a man as Harry Franck should walk so far, see so much, yet understand and enjoy so little. Truly, here is one who goes around the world to find fault with it." J. R. Wallace

+ — Ind 115:507 O 31 '25 1450w

"Mr. Franck is splendidly equipped with courage, confidence, stolidity and endurance, and also the experience of journeying in other as exasperating and as dangerous lands. His photographs are unusual, deliberate and, with their texts, are in themselves a vivid panorama of the Southern Chinese, their manners and their work." F. O'Brien

+ Lit R p1 N 28 '25 1200w

Reviewed by E. Vincent

New Repub 45:118 D 16 '25 220w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p3 N 15 '25 160w

"Harry Franck's monumental travel books from all corners of the globe are always a great addition to the understanding of the customs and costumes of a people. What they lack in soul they make up in body." Karlene Kent

N Y Tribune p14 D 20 '25 300w

"Mr. Franck's book on southern China is one of his best. It is a really amazing performance, to write a book extending to more than a quarter of a million words and remain consistently entertaining and informing." Earle Walbridge

+ Outlook 141:448 N 18 '25 200w

R of Rs 72:665 D '25 130w

"Here is a veritable mine of information on the daily life of the people as the author saw them at rest and at work. One of the delights of his book is its more or less unconscious revelation of what might be termed the education of Harry Franck, the change that came over him."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:501 Ja 16 '26 280w

FRANKAU, GILBERT. Life and Erica. 355p $2 Century [7s 6d Hutchinson]

24-28673

"Erica has youth, good looks, talent and opportunity, in a degree which rarely exalts or afflicts the living. She comes up to London to do caricatures, and finds editors—and Mr. North—at her feet. He is rich, and middle-aged, and clever. And he applies himself to the seduction of Erica with a care and thoroughness which she, barely out of flapperhood, her head turned by excitement and success, could scarcely be expected to see through. Moreover, she has that something within which is nowadays modestly called 'temperament.' She is thus left without either motive or means of resistance, and only accident saves her from complete surrender. She is involved in an ugly scandal, her career is interrupted, her illusions are shattered, and so she finds religion. It is a very old lesson."—Sat R

Boston Transcript p7 F 25 '25 550w

Cleveland p67 Je '25

Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 80w

Reviewed by Dora Mulkins

Int Bk R p429 My '25 370w

"It would all screen nicely, but that is the best that could be said of it." H. L. Pangborn

— Lit R p14 Mr 28 '25 450w

Nation 120:577 My 20 '25 60w

"Mr. Gilbert Frankau is the highly competent workman coolly and deliberately practising hanky-panky because it pays. The appeal of this brew is very cunning. Cunning, but revolting; and revolting not because the author fails of that comprehension of suffering which seems to me essential to soundness, but because in pretending to be inspired by it he befools the very source of life." J. Franklin

— New Statesman 24:659 Mr 14 '25 200w

"Undeniably a bit startling. Dealing with much the same kind of material as have most other English novelists recently, and endeavoring as they do also to make a realistic picture of London life, his viewpoint, his method and his results are so different and so unexpected that they rather make one gasp. For his novel is mordant satire, albeit rather clumsily done, of the phase of life he depicts."

— N Y Times p16 F 22 '25 750w

"It is discouraging ethically, dispiriting mentally, and emotionally filthy and vile. 'Life and Erica' is all too dull and tawdry and slack, let us hope, to be even dangerous. It is discouraging that such trash should be seriously offered on the plane of lofty moral apologue, but, surely, even the most unsophisticated reader will be disgusted." J. W. Crawford

— N Y World p7m F 22 '25 780w

"Mr. Frankau has not written a great book, but he has written a thoroughly interesting one. Some of the detailed narrative is brilliantly clever. Even the mingled awkwardness and pretentiousness of his style cannot quite obscure his delicacy of observation and fineness of thought." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 139:162 F 14 '25 850w

Sat R of Lit 1:602 Mr 14 '25 450w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p89 F 5 '25 170w

FRANKEL, LEE KAUFER, and BUNZEL, BESSIE. Health of the worker; how to safeguard it. (National health council. National health ser.) 78p 30c Funk

613.6 Hygiene, Industrial 24-17332

"A primer by the chairman of the National health council. Deals briefly with hygienic and sanitary measures in shops and factories and presents suggestions for protecting and promoting the health of industrial workers."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"It is a succinct statement of what proper working conditions should be, how to avoid industrial hazards, and keeping the worker fit. Any industrial worker or employer could read this book with much profit for it is admirably stated and easily perused." J. A. Tobey

+ Int Bk R p38 D '24 180w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:413 J1 '25

FRANKEN, ROSE L. Pattern. 348p $2 Scribner

25-9754

The story of a great love between a mother and her daughter, and the daughter's difficult later adjustment to her love for her husband. Thru childhood, school days, and the early years of married life, it is Virginia's mother who is nearest to her heart. When her mother dies suddenly, life seems bereft of meaning or purpose. There are trying years of groping and doubt until Virginia stumbles on the fact that all her experiences and her loves—mother, husband, and son—form a part of the same beautiful and intricate design.

"If we take the book up to a certain point—three-quarters or it may be seven-eighths of it—we find it to possess unusual appeal. Up to that point it is the result of observation, and its truthfulness delights us. We can see the life which is flowing through the pages of the story. Rose Franken is an excellent observer but a poor philosopher. It is a not uncommon failing." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 29 '25 1000w

Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 50w

"Rose L. Franken exhibits in her first novel qualities of observation and of exact recollection that contribute greatly to the brilliance of promise of her future books." K. F.

+ Int Bk R p550 J1 '25 250w

"'Pattern' is not a startling book, there have been many like it; it is not a brilliant book, for there are many better; but it is decidedly a book worth reading." H. A. Long

Lit R p6 Ag 1 '25 260w

"If the novel drags a little toward the end. it is nevertheless one, which should appeal to the thoughtful reader."

N Y Times p9 My 3 '25 720w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

"Its style is smooth but occasionally too caressing, and lacks both firmness and lyrical beauty. The early chapters, with their brief sketches of Virginia's family, show promise of a good novel, but the theme is too relentlessly pursued."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:15 Ag 1 '25 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a My 31 '25 280w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

FRASER, CHELSEA CURTIS. Practical book of home repairs. 378p il $2.50 Crowell

680 Handicraft. Manual training 25-14312

"Whether your interest lies in house-painting (inside or out) reshingling your roof, upholstering some old furniture, repairing the plumbing or fixing the worn place in the baby's shoe, this book tells you how to do it. Mr. Fraser is an instructor of manual training in the public schools and, in this volume, which is well illustrated and reinforced with diagrams, gives very readable lessons in craftsmanship."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 22:57 N '25

"A teacher of experience and a craftsman of long-standing has given to the public a volume which should be in every home where thrift is necessary."

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 26 '25 220w

"A convenient reference book by a well-known instructor in manual training."

+ J Home Econ 17:727 D '25 120w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:35 J1 '25

N Y Tribune p10 O 11 '25 80w

"The book will set the average man's fingers to itching and his mind to working in the desire to do a few or many of the possible things these pages and pictures dare him to attempt."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a O 25 '25 350w

FRASER, EDWARD, and GIBBONS, JOHN, comps. Soldier and sailor words and phrases. 372p il $5 Dutton [12s 6d Routledge]

427 English language—Slang—Dictionaries. European war, 1914-1918—Language [25-9719]

A dictionary of slang terms used in all branches of the service of the British and Dominion forces, and including some words and phrases used by the American troops. Nicknames, sobriquets, and titles of regiments are also included, with their origins, as well as a classified list of their origins, as well to each unit of the British army.

Booklist 22:145 Ja '26

"The compilers are to be congratulated on a book that smells of mud, oil, green grass and blue sky rather than of the lamp, and that does not belie its attractive appearance. Without being encyclopaedic in the sense of sacrificing brevity, it is highly informative, and includes a list of battle-honors of the various regiments." R. H. A.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 15 '25 350w

Living Age 326:385 Ag 15 '25 450w

"The principle of selection here should have been literary rather than 'nice.' I think the reader of this dictionary will be disappointed, both with the quality and quantity of the slang which had its origin in the Great War. Most of the best specimens are older than the Great War."

— New Statesman 25:136 My 16 '25 1100w

"The compilers have achieved the almost impossible feat of writing a dictionary that is more entertaining than a novel."

+ N Y Times p2 S 27 '25 800w

N Y Tribune p12 O 4 '25 500w

"The slang in this book has had its face washed, a clean collar put on, and is generally ready for inspection or church parade. All coarse or shocking expressions are carefully omitted, and since our armies swore terribly in Flanders, no less in our own time than in the days of Tristram Shandy, this dictionary has been reduced in size by at least one hundred per cent." Edmund Pearson

Outlook 141:54 S 9 '25 800w

"The compilers have brought out the picturesqueness and humor, the perhaps studied triviality, of the wartime slang. The next generation may read in the book an indication that the combatants enjoyed themselves. Certainly it took high spirits to talk their jargon."

Sat R of Lit 2:111 S 5 '25 280w

"The first dictionary of War-slang; and secreted in it are huge stories of historical information and humour."

+ Spec 134:777 My 9 '25 220w

FREDERICK, JOHN. Bronze collar. 337p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

25-8123

"A fascinating character known for a long time simply as El Rojo, otherwise the Red, dominates the pages of John Frederick's romance of California of the early nineteenth century. When we first see him, El Rojo is the personal attendant of a Spanish gallant and adventurer named Valdez. The fellow is supposed to have been a native slave among Moorish pirates, and he has fallen among Spaniards as one of the spoils of war at sea. In Mr. Frederick's story we see him in many aspects of romance, but always wreaking vengeance upon those who have abused him. Finally he takes flight for an eastern refuge with the fair girl he has won by his manliness and strength from the midst of his enemies."—N Y World

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"It is singularly devoid of the flavor of human reality, but it has a preposterous intricacy of design and a sustained speed of movement which take skill to produce, and it affords a mild form of diversion without placing any strain upon either the mind or the emotions." H. F.

— + Int Bk R p482 Je '25 300w

"Entertaining and well written." J: W. Crawford

+ Lit R p9 Mr 7 '25 380w

"A romance brave and gallant enough to beguile a sleepless night or a dull journey, or even a tiresome evening."

+ N Y Times p19 F 22 '25 400w

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 15 '25 120w

"Mr. Frederick has told here a love story full of compelling qualities."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 240w

"Mr. Frederick has written a rapidly moving and exciting story which will do very well to take you as far out as Stamford."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p7a Mr 22 '25 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p285 Ap 23 '25 200w

FREDERICK, JOHN TOWNER. Green Bush. 304p il $2.50 Knopf

25-17420

"One of those rare American novels based on a love for the soil. Tells the story of a young man of university training who gives up a promising academic career for farming, finding in his contact with the land a deep satisfaction and an answer to the question of life's meaning."—Wis Lib Bul

Booklist 22:116 D '25

"Mr. Frederick does more than tell a simple chronicle of rural life. He has a keen appreciation of the beauty of the country and he sets it before us, writing it in bit by bit, till we feel the charm it has for Frank in spite of the crushing blows it deals him. There is much of the prose idyll about this tale of the Great Lake country. Mr. Frederick writes with feeling and he writes well."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 260w

Cleveland p107 N '25

"'Green Bush' is a good novel, a novel with great moments. Also with disappointing moments. On the whole it has dignity. But the bootlegging episode, with its catastrophic consequences, is neither dignified nor typical." N. B. Fagin

+ Int Bk R p820 N '25 550w

"So far as interpretation of the deepest aspects of farm life is concerned, 'Green bush' reaches the high point in recent fiction. Here, as in no other American novel, implicit unity with the soil is given adequate and coherent expression. The author of this book is himself a farmer as well as a novelist, and thus has been able to create a credible character." N. A. Crawford

+ Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 450w

"For the most part Mr. Frederick has said too much and implied too little, described too fully and evoked nothing at all. He has done what he set out to do possibly, and the fact that the people about whom he is writing would never recognize or be interested in themselves does not either prove or disprove the book's reality. Perhaps he has struggled too hard to clarify his emotions and to present a simple picture of elementary forces that, in themselves, are not simple." Margery Latimer

+ N Y Tribune p3 S 27 '25 700w

"Mr. Frederick has created something powerful and occasionally beautiful; he has further created a novel of the soil which falls on the positive rather than the negative side, glorifying as it does the farmer's life instead of concentrating upon its stupidity and barrenness and dullness. A mingled touch of the pathetic and the heroic, at the end, leaves Frank not without distinction. Once again we must wait for a really fine novel by Mr. Frederick but once again we can wait for it with confidence."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:164 S 26 '25 460w

"A finer book than the author's first novel Druidia."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

FREDERICKS, ARNOLD, pseud. See Kummer, F: A.

FREEMAN, LEWIS RANSOME. On the roof of the Rockies, the great Columbia icefield of the Canadian Rockies. 270p il $5 Dodd

917.12 Rocky mountains (Canada) 25-22876

Mr Freeman accompanied Byron Harmon's expedition in 1924 to make a moving picture film of the Columbia icefield of the Canadian Rockies as a part of his photographic record of the peaks, glaciers and valleys of the Rockies and Selkirks. The party, with three guides and sixteen pack horses, set out from Lake Louise on a five-hundred mile journey northward along the continental divide into the Columbia icefield and obtained some very fine photographs of mountain scenery. The book describes the many adventures of the trip, not the least interesting of which were the party's radio experiences.

"The narrative relating to perils met and overcome and the scenic glories discovered and photographed is, of course, the most vitally interesting part of the book. The human side of the story, however, holds the reader's interest fully as much. All in all, the volume is a welcome addition to the literature of American exploration." W. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 28 '25 620w

"Mr. Freeman tells the story with a picturesque pen and a sense of humor that make it a very enjoyable and very interesting book. . . . But aside from its variety of interests the work has geographical value because of its careful record of the party's explorations and topographical observations."

+ N Y Times p7 D 27 '25 400w

"The illustrations form a lovely procession through the volume and compare favorably with the best of Alpine mountain photography."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:438 D 19 '25 100w

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. Mystery of Angelina Frood. 312p $2 Dodd [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-5540

John Strangeways, M.D. is summoned at midnight to attend a young woman obviously suffering from shock. The circumstances attending the call arrest the young doctor's attention and arouse uneasiness for the fate of his patient. The interest and concern are sustained when doctor and patient later meet in the small town to which she has fled from the husband who terrifies her. The mystery of Angelina Frood deepens with her disappearance. The police and volunteer searchers led by Dr Strangeways are baffled by the multiplicity of clues. Dr Thorndike, protagonist in earlier mystery stories by the author, sees further than the others, and eventually discloses the simple tho startling explanation of the facts.

"Real mystery flavored with erudition, humor and romance are the ingredients which Mr. Freeman uses and blends in 'The Mystery of Angelina Frood.'"

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 250w
Cleveland p84 J1 '25

"Lelsurely and with not a little pleasing digression." Ernest Hackett

+ Lit R p9 My 29 '25 320w

"Mr. Freeman has contrived a particularly dark and puzzling plot and has solved its complications and its mystery in a very unexpected and unconventional way. It contains also some rather good characterizations made with few but strong strokes of delineation."

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 1 '25 380w

"This is a good, sound, workmanlike job which mystery addicts will do well to look into."

+ N Y Tribune p14 Mr 15 '25 280w

N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 50w

"A gay little mystery story to which the solution is as amusing as everything else. It is not intended to be very subtle, but is entirely successful in carrying on the reader's interest from one clue to the other."

+ Spec 134:128 Ja 24 '25 50w

"Bright, ingenious, and amusing story."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p886 D 25 '24 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. Shadow of the wolf. 297p $2 Dodd

25-18351

Coldly and without remorse Varney rid himself of the man who held him in power. To protect himself from punishment he built up a labyrinth of deception that trapped him and snared him fast to his crime at the moment he believed himself free.

"Here is a detective story with thrills and many improbabilities."

Boston Transcript p5 D 26 '25 260w

"It's a fascinating tale."

+ Lit R p17 D 5 '25 50w

"The reader has his fill of hairbreadth escapes and the thrills that go with mystery yarns. Cleverly worked up sympathy for the main culprit adds an element not always present in such tales."

+ N Y Tribune p12 N 1 '25 150w

N Y World p7m O 25 '25 130w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p721 O 29 '25 180w

THE FREEMAN. The Freeman book. 394p $3 Huebsch

814

25-2255

A collection of typical editorials, essays, middle articles and book reviews selected from the Freeman during its four years' life, 1920-

THE FREEMAN—Continued

1924. Among the contributors represented are Albert Jay Nock, B. W. Huebsch, Francis Neilson, Geroid Tanquary Robinson, Harold Kellock, and Van Wyck Brooks.

Booklist 21:269 Ap '25

"The volume as a whole manifests a range of thought, an earnestness of presentation, a scholarly reach, and an individuality of tone that would lend distinction to any periodical; and it says much for the quality of the book that the bulk of its contents, while possibly not of permanent value, are as interesting and as timely today as when first made public in 'The Freeman.'"

+ Bookm 61:233 Ap '25 150w

Dial 78:339 Ap '25 80w

Reviewed by Hugo Sonnenschein
Lit R p10 Je 13 '25 520w

"There is no form of writing that falls within the province of a weekly journal which is not to be seen at its shining best in 'The Freeman Book.'"

+ N Y Times p6 F 1 '25 900w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 22 '25 200w

"No better 'writing' has been done in American Journalism than the writing we find in this volume."

+ Outlook 139:275 F 18 '25 430w

"'The Freeman Book' may be described as a cross section of The Freeman, that brilliant weekly which not long since died an untimely death. As such it is quite worth reading. Every department is included, and the selection, from 'Current Comment' to 'Briefer Mentions' is a happy and representative one."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:881 Ji 4 '25 180w

"'Representative' is, naturally, the most that a book of barely 400 pages could be as a memorial of a paper which was published 203 times and was edited with rather special fastidiousness. No reader of the Freeman will be entirely satisfied with the selection made, but few will have the hardihood to pretend that they could have done the exacting task better. Inadequate as of necessity such a book had to be, the 'Freeman Book' should not have gone unpublished."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ji 8 '25 800w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p158 Mr 5 '25 120w

Wis Lib Bul 21:87 Mr '25

FRENCH, ALLEN. Day of Concord and Lexington; the nineteenth of April, 1775. 295p il $4 Little

973.33 Concord, Battle of, 1775. Lexington, Battle, of, 1775 25-6157

The book is a close study of the events of a single day, of a battle so slight that it might have passed as a skirmish had it not marked decisively a new day in American history. Beginning with an account of the events that caused the fighting at Concord and Lexington and the conditions immediately before the outbreak of hostilities, Mr French devotes the greater part of his book to the military events of April nineteenth. The study is based as far as possible on contemporary documents and a bibliography is included. Index.

"The story of the nineteenth of April, 1775, retold vividly and readably."

+ Booklist 21:375 Ji '25

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 11 '25 1900w

"As sheer history its value is tempered by trailing clouds of patriotic glory. As an oration it is qualified by historical reservations."

+ — Ind 114:478 Ap '25 120w

Reviewed by J. H. Penniman

Lit R p12 My 9 '25 250w

"Not an essay on selected issues, but a complete survey of the whole drama enacted on the Nineteenth of April. Nothing mars these pages or hinders the movement—except a few inappropriate thrusts at our late enemies, the Germans, thrusts betraying an animus out of place in a serious historical work. Apart from these needless asides, this volume meets the requirements of exact science." C: A. Beard

+ — New Repub 43:216 Ji 15 '25 200w

"Remarkably complete in its effort at reconstruction." J. D. Adams

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 19 '25 1500w

"Seems likely to be, in everything save relatively unimportant details, the last word on the subject as far as narrative history is concerned." W: MacDonald

N Y Tribune p3 Ap 19 '25 520w

"Valuable though it is for its collection of data, the book is more disputatious than authoritative, though authority was no doubt the author's aim. He doubts so much of the testimony gathered as to leave one uncertain."

+ — N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 80w

"Mr. French's book is a work of unassuming scholarship; it is modest; it strives to be fair and to discover the truth; its author is capable of appraising heroic actions and appreciating humorous incidents; and, above all, he is moved by that genuine patriotism which knows how to be just and generous to those who were our adversaries once upon a time. I found that reading the book was a thorough delight."

E. L. Pearson

+ Outlook 139:538 Ap 8 '25 1650w

"Mr. French's book is characterized by a firm grasp of facts and a commendably impartial spirit. While clearly aglow with anniversary enthusiasm, he maintains a judicial attitude toward his evidence." Harold Murdock

+ Sat R of Lit 1:740 My 9 '25 750w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 22 '25 370w

FRENCH, JOSEPH LEWIS, comp. Great pirate stories; second series. 314p il $2 Brentano's

25-8513

"His chapters include 'On the Spanish Main,' from the anonymous 'History of the Pirates'; the capture of Julius Caesar, from Henry Gilbert's 'The Book of Pirates'; the story of Limahon the Rover, from Samuel Purchas's 'Purchas: His Pilgrimes'; an account of galleys and galley slaves from Stanley Lane-Poole's 'The Story of the Barbary Corsairs'; the origin of the freebooters, from John Auchenchale's 'The History of the Pirates'; the story of John Paul Jones, from E. Keble Chatterton's 'Daring Deeds of Famous Pirates'; the history of Jean Lafitte, from the anonymous 'The Pirate's Own Book,' and chapters full of action from 'Sea Wolves of the Mediterranean,' by R. Hamilton Curry; 'The History of the Indian Wars and of Plantain the Pyrate,' by Clement Downing; 'The Monarchs of the Main,' by G. W. Thornbury; 'Mr. Roberts: His Voyage to the Levant,' by John Roberts, and 'The Wild Coast of Nippon,' by Captain H. C. John." —N Y Times

Booklist 22:33 O '25

Reviewed by W: Berry

Lit R p9 My 23 '25 100w

"Mr. French has brought together some excellent and little known material. It is true that the great names do not star this volume, but all these figures are cut from the same cloth and names do not mean much, after all."

+ N Y Times p13 My 3 '25 950w

"All of them are good, most of them are well known to readers of adventure, none of them is touched with that odd but fascinating and often coarse vulgarity of gaudy colors to be found in Marryatt and Porter and the unknown writers for boys' periodicals whose work so dazzled and bewildered." C: J. Finger

+ N Y Tribune My 17 '25 300w

Reviewed by J: E. Mitchell

N Y World p7m My 3 '25 360w

FRENCH, JOSEPH LEWIS, comp. Great sea stories, second series. 348p $2 Brentano's

Sea stories—Collections 25-8417

Contents: The invincible Armada, by S. Purchas; The Revenge, by Sir W. Raleigh; Early Arctic adventure, by W. Barents; The sword of Alan, by R. L. Stevenson; In good King George's time, by T. Smollett; Fishers of the deep, by P. Loti; Firebrand, by L. R. Freeman; The whale, by J. F. Cooper; In the hornets' nest, by M. Scott; The duel, by W. C. Russell; In Nelson's time, by J. Massfield; The great sea serpent, by F. Whympere; A burial at sea, by R. H. Dana; The phantom ship, by F. S. Bassett; The last whale, by W. H. Macy; Cape Horn, by H. Melville; The octopus, by V. Hugo.

"Mr. French's selection shows his usual unerring discrimination."

+ Booklist 22:33 O '25

"It is a quaint and gracious gift Mr. French has given us, something to recall the days when we sat, breathless, in the exciting company of deep-dyed scoundrels and intrepid heroes. And even now, on more mature perusal, we find ourselves quite as breathless at times." Wt: Berry

+ Lit R p9 My 23 '25 100w

"The quickened majesty of the sea is securely caught in much of this material which Mr. French has gathered for his book, and so, too, is that ruggedness of being that made the good old sea-dogs what they were."

+ N Y Times p13 My 3 '25 700w

Reviewed by C. J. Finger

N Y Tribune My 17 '25 300w

Reviewed by J. E. Mitchell

N Y World p1m My 3 '25 360w

"Mr. French has made competent selections for his second collection of sea stories."

Sat R of Lit 2:51 Ag 15 '25 100w

FRENCH, JOSEPH LEWIS, ed. Great detective stories from Dickens to Gaboriau. (Dial detective library) 426p $1.75 Dial press

24-27750

Contents: Inspector Bucket, by C. Dickens; Sergeant Cuff, by W. Collins; Monsieur Lecoq—master-mind, by E. Gaboriau.

Booklist 21:152 Ja '25

"He exercises discrimination and intelligence."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:365 D 6 '24 120w

FRENSSEN, GUSTAV. Village sermons by a novelist. 162p $1.50 Appleton [4s Heffer]

252 Sermons [25-219]

The author of Jörn Uhl was for ten years a Lutheran pastor. Some of his sermons, preached before village congregations in Holstein, Germany, are here brought together, with a brief account of the author and his works by T. F. Kinloch.

"They are unique in their simplicity and sincerity. He cares not for theology; he is undogmatic; he is human." A. V. Ende

+ Lit R p14 N 21 '25 700w

N Y Times p21 O 5 '24 370w

FREUNDLICH, HERBERT. Elements of colloidal chemistry; tr. by George Barger. 210p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]

541.345 Colloids

"Kappillarchemie," Freundlich's standard work on colloidal chemistry is here offered in abbreviated and somewhat simplified form as an introduction to the chemistry of colloids, for students of medicine and technology.

"Freundlich's book is a welcome addition to the literature, and because of its non-mathematical method of treatment, it makes a particularly good introductory text."

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:386 Mr '25 90w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 29:759 Je '25 1350w

N Y New Tech Bks 10:21 Ap '25

"Considering the size limitations of the book, and the fact that it is not easy to keep fully abreast of the most recent work in all countries, the author has but few sins of omission, and these are to be condoned. The book may, therefore, be cheerfully admitted to the privilege of scientific beatification." Jerome Alexander

+ Sat R of Lit 1:630 Mr 28 '25 650w

FRIEDMAN, ELISHA MICHAEL. Survival or extinction. 297p $2.50 Seltzer

296 Jews. Zionism

24-28453

The chapters in this book are revisions of addresses and magazine articles dealing with social and psychological aspects of the Jewish question. Contents: Part I, Jewish history and the biological process; Part II, Studies in assimilation and isolation; Part III, The meaning of Zionism; Part IV, In defence of a Jewish Palestine; Part V, Postscript and summary.

"Written between the years 1911 and 1923. Their timeliness is assured and that they are authoritative, the scholarly treatment of the writer everywhere attests." C. H.

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 27 '24 700w

"There is much controversial material involved in Mr. Friedman's statement of the case, but it is a powerful, even an eloquent, and also an entirely sincere presentation of the problem." H. L. P.

+ Lit R p11 Mr 21 '25 470w

Reviewed by J. J. Smertenko

Nation 121:98 Jl 15 '25 120w

"A fairly well arranged and readable exposition of the historical and philosophical arguments for Zionism. Mr. Friedman's plea is intelligent; since his arguments are based on a wide reading and an understanding for social psychology, he carries conviction where other propagandists, wielding the cudgels of a more primitive form of debate, have failed." B. L.

+ Survey 55:253 N 15 '25 220w

FRIEL, ARTHUR OLNEY. Hard Wood. 333p $2 Penn

25-15390

"'Hard Wood' earned his nick-name early in life, when he thrashed 'Copperhead' Cooper one afternoon in the schoolyard. The enmity between the two lasts throughout the story, involving additional episodes and several characters. The setting is in the hills of upper New York State, when the Hudson Valley was but a thin line of civilization and the canals were busy. The Coopers, who were moonshiners, lived apart from the rest of the backwoods settlement. They committed a fatal indiscretion when, after drinking some of their own bad liquor, they burned Hard's home and robbed him of his dead mother's possessions. Hard swore revenge and got it, and the reader gets plenty of excitement. Love is supplied in the person of Jane Cooper, the recovery of whose eyesight is the indirect result of the ascension of Hard's better nature after his anger had cooled."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 15 '25 250w

"Delightful tale of the Shawangunk Mountains." C: P. Sawyer

+ Lit R p5 Ag 15 '25 100w

"Though common as dirt and in parts hackneyed almost beyond endurance, the story at least measures up to the standards of the hundreds of its good-man, bad-man, justice-and-love progenitors. And as there are hundreds more like 'Hard Wood' to come, there is no need for hesitation over missing it."

— + N Y Times p19 Ag 2 '25 180w

"There is lacking in it any trace of the quaint beauty by which tales of this sort are sometimes saved from utter stupidity. The imagined people are a herd of surly, savage animals,

FRIEL, ARTHUR O.—Continued
battering and killing one another in constant outbursts of brutish fury."

— Sat R of Lit 2:142 S 19 '25 130w

Springf'd Republican p5a O 18 '25 180w

FRIEL, ARTHUR OLNEY. Mountains of mystery. 399p $2 Harper

25-7943

Three adventurous Americans, Knowlton, McKay, and red-headed Tim, travel to South America in quest of a tribe of blond Indians believed to inhabit the mountains north of the Orinoco river. The explorers go thru whirling rapids and tortuous channels, encountering tigers, snakes, and demons on their way. Near the "Talking mountain" they meet the black white man, one of their own race whose mind has been wrecked and whose body has been burned black by an Indian poison. They are compelled to turn to him when they are desperately in need of help, and he decides their fate.

Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '25 300w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

Int Bk R p588 Ag '25 150w

"The author has put his knowledge to good use in this latest book from his pen." As a result 'Mountains of Mystery' is a cleverly constructed and inviting story which should prove most acceptable to lovers of adventure tales."

+ N Y Times p19 Je 7 '25 520w

N Y Tribune p9 My 10 '25 150w

"There is a good deal of crude—very crude—force in Mr. Friel's book. There is nothing but what is intended to be breath-taking narrative, and the book can be laid aside at any time without any sense of loss."

Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 130w

"Those with a weakness for experiences out of the ordinary amid scenes far from civilization, will find 'Mountains of Mystery' much to their taste."

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 19 '25 180w

Wis Lib Bul 21:200 Jl '25

FROTHINGHAM, PAUL REVERE. Edward Everett; orator and statesman. 495p il $6 Houghton

B or 92 Everett, Edward 25-9214

The first biography of this distinguished American is written sixty years after his death, when the memory of his many and brilliant public services needs revival. The book, which draws largely on his letters and journals, covers all sides of his varied career—his brief ministry in Boston, the wander years in Europe in preparation for his professorship of Greek at Harvard, his political career and as minister at the Court of Saint James, his presidency of Harvard and his services as Secretary of state and senator. The concluding chapters are given to his oratory and the part he took in the Civil war.

"Mr. Frothingham has given us not only the first and definitive biography of a famous American orator and statesman, but also a vivid picture of American history and society during the first half of the nineteenth century. Students of government will find that this book throws much light on the politics, diplomacy and public life of that period."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:647 Ag '25 220w

"A sympathetic, yet unprejudiced, biography of an almost forgotten statesman."

+ Booklist 22:29 O '25

"The biographer has performed a thoroughgoing as well as an interesting piece of work."

+ Bookm 61:716 Ag '25 100w

"Dr. Frothingham has set out to write a sympathetic biography. He does his best for Everett and an excellent best it is. He stops commendably short of infatuation. He does not gloss mistakes. His style is lucid and his methods admirable. It is difficult to conceive of a better biography of its subject than Dr. Frothingham's volume turns out to be. . . A fine biography of an eminent subject, and one that will have a permanent value." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 9 '25 2100w

"This book is the first adequate presentation of his career and personality. Dr. Frothingham has used his material with discretion and distinction. His comments are enlightening, his criticism and praise discriminating. An eminent man is saved from an approaching semioblivion."

+ Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 250w

"Mr. Frothingham has written on this career with rare freedom and balanced judgment. He has not sought to gloss over the errors and hide the evident weakness of his subject, but tells the story in a masterly manner. Evidently in sympathy with the man Everett, he is none the less outspokenly critical of Everett as a political factor. Altogether a book carrying a lesson worthy to be studied as displaying an example of the scholar in politics." W. C. Ford

+ Nation 121:492 O 28 '25 520w

"Dr. Frothingham has undoubtedly given us as favorable an impression of his subject as the subject allowed. He has done his work excellently and written a book of unusual interest, in many ways a model biography." J. T. Adams

+ New Repub 44:sup4 S 30 '25 1050w

"A brilliant and satisfying book. No man could wish for a more understanding biographer than Mr. Frothingham has been to Edward Everett. His work will not satisfy those whose palates have been tickled exclusively by the methods of the 'new biography'; he is apologetic or patient where a writer of the Strachey school would have been unsparing. For all that, Edward Everett, in his weakness and in his strength, emerges from this book a better understood man, a more humanized figure, than he was either before his death or since." J. D. Adams

+ N Y Times p11 My 17 '25 1950w

"Mr. Frothingham has done his work well. The book is a solid contribution to historical biography and a worthy piece of historical appraisal." W. MacDonald

+ N Y Tribune p1 Je 28 '25 900w

Reviewed by N. F. Johnson

No Am 222:183 S '25 380w

"A sound piece of biography, which succeeds remarkably in its task of rebuilding for us a notable personality out of our American past which for most Americans already had become little more than a name."

+ Outlook 141:127 S 23 '25 500w

"Besides containing a well-presented portrait, this book has considerable interest as history." R. F. N.

+ Pol Sci Q 40:652 D '25 400w

R of Rs 71:671 Je '25 320w

St Louis p358 S '25

"The book fills an important gap in the biographical history of the nineteenth century. It is a truer book than any 'authorized' biographer would have been likely to make it fifty or sixty years ago. And it shows afresh that without previous experience in the art of biography, a writer adequately equipped with a sense of proportion, with background, and with taste, possesses the essential qualifications for an important biographical task." M. A. DeW. Howe

+ Sat R of Lit 2:4 Ag 1 '25 1100w

Springf'd Republican p5a Je 14 '25 1700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p818 D 3 '25 1100w

"On the whole, Dr. Frothingham may be said to have presented him as vitally and sympathetically as possible, yet I doubt whether even now he will enthrall anybody. Only, one source of color has been neglected, and this lies in the letters of Mrs. Everett. There are only three of them in the book, and they are rich things. It is a great pity that we cannot have more of them." E: Wagenknecht

+ Yale R n s 15:410 Ja '26 250w

FROTHINGHAM, ROBERT. Around the world; a friendly guide for the world traveler. (Park street lib.) 320p il $3 Houghton

910 Voyages and travels. East (Far East)—Description and travel 25-24253

Mr Frothingham describes a ten months' journey, mostly in countries of the Far East and trips to some of the least visited parts of these.

"A pleasurable sense of humor and a rather neat use of colloquialisms, plus a graphic style, go far to make the book an addition to one's library and a companion to the globe-trotter."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 16 '25 450w

"It may be that Mr. Frothingham has too much ground to cover; it may be that he is over-sentimental and lets his training as an anthologist blur his travel vision. At any rate he does not make us feel that 'somewhere over the rim of the world lies romance.' Yet he is a genial philosopher, and his compact guide-book will not be out of place in the luggage of others who do likewise." Dale Warren

+ Sat R of Lit 2:412 D 12 '25 300w

FROTHINGHAM, THOMAS GODDARD. Naval history of the World war; v 2, The stress of sea power, 1915-1916. 343p $3.75 Harvard univ. press [18s Milford]

940.45 European war, 1914-1918—Naval operations (24-14384)

"Like the first volume of his history, Capt Frothingham's second volume is of a character to interest the special student of naval history rather more than the general reader. The epic quality of Jutland hardly seems to make an appeal to Capt Frothingham; he is concerned with the recital of the detailed maneuvers, and too high praise cannot be given to him for the clarity with which he sets them forth. His conclusion—and coming from a neutral source, it must carry almost decisive weight—is even more adverse to Admiral Jellicoe than any previous study of the battle with which the present reader is familiar."—Springf'd Republican

"The present author has the enormous advantage of perspective, which enables him to perceive and to point out the really vital elements in the complicated problem, and this he has done boldly and excellently. His narrative is a merciless exposition of the attempt of two mighty partizans to solve a task the magnitude of which neither recognized and for which neither was prepared." E: Breck

+ Am Hist R 31:138 O '25 2250w

Am Pol Sci R 19:857 N '25 250w

"An American review calls the second volume of this history 'one of the most important books that have yet appeared'; an English critic finds fault with it on the ground of unreliable sources. Both agree, however, that it contains the first really authoritative account of the battle of Jutland."

Booklist 22:26 O '25

"To the ordinary reader this will prove a very interesting story. It is written so simply and vividly and the arrangement is so clear and logical that one can follow for one's self the drama of the development of the U-boats and of the one great battle between modern fleets, and comprehend for one's self what really happened. From a technical standpoint this is one of the most important books that has yet appeared on either side of the Atlantic." C: T. Davis

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 16 '25 3200w

"A narrative history which is at once a good story and a clear, authoritative reference, giving the why as well as the where and when. The accompanying maps and diagrams are complete and well executed."

+ Ind 114:731 Je 27 '25 80w

"Captain Frothingham's account of the Battle of Jutland, which takes up nearly half the volume, is undoubtedly the most important study yet made on that much-disputed affair, and gives to the present volume its principal value in the eyes of naval experts." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p19 Ja 3 '26 1550w

Outlook 140:342 Jl 1 '25 10w

"Comes as near being a 'definitive' contribution to the study of the naval operations during the war as any book yet published. No future student, or historian, of the battle of Jutland can fail to take this book into major consideration, if indeed, he is not forced to be governed by its conclusions."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 Je 22 '25 460w

"Captain Frothingham's views would probably have been different had he had access to better sources of information. Possibly his narrative and commentary will become more interesting when he deals with the later period of naval war, that is when America was a participant, not an onlooker; but the present volume is most disappointing."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p486 Jl 23 '25 1100w

FRYER, DOUGLAS. Vocational self-guidance; planning your life work; with an introd. by Harry Dexter Kitson; and contributed chapters upon the business professions by leading specialists of New York city. 385p $3 (12s 6d) Lippincott

374.1 Profession, Choice of. Vocational guidance 25-5985

An experienced vocational counselor outlines a plan of self guidance by which each man by himself may choose his vocation. This general plan is followed by analyses of the various business professions, types of positions to be filled and qualifications. Part three, only twenty pages, by Lorine Pruette, is given to business professions for women. Part four is devoted to the process of getting the job.

Reviewed by C. L. Stone

Am Econ R 15:514 S '25 200w

"Dr. Fryer's book makes a contribution to the field of occupational information which justifies a place for it on the reading lists of those persons who are interested in the movement of vocational guidance." W: C. Ash

+ Ann Am Acad 121:199 S '25 160w

"A thorough, scientific treatment intended for able, intelligent young men from seventeen to thirty."

+ Booklist 21:327 Je '25

Cleveland p91 S '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Ap 16 '25 90w

FUCHS, EMIL. With pencil, brush and chisel; the life of an artist. 254p il $7.50 Putnam B or 92 25-6624

"Here we have a picture show as well as a book, a sort of portrait gallery. The portrayals are of two kinds, reproductions of works by the author in sculpture and painting and sketches in words of the many and varied personalities whom he has encountered in his artistic career. Emil Fuchs is an Austrian by birth; he studied in Rome and began his active career in Berlin. For twenty years or more he was prominent in London, enjoying royal and other exalted patronage. A victim of war prejudices because of his nationality, he transplanted himself to New York a decade ago, and here he has added numerous to the achievements of his chisel and brush."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:299 My '25

"It is true that this book is not autobiography in the real sense of the word, for it is altogether too much concerned with Mr. Fuchs's contacts; indeed, so much so that often we lose sight of Mr. Fuchs himself and focus our attention on the particular personality that is being reconstructed. But it is enjoyable reading, as are all such books when they are well done. And 'With Pencil, Brush, and Chisel' is well done." H. S. Gorman

FUCHS, EMIL—Continued

+ — Bookm 61:91 Mr '25 300w

Reviewed by N. H. Dole

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 11 '25 1550w

Ind 114:619 My 30 '25 100w

"It is true that Mr. Fuchs's prose is not the prose of a professional writer, but it is certainly that of a man who knows how to describe exactly what he sees. The painter's eye is evident in his work. He enters no room without understanding its peculiarities and its atmosphere, and he conveys these things with a candor and a simplicity that render his book no less than a personal conversation with his reader." H. S. Gorman

+ Int Bk R p236 Mr '25 2550w

Reviewed by Anzia Yezierska

Int Bk R p418 My '25 1050w

"The autobiography of Emil Fuchs is all the more remarkable, and it certainly is that, because it gives the most delightful proof of the fact that it is written by a man who wields a pen with the same sensitiveness and finish, the same sense of beauty, composition and color as he has used, and still uses, his brush, 'his pencil and his chisel.'" Cosmo Hamilton

+ Lit R p4 Mr 7 '25 350w

"In his narrative Mr. Fuchs fails to make his personages very vital, although he gossips glibly about them through 147 pages."

— Nation 121:240 Ag 26 '25 100w

— New Repub 44:289 N 4 '25 160w

Reviewed by James Luby

N Y Times p11 Mr 1 '25 1900w

Reviewed by Glen Mullin

N Y Tribune p11 My 17 '25 650w

"While his pictures may pall with their uniformity, seldom heightened by a spark of the different, there are few pages that fail to arouse the interest of the reader. In contents the autobiography is sparkling and not devoid of bragadocio." F. V. Roman

+ — N Y World p7m Mr 1 '25 540w

Outlook 139:659 Ap 29 '25 80w

"No reader can expect to get as much pleasure and entertainment out of this autobiography as Mr. Fuchs got in writing it; but readers who habitually and thoroughly read 'among those present' will get a rewarding amount of pleasure all the same. It is a question whether to laugh or swear at such a book; probably the former critical method is better, for it is less trouble and leaves everyone feeling better."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:827 Je 13 '25 580w

FULLER, VINCENT, pseud. Long green gaze. 217p $2 Huebsch

25-6517

Here is an opportunity for every cross-word puzzler to be his own detective, for in the solution of several puzzles lies the key to the mystery of Emily Dunseath's murder and the theft of the emerald ring. Aunt Emily, a wealthy and eccentric old lady suddenly collapses at the breakfast table in the presence of the family. Her strange death is followed by the theft of a priceless emerald ring. The situation is intensified by the discovery of several cross-word puzzles each one disclosing a possible clue to the mystery until the murderer and thief are actually revealed.

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 430w

"Here is certain delight for a cross-word fan—and indeed for the light novel reader. For the book is still a book after the puzzles are solved." W. Y.

+ Lit R p10 Mr 21 '25 180w

N Y Tribune p8 Mr 22 '25 120w

"Mr. Fuller has provided a set of answers in the back of the book. So the reader who is impatient may solve the mystery without actually working out the puzzles. It would be a mistake to do so. The plot is good enough to wait for—or bad enough so that it doesn't matter. It depends on how much you like cross word puzzles." H. F. Pringle

N Y World p6m Mr 15 '25 300w

FURMAN, LUCY. Glass window; a story of the quare women. 287p $2 Little

25-20256

The book carries further the story of the quare women who came out of the north to found a school in the Kentucky mountains. The setting of the earlier story is reproduced, and many of the characters reappear. The love affairs of the two young women furnish the plot for the story in which character and incident live thru the medium of the homely yet striking mountain idiom.

Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"'The Glass Window' is in the traditional manner. It tells a moving story. It attempts to preserve an artistic record of a life that must be fast dying—and it succeeds. A life that would torment most of us to bitterness and resentment, under Miss Furman's sure and sympathetic hand, is lifted into its actual beauty. We don't remember when we have enjoyed a novel so whole-heartedly." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p2 O 31 '25 480w

"With the young teacher-lawyer, Giles Kent, the author has dealt rather summarily. More sympathy with this character might considerably have strengthened the book. But if Miss Furman's purpose was to give a picture of life in the Kentucky mountains and of the light let into it by the quare women's glass window set into its walls she has given such a picture." Ruth Seinfeld

+ — N Y Tribune p8 N 1 '25 600w

"The second volume has more of the novel form than the first, which lends it more acceleration in the reading, but deprives it of some of the quiet genius in its fellow's composition." Laurence Stallings

+ — N Y World p6m O 18 '25 750w

"All who enjoyed 'The Quare Women' will surely want to read 'The Glass Window' also, and those others who do not know the primitive customs and ancient turns of speech of the Kentucky mountains should make their acquaintance here." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:485 N 25 '25 160w

"'The Glass Window' is a story that anyone can read with interest and enjoyment. But for the reader who cares for vivid characterization, for genre pictures of a quaint, sturdy, fast vanishing people, it holds a keen delight." Rebecca Lowrie

+ Sat R of Lit 2:209 O 17 '25 180w

FURNISS, EDGAR STEVENSON, and GUILD, LAWRENCE RIDGE. Labor problems; a book of materials for their study. 621p $2.80 Houghton

331 Labor and laboring classes 25-14645

The basis of this book, which is the result of many years of experiment in teaching the subject of labor problems in Yale classes, is a collection of readings from monographs of technical experts dealing with special branches of the subject. By careful selection and arrangement, aided by sections from the editor's own pen, these excerpts are brought together in a unified whole, providing a continuous and connected course of study.

Management and Adm 10:291 N '25 120w

"No attempt at a contribution to knowledge is made. It is intended to make available for college work sources not usually at hand. By weaving into one connected whole an attempt has been made to avoid the inevitable conflicts of opinion which the usual source book reveals. This together with the lack of the references to the sources of information impairs the value of the book even for class use." H. McD. C.

— Survey 55:264 N 15 '25 100w

FURSE, DAME KATHARINE (SYMONDS). Ski-running. 134p il $1.35 (4s) Longmans
796 Skis and ski-running 24-31607

Written from wide experience in coaching beginners, the book teaches the elements of skiing and answers the questions which the novice is likely to ask. It includes descriptions of the Swiss skiing-centers and advice about clothing and equipment.

"The American reader, besides picking up from this volume not a little information as applicable here as in the Alps, will welcome the book for the picture which it gives as well as the state of mind of British skiing."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 Mr 11 '25 250w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p831 D 4 '24 370w

G

GAINES, FRANCIS PENDLETON. Southern plantation; a study in the development and the accuracy of a tradition. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) 243p $2.50 Columbia univ. press [14s Milford]

810.9 Plantation life. South—Social conditions. American literature—History and criticism 24-30882

The book is a study of the plantation tradition in American literature and of the development of this conception of plantation life in literature, on the stage, and in popular song. The last three chapters are given to a comparison of the popular conception with the actual facts concerning social conditions and race relations.

"One of the chief features of the book is a very extensive bibliography, which is, unfortunately, scattered through the book in footnotes. This circumstance, coupled with the difficulty of Dr. Gaines's style, makes it extremely unlikely that the book will be of any great usefulness to others than students of the South."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 20 '24 600w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
Lit R p3 Ja 10 '25 350w

"Should this book fall into the hands of a professional Southerner theatric thunder will rattle in the air and there may be waving of arms and even shaking of fists. On the other hand, there are in Southern colleges many students who combine modern clear-mindedness with a sincere reverence for the best ideals of the Old South, and this class of readers will sooner or later thank Mr. Gaines for his conscientious, unprejudiced study of the plantation tradition." J. C. Harris
Nation 120:219 F 25 '25 1000w

"This is an illuminating and instructive study. The book is over documented, but that is excusable, if not necessary, in a pioneer work. It is the kind of literary history which will supply a new basis for a criticism of American literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:484 Ja 24 '25 450w

GALE, ZONA. Mister Pitt. 225p $2 Appleton
812 25-7506

"Zona Gale's Mister Pitt, produced in New York in 1924, is of the same spiritual kin as her Miss Lulu Bett, which won such wide acclaim (and the Pulitzer Prize) several years ago. This play is a loosely knit character study stretching over three acts of many scenes and years written on the theme of the Eternal Fool, the misfit, the unloved ugly duckling whose intrinsic virtues bring him no reward, whose existence is one long martyrdom."—Theatre Arts Mo

Booklist 21:371 J1 '25
Cleveland p88 S '25

"It is a charming, entertaining and uncommonly clever but not a great play." J. R. Towse
+ Lit R p4 My 2 '25 420w

"A reading of 'Mister Pitt' confirms one's impression that the subject matter of the work is traditional and would be much more effective if presented in the traditional manner. It may be, of course, that Miss Gale—who knows her way about as an artist—was deliberately trying less for individual characterization than for a sort of expressionistic tragedy of the inferiority complex. But if that is the case, Mister Pitt is too feeble a reed to lean upon." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p8 Ap 26 '25 350w

"The chorus of village gossips who contribute to the mournful comedy of Mr. Pitt is an amusing departure in dramatic structure. The play, however, depends entirely upon the character of Mister Pitt. Unfortunately, the reader is inclined to agree with the verdict of the gentleman's wife: gentle, kindly and oh, so worthy!—but ever so tiresome." J. W. Crawford

+ — N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 180w

Springf'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25
300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p349 My
21 '25 150w

"From Miss Gale's skillful dialogue, reticent and effective, there emerges a figure of infinite pathos and futility."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 9:420 Je '25 130w

Wis Lib Bul 21:141 My '25

GALPIN, CHARLES JOSIAH. Empty churches, the rural-urban dilemma. 150p $1 Century

261 Country church 25-10792

"It is alarming tidings to many church people to learn that there are more than four million farm children in America who are virtual pagans without even a knowledge of God. Mr. Galpin, in his study of 'Empty Churches' makes of himself a modern John the Baptist by his earnest plea that the large denominations turn their attention to that rising tide of Godlessness."—Lit R

"This sums up in vigorous topical style some of the principal ills which have attacked the rural church. Short and to-the-point."

+ Booklist 22:6 O '25

"The book is a scientific and sympathetic analysis of the forces which are emptying our churches and of the remedies which will fill them again. It should be read by everybody who can buy or borrow a copy and who is in any way interested in the America of tomorrow."

+ Bookm 61:xxx Ag '25 150w

"Mr. Galpin sets forth conditions with sincerity and vigor. His analysis carries conviction, and will do much to awaken the conscience of those who read." R. B. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 1 '25 450w

Reviewed by R. O. Kevin
Lit R p4 Ag 15 '25 250w

"His book is an informed presentation and an earnest discussion of the facts of this situation, its causes, results and possible remedies."

+ N Y Times p17 J1 5 '25 450w

N Y Tribune p7 O 11 '25 160w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 10w

Wis Lib Bul 21:193 J1 '25

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Caravan. 760p $2.50
Scribner [10s 6d Heinemann]

25-15982

Mr Galsworthy has assembled in this volume all his tales falling short of the novel in length, written between the years 1900 and 1923.

GALSWORTHY, JOHN—Continued

"Some of the author's finest work will be found in this collection of fifty-six short stories appearing between 1900 and 1923, but this high quality does not prevail throughout."

+ — Booklist 22:33 O '25

Reviewed by W. R. Benét
Bookm 61:698 Ag '25 720w

"As one reads this volume of sure, dexterous stories, each with its feeling for the obscure, poignant emotions, one is deeply impressed by the significance, as well as the skill, of Mr. Galsworthy's writing."

+ Ind 115:192 Ag 15 '25 150w

"In this volume there is so large a proportion of beautiful and perfect things that it admits Galsworthy to the select company which Chekhov heads. It is a magnificent contribution, sufficient to give reputation to a writer who had no other claims such as Galsworthy possesses." Harry Salpeter

+ Int Bk R p678 S '25 900w

"Neither unwieldy nor is the type at all uncomfortable to the eye. For lovers of the short story it is a caravan laden to the limit with richness of all sorts. For lovers of John Galsworthy it is as essential as the 'Saga' itself, with which it is uniform in size and binding." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p2 Ag 8 '25 650w

Reviewed by Mark Van Doren
Nation 121:258 S 2 '25 600w

"It is the work of a careful rather than a creative artist. It does not arrest us with the force of an individual æsthetic phenomenon possessing its own form, its own laws. We are always conscious while we read of the formula according to which it is made, and that formula having become by this time a general and a habitual thing, we feel it as a weight and not as an animating principle. Mr. Galsworthy's distinction is that, unlike many other writers, he put together his formula for himself; but he has ever since remained inexplicably faithful to it." Edwin Muir

Nation and Ath 37:78 Ap 18 '25 1050w

"In the volume as a whole, the hits exceed the misses by a considerable proportion; and the many sides of Mr. Galsworthy's talent are revealed to one purpose." P. C. Kennedy

+ — New Statesman 25:106 My 9 '25 1200w

"Just as we were convinced, long since, that 'The Forsyte Saga' placed Mr. Galsworthy among the foremost of English novelists, so are we now convinced that his pieces of more abbreviated length as assembled in 'Caravan' prove his indisputable right to a place among the foremost of English writers of the short story." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p1 Ag 2 '25 2350w

"No more notable collection from one pen can be imagined." Mary Kolars

+ N Y Tribune p4 S 6 '25 860w

"The average quality of these fifty-six stories is high. The volume will find place on many a shelf beside the 'Saga,' and will invite from time to time a repaying half-hour's reading." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 141:98 S 16 '25 250w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"There are some books for which one feels gratitude, and 'Caravan' is one of them. To have all the short- and long-short-stories written by Mr. Galsworthy 'between the years 1900 and 1923 inclusive,' and to have them in one volume, uniform with 'The Forsyte Saga,' at the price of an ordinary novel, is so pleasant that only a barbarian could feel anything but grateful, and only a critic could be moved to criticize. . . . The least satisfactory part of the collection is, as it should be, the preface." Gerald Gould

+ — Sat R 140:437 Ap 25 '25 800w

"I do not know where to look for another volume of tales comparable to 'Caravan' in variety and range, in delicate exactness of vision, and in the suggestiveness which carries the reader's thought out beyond the story into life." H. E. Woodbridge

+ Sat R of Lit 2:171 O 3 '25 450w

"The curious reader will mark very little difference between the earlier and the later tales; and it will perhaps disconcert him to have to conclude, from the evidence this volume affords, that in a quarter of a century's experimenting with the short story Mr. Galsworthy has not added to its technical resources or enlarged its scope."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p264 Ap 16 '25 600w

Wis Lib Bul 21:231 O '25

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Old English; a play in three acts. 112p $1 Scribner [3s Duckworth]

. 822

[25-36]

The central figure of the play, Sylvanus Heythorpe, called "Old English" behind his back, is an indomitable old Victorian who, having lived fully and freely for eighty years, is faced with bankruptcy. To escape dependence upon his prim and conventional daughter and to provide an annuity for his grandchildren by a natural son, he puts over a shady deal. A rascally lawyer discovers his sharp practice and threatens to expose him. Challenging the lawyer to do his worst, in the few hours left before exposure Old English orders a heavy dinner, eats and drinks to his heart's content and dies in his chair—of apoplexy.

Booklist 21:269 Ap '25

Cleveland p88 S '25

"In 'Old English' he has done nothing more than build a commonplace and crudely jointed frame for a character part." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p9 Mr 8 '25 100w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Outlook 139:458 Mr 25 '25 160w

St Louis p351 S '25

"This play, although it has acting qualities which have made it successful on the stage, is not good Galsworthy. The chief strength of it resides in the central character which is drawn with great vigor and consistency. Apart from this fine bit of work, there is little in the piece worthy of the great reputation and indisputable ability of the author."

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:585 Mr 7 '25 470w

"Old English as a play is not on a level with Mr. Galsworthy's best but Old English himself is unsurpassable."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:490 Jl '25 180w

Wis Lib Bul 21:87 Mr '25

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. The show; a drama in three acts. 97p $1 Scribner [3s Duckworth]

. 822

[25-20620]

The theme of the play is the publicity given by the law courts and the press to private sorrow. Major Morecombe, an aviator with a distinguished record for heroism in the war, is found dead in his study, evidently by his own hand. Starting with the first clue, that his wife had been spending the evening of his suicide with her lover, the police, aided by reporters, work up sensational motives to explain the act. At the inquest the coroner's court is filled with curiosity seekers who regard the proceedings as a thrilling show.

Booklist 22:109 D '25

"Dramatically, the piece is full of varied action and emotion, and ought to be effective in stage representation, but structurally it is weakened by the accumulation of improbable coincidence. But the satiric attack upon the scandal-mongering press and the public that supports and encourages it is entirely justified and conducted with all Mr. Galsworthy's usual point and vigor." J. R. Towse

+ — Lit R p3 O 24 '25 350w

"Mr. Galsworthy writes with his usual skill in prose, his usual scrupulous fairness and bitter generosity. But in this case it is to no purpose. He tells us only what we knew before, that human curiosity is often unpleasant." Bonamy Dobree

— + Nation and Ath 38:sup246 N 14 '25 150w

"Certainly in no other play has Mr. Galsworthy's dramatic artistry been so consistently sustained at so high a level. Perhaps all this was necessary because of a certain lack of vitality in the characters themselves." P. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p13 D 20 '25 1350w

"Rather feeble stuff from him." W. P. Eaton

— N Y Tribune p15 O 18 '25 100w

Reviewed by Wells Root

N Y World p7m D 20 '25 180w

"Mr Galsworthy's fine insight has again been finely employed. 'The Show' is more truly an illustration of an idea than some of his recent plays, which have been hardly more than effective stage pieces. The principal weakness of the work lies in the characters. Though these reveal true and touching flashes of emotion they have obviously been chosen to fit into a scheme and are not deeply sketched. Such a restriction is perhaps inherent in a play of ideas."

+ — Springf'd Republican p5a O 11 '25 920w

GAMBIER, KENYON, pseud. See Lathrop, L. A.

GANN, THOMAS WILLIAM FRANCIS. In an unknown land. 263p il $5 Scribner [21s Duckworth]

917.26 Yucatan

[25-6042]

"Travels through Yucatan by the President of the Maya Society. An interesting book of travel with many references to archaeology and to the strange customs of the natives today."—Outlook

Nature 115:454 Mr 28 '25 200w

New Statesman 24:supxii D 6 '24 330w

"In presenting archaeology as an outdoor sport and in most vividly revealing the civilization of the Maya people as a theme inviting much more continuous current interest and further study, this journey in an unknown land, the happy by-product of a great investigator's work, will repay reading." G. L. Harding

+ N Y Times p17 F 1 '25 2900w

"'In an Unknown Land' is a valuable pioneer work of reference to the amateur, a text-book of suggestions for further reading." K. A. Porter

+ N Y Tribune p9 F 8 '25 1400w

Outlook 139:118 Ja 21 '25 30w

R of Rs 71:336 Mr '25 100w

"Dr. Gann tells his story well, treating with an excellent humour those incidents of travel which are so exasperating in the experience and so amusing in the recollection. The early history of the region is well set forth in the form of a commentary which never becomes wearisome."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p150 Mr 5 '25 600w

GANPAT, pseud. See Gompertz, M. L: A.

GARARD, IRA D. Applied chemistry. 496p il 2 $3.25 Macmillan

540 Chemistry. Chemistry, Technical 24-8142

"Text-book for students who have had a course in general chemistry. Deals with the applications of chemistry to domestic and industrial life. States many of the laws and principles and includes enough organic chemistry to make clear the chapters dealing primarily with organic substances."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:351 N '25

GARDINER, GLENN LION. Practical foremanship. (Univ. of Wisconsin. Extension division. Industrial educ. ser.) 191p $1.75 McGraw

658 Foremen. Employment management

25-3636

"This book is intended as a text to present the elementary principles underlying the practice of modern foremanship, and as a brief manual for the use of foremen. Its writing was made possible through the cooperation of practical men actively engaged in industry. All of the principles brought out have been tried and tested. The subject is treated in 10 chapters, each of which deals with an important phase of the foreman's duties. No attempt has been made to go into detail, but rather to point out those matters which should serve as a basis for further study by foremen. A few brief problems involving the principles developed are appended to each chapter."—Harvard Business R

"The material is presented in a clear and concise manner, and a number of actual occurrences are used as illustrations. The book is written in a style which should appeal to the practical foreman and assist in establishing his interest in principles intended to increase his usefulness and ability."

+ Harvard Business R 3:510 J1 '25 80w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:423 J1 '25

GARNETT, DAVID. Sailor's return. 189p $2 Knopf [6s Chatto & W.]

25-18585

"William Targett, a sailor, takes a tavern in Dorset and settles there with a black wife from Africa, and a black baby. The rustics make things unpleasant for Tulip. Targett and Tulip go off on horseback to bathe at unseemly night hours and come back at breakfast-time, Tulip underclad for an English village and too joyous. The feeling against them increases; the vicar frightens Tulip with talk of washing the little black boy white and of devils. There is an attempt to fire the tavern, and Targett is forced to remarry Tulip in church—they were married according to her own rites in Africa—or be turned out of house and home. In the end the sailor is killed in a fight with some roughs who spoke rudely of his wife, and she, poor creature, after trying vainly to get back to her native land, turns unpaid slavey in the tavern and lives there a long while, grown fat and old and ugly."—Spec

Booklist 22:117 D '25

Cleveland p106 N '25

"His are the canny stories that creep into the heart. One reads them quietly, completely absorbed, to be conscious suddenly of emotional response. 'The Sailor's Return' follows successfully, it seems to us, Mr. Garnett's two earlier stories." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p7 N 28 '25 200w

"'The Sailor's Return' is a tragical rolling ballad, not a delicate prose poem like 'Lady into Fox.' It has more meat than 'The Man in the Zoo,' in which, however, there was the same acute portrayal of the Negro—the average commercialized Negro, not the savage princess that Tulip represents. Tulip is the artistic center of the book, a strange tropical flower that soon withers. Mr. Garnett has the poetic sense of irony and pity. Some day, perhaps, instead of these small, compressed prints he will give us a powerful and heroic canvas." Laura Benét

+ Nation 121:519 N 4 '25 400w

"Mr. Garnett is so happy in his naïve style, which, by its flavour of Defoe, makes the story seem delightfully anachronistic, that he forgets that a wonder lasts only nine days. So to save the story from petering out, he is compelled to kill off William and end with abrupt tragedy."

+ — Nation and Ath 38:220 N 7 '25 220w

"Mr. Garnett fascinates, as always, by his inappropriate air of staid and careful literalness, by being most formal and lucid when he is most preposterous. His delightfully artificial method has obvious kinship with Mrs. Wylie's, but it is less imaginative and one has the sense of fewer possibilities in reserve." O. H. D.

+ — New Repub 45:171 D 30 '25 200w

"A good story really well told and well written."

+ New Statesman 25:696 O 3 '25 1500w

GARNETT, DAVID—Continued

"It may lack, and I am of the opinion that it does lack, that deep inspiration, like the music of waves breaking against blackened ledges or the sound of thunder in mountains, which characterizes the great passages of English prose. But on a more surface level the thing is unequaled in its flawless meanderings." Llewelyn Powys

+ — N Y Tribune p20 D 6 '25 1650w

"'A Sailor's Return,' as a story, has neither the rapt attention to pace nor the rigid restrictions of economy of execution of the first works. One does not wish to deprive Mr. Garnett of his individual royalties, but it seems that the third and second books would hold up to better light if they were incorporated into a single volume containing the three. 'A Sailor's Return,' written in the vein of the former two and yet without any departure from the normal, is a delightful thing. But one suspects that part of its delight issues from interest in his work as a whole."

+ — N Y World p4m O 4 '25 850w

"Considered simply as prose, is worthy of admiration, but a story cannot be merely a technical exercise, and except for some striking and artfully introduced detail we cannot see how the matter gains from the adoption of the method. We suspect some faintly ironical allegory, but Mr. Garnett, if he intended anything of the sort, has been too reserved. His intention remains obscure, and his story hardly a story."

+ — Sat R 140:314 S 19 '25 320w

"This time one can feel certain there is more to the story than meets the eye. This time one knows there is more—because it comes to one, not in the secondary meaning of a fable, but in those intellectual and emotional recognitions which expand a simple tale into a commentary on life. Hence David Garnett has gone swimming in deeper waters; but with the same clean strokes and the same unerring movement." L. Kronenberger

+ Sat R of Lit 2:209 O 17 '25 800w

"Prettily as Mr. Garnett turns literary pirouettes, he is becoming monotonous. One begins to fear that in time there may even be a dozen Garnett trifles between covers all as alike as a row of villas, which do probably differ in fact but so slightly as to produce an effect of sameness. It would be well if in his fourth book he would try only to divert, which he does nicely, and give up satire, which he will never handle as well as his masters."

+ — Spec 135:502 S 26 '25 850w

"As teasing a performance as we have learned to expect from him. Exactly what Mr. Garnett's intention may be in writing this tale we have no means of knowing. His reticence, no doubt, is permissible enough. Airy its structure certainly is, but the richness of its ornamentation and the more unexpected features of its design will presumably delight many who are wearied by the familiar obsessions of the contemporary novel. It is nevertheless a pity that Mr. Garnett has not shown more courage in revealing the precise extent of his vaguely implied satire."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p598 S 17 '25 700w

GARRETT, WILLIAM A. Doctor Ricardo. 296p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-11822

"It is told in the first person by the very likeable Sir Richard Montague, an explorer and a gentleman, whose relations with two people, between whom there would at first seem no possible kind of connection, led him into the web of mystery and crime which became known to the newspapers as the 'Old Farm Mystery.' Music and drugs, Limehouse and a chemical formula, love and hate and fear, all play their parts in a riddle which, though apparently simple at the beginning, becomes more and more complicated as fresh pieces of the 'jig-saw puzzle' keep turning up, pieces which though evidently belonging to the case, refuse to fit in with any theory of it which Sir Richard is able to devise."—N Y Times

"Once in a while one gets a genuine thrill. Mr. Garrett's latest book gives it to us with overflowing measure."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 400w
Cleveland p87 S '25

+ Ind 115:136 Ag 1 '25 50w

"The tale is written in a direct and agreeable way, it is cleverly worked out and there are no loose ends left at the close nor any clues introduced merely to puzzle the reader. Entertaining and ingenious, the yarn is one whose solution only the most astute and experienced will be able to divine before Mr. Garrett is ready to reveal it."

+ N Y Times p13 J1 12 '25 380w

"William Garrett apparently believes that a mystery should be mysterious. He succeeds so well in the management of his culprits and their victims that the puzzled reader guesses pleasantly and unavailingly through most of his pages."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Ag 16 '25 120w

"A cleverly constructed story, one in which the mystery is sustained to the end, and the plot advances to its conclusion without the introduction of extraneous characters and resort to false clues."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:935 J1 25 '25 180w

"Mr. Garrett has written a detective story which reads as though it really might have happened, yet, in spite of his praiseworthy forbearance in thus keeping within the bounds of probability and in rejecting the facile devices of the merely paper mystery, his plot is rich in the unexpected."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p254 Ap 9 '25 80w

GARSTIN, CROSBIE. High noon. 331p $2
Stokes

25-8543

The fortunes of Ortho Penhale, the fearless adventurer of "The Owl's House," are followed up in this second volume of a promised trilogy. The story opens with Ortho's escape from the English man-of-war Triton to the island of St Lucia, where he falls into the hands of a mysterious woman who cunningly implicates him in the murder of her husband. Ortho rejoins the fleet in time to take part in a battle with the French, in which he is injured. His return to England, his love affair and unfortunate marriage eventually lead him to the sea again. At the close of the story Ortho is captain of his own slave ship off the Guinea coast, discouraged, tired out spiritually and bodily—behind him ten years of lost endeavor; before him, the negroes, the plague, mutiny and the sea.

"An unusually good story of its kind."

+ Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

"Mr. Garstin has a style of his own, swift moving, colorful. He swings open the gates of romance and we have no slightest idea of the extent or the variety of adventures which are to be found once we have passed within." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 16 '25 1050w
Cleveland p83 J1 '25

"An intriguing story of Eighteenth Century adventure which has spots of real interest and romance. Unfortunately, the author loses touch with his story and its people. Mr. Garstin is a competent but too hurried craftsman."

+ — Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 60w

"So full is the novel of people and so numerous the threads from which its plot is woven that it has a tendency to become episodic, and has a certain lack of unity from which the earlier book was free. But this is, after all, a small matter in a sweeping narrative such as this; one loses sight of small faults in its breadth and its unremitting action." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 Ap 18 '25 360w

Reviewed by P. C. Kennedy

New Statesman 25:504 Ag 15 '25 400w

"The book abounds in movement, action and color. If the author at times seems to rush from scene to scene at too hurried a pace, and if in places his narration is marred with just a touch of crudity, he none the less accomplishes his purpose in producing a tale that is thoroughly entertaining; and the lover of adventure stories will find that the book ranks well up among the general run of volumes of this type."

+ N Y Times p19 Ap 26 '25 350w

"This is, quite seriously, much the best picaresque romance that has come to hand for several years. It has style, pace, wit and genuine human characters, and what further one could ask, deponent does not know." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p8 My 3 '25 800w

"It is very admirable work, quite free from the pedantry of most historical novels, the baroque dialogues and startling figures which crowd the pages of Sabatini. It stands in the right way of true art and vivid entertainment."

+ N Y World p6m Ap 26 '25 270w

Reviewed by Donald Douglas

N Y World p10s My 31 '25 50w

Outlook 140:303 Je 24 '25 80w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

"Mr. Gartin is an artist with a fine mastery of technique, both in dramatic construction and in the surface finish of his style. His people are not at all conventional figures, and there is a fine swing, a zestful enjoyment of movement in his narrative, which, however, never leads him to extravagance." H. L. Pangborn

+ Sat R of Lit 1:704 Ap 25 '25 500w

"A very robust and well-written story of adventure in the eighteenth century."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p332 My 14 '25 250w

Wis Lib Bul 21:170 Je '25

GASTON, CHARLES ROBERT, ed. Forum papers; second series, ed. for high school use. 250p $1.25 Duffield

814

25-9676

A second series of papers gathered from the files of the Forum. Contents: Best books, and the very best, by Heywood Brown; The benevolent bill-sticker, by Joseph Pennell; A model factory town, by Leonora Beck Ellis; In the year 2889, by Jules Verne; The manly virtues and practical politics, by Theodore Roosevelt; The changing focus in politics, by Walter Lippmann; Newspapers and the public, by Charles Dudley Warner; Highbrow and lowbrow, by Van Wyck Brooks; Formative influences, by Edward Everett Hale; How I was educated, by Thomas Wentworth Higginson; The training of boys at Eton, by A. C. Benson; The small college and the large, by Charles Franklin Thwing; Why five acts? by Brander Matthews; A day with Lord Tennyson, by Sir Edwin Arnold; The unforgetting journeys, by Jean Kenyon Mackenzie; Changing hymns, by Charles Herbert Richards.

Booklist 22:63 N '25

Bookm 61:716 Ag '25 250w

"This very entertaining little book strikes a far wider range than do most English specimen text books. Should be stimulating beyond usual bounds to the young minds it is created for."

+ Boston Transcript p1 Je 6 '25 80w

"An unaccountable omission in editing these selections is the absence of all dates. No months, no years, no issues are mentioned to fit the author duly into his niche in time."

N Y Times p7 Je 7 '25 550w

N Y Tribune p3 Jl 12 '25 160w

Outlook 140:371 Jl 8 '25 10w

GATHORNE HARDY, GEOFFREY MALCOLM.

Norway; with an introd. by H. A. L. Fisher. (Modern world) 324p $3 Scribner [15s Benn]

948.1 Norway—History

As in the other volumes of this series the treatment of the past gives way to that of the present but enough of the earlier history is given to provide the background. More than three-quarters of the book is devoted to Norwegian history of the last one hundred years. Literature, religion, education, the maritime life of Norway and its industrial development are included in the survey.

"The discussion of industrial, shipping, and agricultural developments is most suggestive, while the prohibition experiment and the troubles in the Church have particular interest for America."

+ Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 80w

"Its English friends should welcome this book in which Mr. Gathorne-Hardy writes not only with exact scholarship but with hearty enjoyment of every side of the country."

+ New Statesman 26:246 D 5 '25 200w

"This sound and competent account of Norway fulfils quite excellently the purpose of the series."

+ Sat R 140:449 O 17 '25 160w

"The tone and texture of this book may well blind the critic to superficial failings. Strictly speaking, in a work designed to illuminate the Norway of to-day, the treatment of the earlier Middle Ages is disproportionately full, while it is not until the eleventh chapter out of thirteen that the chief foundation of the social system is laid bare. The author not seldom repeats himself, and he occasionally leaves the reader in perplexity. But it would be unjust to dwell upon defects which are slight in comparison with the merits of the book. Liberal, well reasoned and humane, full of learning gaily borne and of the sympathy which makes the author style himself an Anglo-Norwegian, its every chapter leaves the reader more indebted."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p764 N 19 '25 1600w

GAUNT, MARY ELIZA BAKEWELL (MRS HUBERT LINDSAY MILLER). Mummy moves. 346p $2 Clode

25-1014

"The plot hinges upon the machinations of African Fetish worshippers and the horrible vengeance they wreak upon the possessors of idols precious to them. Their emissaries may take on civilized clothing when in London but they sacrifice not a jot of their bloody intent there. There are baffling clues, eerie experiences, pretty girls and the amateur accompanist to the legal sleuth in sufficient quantities to satisfy the most sophisticated student of 'Murder as One of the Fine Arts,' as De Quincey wrote it."—Boston Transcript

"The Mummy Moves' may safely be warranted to make a nervous person reading it on a gloomy evening glance sharply in dark corners before he or she goes to bed, and to jump when the wind rattles the window casing."

Boston Transcript p6 F 11 '25 250w

Cleveland p68 Je '25

"The author has spiced a thrilling story with characters who are more than machines to carry out the action."

+ Lit R p10 Ap 25 '25 100w

"A sprightly divertissement is Mary Gaunt's murder mystification . . . an uncommonly clever and intricate structure, which should be most acceptable to the cognoscenti of crime." Isabel Paterson

+ N Y Tribune p11 F 8 '25 330w

"The book is handled with an unusual efficiency that places the reader in a probable world and never allows him to suspect for a moment that he is not living there." Dorothy Borg

+ N Y World p7m F 8 '25 400w

GAUSS, MARIANNE. Danae. 335p $2 Harper
25-19523

The love story of a woman lawyer. Danae had known and admired Kittredge since they were children together. She went into his law office, first as his secretary and later as his partner, and Kittredge was just beginning to realize his love for her when he met Aster. He found himself somehow engaged to this alluring, selfish little creature, but the brief period of enchantment was soon over, and the young lawyer turned back to his work with relief. Things were not going well in the office. He became involved in a political mess from which he could be saved only if Danae would marry him and as his wife refuse to testify against him. She made the sacrifice, tho it was doubly difficult because of her love for him. Her reward came when Kittredge's old affection reawakened and the marriage became real.

"The book is well written, not too sweet, and develops its main theme with a thorough and direct consistency."

+ N Y World p7m N 15 '25 150w

"It is a well-written book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:264 O 31 '25 30w

GAVIT, JOHN PALMER. College. 342p $2
Harcourt

378.7 Colleges and universities 25-9968

"There was a definite need for just such an illuminating study of the state of higher education in America as Mr. Gavit has made in 'College.' . . . Mr. Gavit quite properly approached his task from several angles. He talked with undergraduates, with teachers, with alumni, with officers of administration, with parents. Always he kept uppermost in his mind the human side of the relationships between these groups. Although 'College' is primarily a piece of reporting, Mr. Gavit expresses very definite ideas about the proper function of education. . . . Athletics, fraternities and other fields of extra-curriculum activity all come within the scope of Mr. Gavit's examination. He has a chapter on religion and radicalism in the colleges, another on college women and marriage, with a presentation of the case for and against coeducation, another on the function of the college President, and one on family influence in college life."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:9 O '25

Cleveland p95 S '25

"'College' is of primary value, perhaps, to the parent; next, to the college instructor (the one, it is to be feared, most likely to ignore it); last, to the student. It will be read widely; and, because it comes as a sincere and disinterested study of the vexed college situation to-day by an outsider, it will have a salutary effect upon college life." F. C. Lockwood

+ Int Bk R p786 N '25 300w

"He has gone about from one college to another talking with students and faculty, challenging both and prying into each. The result is a vivid and yet restrained and sympathetic account of the general confusion and unrest. Mr. Gavit has viewed the college neither with alarm nor with complacency, but, perhaps, with great hope and suspended judgment. His book should certainly arouse the unsophisticated, but it will not rescue the perplexed." C. E. A.

+ New Repub 42:347 My 20 '25 700w

"Once in a blue moon somebody writes a book of which it can truthfully be said that it needed to be written. That is precisely what Mr. Gavit has done. Controversy and criticism we have had in plenty; but we lacked a good piece of reporting about what is actually going on in the colleges. Mr. Gavit's book, besides being thoughtful and suggestive supplies that information." J. D. Adams

+ N Y Times p3 Je 14 '25 1650w

"Comprehensive and enlightening book. With the possible exception of the chapter on 'College Presidents, and Others,' there is no dull reading here. It is alive—as alive as the question of education is alive." Russell Wright

+ N Y Tribune p10 S 27 '25 550w

Pratt p10 autumn '25

"Mr. Gavit's book seems to me far the most penetrating and sagacious description of the situation which I have ever met. It cannot be denounced by the most stodgy as 'muckraking'; and such 'debunking' as he executes is carried out with a light hand." J. H. Robinson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:149 S 26 '25 1950w

"It is useful to have so much intelligent description of various methods and such keen criticism of various results; yet the material, as a whole, is not organized ideally and the survey seems to have proceeded more by geography than according to subjects. As Mr. Gavit is always suggestive and thought-provoking, it is to be regretted that he did not have time for a more comprehensive study and a more systematic arrangement."

+ Spring'd Republican p10 Je 12 '25 850w

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

GAY, ROBERT MALCOLM. The eight forty-five; extracts from the diary of John Skinner, a commuter. 154p il $1.25 Little

25-7768

The ups and downs of suburban life are cheerfully recorded in this diary of any commuter and his wife. The optimistic promises of the real estate agent sometimes are and sometimes are not realized. But John and Jane find that the ups outnumber the downs, and get so much fun out of their rented house and garden that before the year is out they are planning to build a home of their own, within running distance of the 8:45.

Booklist 22:33 O '25

Cleveland p83 Jl '25

"Chronicles of a suburbanite enthusiast whose many humorous vicissitudes live on otherwise rather meagre story."

+ Ind 114:420 Ap 11 '25 30w

"Though 'The 8:45' is written in the conventional fashion, it is piquantly brief, always filled with interest and good humor and extremely well written."

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 2 '25 260w

N Y Tribune p12 Jl 26 '25 450w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 20w

"An agreeable trifle."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:747 My 9 '25 150w

Wis Lib Bul 21:201 Jl '25

GEBHART, JOHN C., ed. See Child health library

GEDDES, PATRICK, and THOMSON, JOHN ARTHUR. Biology. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 256p $1 Holt [2s 6d Williams & N.]

570 Biology 25-15130

"In its main treatment this book broadly accords with our 'Evolution' and 'Sex' already published in this series; and also with its 'Introduction to Science,' which our Chapters V and VI indeed endeavour to continue. This small book has thus arisen upon a large plan—that of broadly indicating the main aims and quests of biological thought, and of illustrating their fruitful results."—Preface

"An exceptionally succinct, clear presentation."

+ Booklist 22:105 D '25

"The 'Home University Library' has made a valuable addition to its series in Biology. There is a wealth of information in this attractively-written little book, which, considering its size, manages to give a very comprehensive view of its subject in a form which is easily comprehensible to the lay mind. The style is graphic and rich in colourful metaphor." + Spec 135:112 J1 18 '25 250w

GEER, WALTER. Napoleon and Josephine; the rise of the empire. 395p il $5 (30s) Brentano's B or 92 Joséphine, empress consort of Napoléon I. Napoléon I, emperor of the French 25-21803

"The book concerns Josephine in larger measure than it does the Man of Destiny, who is portrayed in the role of a dominating influence over the Empress's life. The completed likeness of her reveals a Josephine at variance with the accepted legend of a noble, harshly-sacrificed woman. Her affection for Napoleon was compounded of fear and gratitude—fear of the ever present menace of divorce, gratitude for the undreamed of splendors to which he had raised her. It is made apparent that she was incapable of loving him unselfishly. The Napoleon of this version also has been stripped of legendary adornments and, although displayed in less detail than is Josephine, the conception of him is close to humanity."—N Y World

"Admirably simple and well synthesized account." + Bookm 60:504 D '24 250w

"This is a very complete account of the lives and characters of the First Consul and his first wife. A vast amount of research and a quiet excellence of style make this an interesting book." + Dial 78:78 Ja '25 60w

"He is a conscientious but painfully ordinary historian and his book is merely a routine life of Josephine." C: W. Thompson — Lit R p6 O 4 '24 320w

New Statesman 25:350 J1 4 '25 380w

Reviewed by H: B. Fuller
N Y Times p3 O 5 '24 750w

Reviewed by Albert Guérard
N Y Tribune p4 O 26 '24 880w

"The work, if in a minor key, is none the less valuable and trustworthy." + N Y World p9e Ja 18 '25 200w

"Though no serious complaint can be made against his style, it is not distinguished. He has, however, the advantage of being detached in his attitude. His picture seems true and fair." + The Times [London] Lit Sup p444 J1 2 '25 520w

GEER, WALTER. Napoleon and Marie-Louise; the fall of the empire. 337p il $5 Brentano's

B or 92 Napoléon I, emperor of the French. Marie Louise, empress consort of Napoléon I 25-17422

"His 'Napoleon and Marie-Louise: The fall of the Empire' comes as a companion piece to 'Napoleon and Josephine: The Rise of the Empire.' Mr. Geer states: 'Our theme is the Austrian marriage and its effect on the Russian alliance. These two events determined the fate of Napoleon.' . . . The work is really not a biography, but a sane and lucid diplomatic history of the Empire from 1806 to 1815. The tone is as a rule free from the excesses of Napoleon worship. . . . Marie Louise herself has a very minor role in the book, as she had in the mighty drama of the Empire."—N Y Tribune

"Mr. Geer is a skilful writer who weaves facts into a readable narrative. We not only coldly admire the force and dominance of one of the most spectacular figures of the ages, we learn to love and have sympathy for 'L'Empereur.'" + Bookm 62:509 D '25 160w

"Mr. Geer's is a more colorless, and possibly truer picture of Marie Louisa than those usually offered us. He is not dealing with emotions but with facts. Certainly his exposition of this period of Napoleon's life is both rational and interesting." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 O 10 '25 550w

"The author's sympathy with the Emperor is never absent from his work, but it does not carry him to the extent of special pleading. It may be read with interest, both by the student and by the lay reader who finds in the chronicles of history the fascination of fiction enriched by the assurance of fact." + Ind 115:654 D 5 '25 200w

Reviewed by Albert Guérard
N Y Tribune p9 N 15 '25 500w

GEERING, THOMAS. Our Sussex parish; with an introd. by Arthur Beckett. 253p il $3 Houghton [8s 6d Methuen]

914.225 Sussex, England [25-23397]

First published some forty years ago in England, this book is a collection of sketches and tales of the little Sussex market town of Hailsham. Thomas Geering was a plow-boy's son who rose to the eminence of village shopkeeper. His sketches describe the life of a rural parish exactly as he found it—its institutions and personalities and the tales that have gathered about it.

"The book gives very pleasant views of a by-gone time, but unfortunately, it is rather spoilt by attempts at fine writing." + — New Statesman 24:758 Ap 4 '25 250w

"Reading his essays and sketches now is like coming upon a collection of old, old prints and seeing them take on form and life, in moving picture style, and so watching the people of a sturdy, prosperous, characteristic English countryside of a century ago go about their daily affairs. A striking characteristic of the work is the simplicity, the restraint, the good taste with which it is all written." + N Y Times p21 My 10 '25 400w

"The value of these sketches on institutions, personalities and old parish tales would not be very great to many in America—as tales of Sussex; but they have the intrinsic merit of being well written and very easy to read." + N Y Tribune p14 Je 21 '25 180w

Sat R of Lit 1:863 Je 27 '25 200w

"The editor deserves the thanks of all who appreciate the value of local history for preserving records of men and manners in a country town during the half century following the passing of the Reform Bill, small but vivid details of the life of a countryside which are so easily lost in chronicles of more ambitious scope. But, in his laudable enthusiasm for his discovery of Geering's work, he does his author some disservice by insisting on the literary qualities of the book. It is unfortunate that he should compare Geering with Galt or Lover." + — The Times [London] Lit Sup p115 F 19 '25 650w

GEIJERSTAM, GUSTAF af. Book about little brother; a story of married life; tr. from the Swedish, with an introd. by Edwin Bjorkman. 280p $2.50 Knopf

"Mr. Edwin Bjorkman's introduction tells us that Geijerstam is one of the most prolific of modern Swedish novelists, his range including romance and realism, peasant life and the problems of marriage and society. The book About Little Brother falls outside this classification. It is the novelist's own, written in fulfillment of a promise to his youngest son, Sven, about whom centres the life of the little family. This family and its setting in the Swedish landscape, bright in summer, bleak in winter, are the whole story. A book of searching, loving analysis of the revelation of intimate and haffling relations of husband and wife, resolved in the domestic passion of which Sven is the object."—New Repub

GEIJERSTAM, GUSTAF—Continued

"It is written with unpretending good faith that yields to tragedy its last human touch."
R. M. L.

New Repub 44:212 O 14 '25 150w

"Though there is much in the volume that tugs powerfully at one's emotions, it is only the most callous criticism that would term the book sentimental; one is always filled with the sense of the sincerity and unstrained reality of the author's work, and for this reason the book is likely not only to impress one strongly at the first reading, but to linger like a striking poem in one's memory."

+ N Y Times p18 S 27 '25 600w

"A book which, perhaps, should have been kept in the family, in spite of its popular success in Sweden." Karston Roedder

N Y Tribune p10 N 22 '25 650w

"Certain critics have maintained that 'The Book About Little Brother' is too intimate, too sentimental and emotional, but one believes that the complete simplicity and sincerity of it saves it. Truly there is a subjectivity and emotional intensity about 'The Book About Little Brother,' which justifies this and which tempts one to classify it, not as a novel but as an idyllic prose poem."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 D 7 '25 500w

GEISTER, EDNA. What shall we play? 175p il $2 Doran

790 Games

24-28912

The games described are mostly for the younger children. There are games for indoors and for outdoors and they are grouped as not noisy, and very noisy, moving around, sick-a-bed, table, games in which the uncles and aunts played too, running games, tag games and races.

Booklist 21:306 My '25

St Louis p114 Ap '25

"Here is a book as alive from cover to cover as the games it describes. There should never be another dull children's party with such a store to draw from."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:531 F 14 '25 200w

GEMMILL, WILLIAM NELSON. Salem witch trials; a chapter of New England history. 240p $2 McClurg

973.25 Witchcraft

25-471

"That strange chapter of New England history, known as the Salem witchcraft delusion, is succinctly related by Judge Gemmill. His book differs from earlier brief accounts of the episode in that it reproduces some of the actual evidence at the witch trials as preserved in the court records for 250 years."—R of Rs

"It seems a pity that he has not been more careful of his historical data in the beginning, because historical inaccuracies do prejudice the reader. He is certainly a bit hazy in his facts concerning James I of England."

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 21 '25 350w

"The Salem witchcraft is called by this author a strange chapter of New England history. It certainly is. But it is stranger still that this chapter should be retold without any attempt at explanation." Woodbridge Riley

N Y Tribune p4 Mr 1 '25 850w

R of Rs 71:333 Mr '25 50w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ap 6 '25 270w

GENTLEMAN WITH A DUSTER, pseud. See Begbie, H.

GEORGE, M. DOROTHY (MRS ERIC GEORGE). London life in the eighteenth century. (History of civilization ser.) 452p il $6.50 Knopf [21s K. Paul]

914.21 London—Social conditions. Labor and laboring classes—London [25-8719]

"Anybody who wants to know what the eighteenth century was like will have to absorb the contents of Mrs. George's book. It is made up of facts and statistics, of information from parish registers and Bills of Mortality, of the reports of police magistrates, and workhouse inspectors. It is a study of economic and social conditions which throws a flood of illumination on a wide and unexplored section of English life. Unexplored, at least, by the student of literature. It is infinitely remote from the world of powder and crinoline, of painted fans and snuff boxes, of Gainsborough ladies and Chesterfield gentlemen, which to most people represent the life of the eighteenth century."—N Y Tribune

"Literary skill and historical scholarship, ably blended, make the reading of this volume a delight. Her account is exhaustive and, to the reviewer, is subject perhaps to but two adverse criticisms. The title of the book is somewhat misleading, since it is only life among the poor that she depicts. In the second place, is it not possible that even life among the poor was more pleasant than one would gather from this book? The police and hospital records, which Mrs. George combs so well, inevitably cast a dark shadow. The writings of contemporary reformers do likewise. The social historian would do well to be somewhat more alert, possibly, than Mrs. George to this general truth." W. P. Hall

+ Am Hist R 31:127 O '25 620w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 3 '25 1200w

"Sober in style as well as content is Mrs. George's volume." L. M. Field

+ Int Bk R p601 Ag '25 820w

Living Age 325:603 Je 13 '25 160w

"In itself Mrs. George's study of London's improvement over an important century is excellent."

+ Nation 121:99 Jl 15 '25 50w

"In this book Mrs. George has produced one of the best pieces of research in social and economic history which have appeared for many years. It is 'low life,' the conditions under which the poorer classes lived and worked, that Mrs. George has taken as her subject, and she has produced an immense mass of exceedingly interesting information upon every side of it, set forth with judgment and notably well-written."

+ Nation and Ath 37:107 Ap 25 '25 980w

"Mrs. George's task of describing the social conditions of London in the eighteenth century, has been discharged in such a way as to put all students in her debt. The vast information she has collected on all kinds of topics, occupations, apprenticeship conditions, pleasures, habits, housing, wages, seasonal workers, is presented in an attractive form. Not the least interesting of her pictures is that of the racial elements in London life, an account of the temper in which foreigners of different kinds were regarded." J. L. Hammond

+ New Statesman 24:693 Mr 21 '25 1650w

"To clear away the mists from this period, to present it in its relation to the past and the present, is the most needful and laudable task of Mrs. George, a thorough modern herself, but a student interested in finding out the facts rather than proving a theory."

+ N Y Times p12 Je 14 '25 1800w

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

N Y Tribune p16 Je 21 '25 800w

"A careful and considered study of the poorer classes. They play little part in literature; they only interest lawyers and politicians when they become dangerous; and their sordid life is chiefly discovered in the records of prisons, police courts, coroners' inquests, and the pamphlets of reformers. . . . Such admirably documented records as Mrs. George's should interest every close student of the 'history of Civilization' to which they belong."

+ Sat R 139:622 Je 6 '25 700w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p289 Ap 30 '25 2000w

GEORGE, WALTER LIONEL. Story of woman. 262p $3 Harper [5s Chapman & H.]
396 Woman—History and condition 25-8099

A history of woman thru the ages, from prehistoric times to today, showing how her position compares from epoch to epoch, how her status has been raised and her economic and political side developed.

Bookm 61:601 J1 '25 160w

"It is an entertaining account, and one which gives one rather furiously to think, because in many places many of the abuses are still rampant, which only the most civilized society has abolished." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 15 '25 650w

Cleveland p94 S '25

Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 130w

Reviewed by R: Le Gallienne

Int Bk R p410 My '25 1400w

"Mr. George's understanding of women, his specialty in novels, magazines, and newspapers, has become a commercialized vice. There is something oily about his patronage, something hack in this jungle of generalizations, that is sure to annoy an honest modern woman. Better a gentleman tory any day, with whatever sincere antipathisms to power in females."

— Nation 121:240 Ag 26 '25 80w

"A book as fascinating as any novel. Picturesque and colorful to a degree, it is crammed with interesting data on the evolution of woman from the reflective 'ape' stage to the era where women as brilliantly gifted as Mme. Curie are accepted as a matter of course." Alice Ziska

+ N Y Times p13 Ap 19 '25 1050w

"This is moldy stuff, indeed. The woman problem has found a husband in Mr. George." K. A. Porter

— N Y Tribune p11 N 29 '25 450w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent

N Y World p6m My 3 '25 380w

"Like Wells's 'Story of Mankind,' this work begins as history and ends as tract. The first-three-quarters of it summarizes, in the colorless fashion of an elementary text-book, the known facts about woman's history and status up to the nineteenth century. The narrative was prepared for popular American consumption; we marvel nevertheless at what appears to be its studied banality of style."

— Outlook 141:245 O 14 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p243 Ap 2 '25 20w

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

GEORGIAN stories, 1925. 339p il $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Chapman & H.]

Short stories—Collections

The third in this series of collections of short stories by contemporary English writers. Includes portraits of the authors. Contents: The shameless behaviour of a lord, by Michael Arlen; The materialist, by Martin Armstrong; The story of the siren, by E. M. Forster; The island, by L. P. Hartley; The ghost, by Richard Hughes; Little Mexican, by Aldous Huxley; Baker's fury, by F. Tennyson Jesse; "W. J.", by Hugh Kingsmill; The hostages, by Naomi Mitchison; In Hanging Garden gully, by C. E. Montague; Brown of Epsom, by Arnold Palmer; The greeting, by Osbert Sitwell; Hang, by Frank Penn-Smith; The man who kept a diary, by J. C. Squire; A tug of war, by H. Vacheil.

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"It may be said in general that the writers of the various stories that make up the present volume are capable in manipulating the formal elements of the short story."

+ Dial 79:431 N '25 130w

"Not all the stories are first-rate, but enough of them are interesting and well written to make the volume worth while."

+ — Ind 115:52 J1 11 '25 60w

"One finds as the outstanding characteristic a refreshing freedom from the conventional and patterned tale of magazine tradition." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p4 Je 27 '25 550w

"What they lack is the sense of conviction behind the story. What they provide is obvious, if often very clever, invention. That is a good thing, if it is not a great thing. It is not to be expected that a volume like this should furnish the great thing. Perhaps it is enough to justify the volume that a selection of fifteen miscellaneous writings has revealed so unmistakably the prevailing wind of the current writing mode." H. I. Brock

N Y Times p17 Je 28 '25 1400w

"Last year's 'Georgian Stories' were good, and this year's are better. Its total average of art and entertainment is higher than that of the 1924 edition." Mary Kolars

+ N Y Tribune p5 J1 12 '25 800w

"The collection of Georgian Stories 1925 is very good; the editors luckily are given an opportunity of extracting the best stories from books, whereas the rival and complementary collection, The Best English Stories, is drawn only from magazines. The company is mixed enough, but beyond doubt there is good fare."

+ Spec 134:408 Mr 14 '25 80w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 70w

Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 280w

"What is rather missing in this volume is that suffused illumination, whether of poetry or amusement, which is the last delight of a short story."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p281 Ap 23 '25 550w

GERHARDI, WILLIAM ALEXANDER. The polyglots. 375p $2.50 Duffield

25-11323

"The author, an Englishman brought up in Russia, describes the post-Armistice adventures of an English captain of similar training but more complicated ancestry sent to Japan, thence to Vladivostok and Harbin. He meets an amazing collection of cosmopolitan relatives who have been blown before the storm. An incomparable crew, surrounded by all the imbecility of a motley military administration out of a job. . . Every person in the book, even the least of them, stands out sharp and clear. On each individual canvas, the author works with the gusto and the disillusion of youth. His frankness is only equalled by the skill with which he skates on thin ice, and the calmness with which he records his own reprehensibilities and those of others."—Ind

"A clever, sophisticated, well-written novel in the Russian manner, teeming with people—alive, human and often absurd."

+ Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"Makes fascinating reading if you do not object to the impudence, perversity, and rattle-headed quality of its story telling and its characterizations." J. F.

+ — Bookm 61:695 Ag '25 250w

"Mr. Gerhardi has written a magnificent and devastating book." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 27 '25 1050w

"A delightful book, full of mad humors, full of vital pictures of inept, devitalized people, full of strange, perverse attractions." D. R.

+ Ind 114:703 Je 20 '25 600w

Int Bk R p62 D '25 400w

"Here is no pessimism, here is irony, burlesque, humor and mellow resignation. Here is a feeling for, an intense sensitiveness to, beauty; but here also is as intense a sensitiveness to the impact of cheapness, and useless tragedy, and aimless living. Here is plenty of moral speculation but no moralizing. Here is pain without syrup. Mr. Gerhardt never misses a stroke. And he never spoils it all with too many strokes." Walter Yust

GERHARDI, WILLIAM A.—Continued
+ Lit R p2 J1 11 '25 620w

"Mr. Gerhardt's talent is mixed; is neither purely artistic, nor purely propagandist, nor purely journalist, but is all three together, and almost always in surprising proportions. His big scenes are disappointing. His minor scenes on the other hand, are full of vigorous life. Yet in spite of them one feels that 'The Polyglots' is not a work of art, and this is because the author's attitude to his world is still a little uncritical and in a sense journalistic." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 37:462 J1 11 '25 280w

"Mr. Gerhardt has the art of making the most absurd things seem natural. It is all impossible, and all true. The truth emerges, cleaned of sentimentality by the antiseptic of wit." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 35:340 J1 4 '25 260w

"What gives 'The Polyglots' its importance is that it seems to be the most painstaking and authoritative study in fictional form yet written of the general 'let down' in common sense and conduct which was the aftermath of a war prolonged unduly, and which a series of 'hard years' since has not cured. The perception of human futility which haunts every page is here quite in its place. It makes amends for a style that is often frivolous and diffuse. . . 'The Polyglots' is one of the big books of the year. . . Its satire is well-nigh perfect." H. L. Stuart

+ N Y Times p5 Je 14 '25 1550w

"Let me urge all puritans, philistines, tidy ladies, men who are afraid of marriage, women who fear love, all who dread responsibility, children or poverty, to read this book. It will not change the course of a single life, but even momentary light-heartedness may be worth achieving. The charm of this novel comes partly from the author's ironic humor, partly from his astonishing ability to delineate character and partly from his amoral philosophy of negation." Harrison Smith

+ N Y Tribune p4 Je 21 '25 1200w

N Y World p4m Je 21 '25 600w

"The most obvious, and also the most important remark to be made about The polyglots is that it is unconsciously amusing. Such a novel as this without humor would be intolerable. Nowhere else in fiction has been represented such a complex of incompetence, idiocy, ineptitude, unmorality as in The Polyglots. Yet when one has apparently discovered that as the result of a war and of the disturbances caused by that war, nothing that one can possibly do makes any real difference, then it may be that the general attitude of the people in Mr. Gerhardt's book shall seem not altogether ignoble. In sum: the book is buoyant, which, considering that a large part of it must be more or less true, is a real triumph. But a great novel . . . ?" C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 222:163 S '25 750w

"A sophisticated, ironic, and gayly amorous book."

+ Outlook 140:500 Ag 5 '25 100w

"Though impudently haphazard and discursive, it is a brilliant performance." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:712 Je 27 '25 620w

"To one who had never read 'Futility,' the present story might well seem an original, pungent, and even intellectually exciting decoction. But it is a second brewing from over-steeped tea-leaves, and the aroma of the draught has lost its delicacy." L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 1:835 Je 20 '25 340w

"The Polyglots is a very sad book indeed, a panorama of a depraved and disintegrated world of Russian exiles, Belgian refugees, English attachés, Czech liaison officers and all the débris of a continental war. Even apart from a preposterous and delightful sketch of departmental work in the Civil Service, it is a book of value, if only for the sake of one little girl of eight, Natasha. She belongs to the serene and immortal places of literature."

+ Spec 135:205 Ag 1 '25 300w

"Sober analysis suggests that if this work represents a new force in fiction it is not without kinship in Michael Arlen; also if we must praise flippancy and eroticism of this kind, we shall no longer be allowed to discriminate even in our literary vices. There is no charm of romantic unreality about the tale. Nothing but labored pretense."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a J1 12 '25 320w

"Has all the quality which made 'Futility' so engaging, its only serious fault being that it is too long."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p430 Je 25 '25 650w

GEROULD, GORDON HALL. Midsummer mystery. 257p $1.75 Appleton

25-7072

It was a dignified dwelling on a Washington side street, the former home of a United States senator. This was just the house to meet his sister's requirements, thought young Wells, as he followed the real estate agent across the hall to look at the dining room. Exactly what he was looking for, he was still thinking, when the shade flew up and a flood of light fell across the dining room table revealing its gruesome burden. There lay the body of Senator West, the recent owner of the house, with a slender dagger buried to the hilt in his back. The startled young men notified the authorities, and then, interested in spite of themselves by their discovery, they pursued their own investigation of the shocking crime. The story is told by Wells, and the mystery is well sustained until the close.

"It seems undeniable that a murder mystery story should hold the attention of the reader from the first page to the very last sentence. This Mr. Gerould has failed to do, for the first fifty pages of 'A Midsummer Mystery' seem to be perfectly unexciting and moderately uninteresting. As he warms to his work, Mr. Gerould is able to instill into his reader some feeling for the story, but no particular sensation of excitement, fear or nervousness, and little real doubt as to who is implicated in the murder exists."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 250w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p4 Ap 5 '25 180w

N Y Tribune p9 My 10 '25 180w

"The mystery begins on page four and continues to the end with new complications introduced whenever there is a tendency toward flagging interest."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:200 J1 '25

GEROULD, KATHARINE (FULLERTON) (MRS GORDON HALL GEROULD). Aristocratic West. 220p il $3.50 Harper

917.9 West—Social life and customs 25-22030

By "aristocratic West" Mrs Gerould means the Far West and it is her purpose to interpret this real West, to distinguish it from the Middle West and the East and to show its human and social differences. Contents: The aristocratic West; Salt Lake; the city of the saints; Our northwestern states; New Mexico and the backwash of Spain; Reno; San Francisco revisited."

"An even higher quality than descriptive brilliance and an intriguing style Mrs. Gerould's essays always possess: that of interpretation, which lays bare the heart of her subject. In the case of the six essays of this group, the subjects are conspicuously in need of interpretation at least for us of the (United States) Far East. Written by an American, for Americans, these essays interpret Americanism, as witnessed by the Far West, as has seldom been done." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 28 '25 750w

Reviewed by P. H. Boynton

New Repub 45:225 Ja 13 '26 160w

Reviewed by Silas Bent

N Y Times p1 D 20 '25 1900w

"Mrs. Gerould has been misled by outward appearances and has fallen into the traveler's typical error of inferring freedom of mind from freedom of manners. . . . The book ought to be read by everyone east of the Mississippi, but its circulation should be prohibited west of the Rockies lest its flattery undermine the manhood of the whole Pacific coast." E. S. Bates

+ Sat R of Lit 2:336 N 28 '25 700w

"Easterners who desire to understand that region of still undetermined boundaries—the West—will find entertainment and varying degrees of enlightenment in 'The Aristocratic West.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p7a N 15 '25 1050w

GESELL, ARNOLD LUCIUS. Mental growth of the pre-school child; a psychological outline of normal development from birth to the sixth year, including a system of developmental diagnosis. 447p $3.50 Macmillan

136.7 Child study. Psychology, Physiological 25-4215

"The aim of this work is to give a systematic view of the entire pre-school period of development. The basic data of this study furnish an outline of the psychology of infancy, by bringing into systematic view cross-section behavior pictures of the ascending stages of development. The emphasis throughout is on the normal aspects of behavior. The application of norms of development to problems of developmental diagnosis and supervision is treated in the concluding sections."—School Life

Booklist 22:6 O '25

Cleveland p115 D '25

"The book gives both a general discussion of the problems of mental growth and a detailed description of the test materials used and the procedure followed in determining growth. The treatment of tests makes the volume an excellent handbook for the clinical worker." G. T. Buswell

+ El School J 26:74 S '25 350w

"Too technical for the general reader, but indispensable for advanced students of the subject as a pioneer volume by a recognized leader in a rapidly developing field."

+ J Home Econ 17:293 My '25 60w

Reviewed by Agnes deLima

New Repub 43:157 J1 1 '25 500w

Reviewed by J. D. Wolcott

School Life 10:160 Ap '25 100w

"Dr. Gesell has accomplished a pioneer and monumental piece of work. 'The Mental Growth of the Child' is easily the most important book that has ever been written on the early mental and psychical development of children. . . . Its delightful literary style, its freedom from technical jargon and its wealth of illustrations (there are 227 figures) make it a book for every intelligent person who is not too stupid or too unimaginative to take an interest in this most dramatic and fascinating of all the 'ages of man.'" L. M. Terman

Science 61:445 Ap 24 '25 800w

"It is a volume that provides amazingly good reading. The author's abounding enthusiasm for his subject is combined with a felicity of phrase and a liberal allowance of vigorous comment, as enjoyable as it is stimulating. Then too, the conception of the behavioristic viewpoint that is afforded should be recognized as an important contribution in itself." J. L. Hunt

+ Survey 54:362 Je 15 '25 520w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p839 D 3 '25 70w

GIBBS, ANTHONY. Peter Vacuum. (Eng title Little Peter Vacuum). 392p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Hutchinson]

25-18702

Written by a son of Sir Philip Gibbs, this is the story of a young American, son of a multi-millionaire manufacturer of vacuum cleaners, whose nickname of Peter Vacuum clings to him even after he has become an Oxford undergraduate. His friends use him without shame or mercy, for the sake of his money. Tho entirely conscious of their motives, he is not resentful, but he does feel hurt when the girl he loves makes the mercenary confession that she is ready to marry him for his money. That drives him back to America. Fortunately Lady Imogen discovers after she has sent him away that she loves him for himself as well as for his money. The story has added interest in its friendly contrasting of American and English outlook and manners.

"He is gay, but not forcibly so. His hand holds, its brush freely; he does not fear to take bold and dashing strokes across his canvas."

W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 26 '25 1000w
Cleveland p108 N '25

"A faulty, mannered, jejune book, but one so gay, so amusing, so electric that its faults are merely the defects of its qualities; the author's high spirits get out of hand at times from sheer exuberance and young vitality. Almost he beats Mr. Wodehouse at his own game, but he does more than Mr. Wodehouse attempts. He has a real flair for character and comment; he touches tragedy—lightly it is true, but with understanding."

+ Ind 115:304 S 12 '25 260w

"It is an entertaining story, brightly written, with ample evidence that all the genius in this noted writing family has not been corralled by one generation. Mr. Gibbs has a good humorous touch, and he writes with a fine, gay zest as if he were having the best time in the world, which conveys itself to the reader, and makes him think he is having a good time, too. When Mr. Gibbs sticks to the English scene his backgrounds are excellent, handled with skill and deftness. He does not do so well with America, and slips often into amusing errors." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p4 Ag 22 '25 350w

"Despite the dedication it is to be doubted that Sir Philip Gibbs could equal the exuberance of his son's first book any more than he would be guilty of the considerable stretches of superficial, uneven and affected writing which marks it as the work of a beginner. Discounting these defects, however, the novel is spirited, interesting and shows unmistakable promise."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 23 '25 1000w

"Since this is the story of an American at odds with an English environment, accuracy of portrayal in this character is requisite to the point of the novel. Strangely enough, the unfortunately drawn 'Peter' does not keep the novel from being vastly amusing. There are spots in 'Peter Vacuum' that suggest that the author is a literary son rather of P. G. Wodehouse than of Philip Gibbs." C. M. Purdy

+ N Y Tribune p9 O 18 '25 520w

"A young study of youth which, for an agreeable change, keeps to the plane of romantic comedy. These young people are foolish but not loathsome; and this I suspect to be a fairly normal situation, current literature to the contrary." H. W. Boynton

+ Outlook 141:126 S 23 '25 180w

"There are traces of Wodehouse along with the Gibbs. The people are raw; they do preposterous things in preposterous ways. It would have been better if the Gibbs hierarchy had advised the author to bide his time as a novelist before trying to do this story."

— Sat R of Lit 2:199 O 10 '25 120w

"The tale is unimportant but does not lack mirth. The pictures of Peter Marshall's (that is Peter Vacuum's real name) friends are present-day and vivid, and the Oxford crowd are not overfamiliar in fiction."

GIBBS, ANTHONY—Continued

+ Springf'd Republican p7a S 6 '25 200w

"This first novel is one that needs no apology; for Mr. Gibbs certainly succeeds in doing what he set out to do, which was to write a pleasant, popular story that should be the usual mixture of easy sentiment and amusing dialogue."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p510 J1 30 '25 150w

GIBBS, ARTHUR HAMILTON. Soundings. 320p $2 Little

25-6162

The story of a motherless English girl brought up by her artist father, who taught her not to be afraid of tradition, to stand on her own feet and to be honest. Nancy grows up a true modern, frank and honest in all things, but without sacrificing her delicacy and reticence. Her love story, begun in Paris where her father sent her as a part of her education, has a cruel interruption which for a time robs her of her faith in love itself, but years later it comes to fulfilment thru her steadfastness and courage. The best thing in the book is the friendship between Nancy and her father.

Booklist 21:339 Je '25

"His novel presents a picture of love and friendship in their subtlest meaning. With no hint of actual Freudianism, it yet has great psychological significance." J. F.

+ Bookm 61:219 Ap '25 250w

"In spite of defects, the novel is such an obviously earnest attempt to do something worth doing, and it goes so far along the road towards that goal, that unquestionably its author may be considered a worthy entrant into the field of American fiction." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 7 '25 1950w

"There is no escaping the impression that the author set out to write on certain problems of the time (of all time, of human nature) with a determination to produce a work that would be clean as well as outright, frank only in its honesty, never cheap, and in every word sincere. All honor to the modern novelist with such an ideal. His faults are of the remediable kind." C. P.

+ Cath World 121:568 J1 '25 320w

Cleveland p86 S '25

"One is somewhat confused by the spiritual processes of the hero, and one sympathizes only partially with the stubborn devotion of the heroine, but the story has the merits of genuine emotion and a sustained interest."

+ Ind 114:303 Mr 14 '25 100w

"He shows great skill in delineating all his characters, from Nancy down to the least important, and he has much of geniality and of humorous perception, which give warmth to the book." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p311 Ap '25 400w

"Here is a fascinating study of a young girl's love-life, done with keen insight, unflaggingly interesting. A story of people of our own time, facing our own problems, decent, sane, normal people, and not any the less interesting for the possession of those qualities." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 Mr 7 '25 650w

"'Soundings' has gaiety and depth and glow, which is all that one ordinarily asks in a love story—and more than one ordinarily gets."

+ Nation 121:174 Ag 5 '25 120w

"Mr. Hamilton Gibbs in his new novel issues a challenge to those who assert that sex, its glorification and naked triumph, is the keynote of modern life, and that any narrative which runs counter to this theory will be either stale and unprofitable or thin and sentimental. In view of his challenge, 'Soundings' carries on the face of it an insistence that it be read for reasons other and apart from the primary reason for reading fiction—namely, that one be entertained. This English-American novelist is blazing a trail."

N Y Times p8 Mr 1 '25 1000w

Reviewed by H: Beston

N Y Tribune p3 Mr 29 '25 700w

"This is not the first venture of Major Gibbs into fiction; it is his first important long novel and his first piece of work since the much discussed 'Gun Fodder.' It is a far cry from that stark, relentless chronicle of war to this imaginative study of one girl's adventure in romance. Yet the same gallant and unquenchable spirit which flamed into fury over the holocaust at Verdun, animates this compassionate narrative of the struggle for rationality in the baffling and tormenting relationships which make up what is so pleasantly called a love story." Alison Smith

+ N Y World p6m Mr 29 '25 250w

"Its supreme merit lies in the fact that it deals with the sex motif with absolute frankness and yet with reverence for womanhood. Equally well, it succeeds in giving people reality and in endowing them also with charm."

+ Outlook 139:659 Ap 29 '25 170w

"The quality of 'Soundings,' by A. Hamilton Gibbs, is easily such as to make it one of the important novels of the year." Grant Overton

+ Sat R of Lit 1:575 Mr 7 '25 680w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 5 '25 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p401 Je 11 '25 300w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. How to stay married. 242p $1.50 Appleton

173 Marriage

25-7074

In these studies of married life Mr Gibbs considers the case of Benedick and Beatrice, who enter on the adventure of marriage with a real desire to make it a success, but with very little knowledge of each other. He describes the inevitable misunderstandings, trivial but at the same time tragic, the irritations and difficulties that arise while they are learning to know and live with each other, and draws from the experience of these two some general and hopeful conclusions.

Reviewed by Kathleen Norris

Bookm 61:474 Je '25 200w

"Without being 'preachy,' these sketches both point a moral and adorn a tale. Humor, pathos and common sense are mixed in good proportions."

+ Boston Transcript p8 J1 11 '25 250w

"Mr. Gibbs' little volume does not pretend to be scientific, being wholly fictional in character, but is shrewd, observant and amusing and embodies a good deal of sound social and marital philosophy, albeit of a somewhat superficial kind." J. R. Towse

+ Lit R p6 My 9 '25 160w

"The service Mr. Gibbs performs for all average young married couples by his depiction of their difficulties is in the way he shows how easily those difficulties arise and how easily also they can be surmounted. His book is an understanding and sympathetic treatment of the problem that young newlyweds will doubtless find both readable and profitable."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 5 '25 400w

"The book is easily and at times shrewdly written, and while the subject and treatment are consistently quite ordinary, it is nevertheless workmanlike and seldom dull. Moreover, it is sensible." L. F. Hellman

+ N Y Tribune p8 My 17 '25 230w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p418 Je 18 '25 50w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Love of Monsieur.
new ed 286p $2 (6s) Appleton

A25-515

In the days of King Charles, the keen blade and ready wit of Monsieur Mornay, a French chevalier, aroused the hatred of many an English gentleman. The proud and beautiful Mistress Barbara Clerk, whom Monsieur loved, scorned him too. So Monsieur sought adventure on the Spanish Main as captain of a privateer. His thrilling adventures include the capture of a rich Spanish vessel on which he finds Mistress Barbara, who by a curious turn of affairs had been risking her life to find him, and in the hour when they face death together they realize their love for each other.

"This reprint of an earlier novel by Mr. Gibbs enables us to observe the fine vitality and power of his first days of authorship. He is skilful and able in his work. The novel will doubtless continue to be popular, as it deserves to be."

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 21 '25 180w

"With Mr. Gibbs as conductor, the reader travels second-class but at high speed, and with agreeable companions." Dora Mulkins

+ Int Bk R p615 Ag '25 500w

"George Gibbs knows how to tell a good tale and his stories are always diverting, and this 'Love of Monsieur' offers an evening's entertainment and a few character sketches that are fairly well done." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p9 My 2 '25 200w

"In setting and characters, even in plot, the story resembles similar novels by Jeffery Farnol, but it is not nearly so well done. In fact, judged by George Gibbs's own works, 'The Love of Monsieur' is below par. The plot is weak, sketchy, full of annoying hitches. To be enjoyable, romance and adventure must at least seem real while being read. 'The Love of Monsieur' meets the requirement only in spots."

+ N Y Times p9 F 15 '25 380w

"The book is readable, but Sabatini need not look to his laurels, for the flair and spirit which swept 'Captain Blood' and 'Scaramouche' into the best-seller class are not to be found in Mr. Gibbs's work."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 8 '25 200w

"This is good work of its kind: a swinging narrative, smoothly phrased, and climbing to a good spectacular finish."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:634 Mr 28 '25 220w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p140 F 26 '25 150w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Mad marriage. 367p
$2 Appleton

25-16817

Into Peter's quixotic mind comes the notion that he must marry the girl. He found her in tears, heard her wretched story and took her in. Now if the people in Red Bridge were talking, it was better to marry her. He did. They were utterly mismatched—the artist, impractical, refined, fastidious, and the little ticket seller, hard, vulgar, cheaply pretty, making the most of her misery. Peter does not discover his love for Tommy Keith until after this mad marriage. It makes things at once more difficult and more bearable. Their love is completely at Josie's mercy, for Peter will not divorce her. What then? That is the story.

"Mr. Gibbs's new novel is neither fish nor fowl, nor good red sinning. It offers a little risqué New York life, and a great deal of pretty scenery on the Delaware. It vaunts a hero so virtuous that he is quite too good to be true, and that is all one can say for it. Mr. Gibbs has an excellent command of language, and does his dialogue well, so that it always fits his characters, and could go far if he would only take the time and trouble."

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 3 '25 300w

Reviewed by V. R. Bowker
Int Bk R p62 D '25 280w

"The swift pictures of Bohemia are convincing and Wingate, the artist who has 'arrived,' is a real achievement. Although he appears in the book only as a sort of background, one gains through him some conception of the artist's point of view toward life, and it is an interesting one, the more so because it has every appearance of being based on fact. Mr. Gibbs might have contributed a novel of real portent had he been willing to stay his pen this side of magazine popularity." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p5 N 7 '25 200w

"An entertaining and agreeable, if rather improbable, little story, with a hero who seems somewhat too good to be true. The book has some charming descriptions of the country near Peter Randle's home, and an amusing one of the galleries of Lablache, the picture dealer, and certain of its patrons. If there are times when Peter's idealism seems a good deal overdone, it is at least in striking, and not unrefreshing, contrast to the point of view expounded in much of our modern fiction."

+ N Y Times p9 S 20 '25 550w

"The plot is developed with the inevitable precision of a West Point drill exercise."

Sat R of Lit 2:415 D 12 '25 180w

"A tolerant reader will not find this trivial romance too pretentious, and he will no doubt accept Mr. Gibbs's picture of American 'Bohemia' as at least as accurate as the usual picture of our English counterpart."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p658 O 8 '25 130w

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Reckless lady. 367p $2 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinsons]

25-26330

The first part of the book portrays Helen Fleming, a beautiful, high-spirited woman, and her two attractive children, Sylvia and Stephen. After a separation of fifteen years Col. Fleming, whom Helen in a reckless moment had deserted for a cad, returns to England, a broken and lonely man. While he does not live with his family, he gladly provides for them for a small compensation—the occasional companionship of his children. Then Sylvia marries Edward Hillier, a wealthy young American who takes her to Grand Rapids, Michigan to live. Thus the second part of the book is taken up with Sylvia's life in America, her reactions to American customs, and her longing for European life, all of which brings her to the verge of a scandal similar to that of her mother.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

"This is a well intentioned tale, making up in cordiality what it lacks in distinction." Isabel Paterson

+ Bookm 61:86 Mr '25 300w

"Sir Philip's penetrating portraits are the best of all his work, and here we have a series of acutely etched pictures, specially interesting as we realize the unusual circumstances of them." D. L. Mann

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 14 '25 1350w

"Outside of a few flashes of humor the book is rather dull."

+ Cath World 121:716 Ag '25 80w

Cleveland p67 Je '25

Reviewed by H. L. Pangborn
Int Bk R p311 Ap '25 580w

"His is a broad sympathy. He sees youth with as gentle eyes as he sees age, and he is willing to understand both. In this novel Sir Philip reveals that struggle between what is old and what is new with contagious tolerance and with humor." Walter Yust

+ Lit R p3 F 21 '25 680w

"It is all very serious and very vague. There is no æsthetic reason why the book should have been given the form of a novel. It would more justly be a volume of impressions, interviews, and political articles." Edwin Muir

GIBBS, PHILIP H.—Continued

Nation and Ath 36:447 D 20 '24 330w

Reviewed by J: Franklin

New Statesman 24:393 Ja 10 '25 1750w

"There is no quarrel with Mr. Gibbs for his honest and workmanlike investigation of and report on the thoughts and feelings of a great variety of people, in the interest of a closer understanding between seemingly alien races. The component parts of 'The Reckless Lady,' however, do not quite fuse. Mr. Gibbs is unfortunate in adopting for this novel a somewhat prolix and involved and explanatory style. It is all entirely fine, none the less, and springs from the most decent impulses. Mr. Gibbs means well, but he is a trifle tiresome."

+ — N Y Times p9 Mr 8 '25 850w

"The portraits of characters and places have given Sir Philip Gibbs opportunity for some fine descriptive writing, and the way in which he has handled them show that he is still an international journalist of the highest standing." G. W. Wynne

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 5 '25 580w

"Mr. Gibbs has accurately drawn French peasants, Italian Counts, English aristocrats, artists in Chelsea, trade union and Labor Party exponents, gay young disillusionists of the Michael Arlen stripe, American bankers, ex-soldiers, professional idealists, and done it all with gratifying competence. It is a little too ample, and the central ideas, intended to bring the whole conglomeration into focus, seem a bit simplified and sentimental." J. W. C.

+ — N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 200w

Outlook 139:423 Mr 18 '25 300w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

Sat R of Lit 1:604 Mr 14 '25 520w

Spec 134:252 F 14 '25 80w

"The tale is slight; but it is readable, and, on its journalistic level, intelligently informing."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a My 3 '25 300w

"The high lights are too prominent in 'The Reckless Lady.'"

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p10 Ja 1 '25 320w

GIBBS, SIR PHILIP HAMILTON. Ten years after; a reminder. 246p $2.50 Doran [7s 6d Hutchinson]

940.314 European war, 1914-1918—Peace.
European war, 1914-1918—Results 25-7215

Ten years after the beginning of the World war Philip Gibbs looks back over that momentous decade and the changes it has wrought in the face of the world and in the hearts of men. His book is both a reminder and a warning. He brings to memory things almost forgotten and meanings which have become each day less simple and clear-cut. He recalls the placid days before the war and the mistaken sense of security, the sudden call to arms, and the way in which the various nations met that call. Then he describes the coming of the peace and the tragic falling of the idealism that might have changed everything. Finally he shows up clearly the present perils and the hope ahead—the beginning at least of a world opinion rising up against the war makers, and a spreading spirit of peace.

"Altogether this is a book to be read by everyone who would catch even a momentary and cloudy glimpse of the Parcae who are spinning the thread of civilization's fate to-day." V: S. Clark

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Je '25 650w

"His comments and criticism are on the whole just and well-taken and the book is particularly good as a terse statement of fact and history as it appears to the average man."

+ Booklist 21:375 Jl '25

Bookm 61:491 Je '25 350w

"The sanity of Philip Gibbs's book is its most salient characteristic. One wonders who else could have written this book. Certainly no other writer could have imparted to it so large a sense of fairness of attitude." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '25 1300w

Cleveland p40 Ap '25

"He is a good journalistic writer; his voice is always on the right side, the side of honor and decency and tolerance. He says the same things over and over again, but they are good things."

+ Ind 114:421 Ap 11 '25 160w

"There are books that can be read. This is one that must be read—read by every individual who, in any country in the world, gives any thought to the problems which must be solved if the peoples of the world are not again to be plunged into a second and more destructive war." J. W. Gerard

+ Lit R p1 My 16 '25 1650w

"Hardly more than a vivid and eminently readable description of the war-years, and those that followed them, in the principal countries of Europe. The historian will find nothing new here; but the layman may spend a profitable hour or two refreshing his memory of the four years of struggle for an ideal followed by six of progressive disillusionment which make up the last decade."

+ — Nation and Ath 36:452 D 20 '24 170w

N Y Times p3 Mr 29 '25 1200w

"Sir Philip has had an almost incomparable experience of war and writes in a lively fashion, what he has to say is likely to be read, even though its net effect is distinctly disquieting." W: MacDonald

+ — N Y Tribune p3 Ap 26 '25 780w

N Y World p7m Ap 19 '25 60w

"A readable and in parts stimulating book, but of ephemeral quality."

+ — Outlook 141:612 D 16 '25 100w

Pratt p33 autumn '25

The Times [London] Lit Sup p807 D 4 '24 270w

GIDDINGS, FRANKLIN HENRY. Scientific study of human society. 247p $2 Univ. of N.C.
301 Sociology 24-31966

"My purpose in this book has been to indicate wherein and to what extent Sociology is indubitably a scientific study of Human Society, and how it can be made more rigorously so. To this end I have undertaken to describe strict methods that sociology can avail itself of, and to point out precautions and limits which must be observed in the use of each. While the book is not a treatise on sociology and makes no claim to be, it necessarily formulates the fundamental sociological problems, and sets forth the more important sociological generalizations that admit of verification... At present it is the only work of its kind."—Preface

"The book is written in Professor Giddings' usual brilliance of statement and there are many telling aspects of his analysis. The book should do much to stimulate and inspire an intelligent and discriminating interest in the scientific study of society among younger students whose approach to social study has hitherto been credulous and uncritical." F. S. Chapin

+ Ann Am Acad 122:273 N '25 200w

Booklist 22:9 O '25

"Greatly needed if somewhat technical book."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 16 '25 1000w

"For advanced university courses the work should prove a valuable text, and all students of society will find it a definite contribution to the methodology of their field."

+ Nation 121:390 O 7 '25 120w

"Among all the professional sociologists of the world it is safe to say that none has perceived more clearly nor reiterated more consistently the necessity of quantitative determination of social facts and processes. Nor has any one else made such heroic efforts to get at the distinctively sociological phenomena of human group behavior by the combination of analytical and numerical methods. The present work is undoubtedly a unique book. As Professor Giddings says in the 'preface,' 'At present it is the only book of its kind.'" F. H. Hankins

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ap 26 '25 750w

"What Prof Giddings attempts to do, and succeeds in establishing, is to indicate the importance and to offer proof of the validity of the new methods in social investigation. He has contributed one of the few outstanding guides, easy to understand and instinct with suggestion, to sociological method as a scientific discipline. It is as useful to the layman as to the social investigator." P. B.

+ Springfield Republican p12 Ap 24 '25 520w

GILLETTE, EDWARD. Locating the Iron trail. 172p il $2 Christopher pub. house
625 Railroads—United States 25-11476

The author tells his experiences as topographer on the United States surveys west of the Mississippi. For over thirty years, from 1878 to 1910, he was engaged in marking out the lines to be followed later by the railroad-builders. His book is a graphic account of the initiative and daring which went into the building of the railroads and shows how large a part they played in the winning of the west.

Boston Transcript p8 Jl 25 '25 900w

"These experiences are of the greatest variety, and as they are told simply and directly, with no attempt to furbish or embroider or make effective, they attain an effectiveness and interest which a more ambitious skill might have injured."

+ N Y Times p18 Ag 2 '25 460w

GILLILAND, ADAM RAYMOND, and JORDAN, RIVERDA HARDING. Educational measurements and the classroom teacher. (Century education ser.) 269p $2 Century

371 Educational measurements 24-28898

The work is written with the double purpose of serving as a hand book for teachers in service and as a text for students undergoing teacher training. The first four chapters define the need and the aims of standardized educational measurements, and the rest of the book describes actual tests and scales in several subjects of the elementary and secondary school curriculum.

Boston Transcript p4 S 5 '25 250w

Reviewed by W: McAndrew

Educ R 70:154 O '25 100w

"The book seems to be quite satisfactory for the purposes for which it was prepared, namely, a general handbook for the guidance of teachers in service and a textbook for prospective teachers. Certainly no one will read the book carefully without becoming generally familiar with the educational-measurement field. It is not an advanced treatise on the fine points of testing, but it is a very practical book for the use of those who want to know something about tests, the characteristics of particular tests, and the use that can be made of tests." D. E. Scates

+ El School J 25:792 Je '25 700w

School Life 10:120 F '25 100w

"The book can be recommended to educators, and to all those interested in the subject of standardized school examinations."

+ Springfield Republican p10 My 13 '25 130w

GILLIS, JAMES MARTIN. False prophets. 201p $2 Macmillan

928 Authors

25-7377

Some of the most widely read authors of the day—Shaw, Wells, Freud, Conan Doyle, Nietzsche, Haeckel, Mark Twain and Anatole France—appear to the author, a well-known Paulist Father, as false prophets offering worthless substitutes for religion. Shaw is branded as a "universal iconoclast and an unmitigated pessimist"; Wells as having completely lost the distinction between good and bad; Mark Twain as a misanthrope; Anatole France as a skeptic and cynic. Modern pagans, Father Gillis says, who concentrate attention on the body and the pleasures of the senses, listen gladly to these prophets.

"This collection of essays on a dozen conspicuous moderns is trenchant, shrewd and ironic. The author, who is editor of the Catholic World, writes from a liberal Catholic standpoint and the book will be of interest to all classes of literary readers whether or not they accept all his conclusions."

+ Booklist 22:22 O '25

Bookm 61:adv Je '25 100w

Boston Transcript p7 Ap 18 '25 560w

"The substance and lucidity of these essays remain, in print, genuinely what they seemed to be under the more favoring conditions offered by the pulpit. Their excellence is not evanescent; and it is a further indication of the shapely and solid thinking which originally went into them, that a certain informality of presentation which they here retain, an informality characteristic of the spoken word, does not at all dissipate their effectiveness on the printed page." M. K.

+ Cath World. 121:272 My '25 1050w

"The essays are convincing efforts at special pleading, sermons based on dissatisfaction with modern life. Well written and sincere, they attempt to prove too much."

+ Ind 114:478 Ap 25 '25 200w

"It is, in my opinion, one of the keenest and sanest volumes of criticism published in recent years." W: Berry

+ Lit R p9 Je 27 '25 460w

"This book by Father Gillis may be regarded—at a minimum valuation—as an interesting experiment. The first thing that appears is that Father Gillis knows his moderns extremely well. The second is that he can use their weapons with considerable skill." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p11 Jl 19 '25 1650w

"His antagonism is so thorough and so indiscriminating that it is not particularly effective."

+ N Y Tribune p7 O 11 '25 300w

"The author is vigorous, witty and often sensible. The weakness of this able book is, of course, its unbending and mediaeval dogmatism."

+ Outlook 140:406 Jl 15 '25 180w

Sat R of Lit 2:109 S 5 '25 200w

"The reader doubtless will decline to accept the author's judgment at many points. But he will recognize the earnestness with which this attempt at reappraisal is made and the keenness and frequent wit which accompany it."

+ Springfield Republican p10 My 29 '25 220w

GILMAN, MILDRED EVANS. Fig leaves. 328p $2 Siebel pub. corp.

25-21263

A study of the adolescent girl. From the confused and troubled wonderings of childhood thru the religious ecstasy of adolescence and the painful sex-consciousness of youth Lydia Carter gradually emerges to a sane and normal womanhood. She falls in love while in college, and becomes engaged. David breaks the engagement during the war, but after it is over Lydia seeks him out again and offers him a maturer love, serene and free from questionings.

"Considered as fiction, 'Fig Leaves' is unimportant. Nevertheless, as an honest document of a sensitive young soul stressing the eternal why and justifiably revolting against the thoughtless ferocity of certain adults who blindly jam a formulated philosophy of life down the protesting throats of their offspring. Miss Gilman's book deserves praise for the simplicity and quality of its workmanship."

GILMAN, MILDRED EVANS—Continued

— + N Y Times p16 N 15 '25 360w

"I can think of very few startling flaws in this book, which is far from being amateurish. The title is the worst mistake. But the people, particularly the girl and the parents, are so complete and real and done with such skill and power that they hold the life of the book in their talk and their reflections, so that the occasional affectations of rhythm or repetition slip by without causing much irritation." Margery Latimer

— + N Y Tribune p12 N 15 '25 1000w

"We can't have too many screeds against hypocritical parents and false modesty, and this story, though jerky and full of stencils, will help the cause. Its title, which ought to be commandeered for the movies, is far from applying to the contents."

— + N Y World p7m D 13 '25 130w

GINGERICH, SOLOMON FRANCIS. Essays in the romantic poets. 276p $2.25 (10s) Macmillan

821 Romanticism. English poetry. Wordsworth, William. Coleridge, Samuel Taylor. Shelley, Percy Bysshe. Byron, George Gordon Noel Byron, 6th baron 24-29337

The English poets of the romantic age made a sharp break with the poetry of the preceding age and Coleridge and Wordsworth, particularly, were instrumental in changing the current of thought from eighteenth to nineteenth century ways. Dr Gingerich's book shows how this is especially true in philosophical and religious matters. He traces the spiritual growth of these two poets and, more briefly, of Shelley and Byron, by studying their writings in chronological order.

"Professor Gingerich is not brilliant. Because there is no flash to his book, because the prose is for the most part heavy, 'Essays in the Romantic Poets' would seem to take its place among that multitude of well-meaning but dull tomes that college professors issue season after season. This is regrettable in Professor Gingerich's case, for he seems to be excellently equipped for the task he has chosen."

— + N Y Times p16 D 7 '24 320w

"The book will prove valuable to the student of early 19th century poetry and also of interest to the general reader who desires an intelligent appreciation of the best work of the four poets named. There is nothing startlingly new or original in the theories and opinions put forth by Prof Gingerich, although he differs with the majority of critics on some points of importance. The worth and interest of the book lies chiefly in the clear, careful and scholarly manner in which he has taken the poems of each poet chronologically, dug out the essential and significant philosophy written into them, and then shown the manner in which that philosophy has developed and changed with the years."

+ Springfield Republican p6 My 11 '25 820w

GISSING, GEORGE ROBERT. Charles Dickens. 293p $3 Dodd

B or 92 Dickens, Charles 25-26334

Gissing's well-known critical study of Dickens was first published in 1898. Knowing his London almost as well as Dickens knew it Gissing was particularly fitted to be the interpreter of his work.

Booklist 21:309 My '25

"His picture of Dickens is highly colored with pigments snatched here and there from his own experience; it is by no means photographic."

Bookm 61:485 Je '25 330w

GLASGOW, ELLEN ANDERSON GHOLSON. Barren ground. 511p $2.50 Doubleday

25-8794

Dorinda's father and mother were Virginia farmers, a little above the poor whites and much below the landed gentry in station. "We make our living out of barren ground," Dorinda said once, thus epitomizing in a sentence the bleak hard struggle of their lives. Love came to her early, and to it she surrendered eagerly, without question, drinking deep of an intoxicating joy. Then on the eve of their wedding day, her lover brought home a bride from the city. That act of betrayal stripped love from Dorinda's heart forever. Love gone, she must find something to fill her life. With the same self surrender and intensity of purpose that marked her brief romance, Dorinda gave herself to the soil. She made her father's barren acres fruitful and green. The years of effort and achievement brought to her the thrill of the creator, and took from her life the bitterness of its earlier defeat, making possible kindness and compassion even to the man who had betrayed her.

"Shining through the account of sun-blackened fields and sagging houses and drooping workers is the genuinely beautiful story of Dorinda Oakley, who through disillusionment and misfortune learned to bend adverse circumstances to her indomitable purpose. Miss Glasgow has told a story of meagre lives and shown the possibility of inner enrichment and growth. She has traced the happenings of humdrum years and revealed their underlying significance. She has turned her back upon gold lace and shining swords and tender vows, and has found the true romance amid the dust and mud of a little Southern farm, in the heart of a girl who came to see the challenge to courage and the call to high adventure in the homely duties of life." G: B. Dutton

+ Atlantic's Bookshelf Ag '25 580w

Booklist 21:340 Je '25

"Few novels have revealed the southland of Virginia so clearly as 'Barren Ground.' It presents the spirit of the land, the weaknesses of its people, without censure and without commendation. The novelist portrays them exactly as they are. Were the word not so frequently over-used, it might be called an epic story." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 18 '25 1250w

"It is a great book, but it is more than that; it is a readable book, a book touched by a certain universality that makes it a living thing, not an ephemeral expression of a transient emotion. It will be read and talked of by future generations." V. T. McC.

+ Cath World 121:568 J1 '25 380w

Cleveland p81 J1 '25

"This powerful story, sombre, grave, massive, and convincing, lifts its author to an assured level of literary achievement."

+ Dial 79:260 S '25 120w

"Miss Ellen Glasgow has brought forth the first realistic novel that has ever been written of Virginia, or for that matter of the South. She has got away from old mammies' tales, and she has drawn on life, not on scenery or sentiment, for her material. She has written of Virginia as impersonally as Thomas Hardy has of Wessex. She has found a fertile soil, and from her first planting she has reaped a rich harvest. 'Barren Ground' is one of the best novels of this generation." Edmund Fitzgerald

+ Int Bk R p376 My '25 1450w

Reviewed by N. A. Crawford

Int Bk R p101 Ja '26 150w

"'Barren Ground' is a book that gives most furiously to think. In its philosophy of duty, duty to oneself not less than to one's God, it is essentially Scotch, as Scotch as Dorinda's forbears who all came from across the water. From the point of technique it is most beautifully written, the chief characters drawn with untiring skill and the lesser ones sketched in with the swift strokes of an expert. Longer considerably than the average novel, it flows beneath one's eyes with that ease and satisfaction only to be enjoyed in unusually well-done work." A. H. Gibbs

+ Lit R p3 My 16 '25 900w

"This is the best of many excellent books by Ellen Glasgow. I record the statement after a lengthy and reminiscitory appraisal of the list of its fifteen predecessors." J. B. Cabell

+ Nation 120:521 My 6 '25 1500w

"No contemporary American novelist is more intelligent than Ellen Glasgow. If she has latterly been somewhat overlooked in the press of other novelists, she owes it to a fact for which she is not to blame: the fact that early in her career she was popularly assigned to a school of fiction in which she belongs by geography but not by temperament. Even when she has touched the traditional Virginia in her stories, she has touched it, any critical eye should see, with a difference. Leaving others to be nostalgic for the lost cause, she has been the realist, the one important realist, of the new dominion. In particular, she has distanced all her rivals in her portraits of Southern women, who with her assistance have escaped from the sweet shadows thrown over them by chivalry, and have been permitted to mount to something in their own right." Carl Van Doren

+ New Repub 42:271 Ap 29 '25 800w

"As a mirror of the drama of life Miss Glasgow's book is distorted by a lack of that very rudimentary sense of humor which is the saving grace of the treatment of all deeply serious subjects. As a story of the development of a human personality under the stresses of life, 'Barren Ground' carries no conviction of truth or force of inevitability. . . The background of Miss Glasgow's novel is a contribution of real value to the literary exhibition of American social conditions. The value of the story as a story is distinctly less." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p2 Ap 12 '25 1850w

"The book is true to human nature, true to feminine psychology, true to the life of the day as few written records in the whole written record of human life are true. It is profound psychology, done on a big canvas, with infinite loving care of detail, with multitudinous observation of life animate and inanimate, with rare, deliberate, impassioned attentiveness to the changing aspects of nature; a book so full, so substantial that it makes even the better novels of the last ten years look cheap and flimsy." L. C. Willcox

+ N Y Times p25 Ap 26 '25 720w

"It is absurd to think of Miss Glasgow as essentially a writer for the South. . . She treats provincial life from a national point of view; that is, without sentimentality, without prejudice, with sympathy, understanding, passion and poetic insight, yet critically and with a surgical use of satire. . . One doesn't get all of Ellen Glasgow's qualities at their highest in 'Barren Ground,' but it is an excellent example of her talent." S. P. Sherman

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ap 19 '25 2700w

Reviewed by J. W. Crawford

N Y World p4m My 10 '25 40w

"In execution and clearness of rendering this study of life, hardship, and suppressed romance shows the author at her best." R. D. Townsend

+ Outlook 140:68 My 13 '25 170w

"Surely 'Barren Ground' is a great novel—great in austerity, great in art, great in humanity." Archibald Henderson

+ Sat R of Lit 1:907 J1 18 '25 1350w

"Miss Glasgow is stern; she makes no concessions. The result is an unusually impressive and fine book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 J1 9 '25 380w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

GLASS, MONTAGUE MARSDEN. Y'understand. 317p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Heinemann]

25-19525

"For ten years—since the creation of 'Potash and Perlmutter'—Mr. Glass has issued no book. Now comes this collection of short stories, eight of them, made of the familiar and inimitable Yiddish-American dialect and leavened with Mr. Glass's genuine sense of the funny." (N Y World) Contents: Blood is redder than water; Cousins of convenience; They will do it; It's never too late; You can't fool the camera; Never begin with lions; The sixth McNally; Keeping expenses down.

"'Y'Understand' is Mr. Glass' first book in a matter of ten years, and admirers of his earlier works will not find it disappointing. It contains one 'Potash and Perlmutter' story, but that is a good one."

+ Lit R p4 N 21 '25 100w

"It has been so many years since the creator of Abe Potash and Morris Perlmutter has brought out a new book that there will be a doubly warm welcome for this collection of short stories."

+ N Y Times p9 O 11 '25 500w

"There is a notably deft touch to the construction of these stories."

+ N Y World p4m O 4 '25 70w

"This volume of short stories by Montague Glass in his old style suffers by contrast with the more spontaneous wit of Donald Ogden Stewart. There is plenty of verve and cleverness in these stories, but they obstinately remain outmoded."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 120w

"They lose rather than gain by being read consecutively in book form, for after a while the humours of their diction and characterization tend to seem a little mechanical and wearisome, especially when, as is the case in all these stories save one, there is nothing at all arresting or original about their respective plots. The single exception is the tale entitled 'Cousins of Convenience.'"

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p657 O 8 '25 250w

GLENN, CARL. Air brake inspector's handbook; methods of testing the various air brake equipments for the locating of certain disorders. (Railwaymen's handbook ser.) 200p il $2 Simmons-Boardman

625.25 Air brakes

24-15413

"Describes tests, covering all types of equipment in general use. Will be useful to all who operate or repair air-brake equipment."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:297 My '25

GLOAG, JOHN E. Time, taste and furniture. 330p il $5 Stokes [12s 6d G. Richards]

749 Furniture

[25-23378]

Mr Gloag follows the development of British furniture design during the last four centuries, that is, work carried out in the English tradition both in England and the United States. Part one is concerned with the furniture produced from early Tudor times to the decline of taste that took place after 1830. This part is concluded by chapters on the woods used in furniture making and the methods employed by the antique furniture fakers. Part two deals with the furniture produced since the influence of William Morris began to raise standards of taste. Part three is devoted to furnishing as a subject and the use of old and new designs together.

"It is extremely difficult even for the rich to furnish a room so that the artistic and practical desires are gratified. But Mr. Gloag's admirable book, with its photographs and drawings, should make their lot easier. The chapters devoted to the moderns are the best in the book."

+ Nation and Ath 37:604 Ag 15 '25 300w

"We can never have too many sensible books on furniture, and we applaud this author's decision to put in the forefront of his work an example of good design by a living designer instead of flying to the antique."

GLOAG, JOHN E.—Continued

+ Sat R 139:711 Je 27 '25 80w

"His book is an admirable guide to taste in furniture of all periods." W. McCance

+ Spec 135:991 N 28 '25 300w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p787 N 26
'25 120w

GLOVER, CEDRIC HOWARD. Term's music.
(Musician's bookshelf) 176p $2 Dutton [4s 6d
K. Paul]

780 Musicians. Music—Analysis, interpretation, appreciation

Designed as a text book covering a four year course in musical appreciation, the book contains critical studies of twelve great composers:
Handel; Bach; Mozart; Beethoven; Schubert;
Schumann; Brahms; Wagner; Grieg; Moussorg-sky; Dvořák; Debussy. Each study surveys briefly the life of the composer, gives a short analysis of several of his works, and suggests a list of phonograph records for use in familiarizing the pupil with the composer's best work.

"While intended primarily for use in connection with school courses in musical appreciation, Mr. Glover's book will prove of interest and value to older music lovers who feel that their early education has gaps that need filling." H. B.

+ Lit R p10 S 12 '25 120w

"Written at first for use in an English school to supply a much felt need in the course on musical appreciation, this book aims to aid pupils and older individual seekers to more adequate understanding of music and of the pleasure it can afford them."

N Y Times p24 S 27 '25 350w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p226 Mr
26 '25 50w

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY. Paul of Tarsus. 256p $2 Doran [9s Student Christian movement]

225.9 Paul, Saint 25-25018

Lectures given at the University of Chicago in 1920, and at the University of California in 1923 form the basis of this sympathetic exposition of Paul's life and character, his faith in Christ and his interpretation of Christ's message.

"'Paul of Tarsus' is a book which will be,
and deserves to be, widely read." A. F.

+ Nation and Ath 37:548 Ag 1 '25 550w

"Mr. Glover has a wide knowledge of his Mediterranean background as well as of his special subject. He has the skilful hand which out of a phrase, an incident, a turn of syntax even, can make a portrait. And those who accept the view dominant in the Protestant churches that St. Paul discovered the significance of Jesus, will welcome so enthusiastic an exposition of that thesis. But it is a book for admirers rather than for enquirers, and when we read that 'there is a warmth, a colour, a personality in Paul's picture of Christ in contrast with the figure that we see across low and level planes of history' it is time to stop and ask where this declamation is taking us."

+ — New Statesman 26:56 O 24 '25 850w

"Dr. Glover is well known as perhaps the most stimulating writer on Christian origins in this country. He is a popularizer, with abundant learning in the background. This book is written in his American lecture style, which is not his best literary form. But it is full of life and vigour, and it is all the better because Dr.
Glover is a hero-worshipper; he loves and venerate
the subject of his biography."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p528 Ag
13 '25 750w

GLUCK, SINCLAIR. Green blot. 294p $2 Dodd
[7s 6d Mills & B.] 25-18353

"This is a brisk tale, full of mysterious mis-
sives, financial manœuvres, burglaries, murders, love-making, and the full list of excite-ments. O'Malley, a young Irishman, flung by accident into the middle of these goings on, is the hero, and quite a good one. He throws himself into the job with zest, follows up clues, shadows villains, breaks into strange houses, and creeps about in the dark in the orthodox manner. But he does it all in an engaging way, as an Irishman should, and he does not carry a gun or use American slang."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"While we must confess that the identity of the instigator of the evils which fast and furiously follow each other was never in doubt to us, we must also admit that never were Mr.
Gluck's widely recognized and appreciated fertility of imagination, marshalling of thrilling incident and clever dove-tailing of circumstantial evidence more conspicuously witnessed."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 380w

Cleveland p108 N '25

"It's a clever tale well told." C. P. S.

+ Lit R p5 O 17 '25 80w

"He manages expertly that ultimate goal of the mystery spinner, the keeping of his secret."

+ N Y Tribune p12 O 25 '25 150w

"The plot is complicated, but the story is told well enough for its ramifications to be easily followed and is, in short, an unusually good story of its kind."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p546 Ag
20 '25 120w

GLUCK, SINCLAIR. Thieves' honor. 290p $2
Dodd [7s 6d Mills & B.] 25-2966

A mystery story which threads its trail from the suburbs of New York to the Orient. Peter Derringer while driving along a country road spies a man prowling around his neighbor's house. He stops to warn the occupants of possible impending danger, and becomes implicated in a most gruesome murder mystery which eventually sends him to Peking on a dangerous errand. On shipboard he meets the charming Wanda Moore with whom he falls in love, and who in a curious manner becomes involved in the affair with which Peter is concerned. A secret Chinese organization makes several attempts to kill the young American and capture the girl but Peter cleverly outwits them and brings his mission to a triumphant close.

"To those who like a little atmosphere with their detective reading, we heartily recommend this."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 7 '25 380w

Reviewed by H. C. Burr

Lit R p9 F 21 '25 270w

"The tale is an unusually good one of its kind, with plenty of surprises and no more than a reasonable amount of improbability. If you are tired of drab histories of dreary lives and long for 'a rattling good story' you will find a lively and entertaining one in Sinclair
Gluck's ingenious yarn, 'Thieves' Honor.'"

+ N Y Times p17 My 24 '25 450w

Reviewed by Isabel Paterson

N Y Tribune p12 F 8 '25 180w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p614 O
2 '24 100w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

GLUECK, SOL SHELTON. Mental disorder and the criminal law; a study in medico-sociological jurisprudence; with an appendix of state legislation and interpretive decisions.
693p $7 Little

340.6 Insanity—Jurisprudence, Criminal law.
Responsibility, Legal 25-14398

This extensive study is an endeavor to interpret the law of insanity to psychiatrists and social workers and the psychology of mental disorder to lawyers and judges. Dr Glueck outlines criminal procedure and the history of the legal tests of the criminal responsibility of the insane from early times in England to the tests now operative in American court decisions. He then considers mental disease as related to the tests of irresponsibility, describing the various types of mental disorder and the legal significance of each. The appendix contains a compilation of the statutory provisions of the different states concerning the legal treatment of the criminal insane.

"Dr. Glueck's book is certainly one of the most valuable and useful of modern works on this important topic. . . . It is a work to be studied, rather than merely read. If at times it seems a trifle redundant in its discussions, such a method of presentation is undoubtedly good psychology in a textbook. . . . The book is well printed, with excellent typographical composition, and reflects great credit on its publishers, as well as on the author for his efficient arrangement. Dr. William Healy characterized this volume as 'a splendid piece of work which might well become the standard reference book on this subject.'" J. A. Tobey

+ Am J Pub Health 15:1006 N '25 600w

Booklist 22:102 D '25

"Very able and closely reasoned treatise." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 8 '25 850w

GOING, CHARLES BUXTON. David Wilmot, free-soler. 787p il $6 (25s) Appleton

B or 92 Wilmot, David 24-21082

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"No bibliography of sources is given in the book, but the text and the foot-notes indicate that the author has made no use of such valuable works as those of Justin H. Smith, or of many biographies and monographs which deal with the period he has covered. In spite of the defects just noted, the volume is a clearly written and valuable account of the 'Proviso' statesman. It also makes available speeches made by Wilmot which are not easily accessible elsewhere." E. I. McCormac

+ Am Hist R 30:376 Ja '25 620w

"On the whole, the volume is a solid, scholarly presentation of the public life of David Wilmot, but would 'carry' better if compressed into much shorter compass." C: R. Lingley

+ Ann Am Acad 117:298 Ja '25 300w

"The biography of David Wilmot will not appeal to the general public, but it is a valuable and painstaking piece of work." Arthur Gillett

+ Int Bk R p404 My '25 100w

"Let the 'gentle reader' beware of Mr. Going's volume. He will find there no vivid word-painting of a strong chieftain of old. Instead, the man Wilmot is largely swallowed up in the history of the political details of his period. It is not meant to imply however that the author has failed to produce a valuable book. On the contrary, he has carried out a laborious and painstaking research." E. P. Tanner

+ New Repub 42:81 Mr 11 '25 850w

"To historians and to those who find a particular fascination in the political history of this country as it see-sawed into the intricate pattern leading to the crisis of Civil War, this large volume will be of more than passing interest and value; on other shelves it will accumulate dust."

+ N Y Tribune p9 Mr 1 '25 150w

"Mr. Charles Buxton Going does not fulfil the promise of his preface. 'The purpose of this book,' he says, 'is to restore to the canvas of American history the living figure of one of the most intense personalities in the great free-soil struggle which culminated in the Civil War.' But Mr. Going does not present the 'living figure' of his subject. Indeed, he gives us a biography of the Wilmot Proviso. That portion of the narrative which deals with Wilmot's part in the politics of the slavery question is admirably done. One wishes, however, that the author had not concealed his hero so completely in the armor of a warrior battling for a cause." J. A. K.

+ Pol Sci Q 40:325 Je '25 250w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p711 N 6 '24 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:198 Jl '25

GOLDING, LOUIS. Day of atonement. 270p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

25-10148

"It is the story of Leah and Eli, two Russian Jews, and their son Reuben. The first half occurs in Russia, the second half in the North of England; and the whole is admirably set in the framework of a Prologue-Epilogue of which Sicily is the scene. On the twelfth of October, the most important day in the Jewish Calendar, the narrator happens upon one whom he takes to be a Sicilian goatherd. This supposed Sicilian is Reuben, who has turned his back upon the dark gods of his childhood and pledged himself to a kindly paganism. There follows the tale of his ill-fated parents, a tale which, incidentally, affords as fascinating a glimpse into the personal and social life of orthodox Jewry as one is likely to get. Leah, daughter of Serra Golda is wooed by young Eli, a learned student of the scriptures. The community is decimated by a pogrom, and the young couple take refuge in England. Here Eli, finding no market for his learning, becomes a carpenter. Reuben is born, and the three live together very happily, in spite of their poverty. With Eli's conversion to Christianity begins the tragedy that culminates in the apostate's invasion of the synagogue, on the sacred Day of Atonement, to preach Christ."—Sat R

Booklist 22:34 O '25

"The pride of the orthodox Jew in his race, and the greatness to him of the fortress of religion are painted for us, in the story of Eli, with the vividness of thorough knowledge on the author's part, and with the very beautiful language of a writer eloquent through pity for the fallen lot of idealistic Israel." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 29 '25 660w
Cleveland p81 Jl '25

"This book is written from the heart—a stark story of the passionate clash between the Christian and the Jew."

+ Ind 115:24 Jl 4 '25 30w

"The bulk of Day of Atonement is altogether admirable. The sufferings, the mysterious and unexpected beauties, the pungently ironical humors, of Israel in exile are told with complete understanding, from within and from without at once." H. C. Harwood

+ Living Age 326:123 Jl 11 '25 380w (Reprinted from London Outlook)

"Simply as an historian of an English ghetto Mr. Golding shows himself here, as he did in Forward from Babylon, to be unequalled. If we remain unconvinced that he is yet able dramatically to illustrate the full extent of his thought upon a less limited theme, we must admit that his very failures are interesting. He has all the qualities of a first-rate novelist. What he has yet to attain is the technical ability wherewith to put these qualities into perfect balance."

+ Living Age 326:386 Ag 15 '25 210w (Reprinted from Adelphi)

"The story, which is by way of being told to the narrator by the son of Eli and Leah in Sicily, has a sombre strength which absolves the author of the charge of being frivolous. Many of his readers will prefer him in his light vein; but Day of Atonement is his serious contribution to the depiction of the old Jewish belief in all its fidelity and fanaticism."

+ Living Age 326:386 Ag 15 '25 160w (Reprinted from T. P.'s and Cassell's Weekly)

GOLDING, LOUIS—Continued

Nation 121:241 Ag 26 '25 50w

"Mr. Golding's present style is one in which sentimentality cannot be avoided; and in 'Day of Atonement' the more serious the situation the more obvious is the sentimentality. Unfortunately, Mr. Golding attempts very grandiose scenes indeed." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 37:271 My 30 '25 150w

"Unresisting, wordy, over-dreamy perhaps at any given point, the final impression is a solid and a moving one."

+ New Repub 44:52 S 2 '25 160w

"This is in some ways a defective book; but it is precisely the interesting thing about Mr. Golding that his very defects seem important and provocative. His worst work (and here he is very far from being at his worst) seems paradoxically better than the good, plain solidity of the mediocre. And if there is silliness in Day of Atonement, there is also something that at times approaches the terrific and even the sublime." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:552 Ag 29 '25 1050w

"In 'Day of Atonement' the tragedy of the Jew seems to be not what is done to him, terrible though that sometimes is, but what he does to himself. So fundamental an idea has the savor of the universal which lifts this book, excellent in texture, design and technique, above the docile, well-groomed herd of novels which go down each year to feed insatiable oblivion." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p9 My 24 '25 1400w

"More than any book of the Jews I have ever read, and I have read the Old Testament in Hebrew and the Talmud, this novel has given me insight into what it means to be a Jew. I see the spirit which to-day has spread into our universities, into Broadway, into our banks and factories, our newspapers and popular songs, and it makes me understand much and wonder more." Samson Raphaelson

+ N Y Tribune p4 Jl 5 '25 650w

"Mr. Louis Golding's new novel is not only the best that he has given us: it is one of the most satisfying and impressive novels of recent years. Its cumulative effect is so considerable that, having just laid the book down, I find myself singularly reluctant to attempt the prosaic task of criticism." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 139:529 My 16 '25 680w

"When Mr. Golding is intent upon writing well, his style becomes execrable. It is a most cultivated and brilliant style, full of artifice and smooth rhythms. And Mr. Golding is quite discreet in its use; there are no monstrosities with which we can charge him. It is only that he writes, ever so delicately and tactfully, in poetical jargon. There are continual inversions; too many nouns are paired off with a vague, effective, Latin adjective; there is no pedestrianism or health or roughness. The style has descended to him through Walter Pater and Stevenson and Francis Thompson; but it was never with them so perfect and so empty."

— + Spec 134:852 My 23 '25 600w

"Incident follows incident with a sureness and sympathy for which praise is perhaps a trifle irrelevant. 'Day of Atonement' is easily the best of his three novels; its quick sensitive psychology and deep feeling persuade us that Mr. Golding has yet finer work to offer us."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p314 My 7 '25 500w

GOLDMAN, EMMA. My further disillusionment in Russia. 178p $1.50 Doubleday

947 Bolshevism—Russia. Russia—Politics and government 25-26110

Emma Goldman's "My disillusionment in Russia" was published in October, 1923. Not until the book was in circulation did its publishers learn that the last twelve chapters were lacking. They now rectify this error by the publication in a separate volume of the twelve missing chapters. The concluding chapter, the author's Afterword, which she pronounces the most vital part of the book, is a summing up of the reasons why, in her opinion, the conduct of the Russian revolution by the Communists was a failure.

Booklist 21:228 Mr '25

Reviewed by A. M. Nikolaieff
Lit R p16 Ap 4 '25 750w

"Some young and plastic mind, exposed to this book may be more impressed by the Anarchist point of view, ably expressed, than by the denunciation of Bolshevism, stated by repetition. Conservatives, now and then appear in delightfully unexpected positions." Dorothy Brewster

Nation 120:189 F 18 '25 550w

Reviewed by Jerome Davis
New Repub 43:213 Jl 15 '25 60w

Reviewed by J. D. Adams
N Y Times p10 F 1 '25 300w

Reviewed by F. V. Roman
N Y World p5m F 1 '25 500w

Spec 134:288 F 21 '25 340w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p159 Mr 5 '25 300w

GOLDMAN, RAYMOND LESLIE. Stay young. 217p $2 Macmillan

613 Hygiene 25-9764

"Raymond Leslie Goldman, the jacket tells us, is one of that band of militant invalids of whom Helen Keller is the captain. Infantile paralysis was his affliction and he is still lame; but he is now a very different person from the wistful child who once thought longingly how wonderful it would be to be able to walk to the corner. His list of activities would do credit to many an athlete and the unforced jubilation of his book testifies of many battles won. Any one suffering from worry, depression or a general feeling of unsatisfactoriness about life would do well to read and remember."—Lit R

"This is a readable book written in popular magazine style by a layman and for laymen. It is well phrased and appealing." C. E. Turner

+ Am J Pub Health 15:906 O '25 280w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 3 '25 360w

"This is neither a cheer-up book written to order by a professional smilesmith nor a book of technical medical advice given by a doctor. It is just an informal book on how not to have any troubles, by one who knows all about troubles and all about getting rid of them." R. W. T.

+ Lit R p9 S 12 '25 200w

"Mr. Goldman's advice is well calculated to make the reader stop, read and really think about it, for two reasons. One is because he writes engagingly, with humor and a guileful style, and the other is because he has himself fought a long, stiff battle with the forces of bodily destruction and has come out of the struggle triumphant."

+ N Y Times p19 Jl 12 '25 380w

"This is one of the few convincing 'inspirational' books we have ever read, and it wins a high place in our esteem because of its sincerity, simplicity, and complete absence of flatulent, materialistic 'bunk.'"

+ Sat R of Lit 2:93 Ag 29 '25 220w

GOLDING, DOUGLAS. Gone abroad. 254p il $4 Houghton [12s 6d Chapman & H.]

914.5 Balearic islands. Italy—Description and travel [25-15477]

Mr Goldring's is a gay book of travel sketches chiefly in the Balearic isles, on the Ligurian coast, and in the French Riviera, closing with a sketch of Middlesbrough-on-Tees, described as the "most fantastic and inconceivable of townships," and home again to London after long absence. It is the readable kind of travel book, full of the incidents and the human comedies of the road.

"A Stevensonian travel narrative done with a facile touch and displaying a broadness of humor. Mr. Goldring is unfailingly gay, and his leisurely journey through the Balearic Isles, the Alpes Maritimes, and Italy is good material for his wit to work upon."

+ Booklist 22:68 N '25

"Mr. Goldring is an experienced traveler and a sensitive observer; but he imparts to his book the quality of a literary work by including sketches of characters and incidents and, as the occasion permits, speaking his mind or merely talking at random."

+ Bookm 62:219 O '25 120w

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 22 '25 1650w

"Mr. Goldring is agreeably innocent of fine writing or the sentimentality which many travelers find it necessary to exude in print."

+ Ind 115:163 Ag 8 '25 100w

Nation and Ath 36:894 Mr 28 '25 480w

"The book is a puzzling one to assess in a line. Those expecting the more grossly pictorial features of the generality of travel books will be disappointed. On the other hand, 'Gone Abroad' opens up many an unvisited spot, and the impressionistic effect which the author manages to convey is quietly but persistently pleasing."

N Y Times p10 Ag 2 '25 1500w

"Of course you know right away from the title that here is a book of travel which is going to be easy to read. And the volume fulfills the promise of freshness and originality."

Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p3 Ag 2 '25 1150w

Reviewed by W. Johnston

N Y World p7m N 15 '25 250w

"Mr. Goldring's delightful book reminds us of the schoolboy who translated amours de voyage as 'a love of a journey.' That is exactly what it is—gay, high-spirited, full of insight."

+ Sat R 139:307 Mr 21 '25 320w

"Some of his best Stevensonizing was done about Cannes, among the English beachcombers of that much frequented resort. He writes with an alert though somewhat obtusive sense of effect, and of the power of 'touch,' and with an odd waggishness peculiar to him."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:128 S 12 '25 200w

"A pleasant and readable, if not a striking or original, book."

+ Spec 134:415 Mr 14 '25 180w

"It is not the 'guide-book' passages, however well done, that make a book of travel readable. What matters is the description of out-of-the-way humanity and the spirit which animates the writer. On these two counts Mr. Goldring deserves warm praise; his rebellious spirit, now mellowed a little by years, his friendly appreciation of the hospitable and the comic, and his humorous rendering of untoward incidents and unconventional gatherings have contrived between them a highly entertaining book."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p151 Mr 5 '25 1350w

GOLDSMITH, SOPHIE L. Wonder clock plays. 179p $2 (7s 6d) Harper

793.1 Children's plays 25-6909

These plays, adapted from "The wonder clock" by Howard Pyle, are written for production by children from eight to fourteen. One of them calls for an entire cast of boys, and one for an entire cast of girls. There are costume suggestions for each of the plays, and photographs of actual productions which furnish further hints for costume and setting. The plays are illustrated with drawings by Howard Pyle.

Pratt p5 autumn '25

"Mrs. Goldsmith has managed to preserve the spirit and vigor of the old tales in a really remarkable way, without apparently being hampered in the gaining of her dramatic effects."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:387 D 5 '25 350w

"Howard Pyle's Wonder clock stories adapt themselves well to dramatization."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:202 J1 '25

GOLLOMB, JOSEPH. Tuning in at Lincoln high. 255p $1.75 Macmillan

25-18872

Timothy Drew was small for his age. The methods of bullying adopted by Pete Brophy and his sly henchman, Henry Meecher, made Timothy feel still smaller. The bigger boys were the plague of his life in grammar school, and when he found that they were going to Lincoln high school too, he felt he would have to quit. Dr Golden of the high school staff knew all about boys. He got hold of these three fellows, and before they knew how it had happened, they were no longer fighting each other, but were all lined up together, fighting for the school.

"Throws its beam of light far over and above all other school stories of the year. Its theme is compact, well-rounded and carefully knitted together. Yet there is ample elasticity, which gives the book a complete quality." M. G. Bonner

+ Int Bk R p812 N '25 300w

"A book that stands by itself. There are two reasons for this. The first is that it is the only book dealing with city high school life; the second, that it is far more sincere, far less a formula kind of boy's story than any other."

+ N Y World p7m N 8 '25 160w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 100w

GOMPERS, SAMUEL. Seventy years of life and labor; an autobiography. 2v 557;629p $10 Dutton

B or 92 Trade unions

25-5990

More than anything else Samuel Gompers's autobiography is a history of the labor movement in the United States. From boyhood he advocated the rights of labor. He was one of the founders of the American Federation of Labor and its president from 1882 to his death. The autobiography is a record of the rise and progress of trade unionism in America and of the steps by which labor has become a force in politics and national affairs. An appendix written by Florence Calvert Thorne, his editorial assistant on the American Federationist, sketches the last year of his life, after the manuscript of his autobiography had been placed in the hands of his publishers.

"All who wish to understand the working forces in American political and social life during the last half-century cannot afford to neglect this book. It is a moving chronicle of great events told by a forceful personality who helped to shape them." P. H. Douglas

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:642 Ag '25 700w

Reviewed by C. R. Woodruff

Ann Am Acad 119:148 My '25 600w

"Of course there are many books dealing with the American Labor movement of the past half-century, but few of them are biographical, and none is so conspicuous as this autobiography for bringing into the light of direct illumination an array of persons and conditions hardly to be encountered elsewhere on any such terms of intimacy. . . But why will not autobiographers—and biographers—learn that, unless their art be superhuman, an unbroken narrative of nearly 1200 large pages is more likely to obscure than to clarify a single life?" M. A. DeW. Howe

+ — Atlantic's Bookshelf My '25 650w

Booklist 21:300 My '25

"It would be hard to find a better record of the molding of rugged character through difficult and violent circumstance than is set down in this book. Or a more striking record of the transmission of personal character and ideals to the structure and temper of an institution."

GOMPERS, SAMUEL—Continued
C: R. Walker

+ Bookm 61:354 My '25 1150w

"A readable and important book, well indexed, admirably equipped for reference, and illustrated with portraits." F. L. Bullard

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 7 '25 4350w

Reviewed by C: R. Walker
Ind 114:449 Ap 18 '25 1050w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly
Int Bk R p340 Ap '25 1950w

"Samuel Gompers' fame is so secure and towering a monument that it cannot be demolished merely by a book; but it can be nicked and dented. This autobiography nicks and dents it." C. W. Thompson

— + Lit R p6 My 29 '25 1850w

"For the good of his own memory it would have been far better if Samuel Gompers had never written these twelve hundred pages. In the twilight of his life and his epoch his social astigmatism blinded him almost completely. It was then that his Mephisto whispered to him: Let's write an autobiography! He did not even bother to mock old Sam between the lines. He censored the first volume so pitilessly that only here and there the idealism of young Gompers managed to break through. And the second volume the devil wrote all by himself." B: Stolberg

— Nation 121:119 Jl 22 '25 650w

Nation and Ath 38:188 O 31 '25 950w

Reviewed by G: Soule
New Repub 42:5 Ap 15 '25 2900w

"Those who enjoy delicate shades of personality, richness of thought and feeling, the discriminating touch, will find Mr Gompers' autobiography stale and tasteless fare indeed. He was far too robust a man to go in for such refinement. But those whose meat and drink is action and affairs will find a feast prepared for them." Evans Clark

N Y Times p Mr 15 '25 2200w

"Such a panorama of American social and economic life as is presented in the autobiography of Samuel Gompers is rare in biographical writing. The crowded incidents of seventy years of continuous activity in the American labor movement are in these two volumes marshalled with a wealth of detail and personal reminiscence, penetrating comment and explanation that is bound to clarify much that has been puzzling in Mr. Gompers's thought and action." Leo Wolman

+ N Y Tribune p2 Mr 8 '25 1000w

"His autobiography, extremely valuable in providing a splendidly clear picture of the conditions under which the modern American labor movement was born and nurtured in the early fighting years, must be a disappointment to those who knew of his earlier plans to 'open up the books' when he wrote it." J: L. Leary, Jr.

+ — N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 1150w

"It betrays a sad lack of editorial care. The material is haphazardly arranged; dates are missing where their need is most vital, and the misspelling and mishandling of personal names, both in the text and in the index, rises to the rank of an atrocity. To one who, like the reviewer, has been in or near or otherwise acquainted with most of what has happened in this field since the middle eighties this work cannot prove else than a disappointment."

— Outlook 139:587 Ap 15 '25 450w

R of Rs 71:446 Ap '25 250w

"Perhaps the hard struggle of labor has called for objective, unreflective personalities, for people who could go full steam ahead as if they did not have any emotions to be nursed, any doubts and misgivings to be coddled. Such a temperament may make for effective labor leadership, but it does not make for a penetrating and satisfying autobiography." W. D. Lane

— + Sat R of Lit 1:835 Je 20 '25 1600w

"Takes its place at once as a work indispensable to an understanding of the development of wage earners' organization in this country."

+ Springfield Republican p7a Mr 22 '25, 1400w

"The whole narrative is full of life and unflagging vigour. But the multiplicity of persons and proceedings described is rather bewildering. He was evidently conscious that this might be so, for he says apologetically that his readers may tire of the details; but what the reader finds tiring is not so much the details themselves as the confused way in which they are often presented, without the order which a more practised hand could have easily introduced. But the book is full of interest, human, social and historical."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p663 O 15 '25 1500w

"Not a great book, though undeniably a valuable contribution to the fast growing literature of American labor history." Max Danish

+ — World Tomorrow 8:253 Ag '25 600w

GOMPERTZ, MARTIN LOUIS ALAN (GANDPAT, pseud.), Snow rubies. 288p $2 Houghton [7s 6d W. Blackwood]

25-19429

The story of an adventurous expedition into the snow-capped hills north of Kashmir, in which a party of four hardy friends, three men and a girl, set out from India to find the source of the mysterious snow rubies. Following a doubtful clue, they make the perilous journey northward, only to find the secret of the treasure jealously guarded by a band of hostile cave men.

Outlook 141:610 D 16 '25 100w

"The writing is puerile, awkwardly pretentious, and—especially unforgivable in an adventure novel—dull."

— Sat R of Lit 2:322 N 21 '25 220w

"The elasticity of the English language is considerable, but it is doubtful whether it can be said to emerge with credit from a whole novel written in slang. The author would doubtless say that this is just how such a man as his hero—the novel is in the first person—writes and talks. That is no doubt true; but the present writer confesses that the effect of page after page of the jocularities of everyday speech is to produce a sense of boredom with what, otherwise told, might have been an exciting story."

— + Spec 135:614 O 10 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 3 '25 230w

GOOCH, GEORGE PEABODY. Germany. (Modern world; a survey of historical forces) 360p $3 Scribner [15s Benn]

943 Germany—History [25-9811]

Mr H. A. L. Fisher in his Introduction to this book, written by one of the most distinguished of living historians, says "what can honestly be said for the Germans and their policies during the last half-century is set down in this volume with a measure of sympathy and understanding which probably only an inhabitant of our cool, self-critical, and judicial island could achieve within so short a distance of the fiery ordeal." Mr Gooch sketches Germany's rapid growth in prosperity and military power, the waging of the war and the founding of the Republic, the Treaty of Versailles and its execution and the reparations question. In his final chapters he takes up the youth movement and other intellectual forces now working in defeated Germany and discusses hopes for the future.

Booklist 22:26 O '25

Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 1100w

"His survey is illuminating, complete, and valuable."

+ Ind 114:704 Je 20 '25 250w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield
Int Bk R p596 Ag '25 300w

"This book is an excellent piece of inspired special pleading but it is not history. It proves too much, although it never protests. The style is easy, strong and at times powerful." C. M. Morrison

+ — Lit R p8 J1 11 '25 400w

Reviewed by G. R. S. Taylor

Living Age 325:341 My 9 '25 180w

"No other volume on post-war Germany is likely to give the reader so fair or so full an insight into the forces at work there. If it has a fault, it is that Mr. Gooch's generosity of temper sometimes tempts him into excessive eulogy." H. J. Laski

+ — Nation 121:sup432 O 14 '25 360w

"No better pen than that of Dr. Gooch could have been chosen to write the history of Germany for the plain man to read. He selects the salient facts with that sureness of touch that is only found with encyclopædic knowledge; and at a time when writers on European history can almost all be classified as pro-French or pro-German, his impartiality is admirable."

+ — Nation and Ath 37:81 Ap 18 '25 650w

"Mr. Gooch boasts excellent credentials as a writer on modern Europe and more particularly on Germany. With this approach he was admirably qualified to give a sympathetic account of a Germany which with the revolution of 1918 threw off a reactionary yoke in order to gather under a standard which Mr. Gooch might almost look upon as his personal banner. In his final section the author passes from politics into the realm of social and intellectual movements and here we have without doubt the most valuable contribution of his book. Whoever is interested in the many new impulses astir in Germany will find an intelligent report on them condensed into a few chapters." Ferdinand Schevill

+ New Repub 43:299 Ag 5 '25 900w

Reviewed by Simeon Strunsky

N Y Times p1 Je 21 '25 1950w

"To the best of my knowledge no other work furnishes an estimate of Germany comparable in accuracy and rationality with this book by Professor Gooch. As a fellow historian I reserve the right to pick flaws, but doing so implies no lack of faith in most of the author's findings." W: R. Shepherd

+ N Y Tribune p5 J1 26 '25 650w

Reviewed by Allan Nevins

N Y World p4m My 24 '25 200w

"The writer seems to have achieved a success in fairness and in clear statement. It is a valuable book."

+ Outlook 141:128 S 23 '25 100w

"Dr. Gooch is exceptionally well informed about German politics and German thought, and he writes so dispassionately that he may shock some English readers. It is all the more noteworthy, therefore, that he takes a gloomy view of the prospects of the German Republic."

+ Spec 134:600 Ap 11 '25 330w

Reviewed by P. U. Kellogg

Survey 55:251 N 15 '25 200w

"Mr. Gooch, as one would expect, writes throughout not only with knowledge but with sympathy; he takes a more lenient view of Germany before the war than would most Englishmen. Of Germany since the war he writes with guarded sympathy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p231 Ap 2 '25 1500w

GOODMAN, PAUL. Moses Montefiore. 255p il $1.25 Jewish pub. [7s 6d Routledge]

B or 92 Montefiore, Sir Moses Haim, bart. 25-9725

"'Moses Montefiore' is a chapter of the history of the Jews in modern times. While naturally it deals with the life of Sir Moses Montefiore, 'the outstanding Jewish figure of a great part of the nineteenth century,' it inevitably depicts the Jewish strivings and tendencies of the period of Jewish emancipation in England."—Bookm

"The book is an unusually interesting historical survey of a brilliant and useful life, and of the times and people of his period." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 62:xxviii S '25 100w

"Mr. Goodman has evidently performed a labor of love. But an ample recital, a fuller biography of the noble Jew has yet to be written, and it is remarkable that forty years should have been allowed to pass without the publication of a more ambitious volume than that dedicated to his memory by Mr. Goodman." A. R. Ross

+ — N Y Times p5 J1 5 '25 900w

"A brief and attractive volume written in an appealing popular style. If the work is sometimes characterized by a certain partiality to its subject, it is nevertheless accurate and informative, the picturesque figure of the portly patriarch emerging life-like and serene." B. G. Richards

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 11 '25 400w

GOODRICH, EDWIN STEPHEN. Living organisms; an account of their origin and evolution. 200p il $2 Oxford [6s Milford]

575 Evolution. Heredity 25-11017

"The opening chapters deal with the elementary principles of biophysics and biochemistry, and with the nature of life, reproduction and death. The remainder of the book is taken up with an exposition of facts and theories of evolution, and the author has here given a very clear account of the present state of knowledge of heredity and allied problems, and of the latest advances which have been made in this field, both from the experimental and cytological aspects."—Nature

Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 200w

"Prof. Goodrich has written a wholly excellent introduction to biology."

+ Nature 116:130 J1 25 '25 750w

"This small book is one of the very best manuals of orthodox biology that I know of; and it will prove of exceptional value to the general reader who desires to gain a clear idea of modern views on the nature of life, the processes of heredity, and the foundations of evolutionary theory. It is especially notable for its avoidance of minor detail, and its luminous presentation of intelligible evidence bearing on such general questions as Darwinism and heredity, Mendelism, heritable and non-heritable modifications, and the genealogy of intelligence." H. M. Parsley

+ N Y Tribune p16 Ap 5 '25 520w

"It is no easy task to condense into just two hundred small pages the controverted and complicated theories that make up modern biology. If Mr. Goodrich has been able to do this in a manner that will satisfy those who have already some knowledge of the subject, and are prepared to read and reread with concentration, let him be content. But, unless the general reader of to-day be one who can take in his stride such phrases as 'motile processes,' 'binary fission,' and 'parthenogenetic reproduction,' this book is not for him."

The Times [London] Lit Sup p458 J1 9 '25 1000w

GOODRICH-FREER, A. M. (MRS H. H. SPOER). Things seen in Constantinople. 158p il $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Seeley, Service]

$14.96 Constantinople

This little book with its excellent photographic illustrations describes Constantinople and its environs and, in the words of the subtitle, "its history, mosques, and the life and ways of its people." The author, who held a high post as a relief worker in Armenia in 1918-19, has written several other travel books about the Near East.

"We cannot recommend this little book to anyone who is not in a position to leave at once for Constantinople—it will only make him feel miserable. Both the pictures and the letter-press are calculated to stir up in the most stolid reader an irresistible longing to see Stamboul for himself, at once. The writer has an infectious admiration for Constantinople, and its people, but she is by no means uncritical, and the book is made more valuable and interesting than the ordinary topographical book by the comments on Turkish life at the present moment of a discerning observer."

GOODRICH-FREER, A. M.—Continued

+ New Statesman 26:58 O 24 '25 350w
Spring'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 120w

"Her descriptions of Constantinople street-life and customs are most attractive, as also is her capable summary of the divergent Points of View."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p679 O 15 '25 350w

GOODSPEED, EDGAR JOHNSON. Making of the English New Testament. 129p $1.50 Univ. of Chicago press [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

225.5 Bible. New Testament—History, Literature 25-8076

Dr Goodspeed traces the progress of the English New Testament from its beginning in the hands of William Tyndale, four hundred years ago, until today. He shows how new discoveries and scientific advances have affected its English form and how successive revisions and translations have brought the book nearer to the modern reader.

Booklist 21:325 Je '25

"The merit of Professor Goodspeed's workmanship may be taken for granted. He deals with the historical and evolutionary episodes of English New Testament development in his illuminating and scholarly way, making of it a most fascinating study." W. J. C.

+ Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 120w

Cleveland p92 S '25

Reviewed by J. F. Newton

Int Bk R p308 Ap '25 700w

J Religion 5:331 My '25 20w

"A story that is in all its details interesting, while parts of it are thrilling. No scholar is better fitted to tell the story than Professor Goodspeed, one of the foremost New Testament scholars of the world, the master of a clear and simple English style and himself the translator of one of the latest English versions of the New Testament." G. A. Barton

+ Lit R p14 My 2 '25 350w

Reviewed by H. B. Fuller

New Repub 43:353 Ag 19 '25 400w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p9 Ag 2 '25 1000w

"It may be doubted whether, on the whole and in the large, the ideas of the New Testament are much better conveyed by a modern translation than by the Authorized Version. For literary and liturgical purposes the King James Version has a value which modern translations inevitably lack. The comparison is open to criticism, but shall we turn the prayer book into the vernacular of the market place?" W. W. Fenn

N Y Tribune p1 Ag 2 '25 1350w

Pratt p7 autumn '25

"Professor Goodspeed has given what was much needed, a readable and accurate statement of the history of the New Testament in English." Kirsopp Lake

+ Sat R of Lit 2:256 O 31 '25 480w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p446 J1 2 '25 460w

Wis Lib Bul 21:139 My '25

GOODSPEED, EDGAR JOHNSON. Things seen and heard. 226p $2 Univ. of Chicago press 814 25-19454

"My academic orbit," says Professor Goodspeed, Greek scholar and translator of the New Testament, "is not too rigid to permit an occasional deviation into the outer world." His worldly excursions reflect an adventurous and flexible mind and a mellow and ironic humor. Contents: Things seen and heard; The life of adventure; Do one and one make two? The house of the mind; The spirits of our sires; The new barbarism; Democracy delved into; Arctic village life; A hilltop college; Think, Abib! The self-made article; Organized curiosity; The week-ender; Persons and things.

Cleveland p121 D '25

"Volume of delightful essays that reflect a charming personality. Six of the papers appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. No one who enjoys the personal essay should miss them."

+ Ind 115:657 D 5 '25 80w

"Dr. Goodspeed quotes with approval a remark once let fall by Erasmus: 'It is amusing to deal with trifles in such a way as to show one's self anything but a trifer.' It is more than amusing, this happy faculty. As in this collection of essays, wherein Dr. Goodspeed justifies his quotation, it may be edifying as well, thought-provoking, stimulative of sound thinking." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 D 12 '25 300w

"Deviations that are, like these, accompanied by genial human and keen, tolerant observation, awake in the reader who delights in the personal essay a gratitude to Greek scholarship for not keeping the professor too straitly confined."

+ N Y Tribune p14 N 8 '25 380w

GOODSPEED, THOMAS WAKEFIELD. Story of the University of Chicago, 1890-1925. 244p il $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]

378.7 Chicago university 25-7241

A much more detailed history of the University of Chicago by Dr Goodspeed was published in 1916. This smaller volume is a comprehensive, tho brief, history, bringing the record down to the present time and including an account of the extensive program of advance upon which the university has just entered.

Booklist 21:327 Je '25

"With an easy flow of incident and a well-balanced handling of the essential features of university policy, Doctor Goodspeed tells the story of a great university's development. You have an undercurrent of pride all the while you read this book, a sort of subconscious feeling of elation that your profession in America and in the part of the country where European influence is in a degree remote has achieved this signal success with so many new and fruitful ideas." W. McAndrew

+ Educ R 70:166 O '25 650w

"Dr. Goodspeed is well qualified for the task, since he has been connected for almost sixty-five years, first with the old University of Chicago, then with the steps that led to the founding of the present institution and after its establishment with its Board of Trustees until the present time. He is the author also of a detailed history of the university published almost ten years ago. This new volume is much smaller and narrates its story more rapidly and briefly, but is, he says, comprehensive and authoritative."

+ N Y Times p21 Mr 22 '25 330w

Sat R of Lit 1:636 Mr 28 '25 330w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p482 J1 16 '25 120w

GORDON, CHARLES WILLIAM. See Connor, R., pseud.

GORDON, GEORGE ANGIER. My education and religion. 352p $4 Houghton B or 92 25-18281

Dr Gordon has filled the pastorate of the Old South church, Boston, since 1884. His informal autobiography is a record of the most vitally significant influences in his life—education and religion—of the growth of his mind and spirit as they were formed by his Scottish heredity and upbringing, his teachers, his marriage and home, his friendships and his reading. His book is enriched with humor and wisdom and is lightened by many anecdotes.

Bookm 62:xli N '25 150w

"The book is almost unique in character; often so intimate and colloquial as to be in effect conversation, and then rising to heights of contemplation or insight which reveal the unremitting student and responsive mind." F. G. Peabody

+ N Y Tribune p18 N 1 '25 900w

"The book is delightful reading, being full of anecdote and Scots humor, and free from undue egotism."

+ Outlook 141:452 N 18 '25 280w

"A work whose sagely and humanely reflective character will procure for it a genuinely educative and religious influence, will nevertheless be chiefly prized as the full-flavored story of a romantic career."

+ Springfield Republican p7a S 20 '25 1600w

GORDON, JAN, and GORDON, CORA JOSEPHINE (MRS JAN GORDON). "Two vagabonds in a French village; a portrait group in prose. 242p il $5 McBride [12s 6d Lane] 914.4 France—Description and travel. France—Social life and customs

The two artists who vagabonded thru Spain and the Balkans now record a summer's holiday in a little village of northern Languedoc. Janac consists of one long street winding to the castle and but for the anachronism of its railway, might belong to the fifteenth century. Text and illustrations provide an animated and detailed picture of peasant life and types.

Nation and Ath 38:215 N 7 '25 50w

"They tell us that they bid adieu to Janac 'probably for ever.' If they are wise it will certainly be for ever. Their portrait may be truthful, but a want of candour is not its most distinguishing feature, and one takes leave to doubt whether, after the publication of this book, their next stay in Janac would be as pleasant as their first. Not that anything here is set down in malice; but the portraits are painted with a frankness which their subjects might be slow to appreciate. . . . The authors seldom generalise, but when they do their judgment is as sound as their portraiture. The sum of their work in pen, paint and pencil is a very human picture of provincial France."

+ New Statesman 26:364 Ja 2 '26 700w

"Each book that these two artist-vagabonds give us seems in turn better than the last, written with a surer art, a more sympathetic vision, a solid contribution to the friendliness of Europe."

+ Sat R 140:408 O 10 '25 250w

"They are both excellent artists, and their illustrations add charm and value to their book. Mrs. Gordon, in brilliant impressionist style, has painted and drawn Janac from every possible angle, till we feel that we know the place as well as our native village. Brush, pencil, and pen have combined to create a very remarkable study."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p652 O 8 '25 450w

GORDON, JAN, and GORDON, CORA JOSEPHINE (MRS JAN GORDON). Two vagabonds in the Balkans. 236p il $5 McBride [12s 6d Lane]

914.96 Balkan Peninsula—Description and travel. Balkan Peninsula—Social life and customs 25-7876

These two artist vagabonds travelled thru Yugoslavia as thru Spain, willingly putting up with every kind of discomfort for the sake of getting at the true native flavor of the country. They lived the simple life in any paintable village, roughed it on farms and in unsavory lodgings and by so doing gained an unusual intimacy with the people and native life. The book is illustrated by the authors, in color and black and white.

Booklist 21:335 Je '25

"One could wish for no better hint of land and people than this book affords. And as for the pictures, both in color and in black and white, they are admirable."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 22 '25 300w

Cleveland p100 S '25

"The writers are observant and tell interestingly of what they saw, but before they start out to hunt for material for another volume of vagabondage let us hope they will eschew the futuristic tinge of the present volume." A. C. Bierce

+ Lit R p14 Mr 21 '25 650w

"A vividly amusing and informative book."

+ New Statesman 24:664 Mr 14 '25 380w

"The book is overcrowded with incidents, but out of this clutter of trivial matter there emerges a satisfactory document. Illustrations from sketches and paintings made by the authors enliven the text with a suggestion of sardonic grotesquery." Janet Ramsey

+ N Y Tribune p9 My 3 '25 360w

"Their descriptions are full of a lively personality usually absent from travel books. It is altogether a charming record."

+ N Y World p6m Mr 22 '25 50w

Outlook 139:424 Mr 18 '25 100w

"Though politics are not an interest of our authors, politicians may learn something from them of the actual state of affairs in Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Montenegro as they affect the lives of the peasants there, and everyone will be interested in the mixture of homely philosophy and keen observation which is revealed alike in the lively sketches of Mrs. Gordon and the able writing of her husband."

+ Sat R 139:332 Mr 28 '25 320w

"If the authors err in overmuch detail, the incidents of travelling arrangements and the like, they handle their matter well serving the whole with a fine and delicate flavor."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:620 Mr 21 '25 120w

"An excellent book of travels."

+ Spec 134:160 Ja 31 '25 30w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p82 F 5 '25 950w

GORELL, RONALD GORELL BARNES, 3d baron. Spirit of happiness. 138p postpaid from London $1.50 Wilson, H.W. [7s 6d Unwin]

821

[25-15084]

Lord Gorell's long poem traces the soul of man in its pursuit of happiness from the playfulness of childhood and the romance of youth thru love, marriage and parenthood till the spirit finds fulfilment and content in service for others.

Reviewed by Robert Graves

Nation and Ath 37:142 My 2 '25 100w

"We hope that Lord Gorell will throw off his cumbersome equipment and take to battle order. It would be a pity if so true a talent and feeling for poetry and so devoted an attention to the highest meaning of life continued to be hampered by what we must think a bad tradition of poetic diction."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p396 Je 11 '25 850w

GORGAS, MARIE DOUGHTY (MRS WILLIAM CRAWFORD GORGAS), and HENDRICK, BURTON JESSE. William Crawford Gorgas; his life and work. 359p il $5 Doubleday

B or 92 Gorgas, William Crawford 24-32079

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

GORGAS, MARIE D.—Continued

"We commend the authors in that they do not mince words, but give the history clearly. . . . The book is well gotten up and beautifully printed, but contains an unfortunate number of inexcusable blunders in proper names." M. P. Ravenel

+ — Am J Pub Health 15:548 Je '25 1000w
Booklist 21:231 Mr '25

"The biographers have related a significant bit of history and they have portrayed William Crawford Gorgas with great wholeness and frankness." C. H. Gaines

+ No Am 221:575 Mr '25 480w

R of Rs 71:221 F '25 260w

"This eloquent volume, which is both a tribute and a history, it seems to us fulfils the most exacting standards for the perfect biography of a great man." E. C. Beckwith

+ Sat R of Lit 2:106 S 5 '25 480w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVICH PYESHKOFF). Story of a novel, and other stories; auth. tr. [from the Russian] by Marie Zakrevsky. 273p $2.50 Dial press

25-21418

A collection of five short stories. "The Story of a Novel," deals with one of those women the author describes as 'always expecting something,' whose eyes seem to say, 'What next?' and who leave the husbands they love a note saying, 'Forgive me, Paul, but I cannot live with you any longer.' The three stories that follow—'An Incident,' 'The Rehearsal' and 'The Hermit'—show varying sides of temperament and human nature. The final story of the book, 'A Sky-Blue Life,' is concerned with a weak-natured young romantic who desires to lead the 'sky-blue life' of a Paris he has idealized and who is driven mad by the way an officious, half-mad carpenter insists on dominating and interfering with his existence."—N Y Times

Booklist 22:117 D '25

"Quite the best in the book (there are five stories) is the first, from which the volume receives its title. The others are interesting in various ways. It is 'The Story of a Novel,' however, that one will read with the most enjoyment. We recommend this volume to all students of continental short-stories and to all who have read 'Creatures Who Once Were Men.' To these it will show how indifferent a great novelist may be at times." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ag 29 '25 400w

"No word written by Maxim Gorky could ever be either dull, unimpassioned, or lacking in poetry. If there yet remains any one of literary pretensions who is not acquainted with the work of this proud and winnowed mendicant of deepest sorrow, we advise him to read immediately this last example of his mature years." Alyse Gregory

+ Dial 79:348 O '25 700w

"The Story of a Novel' is whimsical and fantastic. It is pleasant, for once, to surprise Gorky in a grove playing Pan's reeds." Harry Salpeter

+ Int Bk R p723 O '25 960w

"The short stories of Gorky's which take their name from the first and most fantastic one in this volume are not up to his best by any means. The Story of a Novel is more of an experiment than an accomplishment. Most of the others, with the exception of A Sky-Blue World, are rather thin." G. Smedly

New Repub 44:52 S 2 '25 200w

"One reads these stories of Maxim Gorky, which Marie Zakrevsky has put into admirable English, with great interest in their technique as well as their contents, for their method of presentation is extraordinarily striking." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p9 Je 14 '25 1300w

"The whole treatment of narrative material is foreign to Anglo-Saxon judgment; it is not strange that these stories seem out of focus, and a little fumbled. There comes, however, with these qualities, a decided sense of novelty. Although in no way enthralling, the collection will give pleasure to those readers whose tastes are thoroughly cosmopolitan."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:127 S 12 '25 180w

GORMAN, HERBERT S. Gold by gold. 380p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

25-4605

Karl Nevins, a striving young poet in the New England town of Springvale, has a book of poems accepted by a New York publisher. Eager to make a name for himself he leaves his cramped environment for the Latin quarter of New York city where he plunges into an orgy of dissipation which soon leaves him a physical and financial bankrupt. Only when he has reached a state of utter depravation does he realize the loss of his manhood, and he gravely turns toward Springvale to take up life anew.

Boston Transcript p6 F 1 '25 980w

"There is an exceptional intensity in the book, but it is not always focused, and the creative vigour which would have taken this novel out of the field of imitation is lacking."

+ — Dial 79:432 N '25 260w

"Strong modern stuff—crude, raw life in Greenwich Village and elsewhere, and a sensitive near poet who goes from bad to worse. This hectic, sombre book smacks more of Russia than New York. It is unpleasant, but effective in spots."

+ — Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 40w

"Mr. Gorman shows that he can write good English, and can produce clean, straightforward narrative, but much of this book is painfully spotted with outbursts of grotesque 'expressionism,' long passages of sound and fury signifying very little, if anything; sometimes to the point of utter incoherence. And he is capable of such verbal absurdities as 'pontify,' 'adjustions,' and 'religiasts.' It is as if the 'pale green' spirit of his poet had influenced him to occasional verbal debaucheries. The criticism is worth making, because he also shows that he ought to know better." H. L. P.

+ — Int Bk R p282 Mr '25 550w

"One is not surprised to find his novel written with genuine brilliance, a sure sense of character that brings most of his people vividly to life, and a firm grasp of what for want of a better designation is called the modern manner. It is impressionistic even expressionistic at times; at others it edges toward the conventional, although the style remains notably effective. . . . He is quite frank about many things—this, too, in what we call for want of a better phrase, the modern manner. He does not blink the details of Karl's relations with women, and the incidental profanity is not at all the sort that is indicated by a D with three hyphens following." Herschel Brickell

+ Lit R p3 Ja 24 '25 950w

"Mr. Gorman is enormously clever and often dazzling, but he has not yet found his own style."

+ — Nation 121:146 Jl 29 '25 160w

"Mr. Gorman has straitened his story within a special purpose of his own; reluctant as one is to say it, this is a novel with a thesis. Yet no clear answer appears; the abstract puzzle remains, even after one has closed the book, partly overshadowing its human values. The truth is that Gold by Gold is packed with values of many sorts; Mr. Gorman has a superabundance of intuitions, ideas, feelings, judgments, inquiries; his short and restless book is a horn of plenty." C. M. Rourke

+ — New Repub 44:26 Ag 26 '25 820w

"A very perfunctory analysis of 'Gold by Gold' as distilled by James Joyce's biographer, Herbert Gorman will serve to identify many of the characteristics of the Dublin writer. The erotic content, on the whole, is as high or higher, and its solution in philosophic thought, as was to be expected, somewhat less. . . . In a sense, 'Gold by Gold' might be termed a 'Sensual Education.'"

+ — N Y Times p8 F 1 '25 1400w

"Mr. Gorman's book is the first I have read which presages the influence James Joyce will have upon fiction. One may damn 'Ulysses' if he will, just as Butler and Dosztoieffsky have been damned. But the writers will read him, and will follow him, as Mr. Gorman has done in parts of 'Gold by Gold.' In some of his exemplary pieces, the reader will be frustrated in an attempt to understand the writer's purpose. But in others, the marvelous felicity of phrase and sunburst of style, detached and shining, will strike hammer-fashion upon the mind." Laurence Stallings
+ — N Y World p6m F 15 '25 1100w

"There is an immense gusto, a real zest for the rich flavors of life, in this first novel of Herbert Gorman's. It perhaps exists most of all for its dramatic presentations of adventurous and unusual moments, moods, and personalities, which are exploited in a variety of ways, —often robustly comic, sometimes melodramatic, sometimes whimsical,—but always enthusiastically. It is in these accounts of detached moments that the book rises to its highest peaks of interest." Floyd Dell
+ Sat R of Lit 1:643 Ap 4 '25 500w

"Mr. Gorman exhibits genuine skill in the choice of words to picture a mood or a scene. There are pages of artful verbal patterns and there are pages where a more natural and more fluent mode gives a freer and pleasanter impression. Mr. Gorman, one feels, has been more concerned with these brilliant pencilings than he has with the objective portrayal of character. For this reason the literary styles and the human materials fall something short of coherence and significance."
+ — Spring'd Republican p7a F 15 '25 800w

GOSSE, SIR EDMUND WILLIAM. Silhouettes.
413p $2.75 Scribner [8s 6d Heinemann]

824 Literature

Brief essays which range over a wide field of criticism and biography. Partial contents: The last of the pagans [Claudian]; Lyly and his "Euphuism"; Camoens; Cary's early French poets; Wycherley. An apologist for Arcadia; The portrait of Zélide; Nature in poetry; A dog with a bad name; The fable of the bees; Andrew Lang; Arthur O'Shaughnessy; Austin Dobson; W. D. Howells; Mrs Humphry Ward; Lafcadio Hearn; Shelley's widow; The sorrows of Ovid; Louis Couperus; Vauban; The nerves of France; American folk-song; The brother of the Brontës; Leslie Stephen; Théodore de Banville; Herman Melville; The Savile club.

Boston Transcript p8 N 14 '25 780w

"Sir Edmund's criticism very frequently leads him to disagree with the author of a book, but his points are made with such reasonableness and humor that one is often almost unconsciously converted to his view, without giving sufficient weight to the other side. He is certainly on a very high level of criticism when dealing with biography, and for this alone the book is well worth reading."

+ Ind 115:743 D 26 '25 100w

Reviewed by Robert Jordan

Nation and Ath 38:20 O 3 '25 380w

"Such papers as these are good, pleasant, Sunday afternoon reading, but they have no lasting significance. Considering the immense variety of these studies and the speed with which they must have been written, we find remarkably few errors, and on those few it would be hypercritical to lay stress. The style is almost invariably clear, accurate and yet easy—the prose of a true man of letters."

+ — New Statesman 25:734 O 10 '25 600w

"Mr. Gosse, with limited space at his command, draws a hasty picture that loses none of its authenticity through its brevity. His silhouettes are merely undetailed; all the same they are excellent introductions and reminders." H. S. Gorman

+ — N Y Times p7 N 22 '25 700w

"Exceedingly fortunate in its title. His essays are easy reading, and often look as if they had been written with great ease, as perhaps they may have been. But only a very unusual talent for seizing the essential and passing over what is less characteristic could have enabled him to produce them."

+ Sat R 140:264 S 5 '25 150w

"It is far too late in the day to describe the main characteristics of Sir Edmund Gosse's criticism. But in this latest volume there are certain papers which, though they cannot be said to reveal any hitherto unrecognized qualities of their author's, exhibit some of his virtues perhaps more clearly than earlier work has done. The extraordinary range of his reading has, of course, long been acknowledged, but it may not always have been so evident as it is in some of these pages how this reading enables him to perceive the secret influences on great writers who have yielded to suggestion from inferior or even quite ephemeral contemporaries."

+ Sat R 140:350 S 26 '25 280w

"A judicious selection from his little weekly sermons in the Sunday Times makes pleasant reading. Yet Sir Edmund's style is curiously heavy and sometimes strangely mixed in its metaphors."

+ — Spec 135:502 S 26 '25 160w

Spring'd Republican p12 N 20 '25 700w

"Sir Edmund Gosse seems doubtful how to name essays in literature. He calls them 'silhouettes' on his title-page and 'little sermons' in his preface. They are not silhouettes, for they have, besides their precise and delicate grace, a charming play of light and colour. They are not sermons, for (not counting one or two wags of a rebuking forefinger at the more outrageous of our youngsters) they preach no doctrine and threaten no penalties. Sir Edmund, turned journalist, proves himself a good journalist. He not only keeps his eye on the object; he chooses the very object, be it book or anniversary, about which a conscientious journalist would be expected to write."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p653 O 8 '25 900w

GOTCH, JOHN ALFRED. Old English houses.
215p il $7 Dutton [16s Methuen]

728 Architecture, Domestic. Architecture—England

A simple and readable account of the growth of English domestic architecture from medieval to Georgian times, showing how the developing social customs and the changing ideal of comfort were expressed in the construction of the houses. The book is devoted mainly to the great old houses of England, there being very few of the smaller houses of the peasantry of early times still extant. There are forty-eight illustrations and seven plans.

"He keeps the story related to contemporary society and literature and his style has the blessed quality of being alive."

+ Spec 135:992 N 28 '25 680w

"Mr. Gotch sails with all his old skill over the surface of his subject, with a great deal of pleasant gossip about the house life of our predecessors. But it reads as if it had been rather lightly put together for the benefit of the amateur. Unlike his earlier books, it is neither precise enough for the student nor sufficiently illustrated. The subject is too big to be adequately dealt with in two hundred pages, and the fifty-seven illustrations seem scarcely to touch the fringes of the matter."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p787 N 26 '25 750w

GOULD, GERALD. English novel of today. 224p
$2 Dial press [7s 6d J. Castle]

823 English fiction—History and criticism
[25-8662]

"The author confines himself, with few exceptions, to those authors whose work is later than 1900, and he chooses authors and books for their value as types, his purpose being to trace tendencies and estimate influences. The book is based on a series of articles contributed to the Observer and includes also matter published in the New Statesman and the Saturday Review.

GOULD, GERALD—Continued

—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:109 D '25

Boston Transcript p2 N 22 '24 320w

"All in all, this is a book for the earnest student of the novel of the British Isles—as well as one for the more or less casual reader. Let us hope that some one will feel the urge to straighten out and classify the muddle of the American novel in a similarly worthy book."
F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 16 '25 580w

"A remarkably sane, convincing comment on contemporary English fiction."

+ Ind 115:229 Ag 22 '25 70w

"The book contains little, indeed, but Mr. Gould's personal preferences; it hardly ever rises above the level of feeling into thought. It is not criticism, for it fulfils no general function. It does not show the novelist the outline of his present problem as it exists: it simply disproves of the problem. And for approval and disapproval the proper language is rhetoric, and Mr. Gould's book is mainly rhetoric." Edwin Muir

— Nation and Ath 36:116 O 18 '24 650w

"Mr. Gould's recognitions are sound. He has the fundamental quality of a critic in knowing what is important. In the heterogeneous mass of material which he surveys he has solved with fine authority the problem of what to choose and what to omit." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 41:97 D 17 '24 700w

"Mr. Gould is, undoubtedly, finely qualified. If there is a writer in England who has read more novels, and holds so large a percentage of them in the critical memory, I do not know who he may be. Moreover, the readers of reviews delight in Mr. Gould: in the quality of his mind, the grace and point of his pen, the masterly ease of his movement through the jungle, his witty handling of the mother tongue. These things it is a pleasure to say. Having said them, one may proceed to quarrel heartily with Mr. Gould's judgments." S. K. R.

+ — New Statesman 24:52 O 18 '24 1100w

"His book is an intelligent criticism of our age and not only of English novels, it is full of sound maxims of literary criticism, and it is presented so clearly, in a style often epigrammatic, that he who thinks at all may read." J: R. Ellington

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 23 '25 1200w

"Mr. Gould writes with intelligence, and the reasons he gives for his judgments are usually more interesting than the judgments themselves." Malcolm Cowley

+ N Y Tribune p8 N 15 '25 300w

"Some, indeed most, of the novels which Mr. Gould has read must have been as dull as may be, but his wit is beyond their dismal infection; bound on the Ixion's wheel of the constant critic he none the less persuades us that this instrument is a merry-go-round." Ivor Brown

+ Sat R 138:358 O 11 '24 980w

"It was terrible to see how much modern fiction he had read and to some degree remembered. He could hardly be expected to keep a due proportion when he is so deep in the wood; and he seemed to recollect the latest books best. But the book makes a very good guide for the library subscriber."

+ — Spec 133:510 O 11 '24 150w

"Excellent book—a book, by the way, which the student of fiction should read for its tolerant and helpful criticism. He will be a full man indeed who ploughs through every novel mentioned in these incomplete lists. It may be, however, that they will help those readers who are often in doubt as to 'what to get from the library.'"

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 15 '25 600w
The Times [London] Lit Sup p633 O 9 '24 60w

GOURLEY, JOSEPH HARVEY. Orchard management. (Harper's handbooks) 247p il $2 Harper

634 Fruit culture

25-4754

A practical handbook on fruit growing which tells how to select a location, what kind of soil is best, what varieties of fruit trees to choose, how to plant them and how to treat the soil, also about pruning, thinning, spraying and pollinating. There are chapters on reclaiming the old orchard, on harvesting, packing and storage of fruit and on the hazards of the weather.

Booklist 21:365 J1 '25

"The would-be fruit grower, whether an amateur or of old standing, and whether the possessor of an orchard, large or small, should by all means read this little book. He will find in it much of value and much of inspiration."

L. Hill

+ Lit R p16 My 9 '25 300w

"Contains authoritative and at the same time intelligible answers to most of the problems connected with fruit growing."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Mr 15 '25 100w

Outlook 140:268 Je 17 '25 20w

Wis Lib Bul 21:228 O '25

GOWING, SIDNEY FLOYD. Sea Lavender. 288p $2 Holt [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

25-17701

A gay little tale of a charming lady who befriends an escaping convict on the beach of an English seaside resort and is forthwith thrust into the rôle of manager of a troupe of strolling players, herself playing Pierrette to her Pierrots.

"As a light novel Mr. Gowing's 'Sea Lavender' is a distinct success. Since it is romantic, we cannot quarrel with its unreality. That is a minor matter, however, for the characters are carefully individualized and the plot is never conventional. An air of abandon flows over and around the situations, and the joyousness, the gaiety are spontaneous and unforced. The novel is ideal reading for one who wishes recreation, and seeks escapes from the humdrum of every day living."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 280w

"Light in vein, gay, humorous, and in its best moments, highly entertaining."

+ N Y Times p17 D 20 '25 600w

"A lightly romantic tale. Amusing, but not well planned."

+ Outlook 141:288 O 21 '25 120w

Sat R 140:215 Ag 22 '25 150w

"The tale is so well written and so satisfactorily spiced as to make the reader resent its slight lapses into sentimentality, and to regret the absence of that something of wit or sophistication that can make even the lightest of literary trifles important."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:244 O 24 '25 200w

"A series of mildly entertaining incidents."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p570 S 3 '25 160w

GRAEME, BRUCE. Blackshirt. 290p $2 Dodd
25-12174

"Blackshirt," an audacious criminal, is no other than a highly esteemed and well-known author, Richard Verrell, who in his youth was taught the art of crime, but who in recent years has played the game for the love of it. His adventures and escapades are heightened by an unknown voice on the phone. The owner of the voice, who seems to know all about Richard Verrell and Blackshirt, interferes with his plans and dictates new ones. Several times this mysterious woman, heavily veiled, saves Blackshirt from the clutches of the law. But in a final scene when Blackshirt thinks he has saved the reputation of Verrell, the novelist, he comes face to face with the lady of the phone—and everything is explained.

Boston Transcript p6 J1 8 '25 220w

"Mr. Graeme knows his business and never stops very long to explain things. His idea is quick action, climax smashing in on climax, and in a way, he justifies his handling of the ancient theme." H. S. G.

+ Int Bk R p682 S '25 520w

"Mr. Graeme, when he conceived the character of Blackshirt, must have had in mind an ideal combination of Arsene Lupin and Raffles, for the character bears resemblance to both these members of the super-criminal clan. Mr. Graeme, however, is not so able a writer as either Horne or Le Blanc. His novel is written in slovenly fashion."

— N Y Times p13 J1 5 '25 220w

"'Blackshirt' is another of those mystery tales, rather more entertaining than expert."

N Y Tribune p8 Ag 9 '25 200w

Reviewed by J. S. Griffith

N Y World p3m Ag 9 '25 120w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p466 J1 9 '25 150w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. Dividing line of Europe (Eng title Russia in division). 309p $2 Appleton 914.7 Baltic states. Bolshevism. United Socialist soviet republics 25-18883

From the frontier of Bolshevism, the border states of Finland, Esthonia, Lithuania, Poland and Bessarabia, sometimes called the "wall of republics," Mr Graham surveys Russia and Europe. He tells what he saw in these new states and explains the influences at work in them. To his chapters on the Baltic States are added some conversations with Russian émigrés in Paris—Kuprin, Bunin, Remizof and Merezhkovsky—and an account of the Alliance of socialist soviet republics. His hatred of Bolshevism is summed up in his concluding chapter.

Booklist 22:155 Ja '26

"Mr. Graham is well fitted for the task of investigator and interpreter. He has lived much of his life in Russia as well as in these newer countries. He speaks their language—or at least Russian, German and others in general use—knows their customs and their lives. . . The book is both readable and informative, a not too common union." S. L. Rich

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 17 '25 1450w

Reviewed by A. M. Nikolaieff

Lit R p4 D 5 '25 550w

"He has some sensible and some amusing observations to make occasionally, but in general he lets his Anti-Bolshevik prejudices run away with him, and he becomes as dreary as a leading article in the Daily Telegraph."

— + New Statesman 25:238 Je 6 '25 280w

"His new book on Russia discloses in the author a real knowledge of that country, of its history, language and literature." A. I. Nazarov

+ N Y Times p10 D 27 '25 1400w

Reviewed by T. J. C. Martyn

N Y Tribune p14 N 29 '25 360w

R of Rs 72:664 D '25 160w

"Mr. Graham has been kept out of Russia by the English and the Russian governments alike, because he is one of the few men who would understand what they were seeing. His book is a living proof of this."

Sat R 140:76 J1 18 '25 220w

"Picturesque and informing essays."

+ Spec 135:340 Ag 29 '25 320w

GRANDGENT, CHARLES HALL. Getting a laugh, and other essays. 218p $2 Harvard univ. press [10s Milford]

814

24-25132

"Professor Grandgent, a well-known American scholar and Dantist, here carries on in seven essays the literary tradition of Cambridge (Mass.). But, in the words of the publisher's note, he 'throws aside the academic gown,' revealing himself in the ordinary garb of humanity as a talker at large on such subjects as 'The Language Beautiful,' 'Toussier et Cracher.'"—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"The book is well worth reading. A rare humor runs through all its pages, a lightness that makes his essays delightful." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 1 '24 600w

"Professor Grandgent can write about Dante with a sympathetic understanding and a charm hard to match. When he tries the informal essay, however, the breath of the classroom hangs over him still." J. T. Shipley

+ — Lit R p15 N 15 '24 320w

Reviewed by Mary Ross

Nation 120:633 Je 3 '25 350w

"A Professor with a sense of humour and that gift of style which belongs to the trained expositor makes excellent company. When he has travelled and been, as he deserves, lucky in casual encounters with amusing people, he can talk as long as he pleases. Such discursive talk with much good sense Prof. Grandgent supplies in his essays."

+ New Statesman 24:636 Mr 7 '25 320w

"It is one of those rare books that move the reader to an amiably controversial mood, for the sake of stimulating and prolonging the conversation, as it were, while to turn a page and stumble upon the author guilty of some unimportant little slip brings a sense of almost unholy joy." A. B. Maurice

+ N Y Times p7 N 30 '24 680w

St Louis p408 N '25

"They have all the charm of casual conversation with a remarkably genial and humorous gentleman, who has travelled widely and read widely, and observed all things with shrewdness."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:585 Mr 7 '25 120w

"Very discursive and amusing essays but his very wide erudition gives them ballast, and he shows a most unexpected talent for meeting strange adventures."

+ Spec 134:48 Ja 10 '25 140w

"Prof Grandgent comes near to filling the role of satirist. There is fresh insight in many of his observations, though he may permit himself some exaggeration in their expression."

+ — Springfield Republican p10 Ja 2 '25 1000w

"We recognize his faculty for talk at large and at length on lighter subjects: but we cannot honestly say that we are ever much impressed by its wit or its originality."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p106 F 12 '25 120w

GRANT, DOUGLAS, pseud. See Ostrander, I. E.

GRANT, JESSE ROOT, and GRANGER, HENRY FRANCIS. In the days of my father, General Grant. 329p $3.50 Harper

B or 92 Grant, Ulysses Simpson 25-23322

Thruout this book of intimate and loving reminiscence Gen. Grant is "father" and the army is "father's army." His son would have the world know the man he knew. Born in 1858, Jesse Grant's first recollections are of the Civil war and of sharing his father's headquarters at Vicksburg. Later he was in the party which made the famous trip around the world.

"We cannot get a complete picture of the personal side of Grant if it closes before the heavy-hearted soldier went to Vanderbilt for help to save the firm of which he was a silent and blameless partner. But there is much here that is provocative and interesting. True, it is not told with much distinction. Reminiscences filtered through listeners to readers, always lose somewhat of spontaneity. It is so here." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 14 '25 560w

Ind 115:652 D 5 '25 100w

"The author has told his story with good taste, with restraint and with regard for its GRANT, J. R. and GRANGER, H: F.—Cont. historical value. In this last respect it is important."

+ N Y Times p5 D 13 '25 380w

"With those reminiscences, as with all that comes from an immediate member of a family, we have to allow for the too great nearness and consequent lack of perspective. Wives and children in some respects know a great man better than any one outside can know him. But there are certain aspects of his less intimate character that are quite obvious to strangers and that his home connections know little about. Mr. Grant's testimony, to be made complete, would have to be enlarged and corrected by that of persons who were less naturally and properly influenced by personal affection. On the other hand, there is a freshness about these filial recollections which no mere formal record could possibly yield." Gamaliel Bradford

+ — N Y Tribune p5 N 1 '25 1000w

"Engaging but exceedingly sketchy."

+ — Outlook 142:32 Ja 6 '26 160w

"A most readable book of reminiscence."

+ R of Rs 72:556 N '25 80w

"This volume might be described as bedtime reading; entertaining throughout, but not too heavy for the mind seeking repose."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:331 D 5 '25 300w

"It is heartening to get a fresh portrait of him from a new angle and see him as his young son saw him."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 D 9 '25 550w

GRANT, ROBERT. Bishop's granddaughter. 298p $2 Scribner

25-5850

"The Bishop's Granddaughter" is a satire on marriage and divorce, as viewed by a venerable English Bishop who comes to America to christen his great-grandchild. On shipboard he meets a group of interesting people whose views on divorce seem to him startling. A persuasive editor of a woman's magazine succeeds in extracting from him a promise to write an article on the need of a uniform marriage and divorce law—a promise which makes his conscience rather uneasy. But his trouble had only begun. In the home of his charming granddaughter Angelica he hears the subject of divorce discussed with astonishing freedom. Unknown to him the god-mother of his great-grandson is securing her divorce, and Angelica herself tells him she is not so very happy with Willard! The bewildered Bishop's reaction to this distressing state of affairs is expressed in his article on "The Holiness of Marriage" for which he is handsomely remunerated.

Booklist 21:383 J1 '25

"One cannot be frank and say that this novel is on a par with Judge Grant's very best work. It is too contemplative, too introspective, it lacks developments through moving events. But none the less it contains some of the author's exceedingly indulgent and at the same time keen and shrewdly humorous understandings of human foibles and his absolute appreciation of the American scene. It is written with great insight and with sound ability. It is worth reading by those who covet these things." S. L. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Mr 18 '25 880w

Cleveland p37 Ap '25

Ind 114:359 Mr 28 '25 40w

"The Bishop's Granddaughter" has the merits, as well as the hallmarks, of its genre. It neither sprawls nor raves, but does what it sets out to do, in detached and finished style." Stella Heilbrunn

+ Int Bk R p546 J1 '25 220w

Reviewed by Helen Wallerstein

Lit R p12 Ap 4 '25 470w

"Judge Grant has written an entertaining study of what might be called the 'seamy side' of divorce, as against the 'seamy side,' and enriched it with comment from some interesting angles."

+ N Y Times p8 Mr 22 '25 1000w

"His satire is the mildest of the mild, the gentlest of the gentle. It is almost Macaulay's 'smooth and shining river,' flowing on and on. And the smile with which it was written does beget a smile from the reader. The institution of divorce has nothing to fear from this sally against it."

+ N Y Tribune p11 Mr 29 '25 150w

N Y World p7m Ap 19 '25 130w

Outlook 140:32 My 6 '25 100w

Reviewed by Edna Kenton

Sat R of Lit 1:771 My 23 '25 600w

"A pleasantly-phrased and ingratiating example of social observation."

+ Springf'd Republican p7a Ap 26 '25 870w

"The humor is heavy and the caricatures of American types lead one to attach a British origin to the author, although Who's Who tells us he was born in Boston." G. H.

— Survey 54:311 Je 1 '25 160w

Wis Lib Bul 21:143 My '25

GRANT WATSON, ELLIOT LOVEGOOD. Contracting circle. 317p $2.50 Boni & Liveright 25-17063

Early in his marriage Martin O'Brian finds his love for the bush at variance with his love for his wife. He is lured by the land, at one with it, content. It is different with Maggie. Being English and not land bred, she longs for the town and contact with her kind. Husband and wife strive mutually to come to a closer understanding, only to retreat baffled. Their horizon draws about them in an ever contracting circle. Held by their love and its demands, yet separated by an innate secret antagonism, each yields to the wishes of the other, for a time, struggling against bitterness. At the very last comes surrender—and peace. The bush claims them both.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Bookm 62:215 O '25 80w

"The logic of Mr. Watson's story is unerring; its fatality is such as would inevitably come to a man of his hero's temperament, and to a woman like Maggie O'Brian. Its conclusion may not easily be foreseen, but once approached by the novelist and disclosed to the reader, there seems to be no other possible end to their lives. As a chronicle of events it is notable, as a story of the development of two human souls it is no less effective, but its principal merit lies in the skill with which the two are combined." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 29 '25 1700w

New Repub 44:211 O 14 '25 80w

"Grant Watson's emotional logic is inexorable, almost terrifying. Yet the story of Maggie and Martin conveys a deep satisfaction of beauty and wonder and awe." J. Crawford

+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 30 '25 600w

"In spite of several dramatic episodes, the trend of the story is cluttered with meaningless detail, its purposes are lost in a maze of subordinate motives. Even the author's torrid sincerity in the writing cannot sweep one through such cactuses unscratched." Leonard Cline

— N Y Tribune p10 S 13 '25 560w

Reviewed by R. D. Townsend

Outlook 141:98 S 16 '25 120w

GRAS, NORMAN SCOTT BRIEN. History of agriculture in Europe and America. 444p $3.50 F. S. Crofts & co., 201 W. 13th st., N.Y.

630.9 Agriculture—History. Agriculture—Europe. Agriculture—United States

25-10393

"The purpose of this study is 'to describe for general and collegiate use some of the more important developments in the history of rural life in Europe and in America. It aims at both historical and genetic treatment; that is, a description of the phenomena and a statement of the general evolutionary changes. The book falls into three divisions. Part I traces the history of agricultural development from its early stages to the Peasant Revolts; Part II deals with the rise of the metropolitan and national economy in England and tells the story of the agricultural revolution in England and France; Part III is given over to summary of the development of agriculture in America."—Lit R

"In point of view and general content, this volume is distinctly different from anything now available and makes the volume a most useful addition to the literature in this field, while for courses in the history of agriculture which pretend to any breadth it may well prove indispensable." C. W. Wright

+ Am Econ R 15:745 D '25 620w

"Agricultural history is always an interesting subject; the author's style and treatment make it fascinating, without sacrificing scholarship. This book is a product of library scholarship at its best. Its weaknesses, which are of a minor sort, grow out of a lack of first-hand knowledge of agriculture as it is at the present time." T. N. Carver

+ — Am Hist R 31:293 Ja '26 850w

"All interested in that contribution of the soil to human needs without which we should have no civilization—and their name in college and out of it is legion—will be indebted to Professor Gras for this richly freighted and attractively written story of agriculture from its beginnings." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 J1 18 '25 700w

"Its treatment of medieval agriculture in the large, especially the highly complex problem of enclosures and the numerous peasant revolts, is the most illuminating and accurate that has yet appeared. The work suffers, however, from one important fault. The author does not know from personal experience either farming or the farmer." N. A. Crawford

+ — Int Bk R p26 D '25 120w

"Those of us who are acquainted with Dr. Gras' former work on the rise of the English corn market and with his introduction to economic history will not be disappointed with the present volume. The work is that of a leading scholar and the presentation of the subject matter is excellent." Herman Silverman

+ Lit R p5 O 10 '25 160w

"Mr. Gras is a sound economist and his understanding of the development of national economic policies as related to agriculture is detailed and accurate. Few scholars anywhere have a better grasp than he of the inclosure problem. The chief deficiency of Mr. Gras is his lack of a rural point of view." N. A. Crawford

+ — Nation 121:708 D 16 '25 250w

"Mr. Gras does not attempt to give in detail all of the things which may be discovered in a history of agriculture, but he does describe most interestingly the important developments in rural life in Europe and in America. Probably the most interesting section is that devoted to later agriculture in Europe." Bristow Adams

+ N Y Tribune p8 O 11 '25 500w

"Errors do not detract seriously from the substantial value of the work as a whole. They suggest, however, a deficiency in the author's point of view. He lacks human, firsthand knowledge of farming and the farmer. Perhaps this is too much to expect in a textbook, a pioneer textbook at any rate. Sometime, however, some one will take the valuable data amassed by Professor Gras and others and will make farming and the farmer, whether of yesterday or today, genuinely articulate." N. A. Crawford

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:6 Ag 1 '25 1100w

GRAVES, ROBERT. My head! my head! 141p $2 Knopf [5s Secker]

"Mr. Graves has attempted an imaginative amplification of the meagre record of Elisha and the Shunammite woman's son, contained in the Book of Kings; while in the form of a series of conversations between the prophet and the woman, who is represented as being well educated for her time, he offers us also his own explanation of another Biblical problem that has long puzzled him—namely, what made it necessary for Moses to die on Mount Nebo, and what form his death took."—Spec

Boston Transcript p6 S 2 '25 220w

"Mr. Graves manages his Biblical narrative style adroitly, and entirely without offence on grounds of taste; but it can scarcely pass the ordeal of an involuntary collation with the original. Perhaps, indeed, no modern narrative could, for it was the racial passion of Israel as a nation which gave its force to the original, and that, naturally, can never be recaptured. But one is surprised that with his fine poetic instinct Mr. Graves should have chosen an impossible theme." Edwin Muir

+ — Nation and Ath 37:372 Je 20 '25 300w

"Here and there the satire is not broad based enough to retain its appeal, and the zest of the book falters a little. 'Her eyelid,' as Mr. Graves says of his heroine, 'winked so that she knew that it was true.' If the reader's eyelid is not kept winking all the time it is because Mr. Graves occasionally makes rather heavy weather in proving his case, instead of keeping to the safer course of assuming it proved. But it winks most of the time, for which the owner of the eyelid will be grateful to Mr. Graves."

+ — New Statesman 25:54 O 24 '25 450w

"The History of Elisha and the Shunammite Woman is the kind of thing that must be done superlatively well if it is to be done at all. Ingenuity and good prose are not enough. Mr. Graves's little book is full of clever and delightful touches, but when the end is reached one is dismally conscious that it has not been quite worth while." Gerald Bullett

+ — Sat R 140:15 J1 4 '25 320w

"As a romancer Mr. Graves is acceptable enough. As a theorist, however, he has embarked upon stormy seas with too frail a craft. Does he really imagine, for example, that he has 'faced squarely' the question of miracles, which he partly whittles down by rationalistic explanations, and partly supports by his own not very plausible ideas on magic? This compromise may satisfy Mr. Graves himself. But it is not likely to convince many of his readers."

+ — Spec 135:340 Ag 29 '25 220w

"The story of Elisha is on the level of personal relationships, and, as Mr. Graves tells it, in a very simple prose which owes nothing to archaic or other mannerisms, is a dramatic idyll seen with freshness and humour. We may hope that Mr. Graves will develop this side of his gift, for he has the natural ease of the instinctive teller of tales."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 J1 9 '25 700w

GRAY, CECIL. Survey of contemporary music. 262p $2.50 Oxford [7s 6d Milford]

780.9 Music—History and criticism. Musicians 25-4291

"Mr. Gray devotes separate chapters of his book to twelve composers, ranging from Richard Strauss to Bernard van Dieren. In a chapter of 'minor' composers he touches on Malipiero, Casella, Pizzetti, Dukas and the Parisian Group of Six."—N Y Tribune

Booklist 21:368 J1 '25

"Mr. Gray is something of a smart Aleck in his poorer moments: he must make his point, if he has to stretch truth, courtesy, and his argument to do it; but, on the other hand, he has fresh, untrammelled opinions, and uncommon trenchancy in setting them before us. His attack on certain decadent features of modernism is much more ferocious than Mr. Dyson's, much less prudently qualified; but for that very reason it is more invigorating. He cannot always make us agree with him, but on every page he forces us to think for ourselves." D. G. Mason

GRAY, CECIL—Continued

+ — Nation 120:695 Je 17 '25 330w

Reviewed by Pitts Sanborn

N Y Tribune p16 My 3 '25 360w

"As we read him we like the manner less and less: there is too much bruising for bruising's sake; it would have been possible to say crueler things with a civiler tongue. Yet in so far as the matter of it is right—and that is not seldom—we read on, as we continue to read a novel under the visitation of a toothache. For we certainly are interested to know how a man arrives at his conclusions for whom Delius, Schönberg, Bartok and Mr. van Dieren are the heroes, and Strauss, Elgar, Ravel, Scriabine and Stravinsky the minor characters, and the rest of the world supers, and who can tell us a good deal we did not know about Sibelius and Busoni. . . We should have welcomed more light than Mr. Gray actually gives us, though we gratefully acknowledge that such light as he does give is brilliant."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p727 N 13
24 900w

GRAY, CHARLES WRIGHT, comp. Sporting spirit; an anthology. 319p $2 Holt

Short stories—Collections 25-9512

"Seventeen stories concerning sports which run alphabetically from automobile racing to track." (Bookm) Contents: Too much speed, by B. Morgan; Mister Conley, by C. E. Van Loan; Grandson, by E. R. Silvers; Two stones with one bird, by H. C. Witwer, Highboy rings down the curtain, by G. A. Chamberlain; The captain, by W. A. Wolff; By-me-by-tarpon, by Z. Grey; Goliath, by D. Burnet; Out of the bunker, by F. Quimet; Soft ice, by R. H. Barbour; The Christmas handicap, by G. Beaumont; The men who climbed, by M. L. C. Pickthall; The one-goal man, by C. N. Buck; His father's son, by C. W. Gray; Dick takes the chair, by W. T. Tilden, 2d; The man on the mark, by C. W. Paddock; Champions all, by R. Connell.

Booklist 22:34 O '25

Reviewed by T. R. Coward

Bookm 61:706 Ag '25 100w

"In spite of its few weak spots, 'The Sporting Spirit' should appeal to every sportsman, because the spirit of competition is preeminent, and the atmosphere of gridiron, track, and locker-room is strong. Devotees of automobile racing, baseball, basketball, boxing, tandem coaching, crew, fishing, football, golf, hockey, horse racing, mountaineering, polo, swimming, tennis and track will all find their interests glorified here, and will reopen the book many times after it has first been closed." W. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '25 450w

Cleveland p84 Jl '25

N Y Tribune p10 Je 14 '25 180w

"A representative lot, but of no particular literary craftsmanship."

Outlook 142:74 Ja 13 '26 250w

"'The Sporting Spirit' is a collection of easily read and amiable short stories which ought to flex the reminiscent biceps of the tired business man and add one more item to the reading list of the insatiable youth. The surprising thing is that Mr. Gray didn't take advantage of the opportunities which present themselves even in this consciously restricted area of fiction."

+ — Sat R of Lit 2:72 Ag 22 '25 200w

GRAY CHARLES WRIGHT, ed. "Dawgs!" an anthology of stories about them. 342p $2.50 Holt

Dogs—Legends and stories 25-18715

The compiler has chosen these stories for their sincerity of feeling as well as for their high literary quality. Each of the fifteen authors represented is a genuine lover of dogs; each of the stories portrays with sympathy, and sometimes with humor, the strong attachment that exists between man and his dog and between dog and his man. Contents: As a dog should, by C. Alexander; Being a public character, by Don Marquis; Bulldog, by Max Brand; Fox terrier or something, by Booth Tarkington; The grudge, by A. P. Terhune; Justice in the painted hills, by Alexander Hull; Memoirs of a yellow dog, by O. Henry; Old Duke, by Arthur Train; Pair of lovers, by Elsie Singmaster; Rex, by D. H. Lawrence; Shag of the packs, by Edison Marshall; Such as walk in darkness, by S. H. Adams; The soul of Caliban, by Emma-Lindsay Squier; Triangle, by Donn Byrne; White Monarch and the gas-house pup, by R. G. Kirk; Bibliography.

"The outstanding merit of this anthology is that it has been compiled with excellent regard for proportion—it contains just the right amounts of humor, pathos, seriousness, and frivolity."

+ Booklist 22:162 Ja '26

"Every boy who has a dog—and that vast army of unfortunates whose parents do not allow dogs—should be given this book. They will love it, for the soul of dogdom has been etched herein in all its varying moods. 'Dawgs!' is a book worth owning—but we are willing to wager that it will be borrowed by the first boy of any age who casts his eye upon it. And who can blame him?"

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '25 280w

N Y Tribune p9 N 15 '25 150w

"There are fifteen stories and a bibliography of dog literature in the book, and any one who has ever been loved heroically or humorously, or simply, by a dog must enjoy them."

+ Outlook 141:527 D 2 '25 280w

Sat R of Lit 2:301 N 14 '25 180w

GRAY, JAMES. Pencil'd frown. 297p $2 Scribner

25-17419

Timothy was dramatic critic for the Indian City Leader. And a fair poseur. He pictured himself "the most distinguished critic America has yet produced." Anxiety for the rôle penciled a slight frown upon his smooth broad brow. It lent him, Timothy thought, sophistication in his gentle dalliance with Marion and in the less adroit affair with Birdie. Then abruptly came Timothy's tumble. The city editor precipitated the rapid descent from leading critic to least of cub reporters. Arrived at the bottom, Timothy grinned boyishly, buoyantly, as he remarked to Sidney, the one steadfast reality in the midst of chicaneries, "Now there's no way to go but up." In the surge of relief from the necessity of further pose, the penciled frown took flight.

"Mr. Gray is a harsh disciplinarian but his methods are successful, and the Timothy who comes out in the end—minus the frown—is himself a thoroughly likable and humble and promising young specimen. The process is slightly gruelling—even for a spectator—but the end justifies the means."

+ — Boston Transcript p3 S 12 '25 300w

"Mr. Gray has written a most amusing book about the adventures of a young, a very young dramatic critic."

+ Ind 115:396 O 3 '25 120w

Lit R p17 D 5 '25 100w

"A concoction of mildly clever chatter, without characters, and all the more annoying because of the scattered evidence of intelligence on the author's part. Bubbles cheerfully in the juice of its own juvenile smartness."

— + New Repub 44:184 O 7 '25 160w

"'The Pencil'd Frown' is found to be sloppily written, vague, unimpressive, cheaply smart."

— N Y Times p16 D 27 '25 580w

"The story is outwardly simple, and with Mr. Gray's incomplete treatment, rather slight. The dialogue is the best part of the book. It is not a book—it is a good outline."

+ — N Y Tribune p18 D 6 '25 450w

N Y World p4m S 6 '25 60w

"Mr. Gray tells an interesting story, and tells it with a strong touch of humor. His characters are drawn in clean-cut fashion, and are true to the life they represent. He has here shown keen powers of analysis and observation."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:228 O 17 '25 250w

GRAY, LEWIS CECIL. Introduction to agricultural economics. (Social science textbooks) 556p il $2.40 Macmillan

631.1 Agriculture—Economic aspects 24-4602

"Mr. Gray defines agricultural economics and its relation to economics in general, and goes on to the treatment of farm management, land tenure, capital and credits, population, farm labor, and methods of marketing farm products. Marketing processes are described for specific crops as a setting for the discussion of value and price—presumably the vital subjects of economics. The subject is closed with a treatment of cooperative associations."—Harvard Business R

Harvard Business R 3:253 Ja '25 120w

"A textbook of unusual merit and interest."

A. S. Tostlebe

+ Hist Outlook 16:182 Ap '25 300w

"The diagrams are excellent; particular praise must be given to the maps. Dr. Gray's work is admirably produced, and its moderate bulk is disproportionate to the number of its pages." J. A. Venn

+ Nature 115:220 F 14 '25 180w

GRAYSON, DAVID, pseud. See Baker, R. S.

GREAVES, RICHARD HENRY, and WRIGHTON, HAROLD. Practical microscopical metallography. 125p il $5 Van Nostrand [16s Chapman & H.]

669 Metallography [25-9698]

"Deals with the structure of the important industrial metals and alloys, describing the structural changes obtained by different conditions of treatment, and discusses mechanical properties and manufacturing applications. The chief attention is given to iron and steel. Illustrated by numerous photomicrographs."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:429 Jl '25

GREELY, ADOLPHUS WASHINGTON. Handbook of Alaska; its resources, products, and attractions in 1924. 330p il $3.50 (15s) Scribner 917.98 Alaska 25-9722

A new edition of Gen. Greely's indispensable reference book, practically re-written and presenting Alaska as it is today. New chapters treat such subjects as fur farming, fur seals, reindeer, forests, volcanoes and transportation, and changing conditions in the coal and oil lands and in gold mining are set forth.

"Gen. Greely has collected and embodied in this complete survey every vital influence and condition which it is necessary for the student, tourist and those interested in Alaska's commercial future to know. It is an accurate and reliable guide and reference book as well as one extremely interesting for general reading, and it contains concise and valuable descriptions of the Territory's geography, climate, industries, agriculture and minerals, with a view of its economic and social life."

+ N Y Times p15 S 6 '25 700w

"Though this is frankly a book of information, often statistical, it is written in an interesting manner." Barrett Willoughby

+ N Y Tribune p9 Je 14 '25 400w

Outlook 140:269 Je 17 '25 20w

"The book is authoritative in every respect. A valuable feature of the volume is the illustration, which consists mainly of reproductions of photographs made by the various bureaus of our national government."

+ R of Rs 71:670 Je '25 150w

"This book was reliable and useful as a compendium of facts in its first edition. It has been thoroughly revised and expanded to cover Alaskan conditions up to 1924, and is now the best available handbook for those who wish essential information concisely put."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:782 My 23 '25 80w

Wis Lib Bul 21:230 O '25

GREEN, ALICE SOPHIA AMELIA (STOP-FORD) (MRS JOHN RICHARD GREEN). History of the Irish state to 1014. 437p $4.50 (12s 6d) Macmillan

941.5 Ireland—History 25-19068

"Mrs. Green has here given us a history of the Irish people from their earliest beginnings to the fatal day on which the High King Brian Boru, 'Octavian Augustus of the Gaels,' fell at the battle of Clontarf. . . The most original and valuable chapters in the book are those which describe the social ranks and the legal code which prevailed in early Ireland. . . After the chapters which deal with the evidence of the law tracts, the most interesting pages of the book are devoted to the development of industry."—Nation and Ath

"Mrs. Green has been exceedingly careful to produce not a literary romance, but a sound historical treatise. . . She has given many new views to those to whom Irish history has been a myth." S. L. C.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 6 '25 480w

"There is a large body of readers who will rejoice to have gathered into a single compact volume material that is scattered through a thousand works and often hidden in, to them, inaccessible archives and MSS. Not the least important feature of this latest fruit of Mrs. Green's scholarship is the biographical data provided at the end of each chapter, and most important among these are the notes supplied by that distinguished historian, Dr. Eoin MacNeill." B. M. K.

+ Cath World 121:851 S '25 650w

"This is the most solid and important piece of historical research which Mrs. Green has yet produced, and the coldest dry-as-dust historian will find fault only here and there and in detail with a book which proves that it is possible to be well documented and judicious as well as eloquent and in love. . . This is a book to be read by all who are interested in the history of Ireland and in the civilization of the so-called 'Dark Ages.'" Eileen Power

+ Nation and Ath 37:210 My 16 '25 950w

"Primarily, of course, her appeal is to the Irish reader, but her theme is also of interest to Englishmen, more especially if they value good writing, lucid thinking and that imaginative insight which, if some good historians have lacked it, has always distinguished the great masters of the art. Mrs. Green has done much more than glean behind the experts as her preface would suggest. She has discerned the broader implications of their work, and used her knowledge to dissipate the mists over tracts of history where previous explorers have wandered blindfold clutching aimlessly at shadows. . . Her pages are packed with intimate and vivid details of the everyday life of the early Irish communities."

+ New Statesman 25:138 My 16 '25 1300w

"In spite of questionable details, Mrs. Green's book is in the highest degree interesting and, if read with caution, important. She gives a lucid account of the laws and organization of Ireland such as no writer has attempted before with anything like the same success. Whether we differ in details or not, this book will be essential to anyone needing a guide through the tangled forest of Irish early history for many a day to come."

GREEN, ALICE S. A.—Continued

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p248 Ap 9 '25 1400w

GREEN, FITZHUGH. Our naval heritage. 459p il $4 Century

973 United States—History, Naval 25-18264

The story of our maritime development—largely a recounting of stirring naval engagements—vividly told, on which the Historical section of the Navy department has set its seal of approval. There are interesting chapters on the feats of the navy during the World war, and the two final ones, on the place of a naval air force and the Shenandoah, have a particularly timely interest.

"Based on sound scholarship and research, but written so that it is, in the classic phrase, 'as interesting as a novel.'"

+ Ind 115:396 O 3 '25 100w

"He has attempted here, with signal success, to do a work for which there was a definite need, for he has put into a single volume an exceedingly readable account of the maritime history and achievements of this country. A succinct, rapid narrative, dramatic in its presentation of events and judicial and scholarly in its discussions of them."

+ N Y Times p23 O 11 '25 600w

"The salient facts are all there, each with the right emphasis; the grand incidents and episodes are vividly presented. The tone is an eminently sporting one; for example, the author, in his recital of the War of 1812, gives full credit to the gallant feats of the enemy, in refreshing contrast to the mendacious patriotism of most of our school histories."

+ Outlook 141:488 N 25 '25 100w

GREENBIE, SYDNEY, and GREENBIE, MARJORIE LATTA (BARSTOW) (MRS SYDNEY GREENBIE). Gold of Ophir; or, The lure that made America. 330p il $4 Doubleday

382 United States—Commerce. China—Commerce 25-24130

Gold of Ophir, the opulence of the Indies, was the lure which drew New England merchants eastward to China by way of the clipper ships. There they made contacts of enduring friendliness with the merchants of the East, and from there they brought back not only the silks and spices and curios of trade, but something of the philosophy and culture of the Orient as well. The authors, writing of the romantic era of the clipper ships, stress the importance of the ships in the race to the California coast for gold. The illustrations are from drawings of clipper ships made during the period of their supremacy, and from portraits of the merchants of the East and West who kept them on the seas.

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p3 D 5 '25 1550w

"In less capable hands this work might have resulted in a stodgy history of our early trade relations with the Orient. The Greenbies have added to it that magic touch which turns common clay into a work of art and have written such an enthralling book as to make it impossible to put it aside until the reader has finished the entire volume." Frank Shay

+ Lit R p3 D 5 '25 350w

"This is a work of art rather than a history. It is poetic, at times mystical. It is not a complete exposition of its own thesis. Yet it is more glamorous than most novels and more significant than most histories." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 N 22 '25 2400w

"The Greenbies have unearthed some interesting material, but exaggerated emphasis makes their book more of a jazz record than a record of history."

— + N Y Tribune p11 D 13 '25 180w

N Y World p7m D 6 '25 80w

"Few books of history that have appeared during the last decade have had so interesting a thesis, none has developed it with more grace and charm." P. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7a D 6 '25 950w

GREENE, ANNE (BOSWORTH) (MRS HARRIE WILLIAM GREENE). Dipper Hill. 482p $2.50 Century

818 Farm life 25-18803

Mrs Greene's "Lone winter" is succeeded by a chronicle of a friendlier season on her Vermont pony farm—a long summer which extended to the first snow flurry. As in the former diary the ponies are the center of life, just as strongly individualized as the people, who appear more frequently here than in the winter chronicle, but a garden as riotous as the ponies shares the interest.

Booklist 22:68 N '25

"'Dipper Hill' is 'The Lone Winter' with all the rigors and loneliness removed. The thread of narrative interest, announced at the beginning and iterated at the close, is thin, and mostly of interest to horticulturists. It may be that the literary deities of Mrs. Greene are not so exacting as they might be. A burly prose which sounds like a shallow brook, and long philosophical divagations which are like that brook run dry, might be accounted for in this way." T. Boyd

— Bookm 62:215 O '25 620w

Cleveland p112 D '25

"In these days of neurasthenic literature the appearance of 'Dipper Hill' as the successor to 'The Lone Winter' is most gratifying to all who still have any faith in the goodness of the world and its inhabitants. There is a wholesomeness about Mrs. Greene that is as refreshing as the breezes that blow about the Vermont mountains." G. W. Douglas

+ Lit R p9 O 31 '25 500w

"Delightfully though she writes about these charming little rascals and much as she evidently loves them, to the reader who knows them only second hand so much of them becomes a bit monotonous. But it is a fascinating narrative, all the same."

+ — N Y Times p20 D 27 '25 600w

"Undoubtedly the book is too long—482 pages usually are. But something apart from rules and technique lives here. Out of it emerges the author's character, enthusiastic, competent; a picture remains of a life brave and gay and fundamental that must give to the city dweller at least one pang for keen liberating labor and for the salt and substance of his own demesne." L. G. Marshall

+ — N Y Tribune p13 N 22 '25 260w

"She is one of those fortunately endowed souls who never permit the prose of life to overshadow either its poetry or its fun; for that reason, and because of the easy grace and humor of her style, this, like its predecessor, is a book to enjoy."

+ Outlook 141:531 D 2 '25 160w

"Vermont lives in Mrs. Greene's pages. For some years a landscape painter and now the wielder of a happy pen, she is doubly equipped to deal with beauty." Zephine Humphrey

+ Sat R of Lit 2:312 N 21 '25 620w

Springf'd Republican p7a N 8 '25 380w

GREER-PETRIE, CORDIA (GREER) (MRS HAYEL G. PETRIE). Angeline of the Hill country. 181p il $1.50 Crowell

25-6880

"The humor that arises from the contact of the unsophisticated dweller in rural regions with urban civilization is a well established tradition in this country, and Angeline is a notable addition to a large gallery of comic figures. She is a Kentucky hill woman, who in this book visits Louisville, Chicago and other points West with her husband, Linn.

They meet many weird and amusing adventures in elevators, bathrooms, 'ratskellers,' theatres and other places."—Lit R

Cleveland p36 S '25

"The dialect is excellent and not the least interesting feature of the book is the shrewd contrast drawn by Angeline between the busy life of her hillfolk and the idleness of the society people with whom she week-ends and otherwise comes to know." H. B.

+ Lit R p10 Mr 21 '25 200w

"Her conception and report of the things they see and experience savor rather too much, for the most part, of the conventional rustic brought into contact with civilization for the first time to carry conviction. But sometimes there is a touch of freshness and originality, and Angeline is often very amusing, while her dialect is always interesting."

+ N Y Times p19 Ap 26 '25 230w

"The humor is a manufactured product, in which quantity is more marked than discretion. It is a little late in the day to squeeze much hilarity out of a bumpkin's reactions to hotel porters, elevators, revolving doors, jazz orchestras and Hawaiian dancers, unless the job is approached a little less obviously than has been done here."

— N Y Tribune p18 Ap 19 '25 150w

"There are entertaining episodes but the tale as a whole is too posed to be anything but a burlesque."

— Sat R of Lit 1:748 My 9 '25 120w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Maid of the mountain. 331p $2 Scribner

25-15848

Bab at sixteen could neither read nor write. But the mountains were home to her and the forest creatures her friends. When evil-eyed Philip Conroy visited her step-father's squalid cabin to frighten the child into marriage with him by the threat of a reform school if she refused, Bab's answer was instant flight. The mountains received and hid her from pursuit. Later she discovered Conroy red handed in crime. He attempted to throw suspicion on her, but a young homesteader who hated Conroy on his own account is happy to help Bab outwit him. Romance enters this partnership for protection and in due time success attends it.

"This is a Redbook serial expanded a bit for novel publication. For a goodly number of readers that should be about all one need to say. In an entirely different locale it narrates much the same story as that unfolded in the late Emerson Hough's recently published fable of the frozen north. Mr. Gregory's treatment of the elfin slip of untutored femininity is similar to Mr. Hough's, and as a tale not so absorbing."

— Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 200w

"The Maid of the Mountain is only slightly, if at all, above 'movie stuff.' It moves: it has several good fights and no end of thrills. The hero's nobility stands the strain: it is all as moral as a Harold Bell Wright creation—and as unreal. But as narrative it is efficient, and it will hold the average reader's attention." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p63 D '25 380w

"Mr. Gregory can always be depended upon for a vivid tale of the West, and in this, his latest, he has exceeded his previous efforts."

+ Lit R p7 S 12 '25 100w

N Y Tribune p10 O 13 '25 180w

"The story is light, but the incidents are well knit."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 D 22 '25 180w

GREY, ZANE. Tales of fishing virgin seas. 216p $5 Harper

799 Fishing 25-23898

One of Zane Grey's dreams was "to own a beautiful ship with sails like wings and to sail into lovely tropical seas." The book is the story of that dream come true. For Mr Grey bought such a ship and made such a cruise when he sailed from Balboa to Cocos Island to fish, sometimes in virgin waters. He records the events of the cruise and his big-game hunting among the fish, in this large, handsomely illustrated volume.

"His photography is very well done. Here is a book which every good sportsman will want in his collection, a rare chronicle of sporting events."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 9 '26 210w

N Y Times p7 D 6 '25 80w

"A fascinating volume. No small part of its interest and attractiveness is due to the hundred beautiful full-page reproductions of photographs of all sorts of scenes in those southern seas."

+ N Y Times p12 D 20 '25 460w

"Mr. Grey's wealth of photographic illustration is as beautiful as it is interesting, and Mrs. Smith's vignettes are excellent. My thanks go out to the author for a volume which I treasure both for its own merits and for the memories which it arouses." W. Beebe

+ N Y Tribune p6 Ja 10 '26 1200w

Outlook 141:677 D 30 '25 40w

Springf'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 1050w

GREY of FALLODON, EDWARD GREY, 1st viscount. Twenty-five years, 1892-1916. 2v 331; 352p il $10 Stokes

B or 92 Great Britain—Foreign relations. European war, 1914-1918—Diplomatic history 25-18993

Viscount Grey was long and intimately connected with British foreign affairs, beginning his career in 1892 as an under secretary and holding the office of foreign secretary from 1905 to 1916. The first volume of his memoirs is concerned with pre-war diplomacy—the Algeiras conference, the Agadir incident, Balkan affairs and the crisis leading to the World war. The second volume, covering the first two years of the war, has much to say of British-American relations, of negotiations with Colonel House and President Wilson's mediation policy. A chapter of correspondence with Roosevelt is included.

"From the whole work we get an impression of British common sense and honest thinking, but hardly that of a subtle mind; indeed we are sometimes struck with a naïveté rather surprising in a man the best part of whose life was passed amid parliamentary debates and diplomatic discussions." A. C. Coolidge

Atlantic's Bookshelf D '25 550w

"It is one of the most valuable books yet called forth by the war."

+ Booklist 22:114 D '25

Reviewed by J. H. Sedgwick

Boston Transcript p1 O 3 '25 4200w

Cleveland p113 D '25

"Between the cool, unhurried lines of this book an acute reader will see and rejoice in the development of one of the noblest characters that have risen to great responsibilities in our times." Arthur Pound

+ Ind 115:395 O 3 '25 1000w

"This is one of the few war books that Time can not soon throw into the dust-bin; besides being a source-book, it combines wisdom, sincerity, and the charm of a mellow personality in a way that makes it literature as well as history." E. L. Shuman

+ Int Bk R p809 N '25 2200w

Reviewed by R. J. Davis

Lit R p1 O 17 '25 1450w

"Those who go deeply into the subject will realize, indeed, that Grey skims over difficulties just as a flat stone, if skilfully projected, skips over the surface of a pond. The memoirs are a triumph of insularity, of blindness to everything

GREY of FALLODON, E. G.—Continued
outside of one narrow circle. They do not directly falsify, but they come as near it as possible." E. F. Henderson

— Nation 121:490 O 28 '25 1200w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 38:151 O 24 '25 1300w

"The most extraordinary feature of Viscount Grey's whole survey is the practical indifference shown to anything outside of the British Empire that does not impinge immediately and obviously on British interests. It throws no new light on the origins of the war. It merely illuminates the character of its distinguished author, a diplomat of singular charm, a man who according to these pages eagerly desired to serve the cause of peace, honestly and conscientiously, as far as it could be done within the limits of British security and prosperity. For that reason an air of sadness pervades these volumes and leads one to reflect on the vanity of things." C. A. Beard

+ New Repub 44:172 O 7 '25 2550w

"Lord Grey's recently published memoirs offer the most complete and convincing evidence not only of the sincere desire of Great Britain to prevent a conflict, but of the fact that it was the attitude of the Kaiser's Government that made war inevitable. Such at any rate, we believe, would be the verdict of any impartial tribunal."

+ New Statesman 25:684 O 3 '25 1250w

"In these chapters, fascinating if not faultless, there is a winning quality which can hardly fail profoundly to influence public opinion throughout the world." P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 O 4 '25 2650w

Reviewed by Mark Sullivan

N Y Tribune p4 O 25 '25 3550w

"While Lord Grey's account of the crisis of 1914 is frank, lucid and highly interesting, it contains no new information of note. It is most significant as showing how hopeful he was to the very end that war would be averted."

+ — N Y World p5m O 4 '25 1000w

"I have just read with keenest and most sympathetic interest the two volumes in which Viscount Grey of Falldon has reviewed in bold outlines the twenty-five years of a life which he has devoted to the service of his country and humanity." Raymond Poincaré

+ N Y World p5m O 11 '25 360w

"His memoirs are of value, chiefly as presenting an intimate, lucid and truthful account of the long and complicated train of diplomatic and other events which during a score of years led to the World War, and also of the impression produced by the war and the subsequent peacemaking upon an enlightened, sensitive, judicious and preëminently peace-loving mind." W. F. Johnson

+ No Am 222:373 D '25 1000w

"No more important personal record relating to the outbreak of the Great War has appeared than Viscount Grey's book. It is a sincere record—as frank and fair a statement as one will find. It does not profess to give a complete report of the events leading up to the war; it treats, in the main, only of what came within the author's own knowledge." W. J. Ghent

+ Outlook 141:240 O 14 '25 1050w

St Louis p410 N '25

"The record is modest, impersonal, unbiased. This is perhaps the most important book on the war that has yet been published in any country."

+ Sat R 140:404 O 10 '25 850w

"It is because the spirit of the book is that of a man, not so much seeking to justify himself or to secure a verdict from posterity, as to utter a warning to the world out of the agony of his own terrific experience, that it is charged with an epic and prophetic power." A. L. Gardiner

+ Sat R of Lit 2:253 O 31 '25 3000w

"He does not tell us much about himself or his life, though what he does tell us is told with excellent taste and well-bred simplicity."

+ Spec 135:548 O 3 '25 1850w

"The book, as might have been anticipated, is one of very peculiar quality and charm—can-did, dispassionate, and curiously objective. He narrates his own work and his own life, standing, as it were, apart from it; considering, appraising, and criticizing his own action and policy almost like an external observer. The book is of absorbing interest, for we have in it the authentic record, as it appeared to the chief actor, of the course of events which led up to the war."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p625 O 1 '25 5200w

GREY of FALLODON, PAMELA (WYNDHAM) viscountess (formerly LADY GLENCONNER). Sayings of the children, written down by their mother. 214p $1.50 Stokes [6s Blackwell]

136.74 Children's sayings

25-8090

In this book a mother has written down the sayings of her children, designated in the narrative by numerals, One to Five. They are the thoughts of gentle and imaginative children, full of unconscious humor and showing often the rare insight of childhood, its poetic fancy and lovely framing of its thoughts. The sayings are joined on a thread of narrative and commentary, and to them is added a chapter on what children should read, and on teaching the Bible lesson, also some prayers for the use of children.

"Those who are interested in a book for the style employed or the character of the writer, which is revealed through the manner of writing, will have abundant enjoyment here, for the style often approaches that of rhythmic prose, and the character of Lady Grey is equally fascinating with that of her children." F. B. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 6 '25 520w

Cleveland p91 S '25

"It really needs a Barrie to describe this heavenly little book. He could do it in a few magic sentences, and off you would fly to the book shop for a copy and be happy ever after." W. O. T.

+ Lit R p5 Ap 25 '25 250w

"For those who love children this is an exquisite book, one that will entertain and stimulate and suggest, that will soften the heart and attune the spirit to the beauty and innocence of childhood."

+ N Y Times p21 Ap 12 '25 750w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

"Here is almost a demonstration of the doctrine that if children were given a chance, they'd make this a beautiful, humorous and happy world."

+ Survey 55:258 N 15 '25 60w

GRIERSON, MRS ELIZABETH WILSON. Things seen in Edinburgh. 157p il $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Seeley, Service]

914.144 Edinburgh

A pocket guide to Edinburgh containing a history of the town, descriptions of the Castle, St. Giles, Holyrood and other landmarks of the "Royal Mile."

Boston Transcript p8 N 18 '25 350w

"Things seen in Edinburgh lives on the whole well up to the high standard of its series, both in the letterpress and the illustrations. It has, all the same, so little to say of Edinburgh as it is at the present day that it is almost purely a historical and topographical account. This is a grave weakness, for the excellence of the other volumes is in many cases due to a vivid and attractive description of the living present rather than the dead past, which this volume like the common run of topographical works makes the mistake of overemphasising."

+ — New Statesman 26:60 O 24 '25 200w

Spring'd Republican p6a D 6 '25 40w

"A very pleasant and interesting affair, this review of Edinburgh, her streets and buildings and survey of the lives and deaths, manners, morals and maxims of her indwellers, and the reader will be grateful for it."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p703 O 22 '25 450w

GRIFFITH, LINDA (ARVIDSON) (MRS DAVID WARK GRIFFITH). When the movies were young. 256p il $3 Dutton

778 Moving pictures 25-19076

Mrs Griffith's account of the early days of the "infant industry" gives an informal picture of the little group of pioneers who saw in the new industry an opportunity and a future, and in many cases won name and fame along a hitherto unheard of path. The reminiscences include personal anecdotes about many of those destined stars centering chiefly about their manager and director, David Wark Griffith.

"Her book is full of entertaining anecdotes of poor and obscure people who are now rich and famous."

+ Ind 115:479 O 24 '25 60w

"Mrs. Griffith is generous with anecdotes of old favorites and amusing stories of all sorts."

+ N Y Tribune p16 N 1 '25 160w

GRIMBALL, ELIZABETH B., and WELLS, RHEA. Costuming a play; inter-theatre arts handbook; designs by Rhea Wells. 133p $3 Century

391 Costume. Amateur theatricals 25-3105

"In half a dozen chapters the authors take up briefly the basic principles of costuming a play, discussing color and its importance, giving advice on the dyeing and decorating of textiles, on lighting and its effects, on materials and on costuming a pageant. Then follow a dozen sections dealing with the typical costumes of certain periods, Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, Roman, medieval, early and late Renaissance, seventeenth century, and so on down to the Civil War period. Each of these sections is illustrated by designs showing the distinctive costumes of its periods for both sexes in different classes and occupations, while the accompanying text explains and advises and is followed by bibliographic references and suggestions as to plays and characters for which these costumes are suitable."—N Y Times

Booklist 21:294 My '25

Boston Transcript p2 My 2 '25 300w

"The book is unusually helpful, and we recommend it confidently." R. M. B.

+ Lit R p9 F 28 '25 220w

"Useful for all manner of amateur, community and little theatre dramatic presentation and for costuming pageants, this is an admirably practical and well informed handbook. . . The little handbook will be a precious first aid."

+ N Y Times p23 F 22 '25 250w

"The ambitious producer of amateur theatricals will find this handbook of practical information valuable, especially in aiding him in the avoidance of anachronisms."

+ N Y Tribune p14 My 31 '25 150w

"This is a book which should prove of considerable value to directors and producers in the world of little theatres and community drama, simplifying as it does the problems of costuming."

+ N Y World p7m Mr 29 '25 180w

"This serviceable little book is written with a directness and simplicity that give it distinction."

+ Outlook 139:195 F 4 '25 120w

"The book contains fact upon fact concerning the line, color and texture of costumes, from the days of the Assyrians to the Civil War. It has chapters on dyeing and making and lighting, all exceedingly elemental, but clear and making their points with the aid of designs which illustrate the changes in the typical costumes of each period in relation to social caste. The book could well have been better written without affecting its simplicity; the designs might easily have had more quality without losing their type value. But the material and the form will make the book useful to so many people that it is not worth while quarreling with its limitations."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 9:210 Mr '25 150w

Wis Lib Bul 21:54 F '25

GRINNELL, GEORGE BIRD, and SHELTON, CHARLES, eds. Hunting and conservation. 548p il $5 Yale univ. press

799 Hunting—United States. Game protection 25-6824

The Boone and Crockett club of whose books this is the sixth volume, has among its objects both the promotion of a wholesome kind of hunting and work for better standards of game protection. The papers in the volume are by various contributors. Contents: Mouflon in Sardinia, by Winthrop Chanler; Conservation of our mammals and birds, by J. C. Phillips; An encounter with a grizzly bear, by C. B. Penrose; Life and habits of the American fur-seal, by W. H. Osgood; The big game of Chihuahua, Mexico, by Charles Sheldon; Saving the redwoods, by Madison Grant; American game protection, by George Bird Grinnell; To Lake Rudolph and beyond, by W. F. Whitehouse; Importance of natural conditions in national parks, by Barrington Moore; The American bison in 1924, by George Bird Grinnell; Hunting in the Nutzotins, by John B. Burnham; The establishment of Mt. McKinley national park, by Madison Grant; The beginnings of Glacier national park, by Madison Grant; National recreation conference, by George Bird Grinnell. Appendix.

"It would be difficult to find two Americans better qualified than Dr. Grinnell and Mr. Sheldon to edit a collection of papers of this nature. Their high standing as conservationists is recognized throughout the country."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 12 '25 400w

Outlook 140:71 My 13 '25 20w

"In addition to what may be called its propagandist matter, the volume contains a series of excellent papers on sporting subjects."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p520 Ag 6 '25 700w

GROGGINS, PHILIP H. Aniline and its derivatives. 256p il $4 Van Nostrand

667.2 Aniline 24-14452

"The author has included in his book, in addition to the bare technology of the aniline industry, much of fundamental economics, pertinent cost data, price trends, import, export and production statistics and other of the basic indicators of business. A good measure of homely philosophy also finds its way into the several chapters."—Chem & Met Eng

"A technical reference book of real usefulness to the chemical engineer. 'Aniline and Its Derivatives' is broader than its name implies. It is more than a commendable text or handbook; it is an interesting story of American chemical engineering practice, principles and experience." S. D. Kirkpatrick

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:641 Jl '25 400w

"It is not the writer's object to quarrel with the method employed, but only to wonder if a book of this kind is really of educational value or whether it is not rather a book of reference. So far as the treatment is concerned it is admirable, and it represents the last word in the technology of aniline manufacture. The chemical theory is a bit scrappy, and if a firm were to rely on the technical information supplied in order to start the manufacture of the base it would, in all probability, have spent all its spare capital long before it had decided on which process to adopt." J. F. T.

GROGGINS, PHILIP H.—Continued

+ Nature 115:412 Mr 21 '25 360w
 Pratt Technical Books p17 '24

GRUBER, JOSEF, ed. Czechoslovakia; tr. from Czech manuscripts by A. Brož, S. V. Klíma, and J. J. Král. 256p $2 Macmillan
 943.7 Czechoslovakia 24-23728
 For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The book is packed with facts and statistics, but in almost every essay the political, economic and social significance of the facts presented is made reasonably clear. It will, therefore, be a valuable handbook for those who wish to gain some understanding of the processes through which Czechoslovakia has made herself the most stable and prosperous of the succession states of Europe. The complete lack of references or bibliography will limit the usefulness of the volume to the more serious student." Ralston Hayden

+ Ann Am Acad 118:181 Mr '25 200w
 Booklist 21:192 F '25

"The position of the authors accounts for a good deal in the book, which supplies an authoritative exposé by competent writers, but to which one can hardly look for independent views and still less for independent criticism. It might almost be described as a semi-official publication and slight touches of propaganda can be discerned in it, which, however, like most of the Czech official propaganda, is very restrained and unobtrusive. Important statistical material is supplied, and as a reference work the book is certainly valuable." L. B. Namler

+ Econ J 35:296 Je '25 800w

"To any student of modern European politics or to any economist this book should prove to be of great value. It should prove to be of great interest to any one interested in current affairs, as it is admirably put together and the resources and problems are clearly and frankly stated." J. Kremer

+ Lit R p11 Ja 3 '25 230w

"In a strictly impartial manner the authors deal with the details of the establishment and building up of the Czech republic. The emergence into leadership of a small nation which for centuries had been a vassal of a powerful neighbor is one of the most dramatic chapters of contemporary European history, and a description of the details is a meritorious undertaking."

+ Nation 120:389 Ap 8 '25 120w

"The value of the work is considerably lessened by the fact that, except in the introduction, there is hardly a date referring to conditions of any sort later than 1922. And the last two years have brought about some very important changes in the financial and economic conditions of most European countries. Notwithstanding the book's unfortunate lack of wholly up-to-date information, however, it contains a great mass of interesting and important material whose value is not only explicit but is also to be found in the comparisons it suggests with achievements in certain other countries."

+ N Y Times p20 Ja 25 '25 600w

"It is a valuable collection of papers prepared by experts in many lines and it touches practically all sides of the economic life of the nation. The book is valuable for it gives in English in handy form a great variety of hitherto inaccessible information. It is well indexed and cannot be replaced as a source of definite, detailed information." C. A. Manning

+ Sat R of Lit 1:914 Jl 18 '25 800w

Reviewed by S. B. Hrbkova

Survey 53:606 F 15 '25 400w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p202 Mr 19 '25 30w

GRUENING, ERNEST HENRY, ed. These United States; a symposium. 439p $3 Boni & Liveright

917.3 United States—Description and travel.
 United States—Social life and customs

Second series of "These United States" containing sketches and characterizations of twenty-six states of the Union, by as many writers, who in many cases, but not always, are native sons of the states they describe. Contents: Virginia, by Douglas Freeman; Minnesota, by Sinclair Lewis; Montana, by Arthur Fisher; Florida, by C. G. Stillman; Illinois, by H. V. O'Brien; West Virginia, by J. M. Cain; New Hampshire, by R. D. Paine; Wyoming, by W. C. Hawes; North Carolina, by R. W. Winston; Nebraska, by W. S. Cather; Oklahoma, by Burton Rascoe; Idaho, by M. R. Stone; New York, by Ernest Gruening; New York (II), by C. W. Wood; Kentucky, by B. L. Burman; Washington, by Robert Whitaker; New Mexico, by E. S. Sergeant; Indiana, by Theodore Dreiser; Rhode Island, by R. C. Dexter; Missouri, by M. O. Hudson; North Dakota, by R. G. Paterson; Georgia, by W. E. B. Du Bois; The District of Columbia, by J. W. Owens; Alaska, by Bruce Rogers; Porto Rico, by L. M. Marin; Hawaii, by Clayton Hamilton.

Am Pol Sci R 19:427 My '25 120w

Booklist 21:272 Ap '25

Bookm 61:363 My '25

"There is romance and poetry and fact and a strong evidence of individuality which makes the book very interesting. There is beauty and an appreciation of beauty revealed here, and there is more for there emerges a more definite impression of what the American spirit really is than we are likely to find in other books."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 4 '25 270w

Reviewed by H. E. Dounce

Int Bk R p319 Ap '25 1850w

"The temper of this second series of 'These United States' is little better than that of the first series. The idea was an excellent one. Undoubtedly the choice of some of the authors was poor. Some of them had old grudges to settle and old scores to pay. The result has been splenetic writing, plain and fancy denunciation and much good, old-fashioned lambasting in certain instances." C. M. Morrison

— Lit R p12 Mr 7 '25 520w

New Repub 43:161 Jl 1 '25 450w

"A goodly company of authors have joined to tell the world about their home states. It is particularly interesting to note how the authors succeed in bringing out forcefully the individuality of the different States." N: Roosevelt

+ N Y Times p1 Ja 18 '25 1750w

Reviewed by Arthur Krock

N Y World p8e Ja 25 '25 720w

"The collection has been preposterously overpraised, but is on the whole surprisingly good, considering the fact that talent for this species of writing is rare. It has to be said that one essay in this volume, that on Georgia, by W. E. Burghardt Du Bois, is wretched stuff, dealing almost exclusively with the racial problem, and with that most intemperately. But the average of the essays is more than respectable and several are brilliant or charming or both."

+ Outlook 139:230 F 11 '25 150w

"The style of the essays does not suggest Gibbon, but there is vividness, fluency, sprightliness, and even humor. Interesting and worthy-to-be read they are, beyond question." R. B. Perry

Sat R of Lit 1:612 Mr 21 '25 1050w

Wis Lib Bul 21:88 Mr '25

GUERARD, ALBERT LEON. Beyond hatred, the democratic ideal in France and America. 298p $3 Scribner

323.1 Democracy. Race prejudice 25-21180

Tho the chapters of this book, some of them reprinted from periodicals, are on subjects seemingly as varied as France's African army, the French presidency, the race question in the South, Anatole France and Esperanto, the new historians, H. G. Wells and others, the essays are bound together by their unifying theme of democracy and their appeal to that spirit of brotherhood which casts out hatred, pride and narrowness of heart as expressed in orthodoxies, caste, class, race, nationalism.

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 6 '26 750w

"He not only leaves me cold, but provokes me to resolute dissent. It seems to me almost incredible that a writer who so superbly demolished the 'legend' of Napoleon should be able to accept and even add to such legends as this work tends to foster." Ernest Boyd

— Ind 115:559 N 14 '25 1200w

"The sooner international literati like Dr. Guérard, and international dreamers and treaty-makers recognize the fact of sin, the better it will be for mankind." Dr. C. E. Macartney

— Lit R p4 N 21 '25 950w

"If the discussion grows at times a bit tenuous, and now and then displays traces of that curious idealistic cloudiness characteristic of a certain type of bland liberalism, Mr. Guérard nevertheless pulls apart a number of hollow legends, and does it moreover with an animation, a Gallic verve, that lends a timely interest to topics that, to say the least, have had plenty of attention before this."

+ — N Y Times p11 Ja 10 '26 520w

"The root of hatred is not inequality, but pride. All pride is narrowness of heart. The doctrines of exclusion—orthodoxies, castes, class, race, nationalism—are doctrines of evil. Measure things, and love men." This noble doctrine, backed with instances from nearly the most fluent historical memory in America, brightened with epigram, anecdote, and such eloquence as a cautious and logical soul which hates Romanism is willing to allow itself, has made a readable book and a wholesome book, such as Americans are beginning to be ready to appreciate." R. T. House

+ N Y Tribune p1 Ja 10 '26 1000w

"Taken as a whole, the book is an able polemic against hate, international and racial. M. Guérard does not find the cure for hate in democracy. It is rather, he thinks, to be attained by a studied suppression of pride. And America, M. Guérard thinks, is the land which can best demonstrate this spirit, for America is the country where hate expires." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p7m N 8 '25 850w

GUERNON, CHARLES. Choice. 352p $2 Lippincott

25-7750

Peter Penhallow may deny the girl he loves and remain the spoiled favorite of his wealthy aunt, or he may cling to his love and lose his aunt and his income at a stroke. He makes the latter choice and at the close of an unhappy scene, in which his aunt and Helen are involved, rushes off to London to try life on his own. Helen Longland misunderstands her lover's disappearance, and realizing the impossibility of returning to her father's house an abandoned and unacknowledged wife, borrows money to go to Italy to study music. As the years pass and her voice develops in power and beauty, she has the promise of a great career. Her funds are exhausted, however, and she is in despair when an English baron offers to make her his wife. There is the usual conflict between the artist and the woman, a conflict that ends only after years of struggle and sorrow. Peter and Helen are brought together again, once more at a crossroads, and this time choose the path that leads to happiness and peace.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '25 100w

"Choice" is distressingly facile, pat, both in content and in treatment. Despite this fault of cheap facility, it must be said for Mr. Guernon that he accomplishes what he sets out to do: he tells a story." Kenneth Fuesle

— + Int Bk R p548 J1 '25 500w

Reviewed by A. P. Terhune

Lit R p11 My 23 '25 430w

"The dialogue in this curious book is extraordinarily spontaneous, swift and true, incomparably more real than the persons who pronounce it. And fortunately for the reader the book is largely dialogue." D. B. Woolsey

+ — New Repub 42:349 My 20 '25 150w

"A sample of the well-written book that is as sound and as impermanent as the 'well-made play.'"

+ N Y Times p16 Ap 19 '25 750w

N Y World p4m S 13 '25 180w

Outlook 140:159 My 27 '25 10w

"Stuff for a scenario, and a scenario of the most melodramatic variety. It contains all the elements of a sensational plot."

— Sat R of Lit 1:673 Ap 11 '25 200w

Springf'd Republican p7a Ag 23 '25 200w

GUGGENHEIMER, SAMUEL H. Einstein theory explained and analyzed. 326p $2.50 Macmillan

530.1 Einstein theory. Relativity (physics)

"The object of this treatise is to explain and analyze the Einstein theory in such a way as, it is hoped, will make it comprehensible to any thoughtful person with a previous foundation of elementary scientific and philosophic reading, approaching that of the serious college graduate; and, in the course of the analysis, to disclose some of the basic assumptions of the theory, and at least to indicate the tests of its soundness. The treatment is philosophic and the mathematical is reduced to a minimum." —Intro.

Booklist 22:58 N '25

N Y New Tech Bks 10:35 J1 '25

"Mr. Guggenheimer is a conservative in that the newness of Einstein's exquisite deductions repels him. He is, however, not antagonistic. He really gives a fair, logical and thorough exposition of what Einstein is talking about." G. L. Wendt

+ — N Y Tribune p5 Je 14 '25 850w

Outlook 140:341 J1 1 '25 30w

St Louis p341 S '25

"While many of his illustrations of the theory are apt and well expressed, some of his statements are confusing rather than illuminating and lend weight to the suspicion that he may not have a very deep comprehension of the theory which he is attempting to elucidate."

— + Sat R of Lit 2:74 Ag 22 '25 150w

"Although we do not think that Mr. Guggenheimer's objections will have any influence on the progress of physical science, we think his book will prove useful to some of those who are looking for a non-technical exposition of relativity. Mr. Guggenheimer describes his own perplexities and the way in which he was able to think some of them out; and, as these perplexities are likely to have been those of many readers, his book will prove helpful."

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p442 J1 2 '25 900w

GUITERMAN, ARTHUR. Poet's proverbs. 124p $2 Dutton

811

24-29668

"Being mirthful, sober, and fanciful epigrams on the universe, with certain old Irish proverbs all in rhymed couplets."—Sub-title

"The verses of Arthur Guiterman are the candy of poetry, with the virtues and faults of sweetmeats. 'A Poet's Proverbs' are delicious bits, but it is necessary to warn the unwary that he who essays to consume the entire contents at a sitting will spoil his stomach for them. The poems are arranged

GUITERMAN, ARTHUR—Continued

subjectively—a device which makes the volume an excellent source for the person who has exhausted the pages of Bartlett's 'Familiar Quotations.'

+ — Bookm 61:710 Ag '25 200w

Cleveland p29 Mr '25

"Clearly, if one wishes to mend one's ways, 'A Poet's Proverbs' will furnish the necessary prescriptions. Mr. Guiterman is ever amusing; and if something of the jazz of his more lengthy versifying is omitted it is atoned for by the instructive values offered."

+ N Y Times p19 D 28 '25 200w

"Perhaps the best pages, on the whole, are those on sports, hills, trails and roads, camps, brooks, outdoors and anglers. Of these Mr. Guiterman writes to please himself, and on this note his deft little book ends." G: F. Whicher

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ja 25 '25 300w

"Arthur Guiterman's 'A Poet's Proverbs' makes its readers wonder again how this man can be a Charles Stuart Calverley, a Benjamin Franklin, and a Chinese sage all in one. Perhaps the aphorisms and sententious sayings and precepts are not new. Mr. Guiterman, however, contrives to give them a new and amusing twist." Edmund Pearson

+ Outlook 141:26 S 2 '25 250w

"We were very glad to have our attention arrested, and imprisoned, for a few delightful hours, within the pages of his new book. It is a most satisfying exposition of a human and tried philosophy, expressed in rhymed couplets."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:500 Ja 31 '25 320w

GULICK, CHARLES ADAMS. Labor policy of the United States steel corporation. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics and public law) 200p $2 Longmans [8s King]

331.1 United States steel corporation. Labor and laboring classes. Trade unions

25-2994

"One of the Columbia University series of studies, this work, by the instructor in Economics at that university, contains chapters on hours of labour, wages, welfare, &c., in the United States Steel Corporation, and on the attitude of the corporation to Labour organizations and the methods by which it secured and maintained a non-union organization."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 22:102 D '25

"Dr. Gulick prepared his material from interviews with officials of the Steel Corporation, whose cooperation, incidentally, was not entirely wholehearted after the first proof of the work was submitted. The final form of the work therefore shows gaps which represent the subsequent refusal of Steel Corporation officials to bring up to date the data they had previously supplied. It is an interesting study on the whole." J. G.

Bookm 61:adv My '25 150w

"Naturally such a work as this is not of a popular character, although this monograph is very readable and treats of subjects that have been much discussed in the newspapers." F. L. B.

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 4 '25 550w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p140 F 26 '25 60w

"Mr. Charles A. Gulick, Jr., in his Labor Policy of the United States Steel Corporation, has not much to say for the company. In his preface he announces his intention of shaking his fist at it, and throughout his thesis he valiantly lives up to his word." H. B. Davis

World Tomorrow 8:251 Ag '25 250w

GUTHE, CARL EUGEN. Pueblo pottery making. (Phillips acad. Dept. of archaeology. Southwestern expedition paper, no. 2) 89p il $4 Yale univ. press

970.6 Indians of North America—Pottery. Pueblo Indians

"This monograph is a careful study of pottery making in a Pueblo Indian town near Santa Fe, New Mexico. This town was chosen because its women have always been skillful potters and make many varieties of pottery. All the steps in the making of the pottery are described and fully illustrated, as well as the materials used.

"The quarto is illustrated with thirty-five full-page plates and with a number of text-figures, giving an excellent idea of the forms and decorations of these articles and the processes involved in making them. It is an inspiring record of a fine enterprise." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 6 '25 580w

"A well-illustrated book relating all that one needs to know about this picturesque subject."

+ Outlook 139:623 Ap 22 '25 20w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p640 O 1 '25 30w

GUYE, CHARLES EUGENE. Physico-chemical evolution; tr. by J. R. Clarke. 172p $2.40 Dutton [6s Methuen]

541 Chemistry, Physical and theoretical [25-15833]

The problem discussed in these three papers by the professor of physics at the University of Geneva is how far it is possible to extend the concepts of physical science to describe the phenomena of life and mind. The first paper shows how the principle of relativity constitutes a first step toward the classification and unification of the sciences. The argument of the second paper is that statistical laws which for a long time seemed to apply exclusively to the biological, social, economic and kindred sciences have been extended, little by little, by means of the calculus of probabilities, to the exact sciences.

"The reader, whether he be skilled physical chemist, biologist, philosopher or layman will find this little book exceptionally stimulating. Professor Guye, renowned creative scientist that he is, is eminently fitted to guide with steady and clear analysis the untrained mental processes of others from the realm of fact out to the realm of metaphysics. . . He writes with remarkable clarity, an enthusiasm moderated by never relinquished dignity and seriousness, and an incontrovertible scientific logic. His message is unhampered by the excellent translation." G: L. Clark

+ Chem & Met Eng 32:640 J1 '25 750w

"Professor Guye's book is thoroughly readable, even by those with no scientific education."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p214 Mr 26 '25 1200w

GUYER, SAMUEL. My journey down the Tigris; tr. by Joseph McCabe. 251p il postpaid from London $2.75 Wilson, H.W. [12s 6d Unwin]

915.6 Syria—Description and travel. Mesopotamia—Description and travel. Tigris river [25-11706]

The subtitle describes the book as a "raft-voyage through dead kingdoms." Dr Guyer began his long scientific journey to Mesopotamia at Trieste, and he gives an account of his voyage eastward across the Mediterranean to Aleppo and of his caravan journey thru the steppes and deserts of northern Syria. His river voyage began at Diyarbekr on the upper Tigris and led thru the wild gorges of Kurdistan, thru Assyria and past the ruins of Nineveh, Nimrud, Assur and Samarra, to Baghdad.

"Dr. Guyer is an archaeologist with a difference. He is none of your dry-as-dust rakers in the rubbish heaps of antiquity. With a vast store of scholarly information he combines an essentially human outlook on things ancient and modern, and in this book he gives his gifts of humour, observation and imagination full play. Archaeology would be a more 'popular' science if all its professors had the capacity of going about their business in what can only be described as the jolly spirit of this author."

+ New Statesman 25:112 My 9 '25 600w

"The book is a good-humoured record of the trivialities of travel and mildly amusing at times."

— + Sat R 140:47 Jl 11 '25 300w

"His knowledge of architecture makes his book a valuable account of the buildings he saw, and his photographs are good; but he apparently knows little of natural history, and his Arabic should have been corrected by a specialist."

+ — The Times [London] Lit Sup p207 Mr 19 '25 200w

GWYNN, DENIS ROLLESTON. Catholic reaction in France. 186p $1.75 (7s 6d) Macmillan 282 Roman Catholic church in France
24-24077

For descriptive note see Annual for 1924.

"The most interesting chapters in the volume are those describing the Catholic press, the Catholic trade unions, and the relation of the church to the menace of depopulation." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 31:274 S '25 150w

Am Pol Sci R 19:217 F '25 30w

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 17 '25 350w

"Strangers to our country . . . will find in Mr. Gwynn's book excellent material drawn from reliable sources, and set forth in good order. For anyone who wishes to study our ways, this work of his will serve admirably as a guide; better still, it will be a splendid stimulus to study."

A. L.

+ Cath World 121:129 Ap '25 750w

"Foreigners seeking a better understanding of France could read this book with profit, but there are other books which would perhaps yield larger returns."

+ — Ind 114:190 F 14 '25 220w

Reviewed by C. H. A. Wager

Nation 121:240 Ag 26 '25 750w

"The book has an easy journalistic style, it treats interesting material, it presents facts not easily found elsewhere. But it lacks a certain critical quality." J. S. B.

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 Jl 14 '25 650w

"Mr. Gwynn has been most thorough in his work, and he has not allowed himself to be swayed by external passion. His book will serve to give English readers an insight into the remarkable changes in religious life in France in the past few years and their effect on politics and the future development of the State."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p185 Mr 19 '25 800w

GWYNN, STEPHEN LUCIUS. Ireland; with an introd. by H. A. L. Fisher. (Modern world; a survey of historical forces) 252p $3 Scribner [12s 6d Benn]

941.5 Ireland—History [24-32090]

In his dispassionate study of modern Irish life Mr Gwynn has more to say about cultural and social movements than about politics. Contents: The Irish nation; The Irish people; Description of the country; Social groupings; Education; The two cultures; The Irish language and the Gaelic movement; The churches; Industry and labour; The Irish free state; Appendix; Index.

"Certain subjects, like the old Irish language and literature, are treated hastily and rather carelessly. In general Mr. Gwynn has seized upon the matters essential to his purpose. And he has achieved the one thing perhaps most to be desired in a work of the sort. He has kept himself free from the partizan prejudices which divide his countrymen." F. N. Robinson

+ — Am Hist R 31:353 Ja '26 360w

Booklist 22:66 N '25

"The best general term for the book is 'judicious.' It is vigorously and clearly written, largely from personal experience. Mr. Gwynn is one of the best-known writers on Irish subjects of the day. The Irish and English public know him well. The American public should know him better than it does. To know him they should read his book for then they will know Ireland also." K. S.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 11 '25 500w

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Int Bk R p596 Ag '25 750w

"It is a most illuminating and interesting book." H. J. Laski

+ Nation 121:sup433 O 14 '25 220w

"It is distinguished by its impartiality no less than by its readableness. No better introduction to modern Ireland could be desired by the intelligent foreigner, and all Englishmen are foreigners, if not always intelligent in Ireland."

+ Nation and Ath 36:448 D 20 '24 200w

"Mr. Gwynn's mastery of detail leaves something to be desired and his pages are marred by inaccuracies that suggest hasty writing, and still more hasty proof-reading. These, however, are trifles as compared with the fact that he has grasped the fundamental issues of the Irish problem more firmly than all the politicians, and this survey stands out as the most memorable contribution to Irish political literature since the passing of the Treaty."

+ — New Statesman 24:240 N 29 '24 850w

"For its style alone it merits praise, furnishing as it does easy and agreeable reading, even for those who would like to stop and argue many points with Mr. Gwynn, while for its eminent fair-mindedness it stands apart in works of its kind."

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 30 '25 380w

"This is a good book and a sound book about Ireland by a civilized Irishman." Ernest Boyd

+ N Y Tribune p5 Jl 5 '25 850w

"Stephen Gwynn's book, indeed, may be said to be an original contribution of high value to the study not merely of contemporary Ireland but of the Irish national mind." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p4m My 24 '25 800w

Outlook 140:371 Jl 8 '25 20w

"The book is a valuable record of a dead civilization, none the less valuable because written at the turning point of a new period whose developments can scarcely be predicted."

+ Sat R 138:450 N 1 '24 230w

Spec 133:744 N 15 '24 1450w

"For this book on Ireland there can be only praise for the spirit in which it has been conceived and the insight with which it has been wrought. . . Mr. Gwynn is alike sensitive and convincing in his physical description of the country and in his examination of its literary movements. His book is everywhere informing and revealing, everywhere gracious and judicially calm. Its only defect is one for which the author is presumably not responsible. The index is sadly inadequate."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7a My 10 '25 900w

Reviewed by P. U. Kellogg

Survey 55:251 N 15 '25 200w

"Mr. Gwynn writes vigorously and clearly, and largely from personal experience."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p602 O 2 '24 870w

GWYNNE, WALKER. Divorce in America under state and church; with an introd. by the Bishop of New York. 154p $2 Macmillan

347.6 Divorce 25-6835

The position held by the author is that divorce is fatal to society, and that it must be controlled by means of strict and uniform divorce laws and sterner church practice.

"The book offers altogether a comprehensive survey of the question, with full presentation of facts and statistics and much earnest argument based on them for a return to a basis of strict usage."

+ N Y Times p21 My 10 '25 300w

R of Rs 71:672 Je '25 120w

H

H. D., pseud. See Aldington, H.

HACKETT, FRANCIS. That nice young couple. 383p $2 Boni & Liveright 25-10470

Edward Beale, New Englander, Harvard graduate, self disciplined to a degree, has kept his emotions in check for so long that he finds difficulty in expressing his very genuine devotion for his young wife. Eleanor comes from the Middle West. This cultured Easterner is her first eligible suitor and she is very proud of him. Their married life in New York is comfortably happy, but lacking in the high romance of Eleanor's dreams. After seven years she is still unawakened, and Edward's habit of emotional restraint has become fixed. Then an impassioned young poet, a Southerner, becomes Eleanor's lover. The liaison reveals to her unsuspected depths in her own being and undreamed-of emotions. Life with Edward is unthinkable. The marriage is on the verge of dissolution when the affair with Stephen is abruptly terminated and the "nice young couple" go on together again.

"It is regrettable that a man who has made such a mark in criticism as has Francis Hackett should condescend to write such nonsense as this and believe he is doing something serious." K. S.

— Boston Transcript p5 Je 27 '25 400w

"Rather futile triangle story, told with humorous irony and touches of startling realism."

+ Cleveland p87 S '25

"The novel gives off no warmth and only a pale cold light."

— Dial 79:432 N '25 150w

"The characters are sharply drawn; the humor is vivid, native, and frank to the edge of the permissible, or beyond it; the story has a sufficient interest and a definite irony. Mr. Hackett's first novel is distinctive and competent. But, psychologically, it seems somehow wrong."

+ — Ind 114:675 Je 13 '25 100w

"Altho it contains some clever phrasing and one well-drawn character, Mr. Francis Hackett's first novel, 'That Nice Young Couple,' is a disappointing book. One would have expected better work from a writer of his reputation." L. Moore

— + Int Bk R p549 Jl '25 350w

"It is very finished for a first novel, lacking the usual smack of autobiographic reminiscence, well molded, achieving simplicity of form and rare candor of feeling. . . . The book is overtrained—a little stale. This may be because he has striven too hard to be objective; tried too insistently to paint the American scene." F. B. Biddle

+ — Lit R p3 Je 6 '25 550w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 43:159 Jl 1 '25 850w

"The plot is as hackneyed as you please, but that does not matter at all; for the people are real. There is no empty theory about Mr. Hackett. His cynicism is profound, not cheap. He is witty, too, and his pictures of Bohemian extravagance are entirely without that self-conscious naughtiness which disfigures most things of the kind." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:451 Ag 1 '25 260w

"A very clever and well-written novel, but it proves a disappointment. Intrinsically it is a commonplace and obvious record of adultery, the trite and thrice-told tale of the 'unawakened' wife falling into the arms of the first lover who promises her relief from the boredom of day-to-day existence. All the fine writing in the world—and there are generous expanses of it in Mr. Hackett's novel—all the tortuous 'Bovaryisms' of a soiled and pampered woman spending idle days and hours rummaging through her emotions, will not conceal the essential meanness of such a situation and such a dénouement."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 17 '25 1000w

"I insist that this futile triangle story has a 'significant' theme: Mr. Hackett wishes to show that the mobility and nomadic habits of the American people are breaking down the sectional cultures, smashing up the molds of ancient environments, that our contemporary democracy, the great burly important masses of the people, are melting into a formless flux, and that he is glad of it. One can see these directive ideas of his looming behind his assignment of parts to the persons of his triangle and behind the deliberate coarseness of his humor." S. P. Sherman

N Y Tribune p1 My 24 '25 2550w

"Well written, and—according to the standards of to-day—not any more frank and outspoken than dozens of other novels. But as like as the proverbial two peas to at least ten other novels which have been published in the last five years."

+ — Outlook 140:194 Je 3 '25 100w

"Mr. Hackett writes cynically and shrewdly of the civilization and culture of which his 'nice' young people are the fragile blossom. A civilization, as he sees it, threatened today by a barbarian indiscriminate of taste, manners, and morals; but surviving in spite of its excessively anaemic constitution. He writes of it with a caustic, tonic wit which makes his novel a sheer intellectual delight. It has sparkle, brilliance, pungency. But it suffers from the defect of its quality; it lacks emotional conviction." Lloyd Morris

+ — Sat R of Lit 1:819 Je 13 '25 900w

Spec 134:940 Je 6 '25 330w

"It presents nothing that is essentially new either as a view of life or as an exemplification of realistic accuracy, and it contains occasional indelicacies that are called for by nothing except a warped conception of literary method and purpose. For such things even the excuse of rebellious and injudicious youth cannot be offered in Mr Hackett's defence."

— Spring'd Republican p7a Je 21 '25 460w

"Mr. Hackett has on the whole succeeded, holding the reader's attention with the story of two ordinary, rather selfish people who lead prosperous, undistinguished lives. His characters are carefully observed. He writes sincerely, and though he may be lacking in imaginative vision, his novel is a distinct achievement and of value as a historical document in which are noted with precision the manners of middle-class America at the opening of this century."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p350 My 21 '25 280w

HADDON, ALFRED CORT. Races of man and their distribution. 201p il $2.50 Macmillan

572 Ethnology 25-4463

"The main groups of man are described, arranged according to physical characteristics, and the probable racial history of various areas is indicated. Short bibliography."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

"Professor Haddon has not only given us a book that every student of man will put on his reference shelf but, in addition, has formulated a number of fundamental problems that must be considered in contemporary anthropological research." Clark Wissler

+ Geog R 15:687 O '25 600w

"Since sprightlier books on the subject are obtainable, the general reader can be initiated with less travail, and the treatise does not appear quite comprehensive enough to take rank as a classic in the field."

— Ind 114:450 Ap 18 '25 60w

"Dr. Haddon seems to me to have tried to do too much, so that he will tend to produce confusion in the minds of beginners, thus necessitating much explanation of the matter which crowds his pages. Yet this book will be the standard text-book on the races of men for some time to come, and ethnologists owe to Dr. Haddon a deep debt of gratitude for having made his stores of knowledge accessible to them in so compact a form." W. J. Perry

+ — Nation and Ath 36:474 D 27 '25 760w

"This is a new edition, entirely rewritten, of a small and very useful volume by the pioneer field-worker and veteran anthropologist of Great Britain. Mainly designed as a text-book for the beginner and the general reader, it will be also valuable as a handy work of reference for the specialist."

+ Nature 116:241 Ag 15 '25 160w

"His conclusions as set forth in The Races of Man are safe, sane, and sound." G. A. Dorsey
+ New Repub 44:208 O 14 '25 550w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:290 My '25

"The author is to be congratulated on the amount of valuable information that he has crammed into one small book."

+ Springfield Republican p12 O 7 '25 250w

HADLEY, ARTHUR TWINING. Conflict between liberty and equality. 135p $1.50 Houghton

323.4 Liberty. Equality 25-5412

Three lectures delivered by the president emeritus of Yale university in the West memorial lectureship series at Stanford university. Contents: Industrial problems and political ideals; The uses and dangers of property right; The uses and dangers of representative government.

"It is another contribution to the literature of pessimism in regard to the present state of the body politic, especially on its economic side."

Am Pol Sci R 19:425 My '25 50w

Booklist 21:327 Je '25

"The book is thought-provoking, to say the least, and will be widely read, we are sure."

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 14 '25 300w

Lit R p10 Ap 4 '25 260w

N Y Times p12 Mr 8 '25 1750w

"President Hadley's book is a model of calm, lucid, fair, scholarly discussion of a great topic." J. H. Holmes

+ N Y Tribune p5 Ap 12 '25 100w

"Seldom in such small compass does one find so stimulating and at the same time entertaining a study of this problem."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:693 Ap 18 '25 180w

"The compactness and hard and even brilliant clarity of Dr Hadley's style in these lectures are always to be relished."

+ Springfield Republican p10 F 20 '25 400w

Wis Lib Bul 21:194 Jl '25

HAGEDORN, HERMANN. Ladders through the blue; a book of lyrics. 63p $1.50 Doubleday

811 25-23408

"This volume contains the best of Mr. Hagedorn's lyrics which have not previously been published in book form."—Publisher's note

"Mr. Hagedorn's is not a strong voice; it fails to impress, as a strong poetic voice should impress, with its resonance. But if Mr. Hagedorn were not writing his occasional verses American poetry today would be the poorer." F. A. Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p8 N 29 '25 650w

"His sentiments are lofty. In the beginning he was a very serious young reformer. Later he has gained in geniality and whimsical fancy. But he is still an earnest apostle of rectitude, a little too inclined to preach." Garreta Busey

+ — N Y Tribune p9 Ja 3 '26 250w

"It may safely be said that pieces such as 'The Ghost' and 'The Eyes of God' would do credit to any poet now living; and there are a sufficient number of such poems to lend the volume a distinction far above the average."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:436 D 19 '25 130w

HAGGARD, SIR HENRY RIDER. Queen of the dawn. 307p $2 Doubleday [7s 6d Hutchinson] 25-8118

The scene of the story is Egypt in the days of the Shepherd kings. Kheperra, king of upper Egypt, was slain in a battle with Apepi, the Shepherd king. Rima, the queen, with Nefra, the infant princess of upper Egypt, fled for safety to the mysterious religious Order of the dawn. In the shadow of the great pyramids, which were the stronghold of the order, Nefra grew to be a marvellously beautiful woman. Here Prince Khian, son of Anepi, met and wooed Nefra, and with their marriage upper and lower Egypt were reunited.

Booklist 21:383 Jl '25

"The story is, as these stories by Rider Haggard are, pure romance. One does not feel overburdened with historical detail nor with realistic atmosphere, but it is for all that entertaining romance."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '25 300w

"An exciting tale in a magnificent setting!" L. M. F.

+ Int Bk R p550 Jl '25 460w

"Mr. Haggard does not make his characters live; they have names, but appear as folk in history; violent battles superinduced by herculean strength, these leave the reader cold; glimpses of the haunted pyramids are annoying by their very conventionalism."

— N Y Times p13 Jl 19 '25 550w

"A competent, if somewhat florid, tale. The talk is now and then a trifle top-heavy with ceremony, and it is not always possible to give speech the flavor of antiquity simply by a generous sprinkling of 'mayhaps' and 'perchances.' But if you like bloody wars, too remote to be terrible, and romantic scenes of before the Christian era, here you will find them in good measure."

+ — N Y Tribune p12 Mr 22 '25 200w

N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 170w

Outlook 139:661 Ap 29 '25 80w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p301 Ap 30 '25 200w

HAIGHT, ELIZABETH HAZELTON. Horace and his art of enjoyment. 276p $3 Dutton

874 Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus). Rome—Social life and customs 25-10724

An appreciative study of the Roman poet showing him against the background of the times, as the mirror of his age and master of the fine art of enjoyment. Professor Haight traces the making of the poet, his friendships with Maecenas and Augustus, his life on his farm in the Sabine hills, his religion and philosophy as revealed in his poems, and his love of nature.

Booklist 22:110 D '25

Bookm 62:91 S '25 160w

"Miss Haight is well equipped to write a book about Horace. Because she is a professor she might also, in writing of this lively spirit, become pedagogic, even pedantic, in her manner of interpretation. Happily she is endowed with a very gracious sense of humor which lifts her book above the average professor's discourse and brings it to such a high level of common interest that the layman will accept it as a volume of general interest and enjoyment." K. Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 18 '25 1450w

"Rarely does one have the happy fortune to meet with a study so fired with enthusiasm and at the same time based on scholarly foundations. Miss Haight has for Horace the same zest that the Roman poet had for life." P. A. Hutchison

— N Y Times p11 Je 23 '25 2300w

"By putting together the not infrequent autobiographical references in Horace's poems and the few surviving traditions about him it is possible to reconstruct his life in some detail. Miss Haight composes a clear record with ample scholarship and a vivid acquaintance with the landscape of the "Horace country." G: F. Whicher

HAIGHT, ELIZABETH H.—Continued

+ N Y Tribune p11 S 20 '25 900w

Springf'd Republican p6 S 28 '25 400w

HAINES, C. M. Shakespeare in France; criticism: Voltaire to Victor Hugo. (Shakespeare survey) 170p $3.50 Oxford [10s 6d Milford]

822.33 Shakespeare, William—Criticism and interpretation

"Mr. Haines's book is the second instalment of the 'survey' of Shakespeare's fame in foreign lands undertaken by the Shakespeare Association. It deals with certain aspects only of the large problem of Shakespeare in France. The gradual emergence of Shakespeare's reputation and prestige from the early days of Voltaire's patronizing interest, through the period of Voltaire's bitter hostility, and on to the days of Chateaubriand and De Staël, is traced; and the book ends with the Shakespearean vogue of the full-blown Romantics."—Nation

Boston Transcript p2 J1 18 '25 60w

"For the most part it reworks soil that has often been turned over and treads upon familiar ground. There is, however, an understanding of the French 'classical' point of view that has never before been very evident in the work of English scholars upon this subject." S: C. Chew

+ — Nation 121:sup438 O 14 '25 150w

"It is a scholarly and interesting work; perhaps a little difficult to read by reason of its somewhat labouring and close-knit style. This is an unfortunate defect, particularly in an essay on a French theme; but the subject-matter keeps the reader awake; and it would be hard to find omissions or errors."

+ — New Statesman 25:314 Je 27 '25 920w

"Shakespeare is not congenial to the French mind any more than Racine is congenial to the English. Mr. Haines would have made a more interesting book had he chosen to make this problem the real object of his inquiry. Then, instead of a record of conflicts concerning unessentials culminating in an unsubstantial victory, he would have given us food for thought. Unfortunately his plan made this impossible."

— The Times [London] Lit Sup p405 Je 18 '25 3050w

HALDANE, JOHN BURDON SANDERSON. Callinicus; a defence of chemical warfare. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 84p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

623.4 Chemical warfare. Gases, Asphyxiating and poisonous—War use 25-6628

The author, a British chemist, expects future wars so long as there is no scientific study of their causes, such as has resulted in the prevention of most epidemic diseases. If war is then inevitable he claims that the use of poisonous gases and smokes as weapons is more humane than warfare with explosives and the other traditional weapons. He analyzes the objections of pacifists and professional soldiers to the new methods and gives his reasons for believing that chemical weapons will make warfare shorter, more decisive and more dependent on brain and organization than on numbers. He would even go so far as to consider providing gas-masks for the population of large cities and the instruction of school-children in their use.

Booklist 21:331 Je '25

"Mr. Haldane has a salty style and a somewhat bitter wit. He is obviously an extremely intelligent man." D. R.

+ Ind 114:730 Je 27 '25 220w

Reviewed by W. D. Bancroft

J Phys Chem 29:891 J1 '25 850w

"Mr. Haldane injects a pungent dose of fact and clever rillery. He speaks down as only a well-informed English scientist can. His scorn is for the sentimental pacifist and for the 'military mind'; and his dear reader escapes with a chuckle. He gives a clear discussion of the four chief types of useful chemicals, with striking instances of their uses." G. L. Wendt

+ Nation 121:335 S 23 '25 480w

"An extremely able, lively, and serious book, which everyone should read—provided he does not take for granted Mr. Haldane's military pronouncements. Perhaps Mr. Haldane does not do so himself, and I have a sneaking fear that my earnest seeking for military rectitude may make him chuckle as much as his wit undoubtedly did the holiday audience for which this book was originally written as a lecture." Bonamy Dobrée

+ Nation and Ath 36:751 F 28 '25 880w

Reviewed by C. E. Ayres

New Repub 43:80 Je 10 '25 950w

"We are not sure that Mr. Haldane quite makes out his case for chemical warfare, but he has certainly written a very interesting little book which for its size contains an amazing amount of information that will be quite new to nine readers out of ten."

+ — New Statesman 24:540 F 14 '25 750w

"The author's somewhat gentle description of gassing of various kinds and his anti-alarmist attitude about future discoveries in the realm of death-dealing chemicals tend to weaken his general argument for the effectiveness of chemical warfare. This is perhaps unavoidable in a treatise aiming to calm and answer objectors and objections of so many conflicting kinds." Will Cuppy

N Y Tribune p10 Mr 22 '25 650w

Outlook 140:34 My 6 '25 10w

"Mr. Haldane has followed up his success in Daedalus with a still more brilliant book. Everyone who has any interest in the prevention of war for the future should read Mr. Haldane's volume."

+ Spec 134:160 Ja 31 '25 300w

"Mr. Haldane writes with wit and insight; he gives us instances to prove that though we blundered shockingly at times during the War, we seem to have been sensible to the extreme when we are compared with the Germans. He shows that scientific research in England was far more capable and far more inspired than it was in Germany. This is a book to be read by every intelligent adult."

+ Spec 134:204 F 7 '25 750w

Springf'd Republican p12 Je 19 '25 420w

"When a man knows his subject thoroughly and can set out a serious argument with lucidity and force he is sure to write something worth reading; and when in addition he seasons his discourse with a light and humorous irony reading becomes a pleasure. Mr. Haldane's little book has all these qualities."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p112 F 19 '25 1000w

HALL, ARCHIBALD JOHN. Cotton cellulose, its chemistry and technology. 228p il $7.50 Van Nostrand [30s Benn]

677 Cellulose

[25-8283]

"The past few years have marked a great increase in interest in cellulose research. The literature on the subject is widely disseminated and often entangled in the technical language of the textile manufacturer or paper-maker. In fact, it is frequently so esoteric that the general chemical reader has much difficulty in comprehending the plan of many of the researches and interpreting the data. In his preface to 'Cotton Cellulose' Mr. Hall says: 'Although numerous books exist dealing with various phases of cellulose chemistry, it is difficult to find an up-to-date English book treating of this subject in a comprehensive yet concise manner, and this book is written to remedy this defect.' The object of the book is an excellent effort to present the known facts concerning cellulose in a logical and readable manner for the technologist and the chemist."—

Ind & Eng Chem

"This book aims at the difficult goal of treating the subject of cotton cellulose chemistry in a comprehensive, yet concise manner. It is questioned whether this is a desirable way of treating a subject so broad. However, a distinctly worth-while guide to the recent literature of cotton cellulose has been produced by the author."

+ — Chem & Met Eng 32:449 Ap '25 60w

"The slight errors are far outweighed by the amount of useful and interesting information presented and the multiplicity of references to the literature. The method of presentation of the material is very logical and the facts are put forward with clearness and conciseness. The book will be of value to all workers in the field of cellulose chemistry. It deserves publication on a better grade of paper than that which has been used." H. LeB. Gray

+ — Ind & Eng Chem 17:326 Mr '25 1200w

"Mr. Hall has unfortunately begun too soon. The novel sections of his book are those in which he summarises, with little attempt at criticism, the newest results published in Great Britain, but we venture to suggest that as most of the work reviewed is mainly exploratory, a much more interesting story will be told in a few years' time. Furthermore, the author has not quite succeeded in quickening the imagination; true, he does show that cellulose is abundantly reactive, but not in such a way as to attract new workers with its possibilities for research." J. C. Withers

— + Nature 115:757 My 16 '25 1050w

HALL, HARRY, and others, eds. Real estate manual for brokers, owners, and operators. 432p $2.50 Doubleday

658 Real estate business 25-8311

Lectures given in a Y. M. C. A. real estate training course form the contents of the book. Each chapter is a separate lecture by an expert in his subject. The subjects covered, including the important phases of each, are real estate law and real estate practice, and there is an appendix containing legal forms and the code of ethics of the Real Estate Board of New York.

Booklist 21:360 Jl '25

Bookm 61:adv Ap '25 120w

"There is much to learn from the volume, and even the seasoned operator may refresh his memory with details which may assist him in his work. Much valuable advice accompanies the varied dissertations."

+ N Y Times p3 Ap 5 '25 260w

HALL, SIR JOHN RICHARD. Bravo mystery, and other cases. 299p il $3.50 Dodd

343 Murder. Crime and criminals

Studies of five mysterious criminal cases of modern times. England is the scene of four of the cases. The abundance of detail with which they are described gives them a real story interest. The first and longest, a strange case of poisoning, rivalled the celebrated Tichborne trial in interest. Contents: The Bravo mystery; The Northumberland street tragedy; The Duke of Cumberland's valet; An affair of honour; George IV and the Jockey club.

"They make fascinating reading despite the fact that an overabundance of detail sometimes interferes with the main narrative, for in addition to their intrinsic suspense they are related with the racy, reportorial style of the skilled journalist." C: A. Madison

+ Lit R p10 My 29 '25 350w

"Sir John Hall has no giants of crime to reckon with, but his well-told stories are all satisfying." H. M.

+ New Statesman 22:426 Ja 19 '24 700w

"As entertainment the volume is more interesting than many a better book."

+ — N Y Tribune p15 Mr 15 '25 230w

St Louis p123 My '25

"They are full of an enjoyable flavor of antiquity, and of humor to lighten the dark ways through which they wind. Sir John Hall's method of approach to his subject is careful, dignified, and thoroughly readable." E. L. Pearson

+ Sat R of Lit 2:60 Ag 22 '25 800w

HALL, MARSHALL R. Valley of strife. 292p $2 Small

25-11039

"It seems that Clive Morgan rides out of the Mogolons of Arizona looking for a job and finds a girl ranch owner in dire need of protection. And such a girl! Her name is Forest Glade—'Rather silly, isn't it?' she inquires. Unscrupulous persons are trying to drive her off the Swinging J, and when Clive offers to send for 'twenty of the all-firedest riders that ever rode a bronc' in her defence, he means it. The jig is as good as up, for Forest's enemies arrive. The ensuing war is fast, furious, highly enjoyable and eminently successful for Forest Glade."

— N Y Tribune

"The writer knows of what he is writing. He realizes the potency of laughing syllabled dialogue. He mixes the two in an amusing grimace at the conventional Western two-gun story. Some may take him seriously. Those who do not will enjoy themselves immensely."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 27 '25 100w

"The love element does not intrude itself more often than a lady should into a riding, shooting cowboy yarn. Mr. Hall is out to tell a story of a region where men are men, and guns are .45s. He satisfies the literary traditions of this school of fiction."

N Y Times p24 Je 21 '25 250w

"His Southwest dialect alone is good enough to swing a yarn on, and his story building is another recommendation. Rough humor adds spice to a better than average Western tale."

N Y Tribune p9 Jl 5 '25 200w

"The reader who likes 'Westerns' will find in Mr. Hall's romance one of the best we have recently read."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:920 Jl 18 '25 200w

HALL, TROWBRIDGE. Japan in silhouette. 2 353p il $2.50 Macmillan

915.2 Japan—Description and travel 25-25031

Mr. Hall sketches in brief scenes some characteristic sights of old Japan—Tokyo, cherry-blossom time, geisha girls, temples and their pilgrims, the tea ceremony, a Nō dance, theaters. They are varied with legendary tales and biographical sketches and some glimpses of modern literature and the drama.

"The author is one of those writers who write as they run. But he seems to have made a good job of it. The first recommendation in his favor is his style, which is greatly enhanced by the make-up of the book itself. Mr. Hall has tried to overlook the superficial and obvious things in his travels in Japan, but he has failed to some extent, because he evidently does not realize the distinction between the obvious to him and the obvious to those who have read the same things before."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '25 360w

"It is written in the form of short scenes, most of them charming and all bright with color, which remain none the less largely outlines." Miriam Beard

+ — N Y Tribune p10 D 27 '25 360w

"In this book Mr. Hall presents something more than the superficial aspects of Japan as frequently described by travelers. On the whole, he gives an attractive picture of Japan as the intelligent and sympathetic observer finds it to-day."

+ R of Rs 73:111 Ja '26 70w

HALL, TROWBRIDGE—Continued

"Felicitous in title, style, and method of treatment is this book on the charm of old Japan."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:484 Ja 9 '26 360w

HALLIBURTON, RICHARD. Royal road to romance. 399p il $5 Bobbs

910 Voyages and travels 25-21282

On his graduation from Princeton at twenty-one the writer's parents offered him a trip de luxe around the world, but with the thirst of youth for adventure he chose instead a year of vagabondage on his own. The year became an unending lark. With equal zest for high times and low the youthful adventurer found himself penniless in Monte Carlo, in prison for taking forbidden photographs at Gibraltar, plunging into the pool at night in the locked garden of the Taj Mahal, held up by Chinese pirates on the sea, or putting to bed the four-year-old incarnation of Buddha, the holy child of Leh. A wintry climb to the top of Fujiyama was the last gay exploit before the turn of the road that led toward home.

"It is a happy book and well pictured—a book that carries you along with it in its youthful zestful spirit."

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 4 '25 300w

"This illustrated narrative will profoundly interest any one who has ever been young and felt the wanderlust. Mr. Halliburton will undoubtedly do more traveling and write more books, but he can hardly hope to do anything more fascinating and breath taking than this, the story of unpremeditated stumbling into the rare places of the world." A. C. Blerce

+ Lit R p5 N 14 '25 480w

Reviewed by E. Vincent

New Repub 45:118 D 16 '25 80w

"'The Royal Road to Romance' is evidence that its author had a riotously happy time, but it is a book which lacks the perspective of good taste." Janet Ramsay

+ N Y Tribune p11 D '25 320w

"His narrative has life, swift movement, unending variety; it is packed with memorable images."

+ N Y World p6m D 20 '25 420w

"It is a book of travel by a freshman, whose impudence is not attractive, as he and the publishers seem to imagine."

+ Outlook 141:564 D 9 '25 180w

"Mr. Halliburton writes vividly, and much of his description is painted in warm romantic colors. Of course his observation is superficial, his apparent forethought gains by afterthought, and one may question his acute nostalgia for the places he visited; but one cannot deny the intrinsic interest of his picturesque story."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:279 N 7 '25 280w

HALLOCK, GRACE T. Dramatizing child health; a new book of health plays. 306p $2 Am. child health assn.

613 Hygiene. Children's plays 25-11249

"The first eighty pages of the book, which are written for the teacher, give suggestions and directions for producing health plays. The remaining part of the book is devoted to a variety of materials. 'A Group of Plays and Dialogues,' a chapter on the 'Dramatization of Stories in Cho Cho and the Health Fairy,' a chapter on 'Singing and Dancing,' and a good chapter on 'Health Pageantry.' There is also an extensive bibliography, which is classified according to the topics covered in each part of the book."—El School J

"Miss Hallock has made a distinct contribution to the rapidly growing literature on child health. Her book will be of practical worth to every grade teacher who wishes to vitalize her health teaching. 'Dramatizing Child Health' is not only sound psychologically and helpful in its many suggestions but it is charmingly written." J. M. Andress

+ Am J Pub Health 15:909 O '25 250w

"All in all, a highly commendable volume, really well decorated, and to date the only thoroughgoing volume of its kind."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 19 '25 160w

"Should be of material help to elementary-school teachers and to directors of dramatic activities."

+ El School J 26:158 O '25 180w

"The book is very attractively illustrated and bound, and the chapters on language expression, dramatic activity in the class room and on the writing and producing of plays are all valuable, and would be useful to teachers and helpful in any kind of dramatic work." C. W. Harley

+ J Home Econ 18:45 Ja '26 520w

HAMAIDE, AMELIE. Decroly class, with a preface by Ed. Claparède; tr. from the French by Jean Lee Hunt. 318p il $2 Dutton

371.3 Schools, Experimental. Education of Children. Decroly, Ovide 25-691

The little school founded in Brussels in 1907 by Ovide Decroly, physician, psychologist and educator, has become the model for a dozen classes of the school system of Brussels and its suburbs. It has been called the Belgian project method and there are certain similarities as well as contrasts between the Decroly method and the project teaching which is so important a subject of discussion among American teachers. Miss Hamaide gives a detailed exposition of the Decroly school plan and shows how its principles have been applied.

Booklist 21:259 Ap '25

"This is all very well, but it is old stuff. Belgium is welcome to it, and is to be congratulated on having tried for herself what other nations tried years ago; for nations, like individuals, have to solve their own problems and do so by beginning at the beginning." A. W. Porterfield

+ Bookm 61:241 Ap '25 1250w

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 22 '25 250w

"Decroly seeks to organize education not as a number of separate subjects but as a correlated series of experiences that are analogous to the conditions of everyday life. For this reason he makes use of the potential educational facilities which the community possesses to an extent that is rarely found in America, where such economy is still mostly at the discussion stage. In other respects the book contributes little that is new to American educational theory. At the same time it indicates that some European centers are keeping abreast of the best that America is doing." P. L. Palmer

El School J 25:634 Ap '25 550w

"The whole book is a fascinating exposition as well as a concrete illustration of the Decroly system. Even where the educator finds in it material with which he is familiar, he will, as suggested in the translator's preface, find inspiration in the 'recognition of the same fundamental truths' by an original thinker across the sea." Helen Wallerstein

+ Lit R p9 F 21 '25 300w

"Invaluable to teachers attempting to provide opportunities for children to develop all their possibilities freely and harmoniously." Agnes deLima

+ New Repub 43:158 Jl 1 '25 380w

"Delightful book." Evelyn Dewey

+ N Y Tribune p10 F 15 '25 680w

"Like the Montessori method, this system of the Belgian educator was first applied to difficult and deficient children. As great success attended in this field, greater success followed with normal children. These young Brussels sprouts grew in a most extraordinary way. But what strikes one in the Decroly class is the extreme ingenuity of the teachers. Their ingenious methods have made the Decroly school a model even for some of our own educators."

+ Outlook 141:164 S 30 '25 280w

"An inspirational bit of writing is to be found in Jean Lee Hunt's Translator's Introduction, the keynote of which is the interdependence of those of us who are experimenting in education. We have every reason to thank her for bringing this book within our reach." Caroline Pratt

+ Sat R of Lit 1:580 Mr 7 '25 700w

Survey 54:113 Ap 15 '25 200w

Wis Lib Bul 21:166 Je '25

HAMILTON, ALICE. Industrial poisons in the United States. 590p il $5 (21s) Macmillan

613.6 Poisons. Occupations—Diseases and hygiene 25-9271

"By the Assistant Professor of Industrial Medicine, Harvard Medical School, and formerly Special Investigator of Poisonous Industries for the United States Bureau of Labour Statistics. Dr. Hamilton has been for many years examining records of hospitals and dispensaries and interviewing physicians in various parts of the United States in search of information on this subject. She notices here that, on account of the absence of a health insurance system in the United States such as obtains in industrial Europe, accurate statistics on these subjects is lacking there; but so far as possible she has presented American material, while drawing upon foreign observations in many cases. She has some interesting remarks on differences in methods in many American and European trades and occupations."—The Times [London] Lit Sup

"We question the title of the book as fitting, since the material is overwhelmingly not American but foreign in derivation. At the same time much work by Americans which we would consider of importance has been omitted. Irrespective of the criticisms made, we can assure the reader that he will find a wealth of material in this volume which contains a valuable necum to treasures invaluable to those interested in industrial poisons." E. R. Hayhurst

+ Am J Pub Health 15:907 O '25 1200w

"A careful scholarly study, the result of much patient investigation."

+ Booklist 22:58 N '25

"Dr. Hamilton, unlike many of her medical colleagues, is reasonably familiar with chemical processes: rarely does she fail to use the tribal language of the chemist accurately, and she always translates factory slang into English. Even the academic chemist can, therefore, read this work with pleasure and profit, and if he is inclined to assist in biological and pathological investigations, he will find many problems suggested to him in its pages." T. A. H.

+ Nature 116:604 O 24 '25 300w

"Dr. Hamilton has presented a general survey which will endure. Industrial processes will change; new inventions, new re-agents will come into use; none the less here is a mapping which will not only serve future explorers, but can be turned to direct practical account today. All physicians, nurses, and social workers who have to deal with men and women who suffer injury or sickness in the day's work, should have this book on their shelves." P. U. Kellogg

+ Survey 55:175 N 1 '25 1000w

"Important work."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p498 Jl 23 '25 150w

HAMILTON, ARTHUR EDWARD. Real boy and the new school. 386p $2.50 Boni & Liveright

173 Education. Boys

25-21179

The author is a teacher of boys who has not forgotten his own boyhood and the influences that helped or hindered him in meeting its problems. Remembering his own experiences, he has sought to understand and help the boys who have come to him, in camp, in the class-room and at the fireside, with their confidences and their questionings about religion, books, sex, and marriage.

"Stimulating, speculative, and engrossing to all interested in the welfare of children."

+ Bookm 62:19 Ja '26 220w

"A country made up of men so trained will act coherently in emergencies, for such men will have learned to be citizens in a democracy."

+ Nation 121:711 D 16 '25 120w

"Should make good reading for all who still have to be taught that boyhood is real and that education loses nothing by being equally real."

+ Survey 55:257 N 15 '25 *70w

HAMILTON, CLARENCE GRANT. Piano music. 235p il $2 Ditson

786.4 Pianoforte music

25-11851

A history of the development of piano music from its early beginnings in the classic schools to present-day styles, with sketches of the composers and their works and an account of the evolution of the piano. Lists of music and books for further study are appended to each chapter.

"A compact and useful book. His treatment of the harpsichord as an obsolete relic is curious in view of the recent revival of that antique instrument, and one need not follow him to the letter in his estimates of the various composers that he takes up. But in the main this is the kind of book that invites the verdict 'sound,' and it is, furthermore, eminently readable and well provided with apt illustrations." Pitts Sanborn

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ag 2 '25 220w

Outlook 140:501 Ag 5 '25 20w

HAMILTON, CLAYTON MEEKER. Conversations on contemporary drama. 218p $2 (9s) Macmillan

809.2 Drama. Dramatists 24-25209

Mr Hamilton's book consists of a series of nine informal lectures delivered at Columbia university and stenographically reported. In them he gives reasons for his belief that we are living in an unusually creative period of the drama and one worthy of serious study. Contents: The contemporary drama; Edmond Rostand; George Bernard Shaw; Sir James Matthew Barrie; Sir Arthur Wing Pinero; John Galsworthy; Luigi Pirandello and Maurice Maeterlinck; American drama at the present time; Eugene O'Neill.

Booklist 21:190 F '25

"Brisk, stimulating and sometimes brilliant commentary."

+ Cleveland p5 Ja '25

"Now that William Archer is no more, there is no student of the stage either in this country or in Europe whose knowledge of the drama is wider or deeper than Mr. Clayton Hamilton's. It is this cosmopolitan outlook which has enabled Mr. Hamilton to grasp the abiding and unchanging principles of playmaking and to perceive how temporary are the practices of the moment, certain to be modified from generation to generation. Perhaps the superiority of Mr. Hamilton's youngest volume is due to its unity of topic and its harmony of tone." Brander Matthews

+ Int Bk R p267 Mr '25 750w

Nation 121:100 Jl 15 '25 60w

"Experimentally, this book is of interest, as being the shorthand report of a series of nine ex tempore lectures. They reveal a massive familiarity with the modern stage, a disciplined mind and a keen sense of beauty. Yet, when all is said, they are based on the assumption that the theatre is a law unto itself, has a life of its own, and an end of which drama is the means." J. Carter

+ N Y Times p4 Ja 4 '25 650w

HAMILTON, C. M.—Continued

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Outlook 138:508 N 26 '24 200w

St Louis p111 Ap '25

"There is excessive facetiousness in phrase and there is little underlying organization. But there are insight and knowledge, too, and Americans who instinctively feel that they are reading 'bunk' when the critics of the New York press exhibit raptures over some exotic or labored novelty will be thankful for Mr Hamilton's appreciative and informing, if desultory, observations on Pinero, Jones, Shaw, Barrie and Galsworthy."

+ — Springfd Republican p12 Ap 10 '25
200w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p336 My
14 '25 30w

Theatre Arts Mo 9:137 F '25 150w

HAMILTON, CLAYTON MEEKER. Wanderings. 162p il $5 Doubleday

914 Europe—Description and travel 25-21901

The first of these little essays was written in 1903, when the author was twenty-one, and the last in 1922. The author has rescued them from the limbo of forgotten magazines and presents them with a wistful gesture toward the youth who wrote them. Ernest Peixotto has made the lovely drawings which illustrate the book.

"Enjoyable and worth reading, but not of essential importance."

+ — Booklist 22:156 Ja '26

Boston Transcript p7 O 7 '25 720w

Reviewed by H: B. Fuller
Int Bk R p13 D '25 950w

"They are all sketches done in the author's youth; and Mr. Hamilton has wisely refrained from 'correcting' and altering. The pages have the breathless suspense of youth coming, for the first time, face to face with the wonder of the world—both the world of nature's and the world of man's making. And this lends charm and now and again enchantment."

+ N Y Times p3 O 25 '25 200w

Reviewed by Blair Niles

N Y Tribune p9 D 27 '25 350w

"Charming sketches of travel just issued in exquisite format under the title 'Wanderings,' a volume made more precious to lovers of the beautiful by twelve drawings from the pen of Ernest C. Peixotto." W: Johnston

+ N Y World p7m N 15 '25 250w

Outlook 141:611 D 16 '25 80w

"It is pleasant to turn these innocent pages—we could do with more of them. For their author is born preacher of the sweet religion of traveling, and can always be depended on to write beautifully of the imperfect happenings which befall even the luckiest of wanderers."

+ Sat of Lit 2:438 D 19 '25 230w

HAMILTON, COSMO. Paradise. 295p $2 Little

25-3543

According to his uncle's judgment, the Hon Anthony Stirling-Fortescue was a misfit in the present age of civilization, but the London police called him a prodigate. Suddenly two events occur which greatly change Tony's manner of living. The first is the meeting with Chrissie, a piquant music-hall artist whom Tony falls in love with and marries in an incredibly short time, and the second, is the war, from which he emerges a hero, Wing Commander, R.A.F. Post war conditions bring economic problems to Tony, but the bequest of his deceased father, discovered in an opportune moment—an island in the South Seas—opens up a new world for Tony and his bride where at last he wins success and happiness.

Cleveland p67 Je '25

"A good story which holds the reader's attention, and a good picture of post-war discontent. Some of the characters are attractive and genuine, but others are obviously mere lay figures."

+ — Ind 114:219 F 21 '25 170w

"An excellent piece of workmanship." H. L. Pangborn

+ Int Bk R p311 Ap '25 100w

"Written for that large and genial public with whom reading is tempered by intellectual illiteracy and whose mental processes, as related to literature, are mechanical rather than reflective, it carries a group of striking stock characters through a variety of emotional and scenic stock situations to a stock happy ending on a stock South Sea island. 'Paradise' would make a good motion picture; and, by the same token, it makes a very poor book."

— N Y Times p8 F 1 '25 1100w

"'Paradise' hasn't much body for a novel; the idea is spread out thin and tested beyond its capacity. But, for all that, it is readable and shrewdly contrived."

+ — N Y Tribune p9 F 8 '25 170w

N Y World p7m Mr 8 '25 220w

HAMILTON, MRS MARY AGNES (ADAMSON) (ICONOCLAST, pseud.). J. Ramsay MacDonald (1923-1925). 191p $2 Seltzer

B or 92 MacDonald, James Ramsay. Labor party (Great Britain) 25-10408

Beginning with a brief résumé of events leading up to and bringing about its election, Iconoclast presents in easily readable form an account of the Labour party in office. This story of MacDonald as premier is a further study of the Labour leader's character, and traces the rise and fall of his great personal popularity. The book supplements an earlier life of MacDonald by the same author.

Booklist 22:70 N '25

"The viewpoint is partisan but it is not so biased as to be unsound."

+ — Bookm 62:223 O '25 130w

"Iconoclast has allowed praise so far to overbalance blame as to give to her book something of the impression of a eulogy. As it has not been Mr. MacDonald's fortune to be praised overmuch, the commendation which is here given to him may at least be welcomed as an indication of a fairly widespread state of mind, at the same time that it may help to a better understanding of the political events in Great Britain during the two or three years with which the book deals." W: MacDonald

N Y Times p3 Je 21 '25 1300w

Reviewed by Cameron Rogers

N Y Tribune p12 Ji 19 '25 700w

"In her first book on Ramsay MacDonald, 'Iconoclast' gave us a brilliant, entertaining and illuminating portrait of the most interesting publicist in England, and in this volume she gives us an equally graphic interpretation of the man in the Premiership." C. G. Bow-ers

+ N Y World p4m Je 28 '25 520w

Outlook 140:530 Ag 12 '25 10w

R of Rs 72:556 N '25 120w

"For the reason that the MacDonald Government was singularly centered in one man, and that man one of rare and compelling qualities, the readers of biographical estimates will find this an interesting book, one that like the post mortems over a bridge hand, stimulates limitless discussion."

+ Sat R of Lit 1:918 Ji 18 '25 300w

HAMILTON, PATRICK. Monday morning. 312p $2 Houghton [7s 6d Constable]

A pleasantly humorous story of Life and Work and Love (in the capitals of youth) in London at eighteen. Anthony is eighteen and just out of public school. Life begins on Monday. He will study a bit, write a great deal, become famous, and sometime of course he will fall in love. It is a nice program. Presently Diane comes along to help him carry it out.

"His Anthony hero is outrageously human and charming, a trifle falsetto, perhaps, but not so very, and he makes up for soprano tones by his honest delight in earthly things such as, for example, food. A hero with an appetite these days is a hero." J. F.

+ Bookm 62:332 N '25 120w

Boston Transcript p6 N 7 '25 280w

"Monday Morning" is a first novel that proves, as well as promises, marked talent in its author."

+ N Y Tribune p17 N 15 '25 100w

"Easy stuff, you may say, and very slapdash. I do not deny it. The book is a piece of cheek, if you like, a variant on an old joke. But it made me laugh aloud, and I am accordingly grateful." Gerald Bullett

+ Sat R 140:164 Ag 8 '25 420w

"This is an excellent first novel written in high spirits to describe the delightful fatuity of youth. Not many young writers have seen so clearly as Mr. Hamilton through their own foibles and follies, for quite obviously there is a large autobiographical background to the book."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:347 N 28 '25 260w

"As a holiday book this is to be strongly recommended: it will excite no thought, but any amount of personal reminiscence."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p520 Ag 6 '25 350w

HAMILTON, VEREKER MONTEITH. Things that happened. 280p il $5.50 Longmans [16s E. Arnold]

B or 92

[25-21431]

Things are likely to happen to an adventure-loving Scotchman, and when to the questing spirit is added the gift of second sight, some of the things that happen are sure to be of the uncanny sort not to be explained away as mere coincidence. Mr. Hamilton's recollections begin with tales of his quiet childhood in Argyllshire and go on to later strenuous days in Ceylon, India and South Africa, where he has interesting adventures both in the flesh and in the spirit.

"The book, as a whole, is of rather limited public interest, but in certain particulars it will not fail to amuse and instruct the public on both sides of the Atlantic." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 18 '25 600w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p213 Mr 26 '25 1100w

HAMILTON, WALTON HALE, and WRIGHT, HELEN RUSSELL. Case of bituminous coal; with the aid of the council and staff of the Institute of economics. (Inst. of economics ser. Investigations in industry and labor) 310p $2.50 Macmillan

33.2 Coal mines and mining. Coal industry 25-22935

This volume is the second in a series of studies on coal sponsored by the Institute of economics. The authors analyse the present confusion in the coal industry and forecast its immediate future, but do not attempt to suggest a constructive program. That is left for a later volume in the series.

"A valuable but not an exhaustive handbook on the subject." F. L. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '25 920w

R of Rs 73:112 Ja '26 100w

"Something that is not quite a book. Rather it is an introduction to a book, and a fine introduction, the writing of which was obviously the source of considerable pleasure to the authors. The reader enjoys it all, for it is a brilliantly written book." J. A. Fitch

+ Survey 55:245 N 15 '25 1050w

HAMSUN, KNUT. Benoni; tr. from the Norwegian by Arthur G. Chater. 251p $2.50 Knopf 25-16655

"In 'Benoni' Hamsun makes it plain that he believes success in money matters can only be owing to either of two causes, luck or sharp practice. By sheer blind luck, the peasant fisherman, Benoni, acquired a fishing schooner, a house, shops and wharves; and finally forty thousand dollars in cash fell into his hands for the mineral rights of a heap of rocks he had bought for next to nothing. But he got very little benefit of it all; it could not widen his range of satisfactions, nor even win him the girl he wanted, the minister's daughter. And he was always an easy prey of the local banker, one of the sharp gentry."—Bookm

Booklist 22:117 D '25

"Simplicity is a highly desirable quality in fiction, but like all good things, it may be overdone. Knut Hamsun's 'Benoni' suffers from this excess of merit. Except for the unreality of the financial deals 'Benoni' is a faithful and therefore slightly dull transcript of the daily and yearly round of existence in a Norway fishing village." Isabel Paterson

+ Bookm 62:86 S '25 220w

"It is a very delightful tale of Norway that Mr. Hamsun now portrays, yet one that doubtless owes much of its interest to the fact that most of its readers are unfamiliar with the country described." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 14 '25 750w

"Among all Hamsun's novels 'Benoni' is the breeziest and most amusing, perhaps because we feel the author's own pleasure in returning to the background he likes best of all, the small village in Arctic Norway." H. A. Larsen

+ Int Bk R p740 O '25 800w

"In the light of 'Growth of the Soil,' 'Benoni' seems ephemeral; removed from such derogatory proximity, it stands up boldly and four-square as a considerable achievement."

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 30 '25 650w

"He shows here the same discursive habit of telling a story without resorting to the standard tricks of technique to arrest or retain attention. Events just happen, the outcome is never forced. It is the natural conversational quality of Hamsun's writing that contributes much of his charm." R. H. Gjelsness

+ N Y Tribune p11 O 18 '25 1000w

"To say that Hamsun makes even the foreign reader know and feel the background of the tiny fishing village, is minor comment; yet it is this ability to portray the little thing and the little person with a sense of reality and significance which has made Mr. Hamsun one of the world's leading contemporary creative writers."

+ Spring'd Republican p7a N 29 '25 220w

HAMSUN, KNUT. Segelfoss-town; tr. from the Norwegian by J. S. Scott. 368p $2.50 Knopf

25-4775

In Segelfoss town the author writes simply and graphically of life in a small Norwegian coast town with its social and occupational contrasts. The rise of the young storekeeper, the struggle of the old miller against the new freedom of the mill hands, the return of the young squire—these are the threads of which the narrative is woven.

Booklist 21:302 My '25

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield
Bookm 61:244 Ap '25 350w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Bookm 61:354 My '25 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 21 '25 620w

Cleveland p81 Jl '25

Dial 79:259 S '25 80w

"The view is pessimistic, but we need not be depressed by it. Each detail of that vast canvas is drawn with a minutely scrupulous brush, and most of them are humorous in one way or another. It is grim humor, outright bitter at times, but we are diverted by it, nevertheless. And the long line of characters who pass in review before us in 'Segelfoss Town' are as effective as any similar Dickensian gallery in making us enjoy even their weaknesses and vices." Edwin Björkman

HAMSUN, KNUT—Continued

+ Int Bk R p354 Ap '25 750w

"His 'Segelfoss Town,' like its predecessor, 'Children of the Age,' is above all, a series of amusing or touching or illuminating human portraits. And some of the characters which should be most provoking to the author are among the most lifelike and diverting in their weakness and crookedness. His style is alluring, too." Edwin Björkman

+ Lit R p4 My 9 '25 650w

"Such abundance of invention with such sureness of grasp, such soundness, is almost incredible in our literature to-day. To parallel it one has to go back to the Victorians." Edwin Muir

+ Nation and Ath 37:372 Je 20 '25 120w

Reviewed by Rose Lee

New Repub 43:244 Jl 22 '25 250w

"I find this particular book too long; there are fine flashes of poetry and sympathy, there are living characters, there are moving incidents—but we expect more of all these than we get." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 25:397 Jl 18 '25 100w

"Knut Hamsun's novel shows us love-making and death, drunkenness and piety, greed, malice and generosity. He presents a portrait gallery of rich and poor, shrewd and simple, lovable and disagreeable personages. He exposes the sham values of much modernity, and suggests, while never directly recommending, a restoration of the significant tinsel of life in the place of life's cheap conveniences. He unites a gift for profound observation with a deep knowledge of his people."

+ N Y Times p8 F 15 '25 1100w

"'Segelfoss Town' is a good book, it will be interesting to lovers of Hamsun—it contains a couple of memorable characters and a few memorable scenes, but it is far from ranking with the best of Hamsun's work, or even with that earlier novel of which it is the concluding half." R. L. Wolf

+ N Y Tribune p3 Mr 8 '25 500w

"'Segelfoss Town' is either too long or too unresolved in form. At least twenty well-defined characters, no two of which repeat each other, vie for major importance. Even 'Main Street' had more variety. For the rest, the novel shares the qualities of Knut Hamsun's other work. It is written with his usual objective clarity, and a detachment which is not always speciously maintained." Adrian Rich

+ N Y World p7m F 15 '25 570w

Pratt p39 autumn '25

Reviewed by A. W. Porterfield

Sat R of Lit 1:787 My 30 '25 550w

Springf'd Republican p7a Mr 1 '25 850w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p462 Jl 9 '25 520w

Wis Lib Bul 21:91 Mr '25

HANARANDA, MULLA. Cabriba, the garden of the gods. 421p $3 Am. library service

25-15122

The hero, Metandra, born of English parents in India has imbibed from childhood the teachings of the Vedas and the Upanishads and the oriental feeling for the occult. Years later in England he wakes one morning to find on his table a Sanskrit manuscript in his own writing which urges him to seek "Cabriba, the garden of the gods," a state of transcendent bliss. The search begins. Metandra, possessed of occult powers see in a vision Mohanda, his tutelary spirit whom he instantly recognizes as a friend met many times in many incarnations. Late in his wanderings guided always by Mohanda, he meets and loves Anjera, a reincarnation of his mother, and finally attains Cabriba personified in a surpassing earthly love. The book is occupied with the philosophy of the East, particularly emphasizing the doctrines of reincarnation.

Boston Transcript p4 D 19 '25 300w

"The writing is rich in symbolism, full of color, and would seem almost astounding in prophecy to a reader who has not read the writings of the East. To a few 'Cabriba' will prove the story that demands a second and a third reading, for it contains the experiences of a most unusual nature and these experiences are admirably presented to the reader in the colorful and fascinating language of the East." E. S. Alexander

+ Lit R p8 Ja 2 '26 300w

"'Cabriba' is a naïve book; but its exotic setting, its oracular attitude, and its artificially persuasive style make it a curious book. Its thesis, if absurd, is preposterous enough to be amusing. This book will not lack readers—and followers."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:89 Ag 29 '25 200w

HANKINS, ARTHUR PRESTON. Canyon gold.

312p $2 Macaulay

25-16896

A hidden vein of gold in a rocky canyon of the West; an engagingly versatile prospector; a girl from the East and a girl from the West in love with the same man; a group of enemies who stalk him; love, rivalry and treachery in the prospecting camp and a desperate battle in the canyon: such are the materials from which this tale of love and adventure is made.

"Good standard yarn of the western type, with a bit stronger infusion of romance—the feminine element—than is required by the straight cowboy adventure story. The slant of the yarn is sufficiently different to give it freshness."

+ Springf'd Republican p5a Ja 10 '26 130w

HANNAH, IAN CAMPBELL. Christian monasticism; a great force in history. 270p $2.50 Macmillan [10s 6d Allen & U.]

271 Monasticism and religious orders 25-8798

This study is an appraisal of the contribution of Christian monasticism to the progress and culture of the world. It traces the inner development of the monastic idea from earliest times, the growth of the monastery as a spiritual force, and its inevitable implication in temporal affairs.

"Professor Hannah is much more interested in social history than in religion; and he has written a history book which is certainly readable—indeed, interesting. He has an eye for the picturesque in characters and events, and has read widely. But we fear that we must conclude by saying that this book is not written for the readers of The New Statesman: we are tempted to say that it is not written for Europeans. The writer gives the impression that much of the book was written where the whole story of the Ages of Faith seems as remote and bookish as the Pharaohs or the Aztecs. We also get the impression that the writer only too often pictured his readers as a college class, of whose general culture and specific interest in Christian Monasticism no great assurance could be entertained."

+ New Statesman 25:582 S 5 '25 700w

Outlook 140:115 My 20 '25 30w

"Interesting as are the many facts related in this volume, and much as is the author to be commended for bringing together and making available much material not readily accessible, one can hardly refrain from expressing the wish that the book had given a more critical analysis of the meaning of the events it relates."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 18 '25 620w

"He takes a comprehensive and within its limits a complete view of the influence of monasticism upon the civilization of Europe, and his book shows wide and accurate study and genuine independence and sympathy."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p494 J1 23 '25 900w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Bindon Parva. 319p $2 Bobbs [7s 6d Mills & B.]

25-17117

There is a theory that strong human emotions do not pass with the scene that aroused them, but live as an influence, a force, in the very walls of the building where the stormy scene took place. Thus the quiet atmosphere of a church may be impregnated with the violent passions that stirred the hearts of those who worshipped there. Maturin, the eccentric vicar of Bindon Parva, is keenly sensitive to such an atmosphere in his old church. He goes so far as to hold services for those long dead saints and sinners who were one time pastors of the parish. A series of mural paintings is uncovered on the walls, and as each allegorical picture of vice or of virtue is brought to light, Maturin tells the decorator the corresponding story of one of his ghostly flock.

Booklist 22:73 N '25

"To say that these stories place their author in the highest rank of English romanticists is to tell the half only. By the bitter accuracy, or heartening splendor, of character delineation, by the cold certainty of the fate which overtakes his personages, he takes his stand among the realists. The carping critic would say that this could not be done, that one could not write east of the sun and west of the moon as well. The answer is that not everyone could write 'Bindon Parva.'" I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 19 '25 1700w

"The stories are worth reading."

+ Ind 115:247 Ag 29 '25 200w

"Mr. Birmingham's characters talk with simplicity and charm, and are decidedly real. The stories, light of touch and drily humorous, often have no particular plot, are sometimes astoundingly moral, almost to the point of absurdity; but nevertheless they have a delightful flavor of what their author calls 'plain sense in the sunlight or vague ecstasies in shadowy places.'" J. H. Preston

+ Int Bk R p827 N '25 450w

"The outstanding quality of this book is its extraordinary coherence. Here are stories set in a central unity like spokes within a wheel, uneven in their merit as stories, it must be granted, but undeniably complementary to one another; and, by virtue of a gravely simple style, pleasant to read." E. B. H.

+ New Repub 44:211 O 14 '25 180w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Outlook 141:126 S 23 '25 230w

"One hopes that this new medium which he has found for the display of his entertaining humanness may appeal to him again and that some day it will lead him to essay an entire novel in his more sober vein."

Springf'd Republican p7a N 15 '25 380w

"All the stories sound, more or less clearly, the didactic note; and the author might have left his stories to speak their message for themselves and have cut Maturin clean out of his book. But then he would have had to leave out the architect; and the architect is the advocatus diaboli all through, supplying the needed figure of the unimaginative man listening in 'a land of common sense' to tales whose purport leads his experience astray. He is a foil, too, for the flashes of delightful humour that the author, for all his serious purpose, cannot suppress."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p118 F 19 '25 320w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Wayfarer in Hungary. 210p il $4 Dutton [8s 6d Methuen]

914.39 Hungary—Description and travel

Mr Birmingham spent the greater part of two years in Hungary as chaplain to the British community in Budapest. He went there full of sympathetic curiosity about the country and its people, a sympathy which he retained to the end. His book is a distinctly personal account of his experiences and opinions.

Booklist 22:156 Ja '26

"Whether discoursing of his fondness for tea with rum, his passionate hatred of Tzigany bands, or the customs, costumes, amusements, art, and life of the Magyars, he is pleasantly unopinionated."

+ Bookm 62:620 Ja '26 250w

Reviewed by Helen Wallerstein
Lit R p4 N 7 '25 120w

"The book is thoughtful, straightforward and observant; the author is thoroughly familiar with the scenes described; and he writes against a background of history and of travel." Blair Niles

+ N Y Tribune p24 O 25 '25 750w

"Everything that he has to say in this book is interesting, and most of it amusing, especially when he is on the subjects of food and music." Earle Walbridge

+ Outlook 141:448 N 18 '25 180w

"His account of the present state of affairs in Hungary and his glance at the future possibilities of that country are marked by good sense, and his brief sketch of Count Tisza's life and death is admirably done."

+ Sat R 140:352 S 26 '25 80w

"Whether he is travelling or staying at home, George Birmingham may be counted upon to interest his readers. His book about Hungary is delightful and will surely take many a wayfarer to Budapest."

+ Spec 135:664 O 17 '25 280w

Springf'd Republican p7a D 13 '25 150w

The Times [London] Lit Sup p515 Ag 6 '25 800w

HANSTEIN, OTFRID VON. World of the Incas; a socialistic state of the past; tr. by Anna Barwell. 189p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Allen & U.]

985 Incas

[25-1478]

For 400 years there flourished under the Incas of South and Central America "the most communistic state the world has ever seen." The book gives a fascinating account of the rise of this remarkable civilization in the twelfth century under Manco Capac, of the centuries of increasing culture and progress among the peaceful citizens of the state, and of its destruction in its heyday during the 16th century by the Spanish conquistador Pizarro.

"The story of the old Inca civilization is here told again with ample utilization of the materials available, and with stress on their more spectacular features." E. N.

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 8 '25 680w

Reviewed by Stuart Chase

New Repub 45:23 N 25 '25 330w

New Statesman 24:supxvi D 6 '24 70w

"This story is made from an interesting and unusual point of view."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 30 '25 220w

"The author has written a book of interest to the historian, sociologist, economist, and of romantic appeal to the lay reader. He has a vivid, human story to tell, the tale of how one man, Pizarro, murdered a contented, ordered nation of some twelve million people." Paul Sifton

+ N Y World p4m Ag 30 '25 660w

Outlook 141:166 S 30 '25 10w

"This book is interesting because of its subject. But there was little reason for its translation into English, and the student would obtain better information from the works of Sir Clements Markham, or even from the rather prejudiced Garcillasso de la Vega. A serious fault lies in the spelling of native words."

HANSTEIN, OTFRID von—Continued

— + The Times [London] Lit Sup p105 F 12 '25 260w

HANTON, WILLIAM ALEXANDER. Mechanics of textile machinery. 236p il $4.20 (12s 6d) Longmans

677 Textile machinery 24-30424

"Presupposes some knowledge of elementary mechanics and of textile machinery. Deals mainly with machinery for spinning and weaving cotton. Includes driving and testing of textile machinery."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:410 J1 '25

HARBORD, JAMES GUTHRIE. Leaves from a war diary. 407p il $5 Dodd

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 25-18882

These intimate comments and observations on men and events in the World war were written without thought of publication during the writer's service with the A.E.F. Owing to the intimate nature of the papers they were sent by courier, as occasion permitted, to General Harbord's wife in New York. Along with vivid glimpses of the stirring days of 1917-18, there are interesting sketches of contemporary World war heroes seen thru the eyes of a comrade in arms.

"Throughout the book there is evident a keenness of observation, an appreciative perception of encountered realities, both military and the reverse, which lead one to hope that General Harbord's appearance in the literary field may not be limited to this single eloquent and noteworthy work."

+ Bookm 62:509 D '25 160w

"A more vivid and readable story of experiences at the war front, with the horrors of war not over-emphasized and the stress laid on America's part in work behind the lines, as well as on the pleasanter incidents of her campaign, has not thus far been written." Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 17 '25 1900w

"There is something boyish both in General Harbord's style and in his thinking on many points. It is a shrewd boyishness. His comments are pointed, very frank, and often 'indiscreet.' In another country this book would be a bomb-shell which would explode a great many sympathetic bombshells in military and official circles. Here it will be read with amusement and a few sardonic comments."

Ind 115:508 O 31 '25 220w

"General Harbord proves in this book to be a born letter writer, which means that 'Leaves From a War Diary' is eminently readable. Perhaps it would have been better for a little judicious editing and for brave deletion here and there." H: E. Armstrong

+ — N Y Times p5 O 11 '25 2450w

"General Harbord is inoffensive in his sophistication, he is exquisite in the artistry of his touch. His style dominates the welter of confusion afforded by the materials he has to arrange into a narrative as arresting as any serial story. Any man, accordingly, who knows how to read a book of which the theme is war will take his leave of General Harbord's diary with respect and admiration for the combination of splendid qualities it discloses with so impeccable a taste." Alexander Harvey

+ N Y Tribune p4 N 15 '25 740w

"'Leaves from a War Diary' is unimilitary, full of wonderful indiscretions, informative on points which the average military man thinks never should be discussed before the mere layman. There is more, much more, to be told about what really happened in the World War.

It is to be hoped there were many other chronicles written in shirt-sleeves—or without them." E. J. Young

+ N Y World p5m O 11 '25 920w

Outlook 141:489 N 25 '25 50w

"His diary is anything but a military record, although it contains the full story of the achievements of the A. E. F. But it is full of pen pictures of the men and women who had a part in those stirring events, and its informality is perhaps its greatest charm. It is a splendid contribution to the history of the American war effort."

+ R of Rs 72:557 N '25 220w

HARDEN, MAXIMILIAN. I meet my contemporaries; tr. from the German by William C. Lawton; with an introd. by James W. Gerard. 287p $4 Holt

923.2 Statesmen

In these articles Germany's leading and militant journalist, editor of the Zukunft, who before and during the war assailed the Kaiser and the ruling class in Germany, draws the personalities of some of the leading public men of recent years. Contents: Maximilian Harden; Woodrow Wilson; Lloyd George; Clemenceau; The Hindenburg myth; Stinnes; King Peter of Serbia; Lenin; Sarah Bernhardt; Bonaparte in adversity.

"Harden's is one of the most difficult of German literary styles, which is saying a great deal. He is verbose, turgid, apocalyptic. What a good American copy-desk man would not do to any one of Harden's present chapters is not worth mentioning. And yet these are the very qualities by which he has succeeded. In this militant journalist the trappings of an inflated style enwrap an uncommon fund of practical knowledge and hard common sense. Sincerity coupled with capacity for thinking a problem through is a pretty effective combination." Simon Strunsky

+ — N Y Times p4 Ja 3 '26 1900w

"It is a pity that the articles are not definitely dated. One can occasionally infer the time of writing, but in other cases there is a doubt. The translation seems to be acceptably done, on the whole, though Harden's style, modeled largely on Heine and Börne, necessarily loses much of its pungency in English." W. K. Stewart

+ — N Y Tribune p1 Ja 3 '26 1400w

HARDENBERGH, WILLIAM A. Home sewage disposal. 274p il $3.50 (16s) Lippincott

628.3 Sewage disposal 24-11446

"A practical work on field sanitation and sewage disposal for unsewered areas. Especially for engineers and health workers concerned with disposal for single homes, small communities, and institutions."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 30:417 J1 '25

Pratt Technical Books p14 '24

HARDING, WILLIAM PROCTOR GOULD. Formative period of the federal reserve system (during the world crisis). 320p il $4.50 Houghton

332.11 Federal reserve banks 25-20274

Mr Harding was one of the original members of the Federal reserve board and for six years its governor. He tells of the organization of the Board and outlines the functions of the Federal reserve banks and the laws and principles under which they have been conducted, touching on some of the experiences of the Board during the years of his connection with it and answering some criticisms that have been levelled against it.

"The chapters of the book dealing with the Federal Reserve law, the organization of the board, the start of the banks, the great problems that were met and overcome successfully, with many sidelights on the inside history connected therewith, are very interesting." E. F. Murch

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 24 '25 1750w

"As an exposition of the Federal Reserve System, from the standpoint of practical operation, the book is invaluable."

+ R of Rs 73:109 Ja '26 100w

"The book is a needed and valuable contribution to current economic literature."

+ Sat R of Lit 2:348 N 28 '25 320w

HARDY, THOMAS. Human shows, far phantasies, songs, and trifles. 279p $2.25 (7s 6d) Macmillan

821

Song, ballad, narrative or fantasy, the poems are invariably grave in tone, many of them dramas in brief.

Reviewed by L. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '26 1400w

"Thomas Hardy is perhaps the only poet today who could and would fill 279 pages with poems most of which are bad and all of which are interesting. 'Human Shows, Far Phantasies, Songs, and Trifles' reveals Mr. Hardy in all the baldness of his worst technique and yet is continuously readable. I could name several dozen pieces here and defy anyone to match them in all reputable English verse for grittiness and crabbed cacophony. But some of these very pieces I should also have to place among those English poems which I most respect." Mark Van Doren

+ — Nation 122:64 Ja 20 '26 750w

"Mr. Hardy takes any little old song, but when he has done with it, it is no longer old and often no longer little; its tune is now Mr. Hardy's, and in every line it bears the imprint of that queer, original personality." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 38:354 D 5 '25 150w

"There is wit now and again, wit that is sharp and metallic even when it is not also dropped with a hint of venom. And of humor, as distinguished from wit, there is now and again a flash, generally the bucolic humor of the poet's own Wessex." P. A. Hutchison

+ N Y Times p14 Ja 3 '26 1850w

"At the first glance we should say that perhaps half a dozen poems are among Mr. Hardy's best. The awkwardness of gait and the mechanical plot-making in many of the others do not endear them to us; indeed, sometimes they are exasperating; but we would willingly pay still more for the half-dozen."

+ — Spec 135:1145 D 19 '25 60w

"There are a few beautiful sketches, as it were, of pure Nature, little or not at all, touched by man—such as 'Night Time in Mid-Fall' and 'Snow in the Suburbs.' But, even when Nature is the dominant note, Mr. Hardy seems to need at least a suggestion of the presence of man to enable him to create that poetic world which is peculiarly, uniquely, his own."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p829 D 3 '25 1200w

HARDY, THOMAS. Life and art; ed., with an introd. by Ernest Brennecke ltd ed 140p $3.50 Greenberg

824

25-8651

"The papers of this collection are twenty-four in number, and they range in length from thirty pages to only a few lines. The opening essay is Hardy's 'How I Built Myself a House,' first published in Chambers's Journal in 1865, and they include discussions of 'The Profitable Writing of Fiction,' 'Candour in English Fiction,' 'The Science of Fiction,' 'Memories of Church Restoration,' 'Dialect in Novels,' 'Why I Don't Write Plays,' and a memorial article on, and sketch of, the life of the Rev. William Barnes, which first appeared as an obituary notice in The Athenaeum in 1886."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p3 F 21 '25 1950w

"While a definite or in any sense a complete biography of Hardy is now impossible, Mr. Brennecke's researches are so thorough and his understanding of both Hardy the novelist and Hardy the poet is so diversified that his work is of both present and permanent importance." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 16 '25 450w

Dial 78:521 Je '25 150w

Reviewed by Frances Dublin

— Nation 121:122 J1 22 '25 300w

"The title 'Life and Art' is hardly warranted by the motley collection of essays, letters and brief statements. Mr. Brennecke's collection does afford a fairly complete view of Hardy's conception of the novel as it existed in his mind at the time when he had reached his full stature as a novelist."

+ — N Y Times p7 Mr 1 '25 1100w

"One gets, indirectly, a stimulating portrait of Hardy in the thin brown book called 'Life and Art,' made up of some of the novelist's hitherto scattered essays, notes and letters. Several of the inclusions seem scarcely worth reprinting. The essays and notes on literature are, however, worthy of rescue from the back files of old periodicals." Babette Deutsch

+ — N Y Tribune p5 My 24 '25 500w

Reviewed by L. Weitzenkorn

N Y World p6m Ap 12 '25 40w

"The essays have much excellent matter in them, though some of them seem a little crude in form when compared with the prose of his novels. The letters are slight in substance, but occasionally flash a glimpse of Mr Hardy's personality, or a gleam of light on his literary history that is welcome. Most of the notes might have been written by any broad-minded, sane man of the world, and are so inconsiderable as scarcely to warrant their being cast into permanent form here."

+ — Springfield Republican p6 Mr 23 '25 380w

Wis Lib Bul 21:168 Je '25

"The essays, 'The Dorsetshire Labourers,' 'Candour in English Fiction,' 'The Science of Fiction,' and the interesting biographical note entitled 'The Rev. William Barnes, B. D.,' are of mild importance. They are not, however, among the great things written by England's magic realist." Coley Taylor

+ — World Tomorrow 9:88 Mr '25 250w

HARE, WILLIAM LOFTUS, ed. Religions of the Empire; a conference on some living religions within the Empire; held at the Imperial Institute, London, September 22d to October 3, 1924, under the auspices of the School of oriental studies (University of London) and the Sociological society; with an introd. by Sir E. Denison Ross. 519p $4.50 Macmillan [16s Duckworth]

290 Religions

The writer of each of these papers on the oriental religions of the Empire is a scholarly adherent of the religion in question who gives a brief description of the principles of his belief, touching lightly on creed and dogma. The second half of the conference was devoted to the psychology and sociology of religion and the papers are by specialists who describe the nature of the religious process.

"To those who wish for a real insight into the great living religions of the world, and who desire to come to a deeper understanding of their own religion by discovering how it provides for all that is to be found in others, we confidently recommend this book."

+ Spec 135:163 J1 25 '25 700w

"This book of abundant information and infinite suggestion tells us of that which most concerns us all. The plain man should find interest in the book. Bewilderment also may beset him, and possibly dismay. But, after all,

HARE, WILLIAM L., ed.—Continued
the science of comparative religion does but fare like any and every human science."
The Times [London] Lit Sup p408 Je
18 '25 820w

HARLOW, RALPH VOLNEY. Growth of the United States. 862p il $5 Holt

973 United States—History 25-10753

"Professor Harlow has written a college textbook which, in addition to covering the whole period of American history from the time of discovery and settlement, has the advantage of bringing the narrative down to the election of President Coolidge."—N Y Tribune

"A text-book written for the purpose of arousing the interest and enthusiasm of undergraduates. This aim is accomplished in admirable fashion and without distortion of facts or unfairness in interpretations."

+ Am Pol Sci R 19:645 Ag '25 150w

"On the whole Professor Harlow has produced a well-balanced textbook, readable, and often provocative of real thought. There are few errata and these so trivial in character as in no wise to detract from the value of the book."

W. R. Waterman

+ Hist Outlook 16:336 N '25 560w

"The conventional account of our creation suffers no material damage from Professor Harlow's big, fat history." C: A. Beard

New Repub 44:311 N 11 '25 150w

"Professor Harlow not only insists that the subject itself is interesting or ought to be made so, but also adopts a style which, if not always beyond reproach, is at least distinctly readable." W: MacDonald

+ N Y Times p14 Jl 26 '25 720w

"In spite of its didactic purpose, should prove of interest to readers in general—an interest which its easy and at times rather popular style is calculated to enhance."

+ N Y Tribune p12 Ag 16 '25 200w

"On the whole an excellent example of the work of the general practitioner, with no specialties whatever. If it has not been performed as well as others have performed less formidable tasks, we must at least pay it high tribute for having been done as well as it has." W. F.
Johnson

+ No Am 222:177 S '25 560w

HARPER, CHARLES GEORGE. Haunted houses. 288p il $4.50 Lippincott [12s 6d C.
Palmer]

133 Ghosts

Tales of the supernatural, with some account of hereditary curses and family legends; this subtitle explains everything except that the legends and tales come from Great Britain and date back to the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Thrills for the adventurous, rich fare for the superstitious, and tremors in plenty for the timid will be met with in an excursion thru these haunted houses.

"Mr. Harper tells the stories in an entertaining and original fashion, always with touches of humor which relieve many a hair-raising tale of its horror; but in investigating family curses he arrests even the most skeptic, for many of these malignant prophecies have been fulfilled to the minutest detail." Mary Huntington

+ Lit R p6 My 23 '25 800w

"A very entertaining book Mr. Harper has written, with many fascinating tales and much curious lore. He has done it in a fitting and interesting style with touches of humor, with a sudden break into whimsy now and then, and always with a skillful setting of his scene."

+ N Y Times p23 Ap 19 '25 550w

"His book is meant for entertainment. It is all of that." Will Cuppy

+ N Y Tribune p10 Ap 26 '25 700w

N Y World p4m S 20 '25 200w

HARPER, CHARLES GEORGE. London, yesterday, today and tomorrow. 244p il $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d C. Palmer]

914.21 London—Description

Mr Harper's latest book on London curiosities and antiquities is given to such special topics as London sculptured signs, streets and their names, and street cries. He devotes a chapter to his quest of the smallest house in London, another to the history of Regent street, and one to that most historic of streets where at No. 10, resides the head of the government during his term of office. The illustrations are from drawings by the author.

"He has the advantage of supplying his own neat sketches to illustrate his text, which is easily written, if rather jaunty at intervals."

+ New Statesman 25:supvi My 23 '25
250w

"Mr. Harper, very much the amateur, discusses London and its architectural history with more love than knowledge."

Sat R of Lit 2:329 N 21 '25 70w

"His last book is as interesting as the former ones, and tells more of the near past about which we are all so often ignorant."

+ Spec 135:202 Ag 1 '25 250w

"Mr. Harper peppers his chapters with prejudices, not all of which even a congenial reader can be expected to share. A good many, however, will sympathize with his praise of Nash's London, its gaiety, elegance, and exquisite proportions. Some good illustrations of Old Regent-street and the Quadrant support the text—awaiting the day when the amende will be made to stucco."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p403 Je
11 '25 360w

HARPER prize short stories; with an introd.
by Bliss Perry. 359p $2 Harper

Short stories—Collections 25-18354

These are the twelve prize-winning short stories chosen from among the more than ten thousand manuscripts submitted in the contest conducted by Harper's magazine, 1924-1925.
Contents: Loutré, by L. Y. Tarleau; Redbone, by A. J. Carver; The hands of the enemy, by C: C. Dobie; Legend, by F. C. Springer; Women come to judgment, by M. C. Banning; The girl in the tree, by Alice Brown; Wavering gold, by E. S. Babcock; Wild geese, by C: C. Dobie;
When hell froze, by W. D. Steele; The amateur, by P. H. Gilkyson; A captain out of Etruria, by A. R. Leach; The disciple, by Conrad Aiken; Biographical notes.

"On the whole, the collection is representative of the present tendencies of short-story writing in America, and as such is an interesting collection."

+ Booklist 22:117 D '25

+ Boston Transcript p1 N 28 '25 650w

"The volume of Harper Prize Short Stories contains quite an astonishing amount of good reading matter for the price." P. C. Kennedy

+ New Statesman 26:274 D 12 '25 70w

"One of the best collections of short stories published within the last five or six years.
The limitations that presided over the choice having been admitted, it is no use referring again to them, or wondering why, out of so much that is technically perfect, so little remains to haunt the imagination or reverberate in the memory with new meanings as the impression recedes."

+ N Y Times p16 D 13 '25 800w

N Y World p5m O 11 '25 100w

"Of these twelve tales there is not one but is worth reading, and many deserve serious attention."

+ The Times [London] Lit Sup p828 D
3 '25 350w

HARRE, T. EVERETT. One hour and forever. 374p $2 Macaulay

25-6943

"The book purports to be a 'novelization of a story taken from real life,' and much of it—up to the stagey conclusion—does suggest just that. It is the life history of a girl who has a voice and a 'temperament,' but who grows up in a hard, pietistic family, of which she is the odd member. Of course the lover appears, and disappears, and the girl is hounded out of town with her baby. Thereafter it is the story of her slow progress toward success as a prima donna; about half of it pure screen stuff, but with an odd underlying suggestion of realities."—Sat R of Lit

"This very romantic tale is said to be the true story of the life of a famous living prima donna who has for the purpose allowed her own notes and dictation to help the author in the telling of his tale. Of course, it is a sensational story, deliberately sensational, just as the preface is deliberately sensational, in which the author draws the comparison between this woman and Mary Magdalene, and suggests that one story is as worth telling as the other. Only we still have doubts whether the purpose of the telling is the same!"

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 8 '25 200w

"This story of a diva, with its platitudes in grandiloquent clothing and its apostrophes to every day in the week and so on, is perhaps some excitement to one who believes everything he reads. But one with a sense of inflation can do nothing more than grant the author sincerity and a decided lack of the sense of the ridiculous." H. A. Potamkin

— Lit R p5 Ag 8 '25 150w

"If you prefer vigor to style you can do no better than read Mr. Harré's 'One Hour and Forever.' Mr. Harré protests too much in the name of truth and thereby obviously implies that art can go hang so long as truth is not given to the gallows."

— N Y World p7m Mr 22 '25 180w

"It is first of all an honest book: much of its emotion, in its passionate 'high spots,' is real, and much of its insight and understanding of human complexity are keen and accurate. But it is written, for the most part in a widely absurd jargon, high flying, misfit adjectival monstrosities, tangled sentences so blown up and gassy that trying to read them leaves one with a feeling of indigestion."

— + Sat R of Lit 1:565 F 28 '25 450w

Spring'd Republican p7a Ag 2 '25 280w

HARRINGTON, HARRY FRANKLIN. Chats on feature writing; with an introd. by Chester S. Lord. 611p il $2.75 Harper
029.6 Authorship. Journalism 25-9361

Mr Harrington's volume presents every aspect of feature writing from the gathering of ideas to the marketing of manuscripts. Members of the Blue Pencil club, all of them successful writers, tell how they find their material and set to work on it, giving glimpses of their individual habits of note taking and revision. Illustrative articles of many different types are quoted and analyzed, and there is a concluding chapter of practical hints on manuscripts and their markets.

Reviewed by C. W. Thompson

N Y Times p10 My 31 '25 820w

"This book should prove useful to those desirous of entering this particular division of journalism."

Sat R of Lit 1:920 Jl 18 '25 150w

"The young writer will find much that is helpful in this book."

+ Wis Lib Bul 21:229 O '25

HARRINGTON, WALTER LEO, and FULTON, MAURICE GARLAND. Talking well; a book on the art of conversation. 196p $1.40 Macmillan

374.1 Conversation

24-14893

"In this book, conversation covers storytelling, sales-talks, platform delivery, and even reading 'selections.' A number of stories and poems are appended."—English J

Booklist 21:52 N '24

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 2 '24 320w

English J 13:690 N '24 20w

"A volume which is excellent in its intent, if it is not wholly satisfactory, in its execution." Brander Matthews

+ — Int Bk R p174 F '25 2250w

HARRIS, CORRA MAY (WHITE) (MRS LUNDY HOWARD HARRIS). As a woman thinks. 313p $2.50 Houghton

F or 92

25-20051

Mrs Harris' new book is not like her others, a consecutive autobiographical narrative, but rather a research into the activities of her mind, a record of her mental and emotional reaction to life, and an expression of her ideas and opinions.

"Not an important book, but one that will probably prove popular."

— + Booklist 22:159 Ja '26

Reviewed by Helen Wallerstein

Lit R p6 O 31 '25 320w

"Like her previous volumes of similar sort, this work is vigorously felt and expressed with frankness, sincerity, a deep underlying love of humanity, and pungent, telling phraseology."

+ N Y Times p10 N 22 '25 420w

HARRIS, CYRIL. Religion of undergraduates. 87p $1.25 Scribner

240 College students. Religion 25-20603

The book is a pertinent contribution to the present widespread discussion of religion on the campus. In this small volume the author sums up the attitude of college students toward religion and their questions concerning it, and offers a challenging solution to the problem.

Bookm 62:xviii Ja '26 100w

"His discussion of the chief questions of religion today as they affect youth is concrete, constructive, touches life at many points and shows keen, clear, sound thinking."

+ N Y Times p10 N 15 '25 380w

N Y Tribune p13 N 8 '25 100w

